21,782. (Mr. Price.) You told him there was nothing going, and he could vote which way he liked ?—I knew if nothing was going on the other side he would vote for me ; in fact he was promised 10*l.* in the morning, he told me so, and you will have it in his evidence. He came back at 10 o'clock, and I saw him there.

21,783. Did he say who had promised him the 10*l.* on the other side ?—Edward Denner.

21,784. Did you poll him then ?—Yes.

21,785. Has he made any claim since on you?—Not the least.

21,786. Has he said anything about it?—No.

21,787. You had no vote in 1866. Did you live at the brewery premises then?—I did.

21,788. Did you meet a man named Jeffrey's, the landlord of the "White Bull," about 9 in the morning?—I did.

21,789. Did he ask you what was the figure?—He did.

21,790. Did you say 10*l.*?—I did.

21,791. Did he say he was not going for 10*l.* or even 15*l.*?—He did.

21,792. That he could get 20*l.*?—Yes, from the other side.

21,793. He is the landlord you say?—Yes, of the "White Bull."

21,794. Did you ask him to see your master, Mr. George Knight?—I did.

21,795. Did your master ask you to go to Allan with him?—He did.

21,796. Did Mr. Knight himself come over to Allan's when you got there?—He did.

21,797. Did you take Jeffrey to the poll?—I did.

21,798. Did you return to Allan?—I did.

21,799. And get 20*l.* from Allan?—I did.

21,800. What did you do with that 20*l.*?—I walked about with it a bit.

21,801. And then what did you do with it?—Then by-and-by I met Charles Hobbs, of the "Bristol and Exeter" inn.

21,802. Did this Jeffrey's get anything?—Not to my knowledge I did not give him any.

21,803. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which way did he vote?—For Vanderbyl.

21,804. He said he could get 20*l.* from the other side, and would not take anything at all. Did he get anything at all?—I did not give him any.

21,805. Did he get any?—I believe he did.

21,807. Who from?—I do not know.

21,808. Did Mr. Knight give it?—I believe he did.

21,809. You saw Mr. Knight go into Allan's and come out, it could only be to get money, could it. He came out and spoke to Jeffrey's, and told you to take him to the poll, and he went with you as quiet as possible?—Yes, on the faith of Mr. Knight I suppose.

21,810. The 20*l.* you got from Allan, whom did you give it to?—I suppose about a couple of hours afterwards I met Charles Hobbs, innkeeper, St. John Street, and I said, "Have you been to the poll?" He said, "No."

21,811. Did he ask you the figure?—Yes.

21,812. Did you say 10*l.*?—Yes.

21,813. Did he say he would not go for 10*l.*?—Yes. I asked him if he would go for 15*l.*, and he said, "Why, I do not mind." And I then went into the committee room and inquired if he had been to the poll, and found he had not, and took him to the poll, and afterwards gave him 15*l.*

21,814. As part of the 20*l.* you had from Allan?—Yes.

21,815. What did you do with the remaining 5*l.*?—I carried the 5*l.* back and gave it to Allan.

21,816. What did you have for your services?—He asked me, he said, I suppose you will accept something for your trouble, and I said, if you like to give me anything you can, and he gave me 1*l.*

21,817. Is that Charles Hobbs the same man who was spoken to by Bulpin?—I believe it is, I have inquired since whether there is more than one Charles Hobbs there in St. John Street.

21,818. Then you are quite sure you gave him 15*l.*?—Yes, and he will say so in his evidence.

21,819. You got your sovereign at that time?—I did.

21,820. Do you believe others who did the same sort of work got money also?—I did not. I was not at any private committee, and I had no list which I was to see, I was always left out in the forlorn hope, that is to try and get up a straggler if I could until I got a vote for myself, and then I went myself and never had a penny for it, and do not mean to in future times.

21,821. Had Mr. Knight asked you if you would undertake this business?—Never in his life.

21,822. Who did then?—No one.

21,823. Because Allan would not trust a person unless he knew something of him?—No one; I always put myself forward if I could pick up a straggler.

21,824. And he knew that you would not take the money, but could trust you with it?—Yes.

21,825. What were you?—I went about 25 years ago as a labouring master until I raised myself up, and got the lead of the business as foreman.

21,826. You were known as the leading man in Mr. Knight's employment?—Yes.

21,827. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you not to have a vote before?—Mr. Knight, I believe, compounded for his premises, 15 years come Christmas, and the malthouse and garden adjoining. Until this new Act came in I had not a vote, and then I thought they shall have it gratuitously.

21,828. (Mr. Price.) Was that all you did at the election of 1866 for Vanderbyl?—That is all.

21,829. Now Mr. Bagehot's election?—I was in the forlorn hope there and picked up Webber the barber.

21,830. Did he ask whether anything was going?—Yes, and I asked whether he had a vote.

21,831. Did you say, "We will go and see at Bussell's?—Yes, I took him to Bussell.

21,832. Did Bussell offer you 5*l.*?—Bussell gave me 5*l.* to give to him.

21,833. Did you give it to him?—I did. I went to inquire whether he had polled again, and took him, and he said to me, "I do not like this 5*l.* I ought to have more than this," and I said to him, "I believe "the election is almost won, you had better go to poll, "or else someone will be after the money," and he went to poll and after he went to poll he was not satisfied, and he went to Bussell again. I asked Bussell afterwards what he said, and he said he had told him that was all the money I gave him, and he was not satisfied, and I said, "You did not give him more," and he said, "I should think I did, there was no rest until I gave him 5*l.* more."

21,834. Is that all you did at that election?—That is all as far as money goes.

21,835. Did you get anything of that kind?—No.

21,836. Did you have any drink at Bussell's house?—I went after the election was over and had a bottle of ginger beer, and a dip of something in it.

21,837. In 1865 when Sir John Shelley stood, what did you do then. Did you meet Mr. Wilton the day before the poll?—I did.

21,838. Did he ask you if Poole of the "Exeter" inn was not a customer?—Yes; that is what he asked, whether he was not a customer and I told him he was.

21,840. Did you ask him on what terms?—I said, "On what terms?" I knew it was no use to go else, and he said, "What do you mean?" I said, "Mean? why, about money matters." And he said, "Onion, I "have nothing to do with it. You mind" says he, "do not you mention that I have anything to do with "any money, and do not you mention it to him." I turned round, and as Mr. Wilton had asked me I went down to Poole.

21,841. When Mr. Wilton said that, did you think it was all nonsense?—I did not know what to think of it, but those were the words he said to me.

21,842. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you put a bit of chalk on the table?—No, I did not; but chalk was there before.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

W. Onion.

16 Sept. 1869

26,843. Did you say to him, "Put down the number you want, and you shall have it in half an hour"?—I will tell you what passed. When I went in I said to him, "Now, Mr. Poole," "Now" he says, "Mr. Onion, what brought you down here?" and I said, "I am come to ask you to take in this blue flag." He said, "You may be" "Yes." "Who sent you?" I said, "A man of some standing. "Oh, what is your "terms, because I am not going to alter my opinion "now, not for a trifle." I turned into this room, and by that time his two sons were there facing the door, and someone else came in. I did not do it privately. There was a waiter turned upside down with some tally across on the back, and there was some chalk on the table, and I said, "Just take the chalk and put "down what your conscience will allow." Well, he went to draw a pint of beer, or ale, and there it ended, and he never took the chalk in his hand, nor I, to my knowledge. I never made a figure of it, and then I came away.

21,844. Did you make no terms with him at all?—No more than that, and I said I am not authorized to offer any money.

21,845. On your saying that to him, "Put down "the number," I believe you told him that "you shall "have it in half an hour"?—I did not.

21,846. You told him to put down the sum his conscience would permit him to ask?—I did.

21,847. On your telling him that or soon after that did he tell you that he should do no such thing; that he had promised Westropp that he should vote for him?—I believe that might pass, and I believe it did, but there it ended at any rate. I came home and never saw the man until after the election was over again.

21,848. (Mr. Price.) He voted for Westropp?—Yes.

21,849. (Mr. Anstey.) Both he and his sons were examined before the House of Commons and stated that?—Yes, something to that purpose.

21,850. (Mr. Price.) Was it all true?—He went to the House of Commons, and I was had up there in consequence of it, but how I came to be up there for such a frivolous thing as that, I cannot imagine.

21,851. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not examined?—No, it was a Tory party subpœnaed me.

21,852. (Mr. Price.) To corroborate him or keep him in check, no doubt.

21,852. (Mr. Anstey.) You were there also for another purpose, were you not?—Not that I am aware.

21,853. You went up in April?—Yes.

21,854. Rather less than a year after the election do you remember going to Poole's house again?—I called there on the Monday morning. I have not missed one Monday morning, I suppose, for 15 years.

21,855. Do you recollect talking to him about the promises you had made people at the last election, that is 1865?—I made this remark. I said I would not run about, holding out inducements to people, if I knew nothing was going, and I shall come to that presently, when I found out nothing did go.

21,856. Did you tell him also what it was that made you hold out promises before you had got the means of performing them?—I did not know myself; I could not tell him.

21,857. Did you tell him that you would never have done so if you had not been sent by Mr. Wilton?—I should not have come to him if I had not been sent.

21,858. By Wilton?—By Wilton.

21,859. You told him so?—Very likely, but I did not hold out any money inducements to him for all that that I can recollect.

21,860. You went away to Poole's house that day, and as you went away Poole called you back and said something about the speaker's warrant?—Yes, that is March you are speaking of. I had been to the house and done my business, and, was part of the way up the street at the time the speaker's warrant was served on Poole, and I was called back again. "Now," he said, "Old bloke," or "buck," or something like that "you will have to go up."

21,861. Then what did you say?—I said, "If I "have to go up, there it is."

21,862. Did one of the men say to you, "You know "you made those promises?"—I do not know that.

21,863. Do you remember saying on that occasion "I did make promises, but it was Mr. Wilton who "sent me. I should never have done it if it had not "been for him"?—I never made any promises of money I will take my oath, no more than to put down what his conscience would allow him.

21,864. Listen to this: Did you say to one of the men there, "I have promised to get money, but it "was Mr. Wilton who sent me. I should never have "done it, if it had not been for him, and it was a sham"?—I did not, and Mr. Wilton never authorized me to mention money. In fact he told me he had nothing to do with money.

21,865. You did tell them that you would not have made these promises if you had not been sent by Mr. Wilton. That is what you told me just now?—Well, that was respecting the flag, but Mr. Wilton never authorized me nor anyone else to offer money.

21,866. But you did make that promise in that way, put down your sum, and so on, and I asked you the question, whether you had made promises to others, whether you told him in that house on that day in March about other promises you had made, and you said you did. You told me so about five minutes ago?—Told you I promised?

21,867. Told me in answer to my question, when talking with him in the house in the month of March after the election, you admitted the promise had been made by you, and said you would not have done so if you had not been deceived, and sent about the promises?—I was never sent about with any promises, and nobody never authorized me to make promises.

21,868. Did not you say yourself you felt sorry that you made promises when there was no money going, and you would not have made them if you had known no money was going?—I never made promises.

21,869. Did not you say so just now?—No, I do not remember; I did not make promises.

21,870. (Mr. Price.) When anybody asked you whether anything was going, what did you say?—I said when they asked, "What do you think it will be?" "It will not be less than 10*l.*, I suppose." I said that.

21,871. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not call that a promise?—No, because I did not know there would be anything.

21,872. (Mr. Price.) Had you any authority for saying that?—No.

21,873. (Mr. Anstey.) But you said it, whether you had authority or not?—I believe I had no authority.

21,874. And you were known to be a person active on that side?—I was and always was.

21,875. (Mr. Price.) Did you say that, because you knew on former occasions money had been going?—I was under the impression that it went then.

21,876. Now, if you will come to the poll morning, do you remember meeting Heal and Haslam and Bussell at the poll door?—Yes, before it opened.

21,877. And afterwards Mr. Bate and Ben Lovibond?—Yes.

21,878. Did you go up?—No.

21,879. They did; and did Bussell come down and tell you, "It is all up; no money will be spent"?—"There is not a shilling to be spent," he said, and we walked about and found soon Mr. Westropp was in his right position.

21,880. In his right position?—He had got a majority.

21,881. (Mr. Anstey.) You were angry therefore at not having the money?—Not very well pleased at a Tory getting in. I was not.

21,882. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you did at that election?—That is all.

21,883. Now in 1859; between 8 and 9 o'clock on the polling morning, did the Liberals begin to spend money about 11.30?—I should think about 8 o clock.

21,884. As early as that?—Yes.

21,885. And about half-past 11 the election was won?—That was the report. I believe it was correct.

21,886. Did John Smith hail you and call you into Rose's, and asked you to bring a note for Charles Skerrett, since dead?—I went into Mr. Rose, and Smith gave me a note; whether it was 5*l.* or 10*l.* or 20*l.*, I do not know. He said, "I want you to convey this to Charles Skerritt."

21,887. Did you take it to the "Bristol Arms"?—I did to the "Bristol and Exeter," the right-hand parlour.

21,888. And put it on the cheeseboard?—Yes, I did put it on the cheeseboard, and with the same I met him coming in the same time, and said, "Charlie, there is a famous bit of old cheese there," and he went in. Whether he had the note I do not know, or whether it was a 5, 10, or 20 pound note I do not know.

21,889. Then he did not see you put it there?—No.

21,890. Did you go into the room where the cheese was?—No.

21,891. You never heard whether he tasted the cheese?—No, I never heard from him from that hour to this.

21,892. Did you afterwards go to Scores who keeps a beer shop in St. Mary's Street?—I did, and asked him to come over to the "Bristol Arms," and they took him down to Bussell s, and there they lost sight of him. I did not go in with him.

21,893. Did you see Faun, the tailor, who said he thought of giving you a buff handkerchief?—Yes.

21,894. But they were all gone?—Yes.

21,895. Did he afterwards give you half-a-sovereign for your trouble on that day?—Yes, he did.

21,896. Is that all you did in 1859?—That is all I did in 1859, to my remembrance at present.

21,897. Did you go in 1857 to Wells, to look up a voter of the name of Marriott?—I did.

21,898. Do you know whether he got anything?—I do not.

21,899. Did you bring him to vote?—I did—into the borough. I did not poll him.

21,900. Did you have a sovereign for your expenses?—Foster gave me the sovereign before I went away.

21,901. Did you have a sovereign two months after, from Mr. Cook?—Yes; I had a sovereign from Mr. Cook, or Mr. Carslake, or somebody connected with his office.

21,902. Was it Mr. Carslake?—I do not know who it was. It was someone in his office.

21,903. You know Mr. Cook by sight?—Yes; very well.

21,904. Was it Mr. Cook?—Yes; I believe it was.

21,905. What did he say?—We owe you something for going up to Wells. I did not tell him I had a sovereign before, and some time afterwards I had the sovereign sent over to me, or else I must have called at the office.

21,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) What had you for your expenses in 1859?—Then I had two sovereigns, in 1857 about this going to Wells.

21,907. (Mr. Price.) In 1857 you had half-a-sovereign for your trouble about the cheese?—No; that was in 1866, about the cheese—chalk you mean?

21,908. (Mr. Coleridge.) No; about the nice bit of old cheese, Charlie?—That was 1859.

21,909. (Mr. Price.) Henry Faun said he would have given you a buff handkerchief, but they were all gone, so he gave you half-a-sovereign?—Yes; about two months afterwards.

21,910. Do you know anything of the election of 1852?—No.

21,911. Who had the handling of the money?—Wm. Heal and Haslam.

21,912. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you have anything to do with it?—I had nothing to do with it. I was confined to work at home and had not so much leisure.

21,913. A working man?—Yes; more confined to the brewery.

21,914. You had not got high enough to be trusted with bribery?—I suppose I never was trusted much.

21,915–16. (Mr. Price.) Do you know or not that drinking was going on at every election you know about, treating freely?—I have no doubt of it.

21,917. That there were houses open for each candidate and people could go to if they chose and drink as much as they liked?—Still for all that I am only speaking on supposition, I do not remember.

21,918. From report?—Yes; as far as report goes.

21,919. People might have as much as they liked if they went in?—Whether they were paid or not I do not know. I was not there.

21,920. Is that all the information you have to give us?—Well, I hope it is a pretty straightforward one, is not it?

21,921. I do not think otherwise?—Thank you.

21,922. If you have anything to tell us further do so now, because we do not want the witnesses coming up again and again?—If there is anything else and you will send to the brewery, I will tell you the truth.

21,923. You have saved a good deal of trouble, because you have given a full statement to the secretary?—You will remember that 3*l.* 10*s.* was all I had for my trouble, and it cost me a pretty deal more than that.

21,924. 1*l.*, 2*l.*, and 10*s.*?—Yes, and if anybody will prove I had more, I will give him 100 per cent.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

Mr. J. Prior.

21,925. (Mr. Anstey.) I am obliged to send for you to put this question as we get our information from you piecemeal. You have stated that some days or a week or two after you handed over the 500*l.* you called on Mr. Lovibond about it, and he said to you, stopping you, "Don't say anything more about it; "don't let us talk about it; it will be all right;" or words to that effect. You remember that you gave that evidence?—I did.

21,926. I should like to hear from you, word for word if you can, if not, as nearly as you can, everything you said to him on that occasion, beginning with the time you first saw him on that day?—I went to his office and I told him I was 500*l.* short in the cash, and he said, "I don't understand it." I said "Mr. Mogg." "Oh! all right; don't say any more about it," or words to that effect.

21,927. Is that all you said to him, "Mr. Lovibond, "I am 500*l.* short in my cash"?—Yes.

21,928. Did not you tell him about what you were short?—What I was short?

21,929. Yes. Supposing you had come to me and said, you were short in your cash, how should I know what you were talking about?—I told him 500*l.*

21,930. But with respect to what?—With regard to Mr. Mogg. I mentioned Mr. Mogg's name.

21,931. First of all what you said. You entered his office and found him sitting there, and said, "Mr. "Lovibond, I am short of cash 500*l.*" Did not you explain to him with reference to what you were short?—On my mentioning that, he said, "I do not under-"stand you," and I said, "Mr. Mogg." "Oh! all "right; don't say any more about it," or words to that effect.

21,932. Was that all that passed?—That was all that passed. He would not enter into any conversation.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

16 Sept. 1869.

21,933. Do you mean all you said to him was "Mr. Mogg" when he said that "I do not understand you?"—Yes, and then he said "All right, don't say any more about it," or words to that effect.

21,934. I want to fix you upon your own words to him. Do not let me take you by surprise; therefore I want to repeat to you my view of your evidence. You say you entered the office and made use of those two expressions only, "Mr. Lovibond, I am short 500*l.* in my cash," and then on his saying, "I don't understand you," second expression, "Mr. Mogg," and upon those two words being used he at once said "Oh, don't say any more about it; don't let us talk about it, it will be all right," or "it is all right?"—Or words to that effect, sir.

21,935. Now what had passed between you and Mr. Lovibond before that which could have given that adventitious value to those two words, "Mr. Mogg," which in themselves meant nothing—which opened the secret of those words you had used before, and which he told you he could not understand, namely, "500*l.* short in my cash?"—Oh, nothing had passed previously between us. That is the first time I had spoken to him after the election.

21,936. Well, take it at the election?—At the election, I did not see him for the day.

21,937. Or before the election?—I do not know whether anything passed before the election.

21,938. Then explain to me if you can how those two words "Mr. Mogg," which in themselves do not seem to relate to a cash account at all, could have given Mr. Lovibond what he wanted, and what he was entirely without, an understanding of the words you had previously used to him, "I am 500*l.* short in my cash?"—Yes, I expected that Mr. Lovibond knew all about it, and that he must have sent Mr. Mogg to me.

21,939. Just so. That brings me again to the question which on former occasions I have endeavoured to get answers to. As Mr. Lovibond's name was never mentioned by Mr. Mogg, what ground had you for your suspicion that Mr. Lovibond had sent him?—Because I did not believe that Mr. Mogg would have come to me if he had not been sent by Mr. Lovibond. I did not believe it; but still I had no instructions from Mr. Lovibond previously to advance any money.

21,940. I still came to the question what was the ground of your belief that Mr. Mogg would not have come to you unless sent by Mr. Lovibond of all persons in the world?—Because Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond were very friendly.

21,941. So were Mr. Mogg and Dr. Kinglake, were not they?—Yes, I suppose they were.

21,942. And so were Mr. Mogg and Mr. Sealy?—Yes.

21,943. You have stated twice to-day that you expected Mr. Mogg was sent by Mr. Lovibond, you explain that to me that you believe he would not have come unless he had been sent. Have you any other ground for the belief than the fact that he was friendly with Mr. Lovibond as he was with hundreds of others?—I have none.

21,944. Do you swear that?—Yes, I do.

21,945. Remember we are upon money matters?—I know we are.

21,946. Do you mean to tell me if it had entered your head to remember that Mr. Mogg was on friendly terms with Mr. James Wood Sully, for instance, you would at once have believed that it was Mr. James Wood Sully that had sent him to get 500*l.* merely because they were friendly. Would you have thought so?—No, I should not.

21,947. Then there must have been something more than friendship between Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Mogg which made you suspect?—Mr. Lovibond was managing the election for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Sully was not.

21,948. Mr. Barham also was managing for Mr. Kinglake?—I was not aware of that until I heard it here in this court.

21,949. That is another element; first of all the friendship between Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Mogg, and next that Mr. Lovibond was one of the managers of the election for Mr. Kinglake. Do you mean to say those were the only two elements of your belief that day on which you acted in so important a manner, and so dangerous a manner for the interest of your banking customers as to advance 500*l.* over the counter not only without security but even without an order for it. Do you mean to tell me that?—Well, I was led astray by what Dr. Kinglake said to me the evening before.

21,950. What was that?—That I was to advance upon that cheque which he afterwards destroyed.

21,951. How do you mean you were led astray by that?—It was off my mind at the moment when this money went out of the bank.

21,952. What was off your mind?—I did not give sufficient thought about Mr. Kinglake having destroyed the cheque, although I saw it done. I was taken off my guard and I did it incautiously, as I stated in the outset.

21,953. Then I understand you now to say that in honouring that verbal order of Mr. Mogg for 500*l.* you at the time relied on instructions you had received the evening before from Dr. Kinglake?—That threw me off my guard.

21,954. Do you mean to say you relied on that?—Well, I partly relied on them.

21,955. You remembered it?—Well, I never thought of it at the time the money went.

21,956. Then how could they have put you off your guard if you did not think of them at the time? The two stories cannot be true. You say those words you remember to have heard the night before put you off your guard and made you advance the money to Mr. Mogg. Therefore I ask you whether when he came to you you had those words in your mind and had forgotten all about the cheque being destroyed?—Well, I lost sight of it, and I supposed from Dr. Kinglake's instructions to me that Mr. Lovibond had the management of the election, and therefore I let the 500*l.* go.

21,957. Then your answer is yes, you did think of this when Mr. Mogg came to you?—I thought of it certainly.

21,958. I will remind you of what took place when you were last examined, which came from you with a degree of candour I never remember to have seen in any witness before. You tendered this explanation in your former evidence, that although you were perfectly satisfied in your own mind that you had not told a lie, yet as Mogg told you you had, you came here to ask us to allow you to correct a statement you made about what passed when he came with the message, now may it not be that someone has told you to believe, in spite of yourself and your better recollection, that Dr. Kinglake ever destroyed that cheque at all?—Oh, I saw it done.

21,959. May it not be that he or someone else, in destroying the cheque, made you believe he added those sacramental words, "The whole transaction must now be supposed to be cancelled"?—Yes, he did, or words to that effect.

21,960. But you do not remember two hours afterwards. Two hours afterwards you had forgotten them as if no such words ever had existence?—Yes, I had.

21,961. Now, may it not be that someone has imposed on you those words of Dr. Kinglake as effectually as Mr. Mogg did the other day with regard to the words you came here to retract?—No one.

21,962. You came here and said that Mr. Mogg, by merely telling you, "That is a lie, I never did say so," overpowered your judgment and better recollection?—I did.

21,963. May not someone have been overpowering your recollection and judgment in regard to Dr. Kinglake's words, "the whole thing cancelled," and made you believe it when he did not use them?—No, nothing has overpowered me. I was perfectly satisfied on reflection that he had said so.

21,964. And two hours afterwards they were as if they had never been uttered to you, and the probability is that in fact they never had been uttered—two hours after the cancellation of the cheque you acted as if those words had never been uttered. You said you had lost sight of them?—Well, I had lost sight of them.

21,965. Then may not it be that no such words were used?—Oh, he did make use of them.

21,966. How could you lose sight of it?—Because on consideration it was in cooler moments I thought of what he had done.

21,967. Now will you undertake on your oath to deny this, what I am going to propose to you, that all that was done that morning was that Dr. Kinglake came to you and said, "Perhaps even in your hands, "in your private possession, this cheque ought not "to remain; let me cancel it, let me destroy it, that "it may be as if nothing had happened or passed "between us;" and then went away, leaving you under the impression that his word was as good as his cheque, and a great deal better too, and therefore if any person came to you that day for money you would honour the order, although you had no cheque in your hands?—Well, I do not think I should have done anything of the kind.

21,968. Was that the case which I put to you?—I should not have done it.

21,969. Was that the case which I have put to you, that that was all that took place that morning?—All that took place that morning.

21,970. That he merely came to you and said——?—"Give me that cheque, you have made no use of it," and he tore it up and threw it in the fire, and said, "This is as though nothing had taken place between us," or words to that effect.

21,971. That is, that the cheque was as if nothing had taken place between you?—Yes.

21,972. And he did not say anything to you more than that?—He did not.

21,973. Then two hours afterwards you were under the impression that the instructions which you had received the night before were instructions on which you were justified to the extent of honouring Mr. Mogg's verbal order to you for 500*l.*?—I was off my guard at the time.

21,974. Well, I think I pretty clearly see how the matter stands.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10 o'clock.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

Friday, 17th September 1869.

Present:

Edwin Plumer Price, Esq., Q.C.
Thomas Chisholm Anstey, Esq.
Charles Edward Coleridge, Esq.
Henry Francis Purcell, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake recalled.

(The witness.) I have here the return which I promised to furnish of the property without the borough. It is a return of lands and hereditaments in the parishes of Bridgwater, Wembdon, and Durleigh, which are situate beyond the limits of the parliamentary borough of Bridgwater. In the parish of Bridgwater there are 194 ratepayers, the land measuring 3,312a. 3r. 39p., gross estimated rental 12,782*l.* 10*s.*, and the rateable value 11,174*l.* 5*s.* In the parish of Wembdon there are 156 ratepayers, the land measuring 2,427a. 2r. 23p., and the gross estimated rental is 8,718*l.*, and the rateable value 7,958*l.* In the parish of Durleigh there 52 ratepayers, the land measuring 892a. 0r. 37p., the gross estimated rental is 2,251*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, and the rateable value 2,069*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* The total will be 402 ratepayers, acreage 6,632a. 3r. 19p., gross estimated rental 23,751*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, and the rateable value 21,201*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, which will be subject to the Act of Parliament as it stands now.

21,975. (Mr. Price.) Therefore it would make a very material difference?—To them and to us.

21,976. That is the aggregate?—Both the gross and the rateable value. There are one or two things which I wish to ask to have corrected on your notes, and I hope you will pardon my taking up your time by mentioning them. In the evidence given by Allan on some one point, I think very early in his evidence, he alluded to a meeting, or some solicitors calling to see him, and he was asked if I was there. He said he did not know. I wish to say that I was not there. I never attended there or any other place with reference to election matters, and while about it I may state that I never attended either public or private meetings with reference to elections, and perhaps I carried my scruples to a ridiculous extent in declining dinner parties where I was likely to meet the Liberal candidates before the election. The other observation I wish to make is with reference to Onion's evidence given yesterday. You were pleased to say that it was immaterial, but as the report stands now it would appear that I had given him some money, and I wish to state distinctly and absolutely that I did not. You were pleased to say that it was altogether unnecessary.

(Mr. Price.) Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) I thought so. All he said was, "At least I think it was Mr. Cook."

(The witness.) Only as the report stands it would appear that I did it.

(Mr. Anstey.) He says, "Either Mr. Carslake or Mr. Cook," and then perhaps he sees Mr. Cook in court, and afterwards he says, "I think it was Mr. Cook."

(Mr. Price.) We have had a letter from Mr. Robert Arthur Kinglake, from Weston-super-Mare, in which he says that in consequence of seeing in the course of our proceedings that he was said to be proprietor of some shares in Stuckey's Banking Company, lest there should be any misapprehension of that kind, or any notion that he had taken a part in the election here, he wishes to say that he has not for years had any private communication with reference to election matters with his brothers.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. E. Prior.

17 Sept. 1869.

Mr. Edward Prior recalled.

21,977. (Mr. Anstey.) You were in the bank when Mr. Mogg came in and wrote those words on paper, "500*l.* to Allan"?—I was.

21,978. What other clerks were in the room at the time?—I believe there was no one else but myself and father there at the time. The other clerk was at the door outside.

21,979. Did he come in while Mr. Mogg was there?—I am not aware of it.

21,980. Did he hear from the place outside where he was standing what took place?—Oh, certainly not.

21,981. You are not sure that he did come in while you were there. Now tell me what did Mr. Mogg say when he came in?—I did not hear any conversation. Mr. Mogg came in and asked if my father was there. I said, "Yes," he was in a room which joins the bank. He then went in and spoke to my father. I heard no conversation which passed.

21,982. Then he did not converse with your father in the room you were in, the outer room?—No.

21,983. He went into an inner room or back parlour?—Yes, the back parlour.

21,984. And your father was sitting alone there?—He was sitting alone there.

21,985. Did you hear what passed there?—No; the door was closed.

21,986. Did you hear voices?—No.

21,987. How long was he there?—Not a minute I should say.

21,988. Then he did not say to you, "Give me a piece of paper and pen and ink"?—He said nothing to me whatever.

21,989. Did he write anything in the outer room where you were?—Not in the outer room.

21,990. If he wrote the memorandum in the bank at all, it must have been in the bank parlour after the door was closed?—If he wrote the memorandum it must have been in the bank parlour.

21,991. What did he say to you as he came out?—He never mentioned anything to me, he never spoke to me, in fact.

21,992. Then he went straight away?—He went away.

21,993. Did you see anyone come with him to the door when he came to the bank?—No.

21,994. Did you happen to look out into the street?—No.

21,995. Nor out of the window?—No.

21,996. Can you tell me what o'clock this was?—I should say soon after three. We had not our cash away at the time, it was not in the safe at the time.

A. Allan.

Andrew Allan recalled.

21,997. I understood you to say yesterday most distinctly that you handed to Mr. Brogden not a register, or anything like a register, but a duplicate list of men who were bribe agents?—Yes.

21,998. And that you told him you could give him any information he liked about electioneering matters?—Yes.

21,999. He looked at this list?—He took the book in his hand and looked at it.

22,000. He could not have mistaken it for a register, it was in printed language?—Not at all.

22,001. Anybody knows, and nobody more than Mr. Brogden I should say, what a register of electors is, because he says it was a register. Had it any appearance of a register at all?—No; the names of the men who had had money for bribing purposes.

22,002. How many names would be on it?—The names of those men were on the margin, and the names who had received in the corner.

22,003. And all in writing?—All in writing.

22,004. What size book?—It was a penny memorandum book.

22,005. Not like a book of registered voters?—It was a penny memorandum with a red cover to it.

22,006. (Mr. Anstey.) You have heard Mr. Brogden say in introducing it you said, "This is a register," and then he stopped you. Is that true or false that you began by saying, "This is a register," and were going on to say something about the register when he stopped you?—I do not remember a register being spoken about. I told him it was a list of men who had been bribed at Bagehot's election.

22,007. Did you call it a register?—No; I never heard it called a register.

22,008. But did you say to him when you showed that to him, "This is a register"?—I did not, I showed him the book.

Mr. J. L. Sealy.

Mr. John Lovell Sealy recalled.

22,009. (Mr. Anstey.) I should like to hear from your lips a detailed statement of what took place with Mr. Prior from the time you first heard of the 500*l.* transaction to the present time; what passed between you and him in conversation?—A detailed statement of what passed?

22,010. Yes?—I did not hear it until it was stated in this court.

22,011. Begin from that?—I do not recollect that we had much conversation about it, in fact.

22,012. Therefore you can tell me with all the more reason what took place, you know?—Well, I really cannot tell what took place. I do not know that anything has taken place.

22,013. I want what he said to you, and what you said to him?—I do not recollect his saying anything to me about it.

22,014. And you said nothing to him?—Just now he spoke to me.

22,015. No; when you first heard the 500*l.* transaction had taken place under the circumstances detailed to us by him, what did you say?—I have no recollection of saying anything to him about it at that time.

22,016. Not since he gave his evidence?—I recollect this morning his speaking.

22,017. You know that he gave his evidence the other day?—Undoubtedly.

22,018. His first examination; then when you were examined you told us you heard of that with surprise for the first time?—I did.

22,019. And then you spoke to him, I presume, on the subject?—Well, that is the presumption. I have no recollection of doing so.

22,020. It is more than a presumption, because Mr. Prior says you did speak to him on the subject, and therefore he made the alteration in the book by entering 500*l.* as advanced that day?—He did not make an alteration from anything that passed between me and him. I did not know that it was made until subsequently. I believe the first time I heard of this alteration being made was in this court. It was not owing to anything I said to him that he made the alteration.

22,021. Tell us what you did say to him?—I do not recollect saying anything to him at that time. I recollect saying something to him just now.

22,022. Is this the first conversation you have had with him on the subject?—At this moment I do not recollect any I had on the subject except the one I had just now.

22,023. At the door?—No, in my office, before I came here.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. L. Sealy.

17 Sept. 1869.

22,024. What was the conversation?—He told me that he had felt very uncomfortable about it, and that he had gone to Mr. Lovibond about it, and he said that he thought Allan ought to have returned that 180*l.*

22,025. Anything more?—I do not recollect anything more. That was the essence of the conversation, certainly.

22,026. Do I understand you to say positively that first of all you knew nothing about the 500*l.* transaction when it occurred?—Clearly.

22,027. And you never heard of it during the long course of 10 months that elapsed between it and the discovery of it in this court the other day?—Equally clearly.

22,028. And that when you heard of it, accompanied with the omission of keeping a true account (a most important matter, I should imagine, to a banker), you made no observation on the subject, that you can recollect, to the party who had been guilty of all this?—I have no doubt we had some reference, a slight allusion to the matter, but I recollect no conversation, and no particular remarks that I made to him on that subject, with the exception of that I have now stated.

22,029. Are we to infer from that that he did not act in excess or breach of his duties in doing what he did on his own responsibility, and without consulting you?—That is a very unjust inference; he did act beyond his duty, clearly.

22,030. Then how comes it, if he did act beyond his duties, or in violation of his duties, that you, on discovering this long-concealed breach of duty, cannot now recollect, though it is not a fortnight or three weeks ago, that you taxed him with it?—Mr. Prior is an older man than me, and his health is not good, and I should be very sorry to say anything to cause pain to Mr. Prior. He has been for a long time a faithful servant in my father's office, and he knows he has been mixed up in a transaction which is questionable, which he very much regrets, and it would be absurd in me to say anything that would cause him pain and grief, and I should be the last person in the world to do so.

22,031. I am not talking about the transaction itself, the bribery, which is something more than questionable; but speaking with reference entirely to your own business, as I presume your books were meant to be regularly kept, and as they were certainly not kept, but an untrue entry was made a few days or a fortnight ago, I ask have you made any remark to him on that subject?—You said an untrue entry was made there a fortnight ago. Will you tell me what it was?

22,032. That a sum of 500*l.* had been advanced or drawn by him on his own account on the day that entry was made, instead of its appearing, as it ought to have done according to the true dates, somewhere in December last?—The entry of the 500*l.* was only made a few days after his examination here, if you understand.

22,033. I understand perfectly well, and I ask whether no comment has been made by you on that point?—There has been no comment, with the exception of that which I said to you that I recollect. If anything has passed, it has been pretty much according to the statement which I now give you, and which passed half an hour ago.

22,034. Do you not perceive the gravity of the occasion; I do not mean the bribery, but the case as concerns the course of business in your own book?—Do you mean do I feel uneasy about it?

22,035. No; the gravity and misconduct on his part. Let me put it to you, then, this way: supposing your house had shared in the general calamity of the last year, and suppose it was necessary to submit your books to an accountant, this transaction would not have appeared. You know what the effect of that would have been?—Undoubtedly it would not; and it was so managed that it would not appear in the account and the balance.

22,036. That is all the worse. You know what the Bankruptcy Act says about that?—No, I do not.

22,037–8. Then perhaps you do not care for the Bankruptcy Act?—Not a rush.

22,039. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose, you are aware that persons trading are required by law to keep their books accurately, and if there be bankruptcy, or any calamity falls on them, then the Act makes provision?—I think I may keep my books as I think proper.

22,040. You think so?—It is a private business, and I may keep them as I like.

22,041. You may keep them as you like, do you think?—I may do as I like with my own.

22,042. (Mr. Coleridge.) You may shut up your bank to-morrow?—Of course I may.

22,043. (Mr. Anstey.) You are of opinion that as long as your bank is open you may keep your books as you like?—I have perfect power to keep my books as I like. I am responsible to no man, and my clerks are responsible only to me.

WILLIAM ROBINSON sworn.

W. Robinson.

22,044. (Mr. Price.) Do you live at Wembdon?—I do.

22,045. Are you a brewer?—I am.

22,046. Have you any vote for the borough?—None at all.

22,047. On the election day, between 3 and 4, on the polling day, did someone come up to you and ask you if you knew anybody who had not polled?—They did.

22,048. Who?—I do not know.

22,049. Did you say, "Yes, I do"?—Yes.

22,050. And did the person say to you, "You must get him"?—Yes.

22,051. And walking down the High Street did you meet Fackerell?—Yes.

22,052. He is a messenger to the Commission?—I believe he is.

22,053. Did you ask him to go and poll?—I did.

22,054. Did he say he wanted something?—He did.

22,055. Did you say "Nonsense"?—Yes.

22,056. Did he say he must have it?—He did.

22,057. Did you ask him what he wanted?—Yes.

22,058. Did he say 10*l.*?—He did.

22,059. Did you say you could not promise or give him anything?—I did.

22,060. Did you then take him towards the polling booth to induce him to vote?—I did.

22,061. Near the polling booth did you meet Mr. Henry Lovibond?—I did.

22,062. And did you say to him, "This man wants 10*l.*"?—I did.

22,063. Did Mr. Lovibond say, "Give it to him"?—He did.

22,064. Did you reply, "I shall not do it"?—Yes.

22,065. Did Mr. Lovibond say then to you, "Will he go on a promise"?—He did.

22,066. Did you say, "I think he will"?—Yes.

22,067. Did Mr. Lovibond say, "Let him have it"?—Yes.

22,068. Did you reply, "You will hold yourself responsible for him"?—I did say so.

22,069. Did Mr. Lovibond say, "Oh yes, all right, all right"?—He did say so.

22,070. Did you then tell Fackerell he was to have it?—Yes.

22,071. Did he ask to have it down?—He did.

22,072. Did you tell him it would be all right, and did he then poll at a quarter to 4?—About that time.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

W. Robinson.

17 Sept. 1869.

22,073. Did he see you talking to Mr. Lovibond?—He was about two or three yards off.

22,074. And must have seen you?—He must have seen us, oh yes.

22,075. Is that the whole that passed, or was there anything more?—Nothing else passed at all.

22,076. You are quite sure of that?—Quite sure.

22,077. That Mr. Lovibond said you were to give him 10*l.*, or might give him 10*l.*—I was to do it on the promise; yes, I might give him.

22,078. He first said, "Give it to him?"—Yes.

22,079. When you said, "This man wants 10*l.*," he said to you, "Give it to him?"—Yes, and that I declined to do.

22,080. (Mr. Coleridge.) This was just before the close of the poll?—About a quarter to 4.

22,081. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you know about that election?—All that I know about the election.

22,082. You told us you had no vote?—No vote, and that was all the part I took.

22,083. Whom do you work for?—Myself.

22,084. You are a master brewer?—I am.

22,085. Do you know anything about Vanderbyl's first election in 1866?—I took money from Allan to Bussell on that occasion. I was passing Bussell's in the morning, and he called me in and asked me to send someone down.

22,086. And did you go to Allan?—I went to Allan.

22,087. And what did you get?—I cannot tell what. I had two packages.

22,088. (Mr. Coleridge.) Heavy?—Heavy.

22,089. (Mr. Price.) Like gold?—Like gold. I have been told since it was 40*l.*, and that was what he wanted.

22,090. Bussell asked for 40*l.*?—Bussell asked for 40*l.*

22,091. And you went to Allan and told him?—I went to Allan and told him, and got the two packages, and I gave it to Bussell, and he acknowledged receiving it.

22,092. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything for it?—Nothing at all. I went back to Allan and told him.

22,093. Did you get a receipt?—No; he said, "All right," I said, "You acknowledge receiving it," and he said, "All right."

22,094. (Mr. Price.) And you went back and told Allan that Bussell had acknowledged receiving it?—Yes, that I had given it to Bussell, and he acknowledged it.

22,095. Do you know William Hurman?—Very well.

22,096. Is he the man we have heard of who is a draper?—Yes.

22,097. Did he introduce Bottomley to you?—He did.

22,098. What did he say?—"Here is Bottomley here. I can do nothing with him."

22,099. Did you ask Bottomley what he wanted?—I asked him what he wanted, and he told me he wanted something for his expenses; he had not been paid his expenses for the last time, and then he named the sum.

22,100. Did he say how much he wanted?—30*l.* for his expenses.

22,101. Where did he come from?—I think from Tiverton. I do not know.

22,102. (Mr. Coleridge.) That would cost him about 30 pence, I suppose?—Well, not much more.

22,103. (Mr. Price.) Did you say that a moderate sum would be paid, but 30*l.* was too much?—I told him I had no doubt he would get a moderate sum for his expenses, and eventually he came down to 10*l.*

22,104. What did you do with him then, when he came down to 10*l.*?—I took him to Allan's house and there left him. Whether he voted or not I do not know.

22,105. (Mr. Allan.) Was Hurman present during the whole of that time?—Not at all. The moment he gave Bottomley into my hands Hurman left.

22,106. (Mr. Price.) Did three other men come to you?—They did.

22,107. Do you know their names?—I believe their names were Squires, Haste—Haste I knew personally very well, but the other two I do not know.

22,108. Do you think it is Turner?—I think it is.

22,109. Did they say anything?—I was going up George Lane at the time, and they said they had been served badly by their party, and wanted to vote for the Liberal side.

22,110. Did they say by whom?—No.

22,111. Did they say the Conservative party?—They spoke of the Conservative party.

22,112. They had been badly used by their party and wished to vote for the Liberals?—They had been badly used by their party and wished to vote for the Liberals.

22,113. Did they say anything to you about money?—Yes, they said they wanted some.

22,114. Money?—Yes, money is meant always.

22,115. What did you say or do?—I would not promise anything, but take them. I was just outside the house and took them into Allan's again, and there left them.

22,116. That was on the polling day, both transactions?—Yes.

22,117. (Mr. Coleridge.) How come you not to have a vote?—I am out of the borough.

22,118. (Mr. Price.) That part of the parish is out of the borough?—Yes.

22,119. (Mr. Coleridge.) What had you to do with Bagehot's election?—Nothing.

22,120. Or the election before that?—Nothing at all.

22,121. Those are the only two elections?—Those are the only two elections I had anything to do with.

22,122. Are you quite certain you told Mr. Lovibond in plain terms that the man wanted 10*l.* at the last election?—Yes.

22,123. And that Mr. Lovibond said, "Let him have it?"—Yes.

22,124. What did he say? "Promise him he shall have it?"—No, he said, "Let him have it," first. It was done in a hurried way, because Mr. Lovibond was in a great hurry at the time.

22,125. What did you say to him then?—I declined to pay him the money.

22,126. What did yon say, "I shall not advance it?"—Yes, I said I should not do so.

22,127. What did he say?—"Will he go on a promise?"

22,128. And this was a quarter of an hour or 20 minutes before the close of the poll?—Yes.

Mr. R. Fennelly.

Mr. Richard Fennelly recalled.

(The witness.) I wish to make a few remarks.

(Mr. Price.) It is my duty to tell you, before you make a statement, that we have come to the conclusion most undoubtedly not to administer an oath to you; therefore you make a statement entirely on your own risk, and no protection will be afforded to you, as to whether that statement may be made use of against you, by your merely coming and making it.

(The witness.) I think it right to tell you that I do not think of making a statement just now, but only a few words to the Commission.

(Mr. Price.) We cannot hear that. If you wish to make a statement you had better do so and have done with it We cannot have you making remarks on anything that has passed here. The whole evidence will be heard as affecting you, and before the inquiry is closed, if at any time you request to make a statement, you will be at liberty to do so.

(The witness.) It is not with regard to the evidence; it is simply that I have been advised to formally tender myself as a witness in pursuance of the summons I have received with a letter from the secretary at the early part of the Commission.

(Mr. Price.) Then it will appear on the notes.

(The witness.) And that I have material evidence to give I wish to inform you.

22,129. (Mr. Coleridge.) You tender yourself as a witness?—I tender myself as a witness.

22,130. (Mr. Coleridge.) And request to be sworn?—And request to be sworn.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then we decline it.

(Mr. Price.) We decline it, and now you may take your own course.

JAMES HONEYBALL sworn.

22,131. (Mr. Price.) You are coachman to Mr. John Brown?—I am.

22,132. How long have you been in his service?—About 23 years in the company's service, but as private servant only since Christmas.

22,133. But before that time you were in the service of the company?—Brown and Co.

22,134. Used you to drive the senior partner from time to time?—Yes.

22,135. Did you drive his carriage about for him?—I did every day.

22,136. Before you were his private servant?—Yes; latterly Mr. Brown I must tell you has got very feeble, and I used to drive him a great deal for the last three years until I became private servant.

22,137. Are you a voter for the borough?—I was at the last election.

22,138. Who did you vote for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

22,139. Did you drive a number of voters to the poll in one of Mr. Brown's carriages?—Brown and Co.'s in 1868?

22,140. The last election?—Yes.

22,141. How many did you drive?—I cannot really tell you; not a great quantity.

22,142. A dozen or more?—Oh yes, I should say a dozen, but not more, I should think. I cannot tax my memory how many I did drive.

22,143. Do you know a man of the name of Powell?—Yes.

22,144. Do you know his wife?—No, I do not know his wife.

22,145. Did you give any sum of money to anybody at Mr. Powell's house at the last election?—No.

22,146. Any before then?—No.

22,147. Did you drive anybody to the house?—At the last election?

22,148. Yes?—No, not at the last election; let us see, the last election, no.

22,149. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1868, Kinglake's election?—No, I drove Powell to the poll in 1866.

22,150. (Mr. Price.) Were you present at any time when money was given him or his wife?—No, I was outside the door with the carriage when Mr. White was in the house, not in the house.

22,151. You drove Mr. White there?—Yes, and drove Powell to the poll.

22,152. Did you get down off the carriage and go into the house?—No, I had nothing to do with it, nothing at all but drive.

22,153. You had nothing to do with handing him the money?—Nothing at all, and never knew any money was handed.

22,154. Who told you to drive Powell to the poll?—I was asked by Mr. White, I believe it was, I am not sure.

22,155. What were you doing down there at Powell's?—I drove. I had a carriage. I was employed or asked to drive in the morning of 1868. They said, "We want someone to drive." I forget who it was, and I said, "I will drive a carriage for you if that is any good."

22,156. Whose carriage?—A hired carriage from Phelps', a waggonette.

22,157. (Mr. Coleridge.) What inn does he keep?—He did keep the "Commercial Inn," he has now left.

22,158. (Mr. Price.) Who was it said they wanted someone to drive?—I really do not know.

22,159. You must?—I cannot tell you.

22,160. How did you happen to be there when the discussion arose?—About my driving?

22,161. Yes?—I went to Mr. Smith, I believe, and told him I would drive if it was any good to him.

22,162. You went to John Smith and told him you would drive if any conveyance was wanted?—Yes.

22,163. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for driving?—I was paid after.

22,164. How much did you get?—2*l.* 10*s.*

22,165. Is that the ordinary price for driving for a day here?—I do not know.

22,166. You had driven at former elections?—Never before 1868.

22,167. Are you sure you did not drive in 1866 at Vanderbyl's election?—I beg your pardon. I confused a word; in 1866 I did drive, and in 1868.

22,168. In 1866 you drove one of Brown & Co.'s carriages?—Yes.

22,169. And in 1868 a hired carriage, for which you were paid, not for the carriage but for driving, 2*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes.

22,170. Did you ever get 2*l.* 10*s.* for driving for a day before?—No.

22,171. (Mr. Price.) Who paid you?—Mr. Bulpin.

22,172. Did you make any claim upon him?—No.

22,173. Did he know that you had voted?—I had no vote in 1868—in 1866.

22,174. We are talking about 1868?—No.

22,175. You say you got 2*l.* 10*s.* for driving in 1868?—No, in 1866.

22,176. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was your master's carriage that you drove in 1866?—No, 1866 was a hired carriage.

22,177–8. (Mr. Price.) You told us just now the reverse?—I made a mistake then.

22,179. Now listen to me. In 1868 whose carriage did you drive voters in to the poll?—Brown & Co.'s.

22,180. Who employed you to do that?—No one.

22,181. What business had you to take Brown & Co.'s carriage if no one told you?—I took it on my own responsibility.

22,182. You mean to say you were permitted by your employers to take their carriage without saying a word to them about it?—I did do so, and they did not know that I had done so.

22,183. What sort of carriage was it?—A dog-cart, a Berkeley phaeton sort of thing, an open carriage.

22,184. Did no one see you take it out of the yard?—No.

22,185. Did you harness the horse yourself and take it out without saying a word to your employers?—Yes, on my oath I did.

22,186. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who suggested it to you?—No one.

22,187. It was your own idea entirely?—Yes, my own idea.

22,188. (Mr. Price.) What time did you start in the morning?—It was a standing order of mine to go to Elmwood to fetch Mr. Brown at 10 o'clock. I went as usual that morning, and Mr. Brown did not come in, I came into the town with an empty carriage and drove up to one or two booths about, and a man named Rowsell said, "There are two men in "Provident Place who would poll if they could be "fetched, but one cannot walk and the other is "blind." I said, "I will go for them if you like to go with me and show me where they live," and he did. I brought them direct from their house to the poll and took them back again, and my master or masters knew nothing at all whatever of what I was doing.

22,189. Were you in livery ?—No, in plain clothes.

22,190. Whom else did you drive to the poll ?—I do not know, not very many, because there were not many about.

22,191. Did you drive Powell ?—No, not that time.

22,192. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did your masters first know that you had used their carriage in this way ?—They must have known it, certainly.

22,193. What did they say about it ?—They did not say anything to me about it.

22,194. (Mr. Price.) What else did you do on the polling day in 1868 ?—Nothing.

22,195. Nothing whatever ?—Nothing whatever.

22,196. (Mr. Anstey.) I believe you have taken great interest not only in that election but in former elections. Have you personally taken great interest in that election as well as former elections ?—Yes.

22,197. And all this you have spoken of as doing you did out of your own head ?—I did out of my own head.

22,198. Not at all from any suggestion of Mr. John Brown ?—No, not any.

22,199. Nor of any of his partners ?—No.

22,200. But I suppose in combination with Duddridge ?—Duddridge has nothing to do with me.

22,201. Duddridge has nothing to do with you, but you and Duddridge talked it over, I suppose ?—No, he had nothing to do with it.

22,202. Is he in Brown & Co.'s employment ?—Yes.

22,203. Was he more active than even you were ?—I do not know. I was driving all the day.

22,204. You were not driving all the day. I will refresh your memory. You were not driving at 1 o'clock ?—No.

22,205. At 1 o'clock you met Mr. Prior the banker ?—I met Mr. Prior!

22,206. Yes ?—I may have met him.

22,207. Do you remember saying to him, "The day is not yet lost, sir" ?—Mr. Prior ?

22,208. Yes ?—No, I do not remember saying that to him.

22,209. Do not you know Mr. Prior's dinner hour would be about one ?—No, I do not.

22,210. You did meet him in the street about one ?—No, I cannot tax my memory.

22,211. You will not deny that you met him ?—No, I will not deny that I met him.

22,212. And you will not deny that you said to him these words, "The election is not lost yet, sir" ?—I may have said so.

22,213. But did you say it ?—I do not recollect it, I assure you.

22,214. At that time Mr. Kinglake was going to leave the town ?—Yes.

22,215. Or rather had left ?—He had left, I believe.

22,216. And you were of opinion then that the election was not lost. On what did you found that opinion ?—Because of the men that were left. There were men on the register left enough in my opinion to win the election by fair means.

22,217. By fair means ?—Yes, by fair means, according to us.

22,218. I will tell you what Mr. Brown says about that. However, you do not deny it, but only say you do not remember it, and it would be wasting time to read it to you. Now, tell me something more. A little later in the day, between three and four, did you see Miss Langdon ?—Not that I am aware of.

22,219. What do you mean, not that you are aware of ?—I do not know her, and I did not know her until some time ago. It is a girl, Jane Langdon.

22,220. Did you see a man standing by the side of Henry Chapman Bussell's door ?—I might have seen a man standing there, it is a busy thoroughfare.

22,221. You were busy about that ?—Yes.

22,222. Did you say you would give him 5*l.* to vote for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I did not.

22,223. Did you give any man that day a piece of paper containing money ?—Decidedly not.

22,224. Did you say to any man that day, "It be 5*l.*" ?—No.

22,225. Did you say to any man that day that he was to keep the affair quiet ?—No.

22,226. You are aware that Miss Langdon swore all that before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—Yes, I heard her do so.

22,227. Why were you not called to contradict her ?—Well, our case broke down. We were not called any of us.

22,228. Whom do you mean by "our" case ?—The Liberals.

22,229. Nobody contradicted her, I believe ?—No.

22,230. But I believe there was something said just before she gave her evidence, that is to say, earlier in the week, by a friend of yours, one of "our case," John Harwood, captain of the "Fame" ?—No, I did not. I remember hearing it or reading it in the blue book, but I did not know anything about it.

22,231. Did you authorize him to say of Miss Langdon "Here is one coming that is going to swear "against Honeyball; she shall have her ear cut off; "she shall have none by next Sunday" ?—No.

22,232. Do you remember Mr. Serjeant Parry at the beginning of the day, before any witnesses were called, applied for protection to Mr. Justice Blackburn for that witness ?—Yes, and the judge did not entertain it.

22,233. I will read you what is said to have taken place: "Mr. Serjeant Parry stated that a witness of "the name of Langdon had been threatened by a "person of the name of Honeyball. Mr. Justice "Blackburn stated that anything amounting to the "appearance of tampering with or threatening a "witness was very improper conduct on the part of "anyone, and if such a thing were seriously done it "was a matter which he should seriously punish; "but before he did so, it would require to be distinctly "proved and to be dealt with as an ordinary criminal "transaction" ?—Yes.

22,234. Did Mr. Justice Blackburn, now that you are reminded of it, refuse to entertain it ?—He said very little about it.

22,235. What ?—I think it can be proved that he said it was idle talk.

22,236. (Mr. Price.) Anybody who says so must say that which is wilfully false, because the shorthand writer has got down what fell from his lips, and he never said such words as "idle talk," so that anybody who told you that told you a lie ?—I can explain it.

22,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) Having drawn your attention to those two parts of the blue book who on "our side," which you call the Liberals, thought so much of this woman's statement as to make it worth while to threaten her beforehand, and then withhold your testimony on the merits of the main case, as they did by not calling you, why was nothing said by you at least ?—I do not know.

22,238. And by your friend Harwood in answer to the complaint made by Mr. Serjeant Parry of the truth of personal violence ?—I had nothing to do with Harwood. What Harwood said to her had nothing to do with me.

22,238*a*. But you heard Mr. Serjeant Parry complain in the first place it was you who threatened her as well as Harwood ?—Yes.

22,239. Why did not you get up in court and ask Mr. Justice Blackburn to hear you about it ?—Because we were expected to be called. I was subpœnaed.

22,240. You were present in court?—Yes.

22,241. And heard that statement?—I did, and expected to be called.

22,242. Will you swear that day you did not offer or give 5*l.* to anyone?—I do. I never had a farthing of any money in my pocket.

22,243. Perhaps you will give the name of the person who was supposed truly or falsely to have received it, because she said it was a dark person whose name she did not know?—No one.

22,244. Have you heard of anyone?—No, not any.

22,245. (Mr. Price.) Vanderbyl's first election in 1866 you say was the time that you volunteered to drive a hired carriage?—Yes.

22,246. And got 2*l.* 10*s.* for your trouble two days after?—Yes.

22,247. Is that all you did at that election?—That is all, everything.

22,248. (Mr. Anstey.) I want you to explain the word "active." You say you were active at the election of 1868. I will ask did you do these things. Did you during the time the voters were hanging back and afterwards go frequently in and out of Bussell's house?—In 1868?

22,249. Yes?—I went in once or twice, but not very many times.

22,250. Were you frequently in and out of the committee room of the "Globe" on that day?—No, not very frequently, sometimes I went in and out, once or twice.

22,251. The day previous to the nomination day were not you one of what are called the fuglemen?—Yes.

22,252. Standing on the rails near that same Bussell's house?—Yes; no, no.

22,253. Waving a yellow handkerchief to the mob below?—It was on the Cornhill, where the nomination is.

22,254. Were you waving a yellow handkerchief to the mob below?—Yes.

22,255. And you were acting as what is called a fugleman?—Yes.

22,256. (Mr. Price.) That is, you say all you did at Vanderbyl's election, driving men to the poll in this hired carriage?—All. I never received a pound for my vote, or a penny, and had no vote.

22,257. Had you anything to do with any other election?—No, nothing.

(Mr. Price.) You must not leave the court, because we do not intend to rest satisfied with this statement of yours. I have sent for Elizabeth Langdon, and she will have to identify you, and we will see which is telling the truth.

Mr. Clifford Symmons sworn.

Mr. C. Symmons.

22,258. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A ship owner, and manage for Messrs. Colthurst, Symmons, and Company.

22,259. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

22,260. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

22,261. Did you interfere in getting up voters to come to the poll, or take any part in getting them up?—No, I did not until the afternoon; I took one man to the poll, I do not know his name.

22,262. Did a number of voters come to you during the day and ask you to get money for them?—No, only one.

22,263. What?—Only one or two.

22,264. I ask you whether a number came?—Not to speak about money.

22,265–6. You have told the secretary one thing?—That is what I told him.

22,267. You know that you told him, "A number "of voters came to me and asked me to get money "for them." Is that true?—I told Mr. Purcell that a man in our employment came to me and said a number of them had said they could get money from the other side. That is what I told him.

22,268. Then they did not come to you?—Only this one.

22,269. What was his name?—George Washer, I think.

22,270. What did you say to him?—I told him if he wanted money he must go about his business.

22,271. Is that all the part you took in the election of 1866?—That is up to 12 o'clock, and after that I went home. At two o'clock or half-past two I came into town again and took one man up to poll.

22,272. Did you know at that time that money was about to be spent?—I did not.

22,273. Did you say anything to him about if money was going he would come in with the rest?—No, in fact the man was tipsy.

22,274. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get any money on that day?—I never saw him.

22,275. (Mr. Price.) You were known as a person who had bribed at a former election?—I do not think I was known by any.

22,276. You had been a briber at former elections?—Yes.

22,277. In 1866?—Yes.

22,278. At Mr. Vanderbyl's election you gave a man, George Webb, 10*l.* a fortnight after the election?—Yes.

22,279. Where did you get it?—From Allan.

22,280. When?—On the afternoon of the polling day.

22,281. Did you keep it in your pocket until a fortnight after the election?—I did.

22,282. Why was that?—When the man went to the poll he was very tipsy, and before I left the house I had a glass of beer with him, and not a word was said in the house about money. As I was driving in a cab with him he said, "Master, have you got me a little money, I shall not be proud." I said, "George, "leave it to me, if I find there is money going I will "get you whatever the price is," and after I took him to the poll I went to Allan's house and received two 5*l.* notes.

22,283. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you not give it to him the next day?—I am not in the habit of going into the house.

22,284. (Mr. Price.) What house?—He kept a public-house.

22,285. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he never come to you?—No.

22,286. (Mr. Price.) How came you to pay him a fortnight afterwards?—I kept it long enough, and wanted to get rid of it.

22,287. Long enough for the petition to go by?—I never thought of it at the time. I put the money down, and he took it up and gave it to his wife, and she took it upstairs.

22,288. At the election before that did you pay James Champion 10*l.*?—Yes, I first gave him 5*l.*, he said he would not go without money, he could get 10*l.* from his brother-in-law, on the Conservative side, Simon Hill, working at the carriage shed, and I said, "Which way do you intend to vote, Jim," and he said, "I should rather my own side, I must have a little money." And I said, "How much?" He said, "They have offered me 10*l.*, if you will give me 5*l.* I will go with you." He walked as far as Smith's shop, and his brother-in-law called him from me, and I was very anxious to get him to poll, and I said, "Come, Jim, come on with me now;" and he said, "Well, Simon has got 10*l.* for me." I said, "Do you mean that you are not going now for the 5*l.*" He said, "No, I shall have another before I go." And I went into the office and took out 5*l.* and paid him.

22,289. Of your own?—Yes, the first 5*l.* was my own.

22,290. Were you repaid?—I asked Bussell and

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. C. Symmons.

17 Sept. 1869.

John Smith, and they referred me to Allan, and I told him rather than go there I would pay him myself, and they repaid me.

22,291. Who?—Bussell gave me 5*l.*, and John Smith 5*l.*

22,292. That was after he had been to the poll?—Yes.

22,293. How many men are there in your employment altogether?—In Bridgwater about 300.

22,294. How many voters?—24 I found out this morning.

22,295. (Mr. Coleridge.) Only 24?—Yes, we have two of our works out of town a mile and a half.

22,296. How did they vote?—I see by the poll list 17 voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl, one a plumper for Vanderbyl, and six for Westropp and Gray.

22,297. (Mr. Price.) Is that all the information you have to give us about any part you took in elections?—I do not know. I was one at Mr. Nicholl's house, but I was very ill that night, and did not take any particular part.

22,298. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any doubt that those six of your men who voted contrary to your principles were paid by the Tories for doing so?—There was one who said so, and so went the other side. I said he had a right, I suppose.

22,299. Did he get any money?—No, but they would get it for him if he kept quiet, some time they would get money; that is all he told.

22,300. The Tories did not fulfil their promise at the last election?—I believe not.

22,301. What is the name of that man?—I think his name is Baker.

22,302. His christian name?—Henry, I think, or Charles. There are two brothers.

22,303. (Mr. Anstey.) Had any of those persons in your employment who voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl, or plumped for Vanderbyl or for Kinglake, previously promised either Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray?—I am sure I do not know.

22,304. Were any of them members of the Conservative Working Men's Association?—I know not.

22,305. Did you canvass your men to know which way they would vote?—I never asked them in my life.

22,306. You did not know which way they were going to vote before the election?—I did not.

22,307. Are they new voters?—I cannot tell them.

22,308. Who did canvass them?—I am sure I do not know, not anyone in my employ.

22,309. What foreman had you?—I had three.

22,310. What are their names?—One is my brother, and at that time one was by the name of Washer, I think, and the other Duddridge.

22,311. Remembering the name of Duddridge do you still say—— ?—It is not that Duddridge, it is a brother.

22,312. Did none of your firm ask a vote of any person in your employ?—You will never find any in the employ either canvassed by the firm or myself.

22,313. You will not speak as to the foremen; you said just now the foremen did not?—Certainly not, you will not find any of the foremen interfered in it.

22,314. Are you related to the Mr. Symmons who was examined before us?—That is my father.

22,315. It is his firm you are speaking of?—Yes; I can speak for his firm, certainly.

22,316. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do at any election with the William Heal we have heard about?—I was the other side of the town when I took Webb to the poll.

22,317. Did you ever get any money for him from anybody?—No.

22,318. Nothing at all?—I did not come up.

22,319. You did not see him on the election day?—No.

22,320. We have heard that he was ill in bed?—He was in his room.

22,321. You did not see him that day?—No.

22,322. Or on the nomination day?—Well, I think I did see him in the evening.

22,323. Did he give you any money?—No.

22,324. Or ask you to take any to anybody?—No.

22,325. Or promise any?—No.

22,326. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us?—That is all. There was a receipt my father put in the other day. I may say I have seen that some score of times on his desk since the election.

22,327. (Mr. Coleridge.) What receipt?—The envelope. I have seen that, it has been with his loose papers from the time he received it.

(Mr. Price.) I do not think we had any reason to doubt what was stated about that at all.

(The witness.) I thought there was a doubt on your mind, and not only that, but two or three witnesses could be brought to prove that he wrote the receipt that very day, if necessary.

(Mr. Price.) We put your father to a test as to writing, and that satisfied me it was not his. That is all.

(The witness.) Only I noticed there is no date to it.

(Mr. Price.) I am quite satisfied, as far as I am concerned, that it is not your father's writing.

22,328. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know that was Heal's writing?—Certainly.

22,329. Was it Heal's?—I could swear to it.

22,330. (Mr. Price.) You have seen it, and are quite sure that it is Heal's handwriting?—Yes. Then Allan states that my father never furnished him with an account after the election. My father begged me to go and see Heal about this money.

(Mr. Allan.) I do not hear what you say about me.

(The witness.) You accused my father that you could not get any account from him.

(Mr. Price.) Allan has said he could get no account?

(The witness.) I should tell you that my father begged me to go and see Heal about it. In fact I asked if Heal had rendered an account. He said, "No, you had better go and see." I believe he told me Allan had asked for it, and I went to Heal, and the account was in that state that I would not take any notice of it.

22,331. (Mr. Price.) Then your explanation of that is that the reason your father would not render an account of it was that Heal was not prepared?—He was not, he did not render it, and my father never saw it.

22,332. That does not contradict Allan?—No, certainly, but that is the reason the account was not put before Allan.

E. Babbage.

EDWIN BABBAGE sworn.

22,333. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A draper, living in Eastover.

22,334. Are you a voter?—Yes.

22,336. For the Liberal candidates?—Yes.

22,337. Did you also take an active part in that election?—No, never.

22,338. Never at all?—Never.

22,339. Did you pass any money to the voters?—No, never; and I never knew that there was a penny passed in my life.

22,340. Not in 1868?—No, never in my life. I have always voted Liberal.

22,341. Have you never had anything to do with bribing anybody to vote Liberal?—No.

22,342. Then your name could not be given in as having been engaged in bribing anybody?—No. If it is, it is a forgery.

22,343. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there any other Babbage in Bridgwater?—Yes. There is Christopher Babbage.

22,344. (Mr. Price.) I find, upon reference, that what has been stated here is about your bill?—Yes.

22,345. You are a draper ?—Yes.

22,346. You had a bill ?—Yes.

22,347. When was the bill incurred ?—12th July 1866 it was paid.

22,348. Sir John Shelley's election ?—No. It was for Mr. Bussell.

22,349. Well, it was in Sir John Shelley's election ?—Yes.

22,350. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is your name Edwin ?—Yes.

22,351. You had a bill of 40*l.* ?—No; 20*l.* 10*s.*

22,352. (Mr. Price.) When did you get it paid ?—12th July 1866.

22,353. Who paid you ?—Mr. Henry Jarman.

22,354. How came it to be paid then ?—I do not know.

22,355. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say you would not vote till you were paid ?—No; I said, in answer to Mr. Allan, before Mr. Vanderbyl was a candidate for Bridgwater, when he said the debt would never be paid, I said I would never vote more.

22,356. (Mr. Price.) Why, then, you were bribed to all intents and purposes ?—No. It was before Mr. Vanderbyl came down.

22,357. It is lucky for you that we say so, because you will be so returned, and you will get a certificate ?—No, it was a private account.

(Mr. Price.) It is nonsense to talk about a "private account."

22,358. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know it was for election purposes ?—Yes.

22,359. (Mr. Price.) Had Bussell dealt with you in his life before ?—He might have done so.

22,360. He might have done, but had he ?—His name was never on my books.

22,361. But had he dealt with you before ?—I cannot say. His wife had been there once or twice; I cannot say.

22,362. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he a regular customer ?—No.

22,363. Do you mean to say that you would have trusted Bussell for 20*l.* worth of goods in the election of 1865, if you had not believed somebody else was going to pay the bill ?—Certainly I would.

22,364. You would ?—Yes, for 100*l.*

22,365. Was not that a good deal of goods for Bussell's wife to have, 20*l.* worth ?—No; she has a long family.

22,366. What were the goods ?—Ribbons and flags and silk pocket handkerchiefs, made to order.

22,367. You think they were charged to Bussell's order ?—Yes; and everything was sent to his house, except five flags, and somebody came to me for those five flags; I said I would have nothing to do with them. I had an order for the goods.

22,368. Who were the people who came to you ?—Mrs. Wilkins, Barclay Street, had one; Kidner and Chant two; and I think Messrs. Glanville and Son had two.

22,369. Did you debit Bussell with it ?—Yes, and sent the goods.

22,370. (Mr. Price.) Do you believe that Bussell wanted these things for himself and family ?—Well, he gave me the order.

22,371. You had better answer the questions put to you in a straightforward manner, or else you will not have a certificate from us ?—Well, I should think from his having colours that he was going to give them away.

22,372. If you thought Bussell wanted them on his own account, why did you not ask him to pay for them ?—I never asked anybody else.

22,373. You said you spoke to Mr. Allan about it ?—No; Allan said the bill would be paid. I never asked anybody else but Bussell about it.

22,374. How was it that Allan came to ask about it ?—He said, if there is a dissolution of Parliament you will be paid. That was about a week before the ministry left office.

22,375. You had asked him about it ?—No.

22,376. You said, "How about the bill ?"—No; he said the bill would be paid.

22,377. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean to say that he volunteered to say to you the bill would be paid ?—Yes.

22,378. Without your mentioning it at all ?—Yes; he stopped me in the street.

22,379. Did you not tell him that Bussell owed you this bill and that you ought to be paid ?—I cannot tell.

22,380. Somebody must have told Allan that Bussell owed you that bill ?—I do not know.

22,381. Who knew it besides Bussell ?—I cannot tell.

22,382. Then nobody could have known it except Bussell and the men in your employ ?—At the end of six months I sent in the bill in Bussell's name.

22,383. Then must it have been Bussell who told Allan that he owed you this bill ?—I think so.

22,384. And you say you told Allan you would not vote unless you got paid, and you were paid, and did vote ?—I said I would not vote any more unless I got paid.

22,385. And you did vote and got paid ?—Yes.

22,386-7. (Mr. Price.) Then you were as much bribed as much as any of the persons who have been spoken of here ?—I do not know about that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You swore you were not bribed, and then it turns out that you insisted upon this bill being paid before you would vote.

WILLIAM HURMAN sworn.

W. Hurman.

22,388. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A draper.

22,389. Carrying on business at Bridgwater ?—At Bridgwater.

22,390. Are you a voter ?—I am.

22,392. Did you receive anything for it ?—Nothing.

22,393. No bad debt paid ?—No, certainly not.

22,394. There were no bad debts ?—Well, I had a debt which has been spoken of here, at the commencement of this inquiry, by Allan, and then, unsolicited by him——

22,395. We are speaking of 1868, the last election. Had you any transaction of that kind at the last election, in any way at the last election ?—I had ribbons, which were then given away, colours.

22,396. Have you a bill outstanding for that ?—I have a bill now entered on my book.

22,397. How much is it ?—I think it is about 10*l.* or 12*l.*

22,398. Whom did you debit it to ?—Well, the fact is I got no order for it.

22,399. Did you give them away ?—Yes; I must say that I gave them on my own responsibility.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But how does it stand in your book ? You surely never gave them away without expecting somebody to pay for them.

(Mr. Price.) You never gave away 12*l.* worth of ribbons.

22,400. (Mr. Coleridge.) How does it stand in your book ?—Simply "ribbons."

22,401. Was nobody's name to it ?—There was nobody's name to it. Though it may be illegal, I was not aware that it was so until this court has stated that it is so.

22,402. Have you got your books here ?—I have got them at home.

22,403. I should very much like to see them ?—With regard to the last election they were really

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

W. Hurman.

17 Sept. 1869.

entered to no one; it was merely a private memorandum of my own.

22,404. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it entered as a private memorandum of your own in your book?—They are on a billhead which I believe is in my desk; it is not entered in the book at all.

22,405. It is not entered in your book?—No; it is in my private pocket book.

22,406. On a billhead?—On a billhead.

22,407. I want to understand your answer. If the books are produced they will show nothing, will they?—They will not, not of the last but of the previous election.

22,408. But if a pocket book of yours is produced it will show a private memorandum?—It will.

22,409. And if a billhead is produced it will show something?—It will show it upon it.

22,410. (Mr. Price.) Now, if there had been no inquiry and no petition to whom would you have charged that?—Well, sir, if I may judge from the previous account, Mr. Cook gave me an order in the time of Sir John Shelley for colours to be supplied in that election, and they are entered to Mr. Cook.

22,411. To whom would you have sent the bill in to if there had been no petition?—Well, I really feel this——

22,412. Never mind what you feel; you must know to whom you would have sent the bill in?—I cannot tell. I would rather have given the whole 12*l.* worth of colours away without saying anything about it.

22,413. Do you mean you would have sacrificed the whole 12*l.* for ribbons without making any endeavour to get it paid?—I think I should.

22,414. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would you have gone to Allan about it?—Certainly not.

22,415. Do you mean you would never have sent it in to Mr. Cook?—No; I should not have presented it unless it had been asked for.

22,416. How could it be asked for if it was a private transaction, and nobody knew anything of it?—They must have known it. They were just little rosettes supplied at the time to the different men in the brickyards on the nomination day.

22,417. You say it was 12*l.*?—Yes.

22,418. And it was for ribbons?—Hundreds of little rosettes.

22,419. You say, "They must have known," who must have known? The party must have known?—They must have known they came from somewhere.

22,420. Who do you say knew it?—I cannot fix upon any of the gentlemen to say they knew it personally. I would state that in my course as a Liberal I have always been very active; but I defy any lawyer or anybody else to say that I have been mixed up with bribery.

22,421. (Mr. Anstey.) We have had all sorts of protestations and confessions made, and we have had before us a petition signed by 80 persons, praying for an inquiry into corrupt practices in this borough, and that they might be put a stop to; and a few weeks afterwards those very same persons were bribing away like mad?—I think I can clear my case.

22,422. (Mr. Price.) It is said that Allan withdrew the observation as far as you are personally concerned with respect to bribery, but that removes the case only one degree from guilt?—I would state, with regard to one statement of Mr. Barham's on Monday last, which implicated me as a bribing agent——

22,423. What is the statement you refer to?—I do not know if he means my name, but the public have thought it was my name that is meant. He has mixed up my name in connexion with a Mr. Chedzey, I think his name is. I deny ever having gone to Chedzey's house, indeed I did not know where the man lived; and as for being a bribery agent I defy any lawyer in the town to accuse me of it.

22,424. You had a bill at your shop at Sir John Shelley's election?—Yes.

22,426. That bill was not paid at that election?—It was not.

22,427. When was it paid?—It was paid some time I think in September 1866.

22,428. Was that the time when, as we have been informed, all the bills of Mr. Vanderbyl were being paid up, September 1866?—Well, I consider that that was a bill not among those, if you will allow me to say so, that were sent in on conditions of voting.

22,429. Never mind that. We will come to the conditions of voting presently. That was the time when all Sir John Shelley's bills were paid off?—I believe so.

22,430. Now, tell us how you came to be paid out of Mr. Vanderbyl's money in September 1866?—I never believed it to be Mr. Vanderbyl's money.

22,431. Whose money did you believe it to be?—I believed it to be the accounts not settled up by the lawyers.

22,432. Whose money do you believe it to be?—I believed it must have been Sir John Shelley's money, which had been arranged at that election, which had never been paid.

22,433. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why, Mr. Bagehot's election had intervened?—I know that.

22,434. (Mr. Anstey.) You had supplied goods at Mr. Bagehot's election?—I had.

22,435. For which you had been paid?—Yes.

22,436. When were you paid this?—I believe in June 1867.

22,437. Did Mr. Lovibond pay that bill?—I believe he did pay that; and when the account was made up he handed me the amount.

22,438. That account is debited to the order of Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond, and although Mr. Bagehot's name is certainly mentioned, it is only mentioned by the description "Bagehot's election;" therefore it was to Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond, and not to Mr. Bagehot, to whom it was debited?—No. As far as the lawyers are concerned, of course the order was given me by Mr. Cook, by the partner of Mr. Reed.

22,439. I am talking of your bill. You did not even head it as "Mr. Bagehot, bought of W. Hurman;" but what you say is, "Reed and Lovibond, bought of W. Hurman"?—That means the election between the two periods.

22,440. (Mr. Price.) Had you ever asked anybody anything about your account before the election of Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, Mr. Lovibond.

22,441. When did you ask him?—I believe it might be two or three times during the course of the year.

22,442. How recently before the election of Mr. Vanderbyl did you ask?—Well, I am not aware that I mentioned it within a month of the time.

22,443. Did you know that there was going to be a contest at the election?—Not that I was aware.

22,444. Did you not ask Mr. Lovibond for the payment of that bill after you knew there was going to be a contest?—I swear that I never anticipated receiving that money.

22,445. That is not an answer to my question. The question is this, will you pledge your oath that you did not ask Mr. Lovibond for the payment of that bill after you had become aware there was going to be a contest, that Mr. Vanderbyl was coming down to fight Patton?—Not that I am aware.

22,446. You must be aware?—Well, I believe not.

22,447. You will not undertake to swear it was not so?—No, I should not like to say.

22,448. That being so, you having heard that there was going to be a contest, do you mean to say that, either in actual words or not, you did not tell or intimate to Mr. Lovibond that your vote would depend on whether you got paid or not?—Certainly not.

22,449. I should have thought your asking him about it would have conveyed that idea to his mind?

—Mr. Lovibond certainly could not have understood it so.

22,450. As it appears to be the custom here among tradesmen not to vote till they get their bills, I should have so understood it, although with regard to any other town I should not?—As with all other tradesmen we expect to get the money for our goods.

22,451. Did you expect Sir John Shelley to incur a debt and Mr. Vanderbyl to pay it?—Certainly not.

22,452. That appears to have been the practice before in Bridgwater?—No, I did not know that it was.

22,453. Did not you know that it is a thoroughly well understood thing in this town, that if a candidate has left bills unpaid, that before another contest comes on they shall be squared off?—I have never had the slightest idea of the thing.

22,454. Then you are the only man in Bridgwater who does not know it?—Well, that may be so. I never heard it till it was stated here.

22,455. You are the only man in Bridgwater who does not know it?—I have never gone into the inside working of elections.

22,456. You have gone into the outside working, if not the inside. Do you mean to say that you really will pledge your oath as an honest man, that you believe you got that money from Sir John Shelley?—I believe that as firmly as I stand here. I believe that it came from Sir John Shelley's account, most distinctly.

22,457. That is not the question. What do you mean by "account"? Do you mean that Sir John Shelley paid it out of his own pocket?—I believe that.

22,458. You standing there, in that witness box, do you mean to say you believe that that was paid out of Sir John Shelley's money?—As far as I could learn.

22,459. Do you believe it?—I say I can only judge of it from the information I received from Mr. Lovibond.

22,460. What was it?—That the accounts were being made up, and that Sir John Shelley's and Mr. Bagehot's accounts both would be settled when they squared up.

22,461. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know that Sir John Shelley only spent 220*l.* altogether?—Only from what has been said here. I knew nothing about it at the time. I only know that I subscribed towards the petition.

22,462. (Mr. Anstey.) During the whole of the year and a half, from the coming in of the Derby ministry to the end of 1867, I believe there were prospects of a general election, were there not, in this town, during the whole of 1867 and the latter half of 1866, about the reform question?—Yes.

22,463. Very well. Then on the 5th of February 1867 I see you received for the first time payment of the large sum of 12*l.* 6*s.* 0*d.*?—Yes.

22,464. From somebody or other, whose name does not appear?—Mr. Lovibond.

22,465. Well, from Mr. Lovibond, for goods said to have been supplied not even at Mr. Vanderbyl's election, but at the contest which was not an election of Mr. Bagehot. Now I ask you on your oath, Mr. Hurman, would you believe from what passed then that Mr. Lovibond would have paid you one farthing of that sum at that time but for the prospect of a general election, and consequently a particular election for Bridgwater?—Most decidedly I should have expected the money.

22,466. If you should have expected it, do you think he would have been such a fool as to have paid it?—I think it would be only honest.

22,467. But you see, Mr. Hurman, you did not even debit it to Mr. Bagehot. It is put thus, "original election of Mr. Bagehot," then underlined, which I suppose must have been done at the time when you received the payment, the better part of a year afterwards; underlined comes this extraordinary memo., "order Mr. Reed and Lovibond." That is evidently underlined, because comparing it with a similar bill of parcels furnished by you in respect of the intervening election of Mr. Vanderbyl's, which was then the last election, I find that that also is headed, "election Mr. Vanderbyl," but nobody debited; "bought of W. Hurman" goes on then. This is merely a memo. that this was an election of Mr. Vanderbyl, just as the former was an election of Mr. Bagehot; but nobody appears in either case to have been debited. Somebody appears to have underlined it, apparently at the period of its payment, "order of Reed and Lovibond." Is it not perfectly clear that you meant to do so, to leave your account without a heading to it, and to charge it to the first unhappy candidate who came here to seek your vote?—Certainly not.

22,468. If you like that answer to stand, of course it must stand?—I feel quite confident.

22,469. Now I will ask you about the contents of them. You know what a bill of parcels is, being a man of large business?—Yes.

22,470. Can you call this a bill of parcels, especially for such a large sum as 12*l.* 6*s.* 0*d.*: "Ribbons supplied to men in various yards" no date whatever, "in various yards, Messrs. Browne's, Hammill's," then underlined "Colthurst and Symmons, Barham, "Moggs, handkerchiefs, &c., rosettes, &c., for band, "&c." Do you call that a bill of parcels?—Well, that was the proportion.

22,471. Will you answer my question? Do you think that is a bill of parcels?—Well, it is lumped together there.

22,472. Do you ever lump things together in a bill of parcels?—It is quite optional, and if the gentleman had wished for the particulars I would have given them.

22,473. Your case is a particular one. You say that nothing appears in your books as to this account?—That is the last election. All these things appear in my books.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then we must have the books here.

22,474. Who is Moggs, against whose names the handkerchiefs are placed?—Men in his employ.

22,475. Whose employ?—Moggs.

22,476. That is the man who has been here?—Yes.

22,477. Who is Mr. Barham?—The man who has the cement works here.

22,478. Not the solicitor?—No, the brother.

22,479. And I suppose the other names speak for themselves?—Mr. Hammill is another brickyard gentleman, and Colthurst and Symmons have the yard you have heard of, and Browne and Company are also brickyard men.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We have heard of those.

22,480. (Mr. Price.) Who gives the orders for those things? Do Messrs. Hammill, and Colthurst and Symmons, and the others deck their men out at their own expense, or are their men decked out at the expense of the candidates at your suggestion, or who does it?—Not at my suggestion.

22,481. You said you supplied them on your own responsibility. Who gives the orders?—Mr. Cook gave me the order, and Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed were the parties representing the candidates.

22,482. And he told you to deck out the men in these yards with rosettes?—He did.

22,483. Mr. Cook did?—The gentlemen I have named.

22,484. Who are the gentlemen?—Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed were aware that these yards had had rosettes sent to them.

22,485. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing that any of these men walked into your shop and said, "I work at Browne's," would you give them a rosette?—I should give them a rosette.

22,486. Then you give away as many rosettes as you like, you throw the rosettes at these men, and make each candidate pay for them, and that you consider to be honest tradesmanlike conduct?—It is a speculation.

22,487. It is a speculation entirely?—I would not give the rosettes for voting.

22,488. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you quite sure that you would have given the rosettes away if you had had no prospect of being paid for them by some candidate? Certainly. I would have given 100*l.* worth of goods away rather than have done so.

22,489. (Mr. Price.) Then I wonder that you did do so. Why should you do such a suspicious thing if you were an honest man. When you get a candidate in the town afterwards who had been showering his gold upon the place, you make out your bill and ask him to pay it, there having been an intermediate election?—I never anticipated that the money came from him at the time.

22,490. Are there any other elections that you can speak to?—There is one other thing, and that is about my name being mixed up with Mr. Bottomley.

22,491. (Mr. Coleridge.) Somebody here has stated that you said you would not vote until your bill was paid?—That Allan said, and he contradicted it.

22,492. Had you any conversation with Allan at all?—I might have said to him in my shop weeks before that "the old bills ought to be paid;" that might have been said.

22,493. (Mr. Price.) Everybody understands that?—Not with the anticipation of voting.

22,494. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you use the word "vote"?—No.

22,495. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why should you shortly before the election talk to Allan about old bills being paid?—I did not talk to him especially about it. He is a neighbour and he comes in repeatedly.

22,496. (Mr. Price.) And you took that opportunity of saying the bills ought to be paid up?—Yes.

22,497. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have told me that you would have given 100*l.* away rather than the men should not have had the favours?—I did not put it in that way. I say, rather than make the charge upon Mr. Vanderbyl, or if it was known to me that it was to be paid by any incoming candidate, I would rather lose 100*l.*

22,498. You said you would have given 100*l.* away rather than let the men go without their favours. You said you would give 100*l.* away. Do you mean that you would give away 100*l.* which you were not sure of being paid by some other candidate?—Not if I believed it was going to be paid by some other candidate.

22,499. I say, supposing anybody came into your shop at election time, and said, "I want 20*l.* worth of favours," and you were quite sure you would not get a farthing for them, would you supply them?—Of course that is quite a different way of putting it.

22,500. You said you would rather give away 100*l.* in favours?—Rather than charge twopence to a candidate who had no right to pay it.

22,501. Rather not supply them at all. Would you give 100*l.* away, knowing you would not receive a halfpenny from anybody, merely out of charity to the cause?—No, I do not think I should.

22,502. (Mr. Price.) You say you would rather pay 100*l.* away than Mr. Vanderbyl should pay Sir John Shelley's debts?—I think so.

22,503. Then I think the best thing you can do is to inquire of Mr. Lovibond where he got the money from, and refund it?—Well, I am quite ready to do that.

22,504. (Mr. Anstey.) I have got here a cheque book, or what was a cheque book, containing cheques and also counterfoils used at Sir John Shelley's election, for what appear to have been legitimate expenses, and I do not find your name amongst them?—Legitimate? I do not know what that means.

22,505. I will repeat what I said. I have got here a cheque book with the names on the counterfoils of tradesmen and others, who were paid for the legitimate expenses at that election, and I do not find your name amongst them?—I have nothing to do with that.

22,506. You say you do not know the meaning of the word "legitimate." Do you mean to say on your oath that you did not know that to supply these ribbons and colours was an illegal transaction?—I have understood it is so at this court; but at the time of Sir John Shelley's election, and when these goods were supplied, I did not consider that it was an infringement of the law.

22,507. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have never heard of the Corrupt Practices Act?—I was not aware of it.

22,508. (Mr. Anstey.) If you are not aware of the meaning of the word "legitimate," I will call your attention to this. Here is a book which has passed through the hands of the bribery election agent. I find in it—they are all dated on the 6th September 1865—that Edgar Haviland was paid out of Sir John Shelley's share of this account, which is legitimate enough. Then follow a number of others, "rent of rooms," and so on, and then one which may be legitimate enough, "Eustace Barham to pay accounts," and then Mr. Whitby's account, and so on, all verified. Printer's bills, and so forth. Mr. Barham, again, to pay bills, and so forth. Then there is the lawyer's fee. "To Reed 25 guineas." And then we have "remuneration for Mr. Robert Fletcher for his trouble, 7*l.*" Then we have fees of the agent for election expenses. Then there is a bill from another tradesman, and another, and then a treating bill, and then come two blank cheques; and your name, although your account was then quite ripe for payment, if your story is true, and if it was a legitimate charge, is not amongst them, and it is not paid till long afterwards. Can you explain all that?—I have nothing to do with the preparation of that; and I am happy to say I have always been out of the secrets of the lawyers in election matters.

22,509. Then in like manner I will ask you with regard to Mr. Bagehot's election? Mr. Bagehot and Mr. Kinglake are so completely identical, that Mr. Bagehot uses in 1866 Mr. Kinglake's cheque book of 1865, the next counterfoil in date to the 6th September 1865 being 21st August 1866, and then it goes on, Bagehot. I find a great number of men here, tradesmen, attorneys, and others, of the like character to those which I last drew your attention to. There is a printing bill amongst others; that is the nearest approach to a charge for ribbons and rosettes; and then horses and carriages, flies, and so forth; small bills, and so on; but no Hurman?—Yes.

22,510. Now if your debt had been quite bonâ fide, and not at all connected with your vote, what would have prevented you from going to Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Reed, Mr. Cook, or Mr. Barham, and saying, "Give me a cheque for my little account; here it is"? You appear either not to have done that, or you appear to have been refused and not to have been paid until another general election had intervened, and another new election was had. Can you explain that?—With regard to any statements which have been made by the lawyers in their legitimate accounts, I have not any power of knowing what they were going to enter or leave out.

22,511. Do you mean to swear that you were not aware that they were paying printers and other people for the expenses of the election, soon after the election?—I had no idea of it.

22,512. You had not?—Not the slightest.

22,513. Am I to understand that this is the first time you were aware of it?—Until I heard it in this court I have never known of their payments before.

22,514. (Mr. Price.) I wish you would attend, Mr. Hurman, to this. Had you mentioned at all, at the time of Mr. Bagehot's being here, in any way, in the most roundabout way you like to put it, that your bill was still unpaid by Sir John Shelley?—To anybody?

22,515. To anybody?—I am not aware that I did.

22,516. Will you swear you had not? Will you swear that you had not mentioned the fact that you had an unpaid bill of Sir John Shelley's at the time of Mr. Bagehot's election, in the same way as you acknowledge that you mentioned it at Mr. Vanderbyl's?—I am not aware that I have said any such thing.

22,517. But you will not undertake to say you did not?—No. I really cannot charge my memory.

22,518. Therefore it may stand thus, that having an unpaid bill of Sir John Shelley's previous to the contest of Mr. Bagehot's, you mentioned that you had that unpaid bill, and that previous to the contest of Mr. Vanderbyl you mentioned again you had a bill unpaid. That is the way it may possibly have been?—I do not know whether you understand that I mentioned it before each of these elections?

22,519. That is what I am asking you. I am asking you this—do not misunderstand me: Allan has declared that you were one of the men whom he represents he paid out of Mr. Vanderbyl's money after Mr. Vanderbyl's election, and who had mentioned before the election the fact of their bills having been paid, and not having been satisfied, and that they would not vote without those bills being paid?—I have never stipulated about the matter.

22,520. There is no occasion for stipulation, no occasion whatever, because every man in Bridgwater understands that money is meant on the slightest hint?—I believe there are some honest men in Bridgwater.

22,521. Did you say anything of that kind previous to Mr. Bagehot's election?—Not that I am aware of.

22,522. You will not undertake to say you did not?—I do not know to whom I could have said it.

22,523. Never mind that?—Well, I have no recollection of it.

22,524. Now then, Mr. Allan made a very distinct statement about you, and instead of waiting to be examined about it, which you knew you would be, because you have been served with a summons?—Yes.

22,525. Instead of waiting until you could contradict it upon oath, you took upon yourself to go to Allan and tell him he had stated that which was wrong?—I beg your pardon, Allan came to me unsolicited; I never went to him.

22,526. What about?—About what he had said in the court that day. He came to me after the court had closed about half an hour. He was very much excited, and he said, "Mr. Hurman, I am sorry if I "have done you an injury. I have mentioned your "name to-day, and I have stated that which I have "since found is not true, and I will publish my ex- "planation in any way you like, and you may state it "to your friends."

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

(Mr. Allan.) Mr. Lovibond after the adjournment of this court told me I had made a mistake; that he paid Mr. Hurman this bill, and he took me to the office and showed me the receipt. I then went to Mr. Hurman, and I said I had made a mistake in giving my evidence, in having said I had paid this bill. That is how it was.

22,527. (Mr. Price.) Did he begin the conversation by saying that you were wrong in saying that he was one of those who had made a stipulation before the election for the payment of their bills before they would vote, or did you volunteer that statement?—It was me that went up and addressed him.

22,528. Did you say also that you had made a mistake in saying that he had made a stipulation for his vote, because that is the materiality of the case. Did you make a statement that you had also made a mistake in saying he was one of the tradesmen who had stipulated for payment of their bills before they could be got to vote?—I do not think he stipulated for any such thing; that is to say, that he stipulated for his bill to be paid before he would vote, but he said that his bill ought to be paid, or something like that.

22,529. You understood what it meant?—Exactly.

22,530. Did you tell Mr. Lovibond that Hurman and these other men were standing out so that he might pay their bills?—Mr. Hurman told me, and I went to Mr. Lovibond.

22,531. After you had had this conversation with Mr. Hurman, when he gave you to understand, though he did not put it in plain language, because they do not like to do so here, when he gave you to understand that he wanted to have his bill paid, did you tell that to Mr. Lovibond in order that he might see to his bill being paid. Did you do that in Hurman's name?—No, I do not remember that I did.

22,532. Then how did Mr. Lovibond know anything about it?—It was in Mr. Lovibond's office I first saw Mr. Hurman's bill, and Mr. Lovibond paid it. I was speaking from memory when I gave my evidence here; I thought I paid it.

22,533. Then how do you account for Mr. Lovibond's knowing anything about Mr. Hurman's bill not being paid if you did not speak to him?—Mr. Hurman must have taken it to Mr. Lovibond himself, because it did not go to Mr. Lovibond through me.

22,534. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say that you went down to see Mr. Hurman about his vote, and then he made it a strong matter about his bill not being paid. Did you go down to Mr. Lovibond about it, or what induced Mr. Lovibond to pay it?—I cannot tell.

22,535. You did not go to him after the election?—No.

22,536. You were quite aware that when you asked Hurman to vote he suggested that he should be paid 12*l.* 6*s.*?—Will you allow me to state this: the election of Mr. Bagehot was the first election at which I had had anything at all to do with electioneering matters in this borough, and then Hurman's bill was due against Sir John Shelley; and it was after Mr. Bagehot's election, and before Mr. Vanderbyl's election, that I had a conversation with William Hurman in his own shop about the bill, having seen Hurman's bill at Bagehot's election. William Hurman asked me how it was that I seemed to have so much knowledge of electioneering matters, because it was only about three or four weeks that I first had had to do with electioneering matters, and Hurman did not know that I had anything to do with electioneering matters at all, and he seemed surprised at my knowledge of what the amount of his bill was.

22,537. After Bagehot's election?—After Bagehot's election and before Vanderbyl's, and he was surprised when I told him the amount of his bill, as the bill had passed through my hands; "Well," he said, "it ought to have been paid at the last election."

22,538. That was Bagehot's election, that he spoke of as the last election?—Yes. I will not swear whether he said if it was not paid he would not vote, but I will swear that he did say that his bill was not paid at Bagehot's election, and it ought to have been paid; and he certainly made his bill, as I said in my evidence, a strong point.

WILLIAM HURMAN recalled.

W. Hurman.

22,539. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you deny the statement which you have just heard fall from the lips of Mr. Allan?—With regard to what?

22,540. Is it generally true, or if not, will you point out where it is wrong?—I will just say this with regard to the "strong point." Of course I do not mean to say that Allan has not stated to the best of his belief, but I think the "strong point" he talks about was not impressed upon him by me; and with regard to my having a guilty knowledge of bribery, or anything about paying accounts, I never knew it, and even at Mr. Vanderbyl's election I did not know that Mr. Allan was dealing the money out of his house until I have heard it since. As he has said, and I believe Allan believes that, I know nothing about the inside work of bribery in any shape or form.

22,541. (Mr. Price.) I do not know what you call "inside work?"—I mean they have had these private meetings.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

(Mr. Allan.) Now my recollection is called to it I will swear to the words—that he told me that his bill was not paid at Bagehot's election, and that it ought to have been paid. And that he calls not a strong point.

W. Hurman.

WILLIAM HURMAN recalled.

22,542. (Mr. Price.) Did you say that?—I believe I did, and I would say it again.

22,543. That is to say, you thought that a bill contracted at a former election ought to be paid before another election?—Just so.

22,544. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before another election?—Yes.

22,545. (Mr. Price.) When there is another candidate in the field?—I do not think it is fair for another candidate to pay the old candidate's debts.

22,546. Is that all you had to do with the election?—May I ask, with regard to Mr. Barham, whether it has gone forth that I was a bribery agent?

22,547. I did not understand that anything of that kind was said?—On Monday the 6th.

22,548. Who said that?—Mr. Barham. He associated my name with being a bribery agent.

22,549. On Monday, 6th September?—At any rate he mentioned a Mr. Hurman.

Mr. E. Barham.

Mr. EUSTACE BARHAM recalled.

(Mr. Barham.) I am quite prepared to say that I am mistaken in what I said with regard to Mr. Hurman. I stated it with the greatest possible hesitation, and on reflection, and having heard Mr. Hurman's evidence, I now withdraw it.

W. Hurman.

WILLIAM HURMAN recalled.

22,550. (Mr. Price.) What is it that you say Mr. Barham said?—Mr. Barham's statement was something to this effect, that he went to Chedzey's house, and that he left Chedzey, that he went—I would not say for improper purposes, but he must have inferred, from what he said, that others were there for it, and he left the man in the custody of two bribery agents, and Hurman was named as one, which I enter my protest against.

22,551. Instead of entering your protest you had better deny it altogether that you were there. You are on your oath, and you utterly deny that you were there?—I do.

22,552. Is that all you have to tell us?—I would like to explain about Bottomley.

22,553. What about him?—My name has been brought up in connexion with Bottomley, and I would say that at the committee room of Vanderbyl's election I was there with others, watching the list of voters as they polled, and in that list appeared Bottomley's name, and someone said, "He is coming up by train," and it was asked, "Who will go to meet him?" I walked to the station, he being an old neighbour and a trader of the town. I said, "Well, I will go down, and if he comes I will come up with him." I went to the station, and he arrived by train. I would say, sir, that I had no idea that Bottomley was a corrupted man, or needed any corruption. When he arrived at the station I shook hands with him, and I said, "I am glad you are come up to the election." We walked to the outside of the platform and rode in the omnibus together. We rode in the omnibus together up to George Street, just up to Lilly's place, which is a livery stables there. We got out of the 'bus, and I took him upstairs to the committee-room, and I believe at the top of the stairs Mr. Henry Lovibond, and there might have been—I should not like to swear who else, but when I got to the top of the stairs I walked into the committee room, and Bottomley was taken hold of by some one; at any rate, Henry Lovibond was present, and I believe the conversation of Bottomley in the 'bus was something to this effect, as well as I can remember. He said, "I was used very bad at the last election." I said, "Bottomley, I know nothing of the past, and "if you really have any grievance you must tell it to "the gentlemen who know anything about it, because "I do not;" and I gave him up to the custody—at least into the committee room, where the poll book was kept open. That is my explanation with regard to that.

22,554. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you take him to the committee room if he was not a corrupt voter, as you thought, instead of to the poll direct?—Well, sir, as a rule, I would not take a man of that sort. I had no idea he was a corrupt man.

22,555. Did you never take a man to the poll?—Not that I am aware of, not with corrupt intentions.

22,556. But did you ever take anybody to the poll?—Oh yes, frequently.

22,557. I should have thought you would have gone on with Bottomley to the poll, and not to the committee room?—I was not connected in any way with being sent for him, except going to the station. I went to the station to meet him as a friend.

22,558. When was the first election at which you voted?—I have been in the town since 1839, and at every election I have voted.

22,559. Have you had a bill for colours at every election?—I think 1859 was the first.

22,560. Do you recollect what election that was?—I think that was in the time of Tynte.

22,561. Tynte and Kinglake?—I think it was when Kinglake came into the field first.

22,562. That was 1852?—1852. Then that was the first time I voted for Mr. Kinglake.

22,563. Had you a bill for colours then?—I think I had.

22,564. Who paid it?—I think it was paid by Mr. Robert Bate.

22,565. How long after the election?—I should not like to say. Some six months, perhaps; some time in that year.

22,566. Was your bill of 1852 paid before 1857?—Yes.

22,567. Had you a bill in 1857?—I do not believe I had.

22,568. Had you a bill in 1859?—Well, I would not be certain, because the fact is the Liberals were divided just then.

22,569. Then you had a bill in 1865 and 1866. What I want to know is this, had you any one of those bills entered in your books as charged to any particular person, or were they all charged in the way you have told us this last one was, merely "ribbons"?—I think Mr. Bate has the bill, because I have always acted on Mr. Kinglake's behalf.

22,570. I think it is right you should let us have all your books after the adjournment?—I do not think I can produce all of them.

22,571. Let us have all you can?—About the 1865 election there is this, which accounts for such a large display of colours in the contest of Shelley and Kinglake. In that year there was a large display of colours, because the old colours did not suit the new men.

22,572. (Mr. Price.) That is not important. Is there anything else you wish to state?—My name was a good deal mixed up on the petition.

22,573. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean the petition of 80?—I mean my name was brought up once or twice on the trial of the election petition before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and statements were made which we had no chance to rebut, and consequently all the evidence produced was all on one side.

22,574. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you wish to rebut?—It was stated then, I believe it was on the brief, something rather serious, accusing me of treating at the "Masons' Arms," and things of that sort; and I deny ever having given 2*d.* worth of beer, or paying for or ordering 2*d.* worth of beer in the town, in the way of treating; and I also state I was not aware that the "Bath Road" Inn was opened for treating during the day, and I may mention that, before the nomination, for several nights I took an active part with the working men, and I took a part with them in the ward rooms, and I protested against any beer being given away, and unless the rooms were all detached from the public-houses I would not consent to be there.

22,575. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had anything to do with municipal elections?—Only as an anxious supporter.

22,576. Have you known of bribery?—No.

22,577. I do not mean in your own person?—Never. I have never known it till it came out afterwards, after the "fight," as it is called.

22,578. (Mr. Coleridge.) But have there been, to the best of your knowledge, corrupt practices at municipal elections, or not?—As I said just now, I have never known it till I have heard afterwards that there has been beer and money.

22,579. Have you generally heard that it is so?—No. I do not think it is general.

22,580. When was the last time you heard of corrupt practices at municipal elections?—At the time Mr. Cook stated. I have not heard that there are any large bills.

22,581. (Mr. Anstey.) You signed the petition of 80?—I did.

22,582. What information can you give the Commission on the points which you stated in the petition to the House of Commons?—Well, my impression most sincerely is, that if we had had this Commission down then instead of now, that we should have saved a good deal of the corruption which has happened since.

22,583. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to say about the petition?—No more than that I signed it, that there should be a Commission to search the town, to see where the bribery lay and root it out.

22,584. You do agree then that you asked the Honourable House to appoint a commission of inquiry, as there was a much larger number of cases of bribery than was apparent on the face of the evidence before Mr. Baxter's election committee. Now, can you give me any information, any clue which will enable us to discover and report upon the "much larger number of cases of bribery"?—That statement was drawn up by the lawyers, and I heard it read over, and I believe at that election, and it is possible at other elections, a much larger number have been bribed, and I should have rejoiced then to see the thing purged to the very core.

22,585. I do not want to have your impressions, everybody gives them; I want to know, yes or no, can you give us any information whatever that would lead us to discover, ay or no, the existence of a larger number or any number of cases of bribery not disclosed already before the election committee of 1866?—Individually, sir, I know of none, but from report I believe a larger number than ever was reported to the committee has existed in the town.

22,586. Then you can give us no information at all?—Not the slightest.

A short adjournment took place.

JOHN FACKERELL sworn.

J. Fackerell.

22,587. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter of Bridgwater?—Yes.

22,588. Were you a voter last time?—I was.

22,589. Did you receive any money for your vote?—No.

22,590. Did you have any promise given to you of any?—I did.

22,591. Whom by?—Ensign Robinson.

22,592. Ensign Robinson?—I call him ensign.

22,593. Is that Mr. William Robinson?—William Robinson.

22,594. Did you see him say anything to Mr. Lovibond?—I did.

22,595. You saw him speak to Mr. Lovibond?—I did.

22,596. Did you hear what passed between them?—I did not.

22,597. What had you asked him for, or had you asked him for anything—Mr. Robinson?—What was that question?

22,598. Tell us what passed?—Did you ask whether I asked him——

22,599. Did you ask him, or who first started the question of money? Did you say you wanted money for your vote?—I did.

22,600. Did you say the sum; did you name the sum?—He asked me what I wanted, I said it must be a tenner.

22,601. Is this the first time you had had a vote?—It is.

22,602. Well, then you saw him talking to Mr. Lovibond. Did he come back to you after he had spoken to Mr. Lovibond?—He did.

22,603. What did he say then?—Well, he said that (I don't like, you know, waiting) he said, said he, "You go to poll and I will promise you."

22,604. And you polled on the strength of that promise?—On the promise.

22,605. Without that promise you would not have voted?—I would not.

22,606. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he ever pay you?—No.

22,607. (Mr. Anstey.) What was your qualification as a voter?—Liberal.

22,608. (Mr. Price.) No, your qualification. You say it is the first time you had a vote. What was the qualification for the vote?—Qualification, sir?

22,609. What put you on the register? What did you vote in respect of?—The Liberal cause.

22,610. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you a 10*l.* voter, the occupier of a 10*l.* tenement?—Oh, I see.

22,611. Did you pay 10*l.* a year, or what was it?—12*l.* a year I was paying.

22,612. Let me hear what you say?—I was a renter of 12*l.* a year.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

J. Fackerell.

17 Sept. 1869.

22,613. Then you are not altogether what is called one of the new voters ?—I was a new voter.

22,614. But your qualification was an old qualification ?—An old qualification.

22,615. (Mr. Price.) You succeeded your father ?—I did.

22,616. Therefore you came in upon that. Had your father a vote before you ?—Yes.

22,617. Then you took the same qualification, the same house as he had ; therefore you could have voted whether a Reform Bill had passed or not ?—Certainly I could.

22,618. (Mr. Coleridge.) What used your father to get for his vote ? What used your father to get paid for voting ?—Oh that I cannot say.

22,619. (Mr. Price.) What made you say a tenner then ; "It must be a tenner." Why did you say that ?—Because I had known nearly on the regards of speaking, you know, it is tens on the Conservative side, I know.

22,620. They were promising that on the Conservative side ?—They had not promised me.

22,621. (Mr. Anstey.) How did you know they had been paying that on the Conservative side ? How did you know that they had been paying 10*l.* a head on the Conservative side ?—Well, if you come to that point, you know, don't you see, sir, as regards of speaking, there is many words that is spoken, that all tens have been received, and that has been chiefly the go I believe on the Conservative side.

22,622. Then you don't know what money had been paid ?—I do not, not in regards of knowing ; I never saw it myself.

22,623. Did you know that money had been promised on the Conservative side at that election ?—Not at this last election.

22,624. You do not know ?—I do not know.

22,625. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever asked anybody for this 10*l.* that Mr. Robinson promised you since the election ?—No, I have not,

22,626. You never asked Mr. Robinson ?—No, I have not.

22,627. Nor Mr. Bussell. Have you asked him for it ?—What Bussell ?

22,628. Henry Chapman Bussell ?—Never in my life.

22,629. Have you asked Allan ?—Never.

22,630. Have you asked Mr. Lovibond ?—No.

22,631. Whom did you ask ?—No person at all.

22,632. Why did you not, if you had been promised ?—Well, in regards of why I did not ask, because I took it from the man who promised me the 10*l.*, that I should expect to have it some day.

22,633. Are you in Mr. Robinson's employment ?—Well, I am not in his employment.

22,634. Have you been ?—No, never.

22,635. What have you got to do with him ?—All that I have got to do with him is that I rent a house of him.

22,636. (Mr. Price.) He is ensign in some volunteer corps that you have to do with ?—Certainly he is.

22,637. (Mr. Anstey.) You depended upon Robinson keeping Robinson's own promise to you ?—Well, I depend upon it in that way.

22,638. Do you think you will get it now ?—Well, I fancies I shall not have it.

22,639. Very well, you may stand down now, Fackerell.

(The witness.) Thank you, sir

C. Symmons.

CLIFFORD SYMMONS recalled.

(The witness.) There is one thing that I have omitted with regard to the municipal matter. I omitted to mention it when I was in the box, and I heard Mr. Hurman speak of it. Mr. Cook in his evidence the other day said that I spent about five years ago about 20*l.* I cannot tell you now whether it was 20*l.* or not. I know it was something.

22,640. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was it spent in ?—In beer.

22,641. Treating ?—No, I will tell you. It was in this way. I was an outsider, went in single-handed. I did not go in with the "arrangement," as they call it. I went in after being pressed by the teetotallers. They promised me that if I would stand——

22,642. Being a teetotaller you spent 20*l.* in beer. Was it that ?—I am not a teetotaller, but it was the teetotallers' request that I would stand ; if I would they would get me in. After the polling began our men came in after it, young and old, and one asked me for a pint, and another for a quart, and I found after the election I had to pay.

22,643. Were there many teetotallers in Bridgwater ?—I do not know. However I am not one. It was a beer account that I paid.

22,644. Have you ever heard any point made here at an election about the Permissive Bill ?—Not that I know of. I do not know that there was anything of that. There was another little point. Allan stated that he paid my father 20*l.* for George Webb. I do not know whether he has made a mistake in the Symmons.

22,645. (Mr. Price.) Are you now going to contradict the statement of Mr. Allan from your own knowledge, or from what your father has told you ?—I should like you to ask Allan this question, did he pay it to my father or me ?

(Mr. Price.) Allan has told us certain things. If you are going to contradict anything Allan has said from your own knowledge you are entitled to do so, but if you are going to contradict it from what your father has told you we shall not permit it ; for this reason we thought it necessary in the discharge of our duty to reprehend your father's conduct in the witness box, and until he has purged himself from that contempt he will not be allowed to speak again in the witness box. Therefore we cannot allow you to deny anything merely on the information of your father.

(The witness.) No, I do not wish to deny it at all. Allan has not put me down as receiving 10*l.* from him. I say I did receive it for George Webb.

22,646, And it was you and not your father ?—It was me. You are under the impression that it was my father, but I can assure you my father never saw it.

22,647. Did Allan give it to you himself ?—He gave it himself with his own hands.

22,648. When ?—In the afternoon, after I had taken Webb to poll.

22,649. At the last election ?—In the previous election.

22,650. Vanderbyl's ?—Yes, my father had nothing to do with the last election. I took Webb to poll as I can assure you without saying a word, except coming over the bridge, when he said, if there was money would I get it it for him. I said "Yes." I did not know at that time there was until I heard some people had been receiving it. I was told to go to Allan's. I went there and walked a little way up and into a room and turned to the left, and saw a lot of money, and I said, "I have polled George Webb, and I promised him whatever price is going," and Allan said, "The price is 10*l.*," and he gave me two 5*l.* notes. He folded them up and put them into my hand.

(Andrew Allan.) I wish the Commissioners would ask Mr. Symons how he came to the knowledge that I have not charged him with the 10*l.*

(The witness.) I have not heard my name mentioned.

22,651. (Mr. Price.) How did it come to your knowledge that Allan had not charged you with that money?—I have been in the court most of the time, and I have not heard my name mentioned as receiving money.

(Mr. Coleridge to Andrew Allan.) You have not mentioned his name as one of those who received money.

(Andrew Allan.) I have not mentioned it. I ask him how he came by that knowledge.

(Mr. Coleridge to Andrew Allan.) Were you in the room, Allan, when he came and got the 10*l.*

22,652. (Mr. Coleridge to witness.) Was it his wife who gave you the money, or Allan?—I took it from Allan's own hand, in the room at the top of the stairs turning to the left. There was a table with the money upon it.

22,653. I understand Allan accounted for it by saying that he gave it to your father, and not to you?—That is it; it must be a mistake on his part.

(Mr. Anstey to Andrew Allan.) I understand you to say, Allan, that you do not charge him with having received the money?

(Andrew Allan.) I charged Mr. Symmons, sen., with receiving 10*l.* Mr. Symmons, jun., comes up and says that he received it.

22,654. (Mr. Anstey to witness.) You are under the impression that Allan said that either you or your father received it. Allan says that he never said so. He said positively that he did not mention you at all. He said that your father received it. He stated so in evidence. Now the question arises, how did you ever come to know or hear or understand that Allan had ever charged you at all?—I say he has not done so. I have been in court most of the time of this Commission, and I have not heard my name mentioned as regards money.

22,655. Not in the court, nor in the list?—I did not hear it when he read over the list.

22,656. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your father fails by 10*l.* to make his list good, and you say that you account for your father's failure to account for his money and make it good by saying that that 10*l.* was paid to you instead of to your father. Is not that it?—Well, I do not know. All that I know is, that I did receive 10*l.* from Allan, and paid it to George Webb; and my father, I can assure you, never saw George Webb for the day, and did not know till I said the other day, "I polled that man, and not you."

22,657. Are you sure you did not see your father?—I do not think I saw my father after 10 o'clock. My father was attending one side of the town and I the other.

22,658. Where did you see Allan?—At Allan's own house.

22,659. What did you go there for?—I went purposely to receive the money.

22,660. By whose orders, your father's?—Not my father's. I had not seen my father.

22,661. By whose orders?—I think by direction of John Smith and Henry Bussell, because I was down in the committee.

22,662. Your father was in the town that morning?—I never had any electioneering matters with my father in my life. Whether I saw him the day before I do not know. I have no doubt we did meet, because we live next door to one another.

22,663. Did he not send you to Allan to get the money?—He did not, and I never mentioned the name to him; and I can safely swear that my father never saw him for the day. I do not believe he did.

(Andrew Allan.) I have no recollection of ever meeting Mr. Symmons, jun., in the election of 1866. Two days after the election he asked me for money.

(Mr. Coleridge.) There is no contest about the money. The only question is whether the 10*l.* was paid to young Mr. Symmons or old Mr. Symmons. In the confusion of such a day as that it is very likely there might be a mistake.

(Mr. Anstey.) You say positively that old Mr. Symmons received the money, Mr. Allan?

(Andrew Allan.) I say positively that I never paid young Mr. Symmons that day; I say that old Mr. Symmons had the money, that I charged him with having, every farthing.

ELIZABETH JANE LANGDON sworn.

E. J. Langdon.

22,664. (Mr. Price.) What are you; are you in service anywhere?—No, I am not.

22,665. Are you living at home?—I am.

22,666. Whom do you live with?—My mother.

22,667. Where do you live?—Baker's Court, Eastover.

22,668. Have you been in service at all?—Yes.

22,669. How old are you?—I am 17 now.

22,670. You have been in service; when did you leave service?—Oh, a long time now, for my mother has been ill a long time.

22,671. Did you leave service on account of your mother's illness?—Yes.

22,672. You went to attend upon her?—I did.

22,673. Are there any of your brothers and sisters living with you?—My brother is living with me, because he keeps the house for my mother.

22,674. Your brother is a married man?—No, he is not.

22,675. But he keeps the house and supports your mother?—He does.

22,676. Do your brothers and you live together?—There are two brothers.

22,677. What are they?—One is a sailor, belonging to one of Mr. Sully, the mayor's ships.

22,678–9. (Mr. Anstey.) The last person you were in service with, I think, was your aunt?—I had just left before.

22,680. You had left your aunt?—Yes. The last place I were at was with my aunt.

22,681. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember being examined here in the beginning of this year before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I do.

22,682. And at that time you were in service?—No.

22,683. In February?—Not that time.

22,684. You were living at home?—Yes.

22,685. You gave an account of having seen a person of the name of James Honeyball?—Yes.

22,686. Is he here?—Yes.

22,687. Where is Honeyball?—(Pointing.) There he is, over there.

22,688. Point him out?—There he is.

22,689. You know him perfectly well?—Oh yes, quite well.

22,690. How long have you known him?—For a long time; for a number of years.

22,691. Are you in the habit of seeing him constantly?—Yes, I have seen him several times a day.

22,692. Did you know what he was?—Oh yes.

22,693. That he worked at Brown's?—Yes.

22,694. And was a coachman, or ostler, or whatever it was?—Coachman.

22,695. Is it true that you saw Honeyball at the "Anchor Inn"?—I did.

22,696. On the polling day?—Yes.

22,697. The polling day of the last election?—Yes.

22,698. You are quite sure about that, that you saw him there?—Quite sure.

22,699. Where were you standing?—By the "Fountain," next door.

22,700. It is next door to the "Anchor"?—It is.

22,701. What were you doing at the "Fountain"?—I was waiting for a young woman who was gone into Castle Street.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

E. J. Langdon.

17 Sept. 1869.

22,702. Do you know her name?—I do not know her name.

22,703. If you did not know her name, what were you waiting for her for?—I met her up by the market, and she asked me to come down as far as Castle Street and wait for her.

22,704. Is she a stranger?—No; she was one of Weston-super-Mare. I met her there when I was there.

22,705. Had you been in service there?—Yes.

22,706. And you knew her as living at Weston in service there?—Yes.

22,707. But you did not know her name?—I did not know her name.

22,708. Had you before that day seen her in the town?—Yes, several times.

22,709. And spoken to her?—Yes.

22,710. And then she asked you to wait for her at the "Fountain" while she went to Castle Street?—Yes.

22,711. What time in the day?—It was after three, and before four. I could not say exactly what time.

22,712. If you did not know her name, what made you wait for her?—I did not know her name. She asked me to wait.

22,713. Did you go into the "Fountain"?—No, I did not. I stood outside.

22,714. Did she say why she did not want you to go with her into Castle Street?—No; I asked no questions.

22,715. Whilst you were waiting at the "Fountain," did you see Honeyball?—Yes, come out of the "Anchor."

22,716. Was anybody with him?—Not when he came out.

22,717. Did you see him speak to anybody?—Yes, a man at the door.

22,718. At the door of the "Anchor"?—Yes.

22,719. It is only a few yards from one door to the other?—That is all.

22,720. Did you hear him say anything?—Yes.

22,721. What did you hear him say?—I heard him ask the man who he was going to vote for.

22,722. He spoke loud enough for that?—Yes.

22,723. Quite sure about it?—Quite sure.

22,724. Was anybody else standing with you at the door of the "Fountain"?—Not anybody; I was alone.

22,725. You were the only person standing at the "Fountain" door?—I was the only person.

22,726. Was anybody else standing at the "Anchor" besides Honeyball and this man?—Not anyone.

22,727. Nor anybody opposite, on the quay side?—Not anybody that I recollect.

22,728. What did the man say?—He said he had not made up his mind as to who he was going to vote for. Honeyball said he would give him 5*l.* to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

22,729. You are quite sure?—Quite sure.

22,730. Well?—The man said he would vote. I saw Honeyball hand him something in a piece of paper, which Mr. Honeyball said was 5*l.*

22,731. No; Mr. Honeyball has never said so. He says nothing of the kind took place. He says quite the contrary?—That is what he said to the man.

22,732. Do you mean to say he told the man it was a 5*l.* note?—He said it was 5*l.* He did not say a note.

22,733. What was it in?—It was wrapped in a piece of white paper.

22,734. Why do you say "wrapped"?—It looked like something with paper round.

22,735. Do you know the look of a bank note?—It looked quite round, more like gold.

22,736. More like gold?—Like gold wrapped up in a piece of white paper.

22,737. And he told him it was 5*l.*?—Yes; he told him to put it in his pocket and say nothing about it, but go and poll.

22,738. Should you know that man again if you were to see him?—Well, I could not swear to him.

22,739. Can you describe him?—He was of dark complexion.

22,740. You have been at Bridgwater, I suppose, all your life? Have you lived in Bridgwater all your life?—Not all my life, because I have been at Weston-super-Mare a good many times.

22,741. Did he look like a mariner?—Oh, I could not say.

22,742. Like a sailor?—No, he did not look like a sailor.

22,743. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you seen him since?—No, I have not.

22,744. Have you been in Bridgwater ever since?—Yes.

22,745. And he has not been about the streets to your observation?—I have not seen him.

22,746. (Mr. Price.) What became of Honeyball after that?—He went back to Bussell's house.

22,747. Did you say anything to him yourself?—No.

22,748. How soon after that did you mention it to anybody?—The next day afterwards.

22,749. To whom?—To Mr. Hayward, the gardener.

22,750. You did not say anything when you got home about it?—In the evening mother was laughing, and she said she knew there was bribery, and I said, "Yes, for I saw it myself." She never asked any questions.

22,751. You are sure you told your mother that night?—Oh, quite sure.

22,752. Is your mother at home now?—Yes, but she is very ill. She has been bedridden.

22,753. Is she too ill to come here?—Yes.

22,754. Was there anybody present when you said this to your mother?—No, not anyone.

22,755. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who is attending your mother?—Dr. Hurman pretends to attend on her.

22,756. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by pretending to attend?—Well, he don't come regular; when he is fetched.

22,757. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he the parish doctor?—Yes.

22,758. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it the next day that you told this to Hayward, the gardener?—Yes, the next evening.

22,759. The day after the poll?—Yes.

22,760. (Mr. Price.) How came you to mention it to Hayward?—Well, I heard a great many say in the town they had been to the "Clarence" and seen money pass.

22,761. There was a meeting at the "Clarence" that day, was not there?—On that day; on the Tuesday?

22,762. On the Wednesday?—On the Wednesday.

22,763. When you told it to Hayward?—I do not know whether there was a meeting, but there was a procession.

22,764. Where was it you met Hayward?—It was at the "Clarence." There was a procession.

22,765. You told him; then by his advice whom did you go to after you told it to him?—Mr. James Trevor.

22,766. From Hayward you went to Mr. Trevor?—The next morning. It was too late that evening to go to Mr. Trevor's office.

29,767. Then you told it to Mr. Trevor?—I did, and he took it down in writing. He took it down as I have told it in handwriting, and I signed my name to it, "Elizabeth Jane Langdon."

22,768. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it at Mr. Trevor's office?—It was.

22,769. Was anybody present besides Mr. James Trevor?—Oh yes; I believe it was his clerk that took it down.

22,770. But was Mr. James Trevor himself present?—Oh yes.

22,771. And was Mr. John Trevor present?—I believe Trevor's office is in the square there.

22,772. How many people were present when this was taken down?—Only two.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

E. J. Langdon.

17 Sept. 1869.

22,773. They you think were Mr. James Trevor and the clerk ?—I believe it was Mr. James Trevor.

22,774. (Mr. Price.) How was it you happened to mention it to Hayward? Is he a friend of yours ?—Oh, nothing at all, only in electioneering.

22,775. How did it arise ? How was it that you told it to Hayward ?—I was persuaded to tell him. I called him aside.

22,776. Who persuaded you to tell him ?—I do not recollect.

22,777. Oh yes, come. Had you mentioned it to anybody ?—I believe my mother said she would tell some of the party that she knew best if she were me ; and I knew Mr. Hayward, the gardener, very well.

22,778. Did you know Mr. Hayward as belonging to the party ; which party ?—Oh, on the Tory side.

22,779. Then is your mother a Tory ?—What, sir ?

22,780. Is your mother on that side ?—Oh yes.

22,781. And you too ?—Oh, I am any colour myself.

22,782. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did your brothers vote ?—They have no vote at all.

22,783. (Mr. Anstey.) When you met Hayward near the "Clarence," was there going on or had there been a meeting ?—There had been a meeting, I believe, in Gloucester Place.

22,784. Were people about the street at that time ?—Oh, there was a long procession. There was a very long procession from Gloucester Place, round the town.

22,785. And Hayward was there ?—Hayward was there.

22,786. And you got talking to Hayward about the poll of the day before, and you told him this ?—Yes.

22,787. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Powell was the first person you told of it after you had seen Hayward ?—After I had seen Hayward.

22,788. You told it to Mr. Powell in the "Clarence ?"—Yes.

22,789. Have you ever had any quarrel with Honeyball, or have your family ever had any quarrel with him ?—Oh no.

22,790. Not anything at all ?—Oh no, not a bit.

22,791. And you have not the slightest doubt about what you have told us now ?—No.

22,792. You are quite sure about it ?—Quite sure.

22,793. Nobody heard you tell your mother ?—No, there was nobody in the house.

22,794. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get paid for giving your evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—10*s.* ; 5*s.* a day. I had two days.

22,795. That is all you received ?—Yes.

22,796. Have you talked this matter over with anybody about the election ?—No, not at all.

22,797. Is it true that the man John Harwood threatened you ?—Yes, several times ; and on the Sunday evening he said, "Here comes the one that "is going to swear against Honeyball. By next "Sunday she will have no ears. She shall have her "ears cut off."

22,798. How did they know that you were going to swear about it ?—Because they know me.

22,799. Did they know you had given evidence to Mr. Trevor ?—They knew I was subpœnaed.

22,800. Did Honeyball himself say anything to you ?—Yes, in this court ; just as I was passing out he said, "Mind the 5*l.*, miss."

22,801. Honeyball said that to you before you had said a word about it ?—Before I had spoken to Judge Blackburn.

22,802. How did he know you were going to speak about the 5*l.* ?—I do not know.

22,803. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it the first day of the trial when he said that ?—Yes.

22,804. You gave your evidence on the second day ?—Yes.

22,805. What else did he say besides that "Mind the 5*l.*, miss" ?—He said, "Mind the 5*l.*," and then he said (I thought he said Mr. Hooper, but it was Mr. Oakley, the governor of Taunton gaol)—he said he would have my top-knot cut off. He meant my chignon.

22,806. What did he say about Mr. Oakley, of Taunton gaol ? I could not hear, for this absurd noise that is going on ?—He said, "Mind the 5*l.*, miss ; "mind Mr. Oakley, of Taunton gaol ; the governor "of Taunton gaol."

22,807. Implying that you would have to go to gaol ?—He did.

22,808. (Mr. Price.) And that then your hair would have to come off ?—No ; he said he would take my top-knot off himself.

22,809. (Mr. Anstey.) Then did Mr. Serjeant Parry upon that make a complaint to the judge ?—He did.

22,810. You heard it ?—Yes.

22,811. Did Honeyball hear it ; was he there ?—He was in the court, I believe.

22,812. (Mr. Price.) Have you had anything said to you since by anybody in the way of threats, since you gave your evidence ?—I cannot say. Ever-so-many have called after me names and that, but I do not know their names.

22,813. (Mr. Anstey.) How far were these two doors from each other, the door of the "Fountain" and the door of the "Anchor" ?—Well, say here is the door of the "Fountain," and here is the two windows belonging to the "Anchor" house, and then there is another window here (pointing) belonging to the "Fountain," and then there is the door of the "Fountain," which goes in.

22,814. (Mr. Price.) How wide ; not so wide as across over here ?—Not so wide.

22,815. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock was it ?—After three, and before four. I cannot say how much.

22,816. Do you know Mr. Henry Jarman ?—I do.

22,817. Did he ask you ever anything about that ?—Yes.

22,818. What did he say to you ?—He wanted for me to go into Mr. Smith's.

22,819. What Mr. Smith's ?—York House, on the Wednesday morning.

22,820. Before Mr. Justice Blackburn was here ?—Yes. I had been out for some sugar or tea, I could not say for certain which, for breakfast, and he was going into the shop as I was coming out. "Oh, miss," said he, "come into the shop and tell me what you "are going to say up before Judge Blackburn." I laughed, and I said I was not going to tell him. "I "am not going to tell such a fool as you my busi-"ness." That is the words I said.

22,821. That is John Smith ?—I thought it was very silly of him to ask me such a question as that ?

22,822. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember Mr. Justice Blackburn, after hearing your examination, and after the cross-examination by Mr. Serjeant Sargood, suggesting to Mr. Serjeant Parry that he was quite satisfied, and that he need not go any further ?—I cannot remember that.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps he suggested that with reference to the complaint about the threatening ?

(Mr. Price.) We need not go any farther. That will do.

JAMES HONEYBALL recalled.

J. Honeyball.

22,823. (Mr. Price.) Do you want to say anything ?—May I be allowed to give a contradiction to that statement ?

22,824. (Mr. Price.) You have done so.—I have witnesses to prove that I was not at the "Anchor" at the time this girl states.

22,825. What time do you mean ?—Between three and four.

22,826. When did you get your witnesses ?—Witnesses that were with me at the time.

22,827. What time ?—At the time I was driving ; the whole time between three and four.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

17 Sept. 1869.

Andrew Allan recalled.

A. Allan.

22,828. (Mr. Price.) Now, Allan, I want to know is this man Honeyball a man who would be likely to have 5*l.* to dispose of in the way of bribery?—No, he is not.

22,829. You think not?—I never knew him trusted with any money. Mr. Bussell told me that he sent some money to poll the man, and he got tipsy.

Henry Chapman Bussell recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

22,830. (Mr. Price.) Bussell, this man is said to have been at your house some time between three and four in the afternoon. Do you know anything about it?—He was there just at the time that I paid the money, but as to his paying any money——

22,831. Tell us the time?—All that was done with regard to the money was done in about 10 minutes.

22,832. Between three and four o'clock?—From a quarter past 3 to half-past three. But as to his giving any man outside money when he was there with his trap, I was there as well. He was never there to the door from a quarter past three up to the time that I gave the money without my being to the door. He came to the door just as I finished paying the people, and he drove away again, and I did not see any more of him then.

22,833. (Mr. Anstey.) When was that that he drove away?—From a quarter past three to half-past three. It was all done in about 10 minutes.

22,834. You don't know what he did after he left you, between a quarter-past three and half-past three?—If anybody told me that he had 5*l.*——

22,835. You don't know what he did after he drove away?—No; after he left me he drove away, and I remained home the biggest part of the time afterwards.

22,835*a*. (Mr. Price.) Had he a carriage there all the time he was at the door?—He drove up to the door to see if there was anybody wanted to be taken. I am not certain, but I fancy he came in and had a glass of something to drink, and went out to his trap and drove away, and there was an end of it.

22,836. Was he ever there without a trap?—Well, you see I was out part of the day.

22,837. I understood he was there?—I understood he was there somewhere between one and two o'clock.

22,838. For instance, when he came in and asked for something to pin up his colours?—I was not there then.

22,839. (Mr. Anstey.) You are aware that that was spoken to before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I was not there then.

22,840. You were not there then? Between three and four at any time might he have been at your place? Was he at your place without his trap, as you call it?—No; and there is another matter. The place was completely crowded round there with people, and the girl's statement cannot be correct. There would be 100 people, I suppose, about on the quay there in the front.

22,841. At the time?—At that very time. The fact of it was, there was a rush made to the house, and I should think I speak within bounds when I say that from a quarter-past three up to the time that there was an end of the money, there was never less in the front of the house than 100 people.

22,842. What she says is that there was nobody there when Honeyball and the man were speaking?—I do not understand her to say anything about that.

22,843. (Mr. Price.) I asked if there was anybody on the quay side besides, and she said there was not a soul?—Honeyball drove up with his trap to the door, and he came into the house to see whether there was anybody going to the poll, and then he drove away and never came there afterwards.

22,844. You are sure of that?—Certain of it.

22,845. You are quite sure that the only time that he was in your house from three to four was between a quarter-past three and half-past three, when he came with his trap to see if anybody wanted to go to vote?—That is right. There was a complete crowd. I should not think that at any time from about 10 minutes past three to very close upon four o'clock, there would be less than 100 people at my door.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, that is satisfactory.

James Honeyball recalled.

J. Honeyball.

22,846. (Mr. Price.) Now, Honeyball, do you want to say anything?—This girl stated that it is only a little distance. You, sir, said, "Not so wide as this room," and she says "No." On the morning that I was going to the petition I had the curiosity to pace from one door to the other, and from Mr. Bussell's door to the "Fountain" door is 16 paces, as a man can pace.

22,847. That is 16 yards?—Yes, 16 yards. And what tone of voice must I be speaking in for her to hear it?

(Mr. Price.) She says you spoke loud enough for her to hear. It is for us to judge whether that would be done in a bribing matter.

22,848. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you 5*l.* in your possession that day?—Not anything like gold had I, on my solemn oath.

22,849. Had you 5*l.* in any shape or way?—I had not. The most money I had in my pocket was something like 1*s.* 9*d.* or 2*s.*

22,850. Did you pretend to make up a packet like money?—No.

22,851. Not by way of a joke?—No; and I did not know that money was going, but I had a suspicion; and Mr. Bussell and Mr. Allan and any of these gentlemen that you have had before you during this Commission will tell you whether I received any money from them in any shape or form.

22,852. They say not?—Which I did not, on my solemn oath.

(Henry Chapman Bussell.) I have been reminded since I sat down, the person will bear me out, that there is a person that I gave 10*l.* to, and I likewise gave him 10*l.* to take to another man. That man was in the eastern booth, and he says he went out and went up in Honeyball's trap and drove away.

(The witness.) Gentlemen, I am pretty well known in Bridgwater. I have been in my present employ 23 years, and I defy anybody in Bridgwater to produce a stain against my character.

Henry James Nethercott sworn.

H. J. Nethercott.

22,853. (Mr. Price.) Are you a mariner?—Yes.

22,854. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes.

22,855. And was it the first time you had had a vote?—Yes.

22,856. Did you get any money for your vote?—Yes.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

H. J. Nethercott.

17 Sept. 1869.

G. C. Fisher.

22,858. Whom did you get it from?—Mr. Bussell.

22,859. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the only money you ever have received about the election?—Yes.

22,860. Never had anything to do with giving any?—No, I never had anything to do with an election before.

(Mr. Price.) That will do.

GEORGE CHAPMAN FISHER sworn.

22,861. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A stationer.

22,862. Do you live in Bridgwater?—I do.

22,863. Are you the person that has been at Exeter?—Yes.

22,864. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

22,865. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

22,866. Had you anything to do with money matters?—Nothing whatever.

22,867. Neither in the way of paying money, or in receiving?—Neither.

22,868. Did you vote in 1866?—I did.

22,869. Whom did you vote for then?—For Mr. Bagehot first, and Mr. Vanderbyl second.

22,870. At Vanderbyl's election did you get anything for your vote?—I got some subsequently.

22,871. Well, how much?—10*l.*

22,872. Did you get anything at Bagehot's?—No.

22,873. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who from?—John Smith.

22,874. What did you get at Bagehot's?—Nothing whatever.

22,875. (Mr. Price.) Or at any other election?—None whatever.

22,876. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is all the money you have received for voting in Bridgwater?—10*l.*

22,877. That is the only one?—Yes.

22,878. How came you to get that if you were not in the habit of being bribed?—Well, my father had a vote, and prior to that, at Bagehot s election, he had received some money, and I told him in confidence—I said 10*l.* would be of service to me.

22,879. Your father told you that he had received money?—Yes.

22,880. What had he received?—I do not know. I think 10*l.*

22,881. Who did he get it from?—Smith.

22,882. That put you upon Smith? So you went to Smith for it?—No, I did not go to him at all. I never spoke to him about it.

22,883. How did you manage to get it?—I daresay, at least I presume my father would have said, "There is my son, who has a little business, to whom "10*l.* would be of service."

22,884. Then Smith came to you?—No, he never came to me.

(Mr. Price.) Well, tell us all about it.

22,885. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us how you got it, and all about it?—About six weeks after the election Mr. Smith gave me 10*l.*

22,886. That had been promised before the election?—No, certainly not.

22,887. Were you told that you had better vote on the Liberal side?—Certainly not.

22,888. And that 10*l.* is all you got for your vote?—Yes.

22,889. Had you ever taken money from anybody else?—None whatever; no.

CHARLES HOBBS sworn.

C. Hobbs.

22,890. (Mr. Price.) Are you an engine driver in the employment of Browne and Co.?—Yes.

22,891. Are you a voter?—Yes.

22,892. In the election of 1868 how did you vote?—In 1868 I voted for Mr. Bagehot.

22,893. No, no, you did not?—Oh, Mr. Westropp in 1868.

22,894. The last election, you know?—Yes, for Westropp and Gray.

22,895. Did you get anything for your vote?—No.

22,896. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you promised anything for your vote?—No.

22,897. (Mr. Price.) No promise?—No.

22,898. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything for your expenses?—Nothing at all.

22,899. Was nothing promised you?—Nothing.

22,900. Neither before nor after?—No.

22,901. Nor up to the present time?—Nor at the present time.

22,902. (Mr. Price.) Were you, on the morning of the polling day, at the "Clarence" when Mr. Westropp addressed his supporters in the ball room?—Yes.

22,903. About 300 or 400 were present?—Yes.

22,904. What did he say?—He said, "My good man go to the poll, and go early."

22,905. Was that all he said?—I never heard anything else.

22,906. Did he say, "I cannot say anything now, because you don't want me to go to prison"?—No.

22,907. "But it will be all right after the election"?—I never heard no such word.

22,908. Are you a member of the Conservative Working Men's Association?—Yes.

22,909. Was that all you had to do with the last election?—Yes, that is all I had to do with it.

22,910. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether any member of the Conservative Working Men's Association voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I voted for Vanderbyl at one election.

22,911. At that election did any members of that association vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—Oh, yes; several.

22,912. How many?—I know of one or two.

22,913. What are their names?—William Crocker voted for one. I could not recollect for a minute or two who the others were.

22,914. Do you know whether these men, besides being members of the Conservative Association, had also promised to vote for Westropp and Gray?—No, I do not.

22,915. Do you know any who had promised to vote for Westropp and Gray voting for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—William Crocker promised to vote for Westropp and Vanderbyl. That is all I know of it.

22,916. And he voted the other way?—Yes, for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

22,917. (Mr. Price.) He had promised to split—and he afterwards voted—— ?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl afterwards.

22,918. In the election of 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl was here, did you vote then?—Yes.

22,919. Whom did you vote?—I voted for Mr. Vanderbyl.

22,920. What did you get for it?—15*l.*

22,921. Whom did you get it from?—William Onion.

22,922. Were you a Conservative then?—Yes.

22,923. How was it you voted for Vanderbyl?—Because I went to the poll to vote for Mr. Patton, and there was a large majority of voters there, and I should not get my turn for half an hour or more; and I went to see the state of the poll at the "Clarence Hotel." In the meantime Mr. Boys came in and said, "Stop the polling on the Conservative side;" and they were not going to poll another man.

22,924. Boys said so?—Yes; a clerk in Mr. Smith's office; now he is a clerk in Mr. Paul Reed's office. I turned to go home, but on my way I met William Onion. He asked me if I had been to poll, and I said, "No, I have not." He said, "Will you go with us." I asked what was going, and he said 10*l.* I said I would not go for that; I would go for 15*l.*

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

17 Sept. 1869.

C. Hobbs.

He went to the committee room, and I went and voted. I should not have gone and voted if at the "Clarence" I had not been told that I was not wanted.

22,925. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not much political conviction?—No.

22,926. Do you not look upon a vote as something to be bought and sold?—Yes.

22,927. You don't care whether the Tories or the Liberals are in?—I always voted for the Tories except when they said I was not wanted.

22,928. And except when you got 15*l.* to vote for the Liberals?—I should have voted for Mr. Patten. I thought it was doing Mr. Patten no harm.

22,929. What did you get at Bagehot's election?—10*l.*

22,930. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose every man who sells his vote cares more for the money than for any political principle, not only you but everybody else. At the election before that what did you get?—What election?

22,931. (Mr. Price.) A man of the name of Bulpin has said that he gave you money?—Yes, but I never received a farthing from Bulpin; never had any connexion with him at all.

22,932. Did you ever speak to Bulpin?—Yes, at Vanderbyl's election he asked me which way I was going to vote; I said, "For the Conservatives." He said, "I shall not want to ask you any more," and I said "No, I will give you my word, I am going to vote for the Conservatives."

22,933. He never gave you any money?—No, not a farthing; no kind of money at all.

22,934. At Bagehot's election you say you got 10*l.*?—Yes.

22,935. Where did you get it; at the "Bull and Butcher"?—At the "Bull and Butcher."

22,936. How was it given to you?—Out through the door.

22,937. You did not see anybody, merely saw a hand?—I saw a hand come out through the door. That is all.

22,938. Had you voted at any other election before that?—No, I never voted before that.

22,939. You voted twice for money, and once without. Did you get any promise last time?—No, no promise at all.

22,940. Did you expect if money was going you would have some?—No; I always said if Westropp came I would vote for him.

22,941. Why should you vote for Westropp?—I always said I would.

22,942. Why?—Because I respected the gentleman.

22,943. (Mr. Coleridge.) What had he ever given you to induce you to respect him?—Nothing more than his good name in the town.

22,944. (Mr. Price.) Because he spent lots of money here; was that the good name?—He never gave me any.

22,945. Was the good name that he had in the town given him because he was always spending money here?—It was always said he was a good gentleman in the town.

22,946. Because he was always spending money in the town; that was it, was not it?—I suppose that was it.

22,947. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did your wife ever get any money from Westropp's election?—Never.

22,948. (Mr. Anstey.) A few days before the election did not you attend a meeting at which Mr. J. R. Smith, justice of the peace, was present, a Conservative meeting?—No; all the meeting I attended was the morning of the polling day at the "Clarence."

22,949. But two or three days before that?—Not to my knowledge.

22,950. Had you not heard or had you heard before the election, I do not mean on the election day but before that day, that there was likely to be money in the town to go for Mr. Westropp?—No, I never heard no such word.

22,951. No such rumour?—No.

22,952. Quite sure?—Yes, I am.

22,953. Did you hear anything, on the morning of the election or the night before, to the contrary effect, viz., that the money that was here had all gone away; and was it said, "We shall not have any money coming to us"?—No, I never heard no such word.

C. Hook.

CHARLES HOOK sworn.

22,954. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Hook?—A grocer.

22,955. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

22,956. And have been for several years?—Since 1865.

22,958. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

22,959. What bribing you have done has been on the Conservative side, has it?—I have only bribed one since I have had anything to do with it.

22,960. But that is on the Conservative side?—Yes.

22,961. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever been bribed on the other side?—Yes, I have received money, and I was employed on the other side.

22,962. (Mr. Price.) You received nothing last year?—No.

22,963. Nor any promise?—No.

22,964. Did you give any?—No.

22,965. At the election of 1866 whom did you poll for?—For Vanderbyl. That was the first election of Vanderbyl, I believe.

22,966. You voted for Vanderbyl?—I did.

22,967. How was that?—Well, in the morning, somewhere about, I suppose just before eight o'clock, Frederick Temblett met me out somewhere in St. Mary's Street, somewhere near the church, and he came up to me and told me it was the wish of the party that I should go to Gloucester.

22,968. What party?—The Conservatives I took him to be alluding to. I was to go to Gloucester for a man of the name of Sellar. I told him that I did not believe there was time to be back, but he begged me to go, and said it was the only favour they could ask me to do. At last I consented, and did go. Previous to my going I went up the town again.

22,969. Did he give you any money?—Yes, he did hand me 2*l.* or 2*l.* 10*s.* to pay my expenses, and also to pay Sellar's expenses, or I took it to be that; and previous to my going I went home and told my wife that I was asked to go away, and she said if she was me she would not go running away from the town on a day like that. But, however, I had promised I would, and I thought I would be as good as my word. But before going I came up the town again and went into the "Bull and Butcher," and in a room upstairs there were, I should think, 30 or 40 men (in a front room), and I had not been there a couple of minutes, I suppose, at the most, before Temblett nodded his head to me, and I went towards him, which was out on the landing from this room, and he said, "Have "you been to poll?" and I said, "I do not think the "poll is open." I do not think it was.

22,970. This was before the conversation about going to Gloucester?—It was.

22,971. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then it was before eight in the morning?—Yes. I do not think the poll was open. He said, "Knock at that door." There was a door, and I did so, and they asked me who was there, and I gave my name, and there was 10*l.* passed out at the door. I went to record my vote some time after, but there were a great many people waiting. There was only one polling booth at that time, and the people were waiting. I took a second thought, and I went back. That was about 20 minutes to nine, and I could not record my vote for the number of people that were round. I took a ticket to Bristol, and when I got to Bristol I had to stop 20 minutes, and I looked at the train bill to see the time.

22,972. You were going by Portskewitt, I suppose, to Gloucester?—No, I was going by train the whole way. I went to look at the train time table to see if it was possible for me to be back, and from the examination I made I found I could not be back till a quarter past seven if I only stopped at Gloucester 10 minutes.

22,973. Did you come back to Bridgwater ?—I did.

22,974. (Mr. Price.) Did you call in your at father-in-law's, Roberts ?—I did.

22,975. Did you find that Vanderbyl was far ahead ?—Yes ; some men at the station threw it in my teeth, and said, they used an oath and said, "I am damned "if we have not got you now. We have got Vanderbyl "40 ahead, and you are nowhere."

22,976. Did you then vote for Vanderbyl ?—Yes, I did ; for I felt annoyed to think that I was sent away.

22,977. You had 10*l.* ?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And 2*l.* 10*s.*

22,978. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you were annoyed at ?—When I found I was there, and that there was no probability of my being back in time, I do not know why or what led me to feel so, but I did feel annoyed.

22,979. After having bagged 10*l.* ?—Yes ; but that 10*l.* was owing to me on a previous election, which I will explain by-and-by.

22,980. Were you told that plenty of money was going on Vanderbyl's side ?—I was.

22,981. Did you ask who was paying it ?—I did.

22,982. Who did they tell you ?—They said that Roberts had been down there, Roberts at the carriage works.

22,983. And been offering 20*l.* and 25*l.* ?—Yes.

22,984. Did Roberts come in while you were there ?—Yes, he did.

22,985. Did you ask him the figure ?—Yes.

22,986. Did he say 15*l.* or 20*l.* ?—Yes.

22,987. And did you say "More than that" ?—Yes, I did say, "More than that." I said, "I hear the town is flooded." That is the remark I made.

22,988. Did you ask for 30*l.* ?—I did.

22,989. Did he tell you to go home and take a cup of tea ?—He said he would see me in two or three minutes ; and he came in.

22,990. Did he promise you 30*l.* ?—Yes.

22,291. Did you go on that promise and vote ?—I went straight to the poll and voted.

22,992. You came back. Did a lady call—Mr. Roberts's daughter, now Mrs. Gibbons ?—She was Mrs. Gibbons then, I believe.

22,993. Had she been previously downstairs with your wife ?—She had. I heard the knock at the door.

22,994. Did your wife tell you she had been there, and directly after she left she found something on the table ?—She did.

22,995. And you took it up and found 30*l.* in it ?—She brought it up to me, and I opened it and found six 5*l.* notes.

22,996. Did you return the 10*l.* to Temblett ?—No.

22,997. Or the 2*l.* 10*s.* ?—I did not.

22,998. So then you obtained 42*l.* 10*s.* by that job ?—Yes, I did.

22,999. And you are a so-called "respectable grocer and tea dealer," and what not ?—Yes. You will allow me to explain why I took that money.

23,000. Now, then, explain ?—When Mr. Roberts came in it struck me all to once in the manner they had used Mr. Westropp.

23,001. How do you mean "used" him ?—Turning him out ; and they were guilty of bribery themselves. Roberts had always been preaching purity of election to me, and I was only too highly pleased to catch him. So the next morning when I could go out (I could not go out then), I sent a colour to my house, and I was going to Mr. Bealy Smith to give this money back, thinking there would be a petition.

23,002. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever given it up ?—No. I will explain directly why not. I saw a man, a clerk, of the name of Neale, and I went with him to go to Mr. Smith's, and he told me that Mr. Smith was not in ; and some time after that (I do not know exactly the time, just after dinner I think it was) I saw Mr. Smith and told him what had transpired, and he said, "I do not think there will be a petition presented," because he did not think they were clean themselves. The consequence was I kept it.

23,003. So you have kept that money and prospered on it ever since ?—Yes.

23,004. What did you get at Bagehot's election ?—Bagehot's election ?

23,005. (Mr. Anstey.) Tell me one moment about this man Temblett, whose name you have mentioned. Was it Frederick Temblett, the baker ?—Yes, that is the man.

23,006. Not the landlord of the "Bull and Butcher" ?—No, his son.

(Mr. Price.) What did you get at Bagehot's election ?

23,007. (Mr. Coleridge.) The one before, you know, when you say something was owed you at this one from that ?—Oh yes. 5*l.* at that election.

23,008. Who gave you that ?—Temblett.

23,009. For your vote ?—Yes.

23,010. How did you vote ?—I voted for Patton.

23,011. (Mr. Price.) Had you not another 5*l.* before the second election ?—Oh yes.

23,012. How did you make out that you had 10*l.* owing ?—I will explain that when I come to the next election.

23,013. The 1865 election ?—Yes, 1865.

23,014. 10*l.* you got for voting for Patton ?—Yes.

23,015. Now we will come to 1865. In 1865 did Phillips, the draper, come to you about a month before the election ?—He did.

23,016. And asked you if you would like to fly some colours ?—Yes.

23,017. Were you to have 30*l.* if you would put up colours ?—Yes ; and do all I could for the party, including my vote.

23,018. Did he promise to let you have the money before the election ?—He did.

23,019. Did he put it in writing ?—I asked him to do so.

23,020. And he declined by the advice of his lawyer ?—Yes.

23,021. That 30*l.* was to include your vote ?—It was to include my vote.

23,022. Did you ask repeatedly for the 30*l.* ?—I did.

23,023. Did you get it before the election ?—No.

23,024. Did he tell you the night before the election you must keep your eyes open the next day and you would get it ?—Yes.

23,025. Your eyes, not your hands ?—Yes, my eyes.

23,026. Did you meet Slocombe, the cabinet maker, on the polling morning ?—I did.

23,027. Did he tell you money was going ?—He did.

23,028. Did he tell you to go up the back way to Fred Harden ?—Yes.

23,029. Did you tell Harden ?—I did not tell Harding. I asked him, and he said there was 10*l.* a man going.

23,030. Did you also ask 10*l.* for your father-in-law, Roberts ?—I did.

23,031. After you had got the 10*l.* from Harding for yourself ?—Yes.

23,032. Did you then go into the "Bull and Butcher" to have a glass of beer ?—I did.

23,033. Did you hear some one who made you look round ?—I heard some one give a sort of whistle, and I looked back.

23,034. Who did you see when you looked round ?—I think it was Thomas Boys.

23,035. Did he tell you there was something on the table ?—He did.

23,036. Did you take up a screw, and when you went home did you find it contained 10*l.* ?—Yes. that was 20*l.* out of the 30*l.*

23,037. Did you take the 10*l.* to Roberts ?—Yes.

23,038. And he refused it ?—Yes.

23,039. Why ?—Because he said he was promised

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

C. Hook.

17 Sept. 1869.

a situation if he would vote for the Liberals, and he would not take the money.

23,040. Was that your father-in-law?—It was James Roberts, a brother to John Roberts.

23,041. Did you go back to Mr. Harden's to refund the money?—I did.

23,042. Why were you to refund the money if you had been promised 30*l.*?—It was not given to me.

23,043. It was given to you. You took up the screw and found it to contain 10*l.*?—Mr. Harden gave me that. The other was at the "Bull and Butcher."

23,044. Thomas Boys said there was something on the table, and you took it up, and you went home and found it contained 10*l.*?—Yes.

23,045. Had you asked for 10*l.* for Roberts?—Yes. That was not given to me for myself, and therefore——

23,046. You went back to Mr. Harden with the money, and he was out?—And he was out.

23,047. Did you go back to Fore Street and see Hayward, the barber?—Yes.

23,048. Did he ask you if anything was going, and where?—Yes.

20,049. Did you tell him to go to Mr. Harden's?—I did.

23,050. Did Hayward tell you there was a man of the name of Staples who wanted money?—Yes.

23,051. Did you then give him the 10*l.* which you had intended to give up to Roberts?—I did.

23,052. You gave that to Staples?—Yes.

23,053. In the town?—It was somewhere near the polling booth. Now Stroud came up, and I asked him if he knew Staples, and he told me he was all right, I believe; and I said I had 10*l.* for another man, and I would not mind giving it to him.

23,054. When this petition took place in 1866, did Staples swear it was Stroud who had given the money?—Yes.

23,055. Whereas, in point of fact, it was you?—It was.

23,056. Stroud had merely told you of it?—Yes, I knew he was going up to deny it.

23,057. Did you tell Mr. Bealy Smith before the petition, that you had paid Staples and offered to go to London?—Yes.

23,058. Did he ask you not to go but to let Stroud go, who could do it with a clear conscience?—That is the remark.

23,059. Did you tell everyone that you had 30*l.* from Vanderbyl?—I did make it public next morning.

23,060. How much have you made altogether in your voting business?—I do not know. I could soon run it together.

23,061. (Mr. Coleridge.) Something over 100*l.*?—No.

23,062. There were two 30*l.*?—Two 30*l.* 20*l.* for the first election, and 10*l.* I had at another made up the first. Then I got 30*l.* the next, or about 70*l.* or 80*l.* during the whole time I have had anything to do with it.

23,063. (Mr. Price.) Is that the first you had anything to do with?—Yes, 1865.

23,064. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would not have gone without being paid under any circumstances?—Yes, I believe I should for Westropp. I had promised him. Mr. Westropp called on me. Some one said I had no vote, and he said I might have a vote another day, and I made up my mind from that to support him.

23,065. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Westropp had been nourishing the borough here?—Quite so. I believe that.

23,066. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any of his monthly charities?—No.

23,067. (Mr. Anstey.) About this father-in-law of yours. Is it the same person? There was one of that name, James Roberts, a voter, whom there was some question about the other day, of his having been promised something for his vote?—Yes, Brown & Co.

23,068. I believe that man Roberts, your father-in-law, in the election of 1865 polled for Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes, he did.

23,069. Having previously promised one to Kinglake and one to Westropp?—He promised me he would vote for Westropp.

23,070. Did he get anything for his vote, do you know?—He got the promise of employment.

23,071. That is what moved him?—Yes; he would not vote for Westropp for that very reason, and he would not take the money I offered him.

23,072. (Mr. Price.) He would not take the money on that account?—No, he would not. He said he preferred the employment.

T. Duddridge.

THOMAS DUDDRIDGE sworn.

23,073. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Superintendent of part of John Brown & Co.'s works.

23,074. Are you the person who has the employment of discharging men on the works?—No, I do not discharge them unless there is occasion, and there has been no discharge made lately.

23,075. Have you taken any part in influencing men about election matters?—No, not in the least.

23,076. Never?—Never. Allow me to express to you gentlemen my feeling about that.

23,077. You know what has been said about it?

23,078. (Mr. Anstey.) Have not you a lot of men under your control?—Certainly I have.

23,079. What class are they?—They are men working for 12*s.*, 14*s.*, and 15*s.* a week, and they have sometimes about 1*l.*, and some more or less in the summer time.

23,080. How many voters are there amongst them?—I think, if you take the brickyard employ through, there is about 47.

23,081. And those immediately under your control, how many are there?—Under my control alone, do you mean in the yard?

23,082. Yes?—Well, I think there is something about 16 or 17 in the yard I have control over altogether.

23,083. Did they not poll at the last election, those 16 or 17, for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—No.

23,084. How many did not?—Charles Hobbs, the engine driver, voted for Gray and Westropp I believe.

23,085. Was he one of those under your control?—That is one of those under my control.

23,086. You know what is called in this borough cooking a lot of men who have votes?—I have never done it in my life.

23,087. Are you quite sure?—On my oath.

23,088. I believe all men are liable to it, to suffer under an evil reputation, even in the Liberal party as regards that. Are you aware of that?—I never told a man in my life that he should vote for the Liberals nor for the Tories in my life, since I have been at Brown and Companys, and that is about 46 years.

23,089. But you have asked them for their votes?—I never did not.

23,090. You never did not?—I never did not; and I should wish those to be called before your Royal Inquiry.

23,091–2. (Mr. Price.) You mean that you never did?—I never did. I should like you gentlemen on the Royal Commission to call every man of Brown and Company, and call this man, the engine driver.

23,093. At the last election did you on the polling day in 1868 distribute drink amongst some of the voters, workmen in the employment of Brown & Co.?—I did not.

23,094. Did you give them no drink at all?—No drink.

23,095. Did you give them a pound ahead?—I did not.

23,096. Did you give any of them a pound?—Not a farthing. I had no money to give myself or them either. No man that ever walked in Bridgwater in two shoes could say that I ever gave a man sixpence, not honestly.

23,097. If the impression is general in the Liberal party that you are a most active person in cooking the votes of the electors under your control, how could that impression arise if you are so innocent?—I think that arose something by Robert Bussell, by a man named Banfield, living about two miles from the town. He swore here before Mr. Justice Blackburn that he was two or two and a half miles from the town on the day of the election, and something of that arose by the report he heard in a public-house by Robert Bussell somewhere, but I do not know where.

23,098. Robert Bussell is a Conservative?—I know he is.

23,099. I am speaking of the impression among the Liberal party?—I was explaining, if you please, what was reported before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and when Banfield was called, Mr. Justice Blackburn said, "You have the wrong man, the wrong witness;" and I stood by this pillar, and Mr. Serjeant Parry said, "Do not you know Duddridge? There he is by that pillar;" and with the same I held up, and he says, "I do not know the man."

23,100. Who said?—This Banfield, who will be brought against me. "I know a man named Dud-" dridge at Colthurst and Symmons',' but not Dud-" dridge of Brown & Co."

23,101. Banfield said he did not know there was anybody of your name at Brown & Co.'s?—He said he knowed a person of the name of Duddridge at Colthurst and Symmons', but he did not know there was anyone for Brown & Co., and he did not know the man.

23,102. "You do not know a Duddridge, you say, " at Brown's brickyard?—No. Do you know Brown's " brickyard?—Yes. Do you know anyone there?—" I do not know that I know anyone there. If I tell " you there is no Duddridge at Symons,' as a foreman " of the brickyard, is not the Duddridge you know " foreman at Brown's?—Not that I am aware of." Then he is asked to "Look at that gentleman with his arm on his face"—who that is does not appear; and his answer is, "I do not know him by his countenance."—I stood here by that pillar.

23,103. Who was that?—That represented me.

23,104. It appears there is some other Duddridge here?—There are several in the town. There was Duddridge here reported before you that had 10*l.*, which at the same time one of you gentlemen said, "Duddridge for Brown & Co.," and Capt. Bussell said, "No, Captain Duddridge, not Duddridge for Brown & Co." I heard that myself.

23,105. The same difficulty appears to have occurred to Mr. Serjeant Parry, and he asks for a James Duddridge and a Thomas Duddridge; you are neither of those?—I am Thomas Duddridge, and I never gave a man or controlled a man in my life.

23,106. Then there is George?—Yes, a brother of mine, on the voters.

23,107. That may be the one?—No, I do not believe it.

(Mr. Price.) I am sorry to have given you the trouble of coming here, but you have had an opportunity of explaining yourself.

GEORGE HEAL sworn.

G. Heal.

23,108. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A dairyman.

23,110. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

23,111. Who for?—Westropp and Kinglake.

23,112. Did you get any money for it?—No.

23,113. Were you promised any?—No.

23,114. You voted one and one then?—Yes.

23,115. How was it you did that?—Well, Mr. Westropp was rather a favourite of mine.

23,116. Why; because he spent so much money in the borough?—No, I never had a shilling of Mr. Westropp's.

23,117. Then why is he a favourite of yours?—That is my way of thinking.

23,118. In politics?—Yes.

23,119. How came you to vote for Mr. Kinglake then, and neutralize your vote?—I should not have done so if I had been aware of what I am now.

23,120. Why?—I should have voted for Mr. Vanderbyl.

23,121. Why?—Because I have had 10*l.* of his money, so I understood.

23,122. Ten pounds of Mr. Vanderbyl's money?—Yes.

23,123. (Mr. Coleridge.) The election before?—Yes. I certainly should not have if I had been aware——

23,124. (Mr. Price.) Did you think it was Mr. Kinglake's?—No, I did not know whose.

23,125. Then why did you vote for Mr. Kinglake?—I thought I would split one and one.

23,126. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a brother of William Heal?—I am; but we are not on friendly terms, and have not been for many years, I am sorry to say.

23,127. What, in your politics?—We differ in many things.

23,128. In politics also?—In many things we differ.

23,129. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Vanderbyl's first election in 1866, when you got this 10*l.* Who did you get it from?—Mr. White.

23,130. Henry Cornelius White?—Yes.

23,131. Did you suppose that was Mr. Vanderbyl's money?—I do not know whose it was. At or about that time I had a very great loss, and asked Mr. White if he would have the kindness to write to the candidates, and intercede for me.

23,132. To the candidates?—Yes.

23,133. Not to the members?—To both members, Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

23,134. No, before the election of 1866; it would be Kinglake and Patton?—Not him. I apprehend he was a member—Mr. Kinglake at the time.

23,135. And the other would be Mr. Patton?—Well, after Mr. Patton was out, I apprehend.

23,136. That was the time that Mr. Patton occupied office?—Yes.

23,137. You asked him to do that; did he do so?—I do not know.

23,138. Did he afterwards give you 10*l.*?—Two months after.

23,139. After the election?—Yes.

23,140. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you applied to the candidates of the election. Were they candidates when you asked for this money?—Mr. White very well knew my loss, because he was here.

23,141. What election was it?—Mr. Vanderbyl's.

23,142. The first election?—Just so.

23,143. (Mr. Price.) Did you ask him to write to the members or candidates?—I did.

23,144. The members?—Yes, to Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

23,145. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was your loss?—Stock. I had nine head of stock.

23,146. (Mr. Price.) Was it before you voted, or after, that you asked Henry Cornelius White to write?—A fortnight or three weeks, or it might be a month after I voted.

23,147. Then you wrote to the two members?—I asked him to write to the two members.

23,148. Stating that you had a great loss of stock?—Yes.

23,149. Then you got the 10*l.*?—About two months after the election.

23,150. After you had made the application you got 10*l.*?—Yes.

23,151. What is this, you did not know then he had kept 10*l.* for your vote. What do you mean by it?—I did not know that he had the money when I spoke to him, not until he made the return when he gave his evidence here. I did not know he had any money, or I should not have applied to him to write to the members.

23,152. You heard for the first time that he had already put you down for 10*l.*?—Yes, I was not aware of it; of course I had the 10*l.*

23,153. Had you said anything before the election about requiring 10*l.* for your vote?—No, not to any individual, never.

23,154. How do you account for his giving your name in for 10*l.*?—I cannot tell that. I do not know anything of that; he must have known of my loss, and took it for me. I do not know anything of that.

23,155. Do you mean to say he returned your name before you spoke about your loss?—I never knew anything of it, because after the election I asked Mr. White if he would have the kindness to intercede for me, and get me a trifle towards my loss, and had I known that Mr. White had my money, surely I should not have asked him.

23,156. Had he had money for you before you asked him to write to the members?—Certainly he had at the time I asked him.

23,157. Before you said a word about money?—Yes.

23,158. How do you account for that?—I do not know at all.

23,159. Had you asked for any money before the election?—No.

23,160. Had you had any promise of any before?—No, nor at the election.

23,161. You cannot account for why he put you down before you spoke of the loss of your cows?—No, I do not know anything at all of it. I simply asked Mr. White because he was a witness to my loss, and knew my circumstances, and I asked him as a friend if he would have the kindness to write.

23,162. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you mean a witness to your loss?—He was there when one of my cows, a valuable cow, died.

23,163. Had they the cattle disease amongst them?—No, I do not know that it was that; inflammation or something. I lost six out of nine.

23,164. (Mr. Price.) Had you anything at Bagehot's election?—After the election.

23,166. Who from?—Mr. Henry Cook.

23,167. A fortnight after the election?—Yes.

23,168. What has become of Mr. Cook?—He is at Chippenham.

23,169. (Mr. Anstey.) What is he doing?—Keeping a public-house; an innkeeper.

23,170. (Mr. Price.) That might be a way of accounting for his getting it for you; he might have known that you had the 15*l.* from Mr. Cook?—I do not think he knew that. I am not aware that anyone knew it until I name it now.

23,171. Now, at the election in 1865 you kept the "Bath Bridge" inn?—Yes.

23,172. Did you treat people to the amount of 15*l.*?—I did.

23,173. Without any direct orders?—Yes.

23,174. Who did you send the bill in to?—I spoke to Mr. George Berry on one or two occasions.

23,175. At the "Bath Road?"—Yes, he was there, and principally took the chair.

23,176. Did he tell you that you should be paid?—Well, he said I should be paid, and interest; but he never did it.

23,177. Did your wife go to Mr. James Cook's office and tell him that you were much pressed for money, and did he then pay you 15*l.*?—He did.

23,178. (Mr. Coleridge.) What Cook paid you?—Mr. James Cook, the solicitor.

23,179. (Mr. Anstey.) This election of 1865. I believe Sir John Shelley's servant, Mudgett, was staying at your house?—No; he was there occasionally, as the others were.

23,180. What others?—They who were there in the evening.

23,181. Do you remember sending Wescott, the ostler, on a message to Mr. Cook, the lawyer, telling him that you expected to be paid?—No, I never did.

23,182. Tell us your version of it?—He came to me on the polling day at Sir John Shelley's election, and told me to go and vote for Westropp.

23,183. (Mr. Price.) Who did?—This man you are speaking about.

23,184. (Mr. Anstey.) Wescott, the ostler?—Yes.

23,185. Were his words these, or to this effect: "Mr. Cook says there is no money for you on our "side, and if you like, you may go and vote for Mr. "Westropp"?—He told me I might go to Mr. Westropp, but I have no knowledge of his saying anything about money.

23,186. You were examined before the committee of the House of Commons in the following year?—I was.

23,187. And you told the honourable committee that your observation thereupon was, "Surely they are not going to throw me overboard?"—I did.

23,188. That meant the Liberals?—Yes.

23,189. You were asked by Mr. Sleigh whether the message delivered by Wescott as coming from Mr. Cook was this, to tell you you were not to rely on him any longer, and if you could get anything from the other side you were to go and get it, and your answer is you did, and upon that you said, "Oh dear, "oh dear, surely they are not going to throw me "overboard"?—Yes, that would be the case.

23,190. How came Wescott to bring you that message if you had not sent to Mr. Cook?—I had not seen Wescott before.

23,191. Had you spoken to Mr. Cook?—No.

23,192. How came he to send you that message?—Perhaps it might have been through some one else. I cannot say.

23,193. Had you spoken to some one else about your going to vote?—No.

23,194. You understood the message, because you made the remark, "Surely they are not going to throw me overboard"?—Yes.

23,195. What was the meaning of "surely they are not going to throw me overboard"?—If I had gone and voted for Westropp, how was I to be paid for my drink; that was my meaning.

23,196. You were relying to be paid for the heavy bill they had run up for drink?—Yes.

23,197. The committee asked you, "What did you mean by throwing you overboard?" and your answer was, "I do not know I am sure. I went straight to the poll"?—So I did.

23,198. Immediately after having been told this by Wescott?—Yes.

23,199. Did you after the election, and before the committee met to try the petition, the Sunday after the election, do you remember, have a conversation with William Poole on this subject?—Yes.

23,200. Do you recollect it was discussed between you whether there would not be an election petition against Westropp?—No, I do not think that was suggested.

23,201. At all events, the question of the election was discussed between you?—Yes, it was, in conversation.

23,202. Do you remember using these words by way of complaint against your own party, the Liberals: "Those who promise and do not give are a damned "sight worse than those who do promise and do "give"?—No, a part of it I made use of, "Promising "and giving is honourable, but promising and not "giving is dishonest."

23,203. You mean your own people?—No, I do not mean anybody, because I have heard complaints in my time of voting.

23,204. Were not you speaking on that occasion of something that had happened at the last election?—No, I was never promised a shilling by any individual.

23,205. Did not you go on to say that Mr. Westropp is now in, and, as he is returned, I would rather for the man to stay in?—No. I might have said so, but I do not know anything of him.

23,206. Tell me at once, had you any cause of complaint against your party for not paying you money at that election?—Not the slightest, and never had a claim.

23,207. You did get it afterwards?—From Mr. Cook.

23,208. Had you no grievance on your mind all this time about not paying your bill?—No, never.

23,209. But you applied for it very often?—I applied to Mr. Berry.

23,210. And never got it?—No.

23,211. Until 1868?—No.

23,212. Do you mean to say that you did not feel that very much?—No, because I was owing Carslake and Barham a bill, and I thought one would pay the other.

23,213. Did you further say on that occasion to Poole, or to anybody, "I was offered 25*l.* by my side, "but I have never received a damned farthing"?—No, never in my life.

23,214. Did you never say that to him?—No, never in my life.

23,215. Never to anybody?—No.

23,216. (Mr. Price.) Did you without the "damn"?—No, I never said neither of it. I was not offered a shilling. I voted for 33 years.

23,217. (Mr. Anstey.) I was not asking you about your vote, or whether they offered you anything, but did you say something like that to Poole?—No, I never could have said I had a shilling offered me.

23,218. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell me when; when was the first time?—The first was what Mr. White gave me. I never was offered.

23,219. You draw a distinction between offering and giving?—Well, he gave me 10*l.*, I admit.

23,220. Have you never had anything in former years?—Never. I have voted for the Conservatives over 30 years, and never had a shilling from them, and never had a promise or any claim against them.

23,221. And no bill for treating?—I supplied about 2*l.* worth of drink at Follett's election; for that I was paid.

23,222. (Mr. Price.) Who paid you?—James Parkins.

23,223. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you sent a message to Cook about money you wanted through young Gilbert; had you seen Gilbert at that election?—Philip Gilbert; we live close together, and we might have talked of it.

23,224. He lives close to your house, in the Bath Road?—We might have talked it over; there is no doubt about it.

23,225. It was stated by Mr. Cook, both here and before the committee of the House of Commons. that Gilbert, the younger, brought him this message, and he believes in these words, "Mr. Heal," that means you, "wished me to come up to town, and see who I "could see"?—Yes, probably that is correct.

23,226. In consequence of that he says he sent the ostler, Wescott, in Eastover, down with this message, to go to Heal, Bath Road, and say if he wants money he had better vote for Westropp, because the Liberals would not have anything of that kind?—I have no doubt that was the way it came about. I do not know that he mentioned Cook's name. He said I could go and vote.

23,227. Did he deliver that message?—He said I could go and vote for Westropp, and I have no doubt in that way the message was sent to me.

23,228. "If he wanted money"?—I have no doubt about it.

23,229. And you had never any conversation with Cook yourself about money matters at that election?—No.

23,230. (Mr. Price.) In 1837 or 1838, did you give a man named John Cook 11*l.* to vote for Broadwood?—Yes.

23,230. Did you get that money from Richard Smith?—Old Mr. Richard Smith.

23,232. Was the first time you voted, 1837?—Yes.

23,233. (Mr. Anstey.) That was for the Conservatives?—Yes; I voted for them over 30 years.

23,234. (Mr. Price.) Then you wanted to borrow some money from young Mr. Smith?—Yes; I had a bill.

23,235. And he refused you?—Yes.

23,236. And then you turned round and voted steadily for the Liberals?—Just so.

23,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you bribed besides that 11*l.*?—I am not aware that I ever gave a shilling in my life. I apprehend that I never did.

23,238. (Mr. Price.) Have you paid Carslake and Barham?—Yes.

23,239. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you?—A dairyman.

23,240. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the first election you were present in?—In 1837 I became a voter.

23,241. (Mr. Price.) There was a lot of money spent then?—I do not know.

23,242. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you now a Liberal or a Tory?—I am a Conservative. I have not altered my opinion though I voted for the Liberals; I certainly am a well-wisher, particularly of Mr. Westropp, though I never had a shilling of his money in my life.

FRANCIS JOHN CARVER sworn. F. J. Carver.

23,243. (Mr. Prtce.) Are you foreman to Mr. Gough, shipbuilder?—Yes.

23,244. Are you a Liberal?—Yes.

23,245. Did you poll at the last election?—Yes.

23,246. Whom did you vote for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

23,247. Did you meet Palmer on the Cornhill that morning at poll?—I did.

23,248. Did you ask him if he had polled?—I did.

23,249. Did he say no?—He said no.

23,250. Did he say he would not poll without money?—He said he would be damned if he would poll without money.

23,251. Did he ask you to go to the "Clarence" with him?—He did.

23,252. And you went?—I went.

23,253. Had you polled yourself then?—No.

23,254. What time in the day was it?—Just before three I should think.

23,255. What did you go to the "Clarence" for?—He asked me to go and have a glass of beer, and we went; and I had a glass of gin and water, and he had a glass of beer.

23,256. Who paid for it?—Henry Roberts, the sail maker. I did not ask him for it, but we are very friendly.

23,257. Is he a voter?—Yes.

23,258. A Conservative voter?—Yes.

23,259. Did he say anything about your vote?—No.

23,260. From there did you go to Bussell's?—Yes.

23,261. And on the way did Palmer say he did not care a damn which side it was, but he must have money?—He did, and no one should know it, or words to that effect.

23,262. (Mr. Coleridge.) He would not split?—He would not split, or words to that effect. I would not swear the exact words.

23,263. (Mr. Price.) Did you go to Bussell's about three?—Yes.

23,264. Did he give you 20*l.*?—Yes.

23,265. 10*l.* for yourself?—And 10*l.* for Robert Howe.

23,266. Did you vote after that?—I did.

23,267. Did you see anything more of Palmer?—Never afterwards.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

F. J. Carver.

17 Sept. 1869.

23,268. What time were you there, as near as possible?—At Bussell's, I should think from three to half-past.

23,269. Did you see Honeyball?—Yes, he took me to Polden Street after a voter. I went with him in the trap, and then I went and polled at the poll booth at Pig Cross; but I was at Bussell's house in five minutes, or near, and I should think there were 100 people there from that time to four o'clock.

23,270. You came back to Bussell's after you polled?—Yes.

23,271. Honeyball drove you?—Honeyball drove me to Polden Street after the voters, and then we walked to poll, and I walked as far as Bussell's, and I stopped about there all the time.

23,272. Did you see anything of that girl who has been here?—No.

23,273. (Mr. Anstey.) At this last election you were subpœnaed, I believe, for the petitioners?—I was.

23,274. And not examined?—I was not.

23,275. And I think the attorneys did not take down your evidence?—No, I never went to any.

23,276. That is probably the reason you were not examined?—I expect so.

23,277. Were you hanging about the "Clarence Hotel" until about the middle of the polling day?—Yes, from the bridge to the "Clarence" up and down.

23,278. From morning to noon?—Yes.

23,279. Did you see or hear anything of the meeting said to have taken place there that morning at eight o'clock?—I was on the bridge when the rush came down the town. The men came in a body to poll.

23,280. You were not yourself at the meeting?—No, decidedly not.

23,281. You heard what the people said as they came rushing from the meeting?—I was at the bridge and heard these men say on the Liberal side, "These men must have had money promised them; "they would not have gone to poll like that without."

23,282. And did you hear those who had been at the meeting say what had taken place?—No.

23,283. (Mr. Price.) Now, in 1865 whom did you vote for?—Kinglake and Westropp.

23,284. Did you have any money?—No.

23,285. Or any promise?—No.

23,286. How came you to split your vote?—I was with an old voter, John Ackland, now in America.

23,287. You did not vote in 1866?—I had no vote before Shelley's election, and one now in 1868.

23,288. How was that?—Because I was in a 10*l.* house then. I was with Mr. Ackland the first time I had a vote and he told me if I stuck to him I would be sure to get some money; he had had it at previous elections; and I stuck to him, and the consequence was, that no money was spent at Sir John Shelley's election, and we were in and out of Bussell's and different places, and there was no money to be had. We went up and down, and some one took us to Frederick Harden, the baker, the other side, and we went in, and some person came in with a message to say they had polled enough men, and did not want any more. And Harden said to us two, "Go and poll, and if there is anything left you shall have it;" and I said, "I will see you damned first, I do not want your money," because I knew that was no good.

23,289. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not mean it?—(No answer.)

23,290. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you know?—That is all I know.

J. Jobson.

JAMES JOBSON sworn.

23,291. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A master mariner.

23,292. Had you a vote here at the last election?—Yes.

23,293 Did you get anything?—10*l.*

23,294. From whom?—Bussell.

23,295. Did you get anything before that?—No.

23,296. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all you got?—That is all.

23,297. Did you give anything to anybody else?—No.

23,298. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the nature of your qualification at the last election that you never voted before?—On the new principle.

23,299. A householder paying rates?—Yes.

W. Crocker.

WILLIAM CROCKER sworn.

23,300. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A master mariner.

23,302. Did you get anything for it?—I got 10*l.* from Bussell.

23,303. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

23,304. Had you intended to vote for Westropp?—Westropp and Vanderbyl.

23,305. But getting the 10*l.* you voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—Yes.

23,306. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you promised anything by Westropp?—None.

23,307. (Mr. Price.) Had you voted at any other election?—None.

23,308. Had you a vote at any other election?—No.

23,309. Were you a householder this last time?—I was.

23,310. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you first promise Mr. Westropp; how long before?—When he came to my house three or four weeks before, I think. I could not say.

23,311. When you promised, did you hope or expect that if he got in you would get some money?—I did.

23,312. That had happened before, had it?—Yes.

23,313. Then on the morning of the polling day were you at the meeting of the "Clarence"?—I was not there at all.

23,314. You heard of it?—Yes.

23,315. Did you hear that there was to be no money going on their side?—I did.

23,316. And afterwards you took Bussell's money?—And voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

J. Turner.

JOHN TURNER sworn.

23,317. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A draper.

23,318. Are you a voter?—Yes.

23,319. Had you a vote at the last election?—Yes, I voted for Westropp and Gray.

23,320. Did you get any money for it?—Nothing.

23,321. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any promise?—Not at all.

23,322. Did you give any money to anybody?—I had nothing to do with it.

23,323. Did you promise anybody?—No, I never took any interest.

23,324. What was the election at which Bussell bribed you? Vanderbyl's was not it?—Yes.

23,325. How much did you get then?—15*l.*

23,326. From whom?—Bussell and Andrew Allan.

23,327. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you a Conservative then?—I voted for Westropp and Patten the election before.

23,328. (Mr. Price.) You had always voted Conservative before that until Mr. Vanderbyl stood, and then you took 15*l.* and voted for him?—Yes, that is the only two votes I had.

23,329. Before you had voted the other way?—Yes.

23,330. You had voted for Patton before?

23,331. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a vote at Bagehot and Patton's election?—Yes.

23,332. Then you voted for Patton?—Yes.

23,333. (Mr. Price.) And then you turned round?—Yes.

23,334. Did you get anything from Mr. Patton?—Yes, 15*l.*

23,335. Patten's election?—Yes.

23,336. From whom?—At the "Bull and Butcher." I do not know who the party was. It was done up in small parcels of 5*l.* each.

23,337. (Mr. Price.) Was it 5*l.* additional that made you turn round in 1866?—No, I do not know that it was.

23,338. What was it then?—I do not know that it was anything.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What made you turn back at the last election?

(Mr. Price.) Did you hear there was any money going on the Liberal side?

23,339. (Mr. Coleridge.) You must have some reason why you turned back again at the last election. First you voted for Patton and got 10*l.*, and then for Vanderbyl, the other side, and got 15*l.*; then Gray and Westropp you got nothing. What object had you in voting for Gray and Westropp?—Many of my customers belong to the blue party.

23,340. Were not you promised money for your vote at the last time for Westropp?—No, not a farthing, never in my life.

23,341. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not expect some money when the canvass began, some time or other?—Oh dear no, because Dunn, the foreman of the foundry, and Hooper came down to me, and said there would be nothing.

23,342. That was on the day of the election?—Yes.

23,343. I am speaking of some time before. Did not it enter into your mind when you promised Westropp and Gray that if there was money you would have some of it?—No, I never took an interest.

23,344. But you had taken an interest to the extent of 10*l.* from Patton and 15*l.* from Vanderbyl, not long before?—Yes, but I never took any interest.

23,345. Had you been threatened to have your customers taken away?—No.

23,346. Then what reason had you to suppose that you would lose anything in custom?—Because I had heard it was the practice in Bridgwater.

23,347. For people to move their custom if persons did not vote as they should?—Yes.

23,348. Were you afraid of that; as your principal customers were Westropp and Gray's people, you voted for them?—Yes.

23,349. (Mr. Anstey.) Which of them told you they would withdraw their custom from you?—No one in particular. It is the custom here.

23,350. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had anything to do with municipal elections?—I believe I signed a paper once.

23,351. Did you ever get any money?—No, I never took any interest in it.

JAMES SHATTOCK sworn.

J. Shattock

23,352. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A timber dealer.

23,353. Are you a master?—Yes.

23,354. Do you employ men under you?—Yes.

23,355. How many?—Sometimes more and sometimes less; about seven or eight in general.

23,356. Do you buy timber and ship it here in port?—Yes.

23,357. Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—Yes.

23,359. Did you get anything for it?—No.

23,360. Were you promised anything for it?—No.

23,361. How did you vote?—Liberal.

23,362. Had you voted at the previous election?—Yes.

23,363. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you promise anybody at the last election anything?—No.

23,364. Or give anybody anything?—No.

23,365. Did you induce anybody to vote?—Not at all.

23,366. (Mr Price.) At the previous election how did you vote; Vanderbyl?—The same.

23,367. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

23,369. Did you acknowledge afterwards that you had received 20*l.*?—Yes; in fact I have had nothing said about it afterwaads.

23,370. Who gave you the 20*l.*?—Bussell.

23,371. You never said to him you had not as much as 20*l.*?—No.

23,372. Did you get it in all one sum?—Yes.

23,373. At one time?—Yes.

23,374. How came you to get as much as 20*l.*?—I do not know.

23,375. Did you say you would not go unless you had it?—No, not as I know of.

23,376. You are a master, employing men under you, apparently a respectable man. Tell us how it was you managed to get 20*l.* for your vote?—Well, they offered me 20*l.* for it.

23,377. Who offered you?—Well, I was at Bussell's, I believe it was, and they gave me 20*l.* for it.

23,378. What did the Tories offer you?—Nothing.

23,379. (Mr. Price.) Did you say you would not vote without it?—Not that I can recollect.

23,380. Not that you can recollect! You can recollect well enough when you told them you would not vote unless you got 20*l.*?—I am not aware as I did.

23,381. Will you swear you did not?—No.

23,382. What did you go to Bussell's for, if it was not to get money for your vote?—I do not know.

23,383. Did you know he was a man who had been distributing bribe money?—No; I went in to get a glass of something to drink.

23,384. What did you go into Bussell's for? Was it the polling day?—I went in to have a glass of something to drink.

23,385. Was it the polling day?—Yes.

23,386. Who first mentioned money to you?—I do not know.

23,387. Did you first, or was it first mentioned to you?—I do not recollect that I mentioned it at all.

23,388. Who mentioned it to you?—I suppose it was Bussell.

23,389. You must be able to tell us if you choose. You got 20*l.*?—Yes.

23,390. Did you get anything at the election before in 1866?—Yes; I got 10*l.*

23,391. From whom?—Well, I cannot say whether that was from Bussell or from Mr. Thomas.

23,392. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before or after the election?—At the election.

23,393. On the polling day?—Yes.

23,394. Did you get anything in 1865?—No.

23,395. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

23,396. For whom?—The same party always.

23,397. Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes.

23,398. And in 1859?—That was the first time I voted.

23,399. (Mr. Price.) What was?—Kinglake and Shelley.

(Bussell.) It was Thomas paid the 20*l.*; but it was when he had the 10*l.*, at Bagehot's election was the time, Shattock told the man, whoever it was brought it to him, that I had only got him 5*l.* When

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

J. Shattock.

17 Sept. 1869.

I gave Shattock the packet of money it was rolled up in cartridge. I wanted him to take it and go away, and he said, "No, I shall see what I have got; it may be farthings;" so he counted it in my presence, and he went away; and about two hours afterwards the person who brought him in said, "You made a pretty "mess of it this morning; you gave that man I "brought 5*l.*, and told him it was 10*l.*" And I said, "Where is he?" and I turned round and saw him on the bridge, and went with the party, I do not know who, and said, "Shattock, what was it I gave you this morning?" He said, "10*l.*;" and I said, "What right have you to say I only gave him 5*l.*?"

23,400. (Mr. Price to the witness.) What do you say to that?—I do not recollect a word.

23,401. I do not believe you when you say you do not recollect these things?—Well, I do not.

23,402. You have acted a very disgraceful part?—Well, I do not recollect it.

F. Walters.

FREDERICK WALTERS sworn.

23,403. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A butcher.

23,405. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

23,406. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

23,408. Were you promised anything?—No.

23,409. Did you hear money was going at any time?—No, not before the petition.

23,410. What time of day did you vote?—The first thing in the morning, as soon as ever the poll opened.

23,411. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you tried to get any money?—No; I made up my mind to have nothing to do with it.

23,412. You did not ask Bussell or Allan or any of those people about it?—I never spoke to them.

23,413. Do you mean you have such a horror of bribery?—At the last election I made up my mind that I would not have anything to do with it, and I went to the poll and voted.

23,414. What did you get at the election before?—20*l.*

23,415. Did you return it?—No.

23,416. Did you vote for Mr Vanderbyl?—Yes.

23,417. (Mr. Price.) Who did you get it from?—I had 10*l.* from White and 10*l.* from Heal.

23,418. Had you before that got anything from the Conservatives?—No, not at that election.

23,419. You got 20*l.* at Vanderbyl's election in 1866?—Yes.

23,420. What did you get at the first election in 1866?—10*l.* after the election, from White.

23,421. Was any money given to you by the other side?—No.

23,422. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did the Conservatives bribe you?—When Westropp and Padwick came here.

23,423. (Mr. Price.) You got 10*l.* in 1866 for the first election?—Yes, after the election was over.

23,424. How did you vote?—For Mr. Bagehot.

23,425. Did you get it from Henry Cornelius White?—No, Joseph White.

23,426. Did you vote in 1865?—No; it was when Padwick and Westropp were here that I had some money, but I returned it.

23,427. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that when Westropp and Shelley put up?—No.

23,428. When you got this 10*l.* from Joseph White did you go to the other side and say you had got 10*l.* for your vote, and would take it back if they would give you 15*l.*?—I will tell you everything. I was standing at my door, and one Jarman came and asked me which way I was going to vote.

23,429. Henry or Frederick Jarman?—William; he is dead. He was a plasterer, I think; and I told him I did not know, and I went to the "Albion," and as I was coming out old Denner gave me 10*l.*

23,430. Was that on the other side?—The other side; and when I went home my brother was there, and I told him exactly what had transpired, and I think he went and told Mr. Lovibond of it.

23,431. (Mr. Price.) Benjamin Lovibond?—Benjamin Lovibond and Mr. Heal, the brewer; and 10 or a dozen of them came to my house directly, and said Mr. Lovibond wanted me, and I went to his office to him, and they wanted me to give up the money, and I would not do it; and I carried it back next morning, and gave it to John Murlis, and returned it, and told him I did not intend to vote for him.

23,432. Did you get 15*l.* from the other side?—No, I got 10*l.*

23,433. Who gave you that?—I was told to go into a room by Jenkyns.

23,434. Where?—At the "Masons' Arms."

23,435. Did they tell you if you would give it up they would take care you should have as much on the other side?—I cannot really remember.

23,436. You do not mean to say you would have given up the 10*l.* if you had not been sure you would have 10*l.* in the place of it?—No, I had it first.

23,437. Was it given on one condition, that you should give the other back?—No, they did not say anything about giving it back.

23,438. I thought they asked you to give it up to them?—Yes; but I would not do it, because they wanted to petition. I would not tell them who gave it to me.

23,439. (Mr. Anstey.) Your name is Frederick?—Yes.

23,440. You are a butcher?—Yes.

23,441. Are your misdeeds correctly in my mind? Bribed in 1859 by the Tories, and on giving up the bribe bribed by the Liberals at that election. In 1866, the first election in June, bribed for Bagehot. In 1866, the second election in July, bribed for Vanderbyl. And I may now ask you after that preface, whether it is conceivable that you are the Frederick Walters whose name appears very early in the list of signatures to the petition of 80, presented in May 1866, stating the great anxiety of the undersigned to put an end to corrupt practices in Bridgwater?—Well, I did not know what it was.

23,442. (Mr. Price.) You thought probably it was a testimonial to Mr. Lovibond for his services?—Well, Hillyer forced me into it early in the morning; that gentlemen there (pointing).

23,443. Were you drunk then?—No.

J. A. Buttle.

JOHN ALFRED BUTTLE sworn.

23,444. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a shoeing smith.

23,445. Who do you work for?—I carry on business myself.

23,448. Who for?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

23,449. Are you sure?—Yes, those are who I voted for.

23,450. It was not Westropp and Gray, was it?—No. I have voted for Westropp before that time.

23,451. Did you get anything for voting at the last election?—Yes.

23,453. From whom?—They put it down on some sort of place, on a bed or something, I do not know how; it came from no person's hands.

23,454. Where?—At the "New Inn."

23,455. Were you taken into the "New Inn" by anybody? Did you go there with anybody?—Some person said, "Go up there; you are wanted up there." It was a very dark place, and there were two people in the room when I went in, and I was pushed in and the door slapped fast, and some one pushed out their hand to me, and I picked up the money, I believe all in sovereigns. It was a bed or bag I picked it up from. I do not know what made me; it was in the dark, and I picked it up.

23,456. And then you voted?—And then I went to the poll.

23,457. Who did you vote for; Kinglake and Vanderbyl I understood you to say?—Yes.

23,458. Are you sure about that; you do not seem certain. Were you drunk on the day of the election?—Well, I had had enough.

23,459. Were you so drunk that you cannot recollect now who you voted for?—Oh yes, I did; I know I voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

23,460. Are you sure about that?—Yes, because I know I went to poll late. I was in and out working in my shop, the forge, in the day.

23,461. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Yes.

23,462. Then you describe yourself as a boot and shoe maker?—I told a falsehood, and I did it through fear. I said I did not have any money; I did not receive any money of Allan. I took the money off a bed, or a bag, or something; it was a sort of a black thing.

23,463. (Mr. Price.) Did you give evidence?—I gave evidence here in this court.

23,464. Did you there say you had got no money?—I said I did not receive 5*l.* or 10*l.*

23,465. And that was not true?—And I did receive.

23,466. Therefore you said that which was untrue?—I did, but I did it from fear, not knowing the consequences.

23,467. What was the fear?—I did do it from fear.

23,468. What fear had you?—My fear was this. I had been renting under Allan's shop, and I was afraid he would turn me out, and then I should get no bread.

23,469. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it fear which gave you it, or told you where to get it?—Not here; I took it off the place.

23,470. Who told you where to get it?—I was pushed up a dark place upstairs, "Go up there; you are wanted up there."

23,471. Who told you?—I do not know; I cannot answer. I came to tell you the truth.

23,472. (Mr. Price.) Did you see Allan at the "New Inn" when you got this money?—I cannot say that I did.

23,473. You need not be the least afraid about telling us now what Allan did, because we know now all he did; he has told us. You need be under no alarm. Did you see Allan at the "New Inn"?—Well, I might, but I cannot recollect it.

23,474. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see Mr. Barham?—No, I did not.

23,475. (Mr. Anstey.) You told Mr. Justice Blackburn that you would swear you did not see Allan at the "New Inn"?—Well, I do not remember that I did see him; I cannot say that I remember such a thing.

23,476. You have already admitted that you told a falsehood in saying that you got no money?—I admit that I did say so, and I am very sorry for it.

23,477. You also said that you never told Charles Blackmore that you had got 10*l.*?—I had nothing to say to Charles Blackmore, nothing at all to do with him; he was my son's apprentice, you will see.

23,478. You also swear that you went to the "New Inn," not to get a bribe, but to look after a debt from John Poole, of 4*l.* 1*s.*?—I did the first commencement.

23,479. Now you admit that you went there to get your bribe for the vote?—I had no intention of getting a bribe when I went there first.

23,480. (Mr. Price.) You went to look for some money you say?—I went to look for a person of the name of Poole. He owed me 4*l.* 2*s.* up four years.

23,481. Why did you expect to find him at the "New Inn"?—Because I saw him in the morning. There was something going on. I saw a lot of people there. I saw that he was in the town, and I put it in Mr. Paul Reed's hands, and he did not sue him for it.

23,482. How came you to go there?—It is a house I visit.

23,483. Was it a house he visits?—He goes about the country. I was told he was there.

23,484. (Mr. Anstey.) You told Blackmore that he only came to Bridgwater the day before?—I saw him here the day before.

23,485. And the money had been owing four years?—So it had. I had my book to show it.

23,486. You got a bribe anyhow?—Yes.

23,487. And your sons were with you, were not they?—That is not the only one I had.

23,488. Were your sons with you when you went to the "New Inn"?—No, I do not believe they were.

23,489. One of your sons is a farrier, is not he?—Just like myself.

23,490. Was not he examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Before me.

23,491. Will you swear that he was not with you at the "New Inn"?—I cannot remember that he was.

23,492. (Mr. Coleridge.) At what election was it that your sons got 30*l.* for the family and stuck to it?—That is Allan calling my son to say I and my eldest son had not got any money at all. John Smith told me.

23,493. What election was that?—The last election.

23,494. Did your son get 30*l.* for the family?—I do not know what he got.

23,495. What is your son's name?—Alfred.

23,496. Have you not heard he got 30*l.* and stuck to it?—He told me what they advised him to do, to come to the secretary, and to tell a falsehood. John Smith called me in his back cellar and told me the words.

23,497. When was this?—Since the Commission.

23,498. Do you mean since this Commission has been sitting John Smith asked you to come here and tell a lie?—Oh no, no, no.

23,499. What do you mean?—I went to John Smith's to know if it was true, because my sons told me what they had made up their minds to do, and Allan and John Smith sent for my two sons. I was out of town.

23,500. What had they made up their minds to do?—I will tell you. To say one of my sons had 30*l.* and stuck to it, that the father did not get no money nor the eldest brother.

23,501. That you got no money or your eldest son?—That is what they wished my youngest son to come and say.

23,502. Who wanted?—Allan.

23,503. Allan asked your youngest son?—They sent for them down to John Smith's house.

23,504. How long ago?—Since you gentlemen have been down here.

23,505. Who told you that?—I went down because I would not put any dependence on it, and Mr. Smith called me in his back cellar and says, "I suppose you want to speak to me about the pump." I had nothing to do with the pump in my life.

23,506. What was it you went down to Smith for, because you had been told by one of your sons that Allan wanted him to say he had had 30*l.* and stuck to it, and not given 10*l.* to you or your eldest son. Is that so?—Yes; and he said he should have it all on his own back.

23,507. And your son told you that Allan wished you to do that?—Yes, because Allan sent for him; they had a meeting there at the "York House."

23,508. Allan and Smith?—Allan and Smith; and I went down, I think, about two days after.

23,509. Who did you see?—Mr. Smith. I sent for him; he was upstairs.

23,510. What did you say?—I asked if Mr. Smith was in. They said Yes; and he came downstairs. He was tying on his apron, and I said, "I want to speak to you." He said, "Come out here. I suppose you want to speak to me about the pump." I never had nothing to do with it. Then he had me in the back cellar, and I says, "Is it true what my sons have been telling me?" I daresay, he says, they have told you all about it. I says, "Is it correct?" and he says, Allan says he will come down here and will have all the burthen on his own back and get acquitted himself.

23,511. That is what Mr. Smith told you?—Mr. Smith told me so in his cellar.

23,513. 40*l.*?—Yes.

23,514. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Bussell and John Hodge came in and pulled me out of the kitchen back behind.

23,515. Was it all for yourself?—They gave me 20*l.*, and I says, "I shall not go for 20*l.*; I do myself great injury; I am working for two parties;" and then he says, "Very well, you shall have 40*l.*"

23,516. What did you get from the other side, anything?—No, I never did anything that way.

23,517. At the election before, when Bagehot and Patton stood, what did you get then; the same year?—If I could see the paper I could tell. I cannot remember. I had 10*l.* of John Murlis at one time.

23,518. Which way did you vote at Bagehot and Patton's election?—I cannot tell. I do not remember it.

23,519. Did you vote Whig or Tory?—I split my vote.

23,520. No; there was only one member to be returned?—I am not prepared to say that.

23,521. Did you vote for Bagehot or Patton?—I am not prepared to say.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You had better come to-morrow morning when you are sober.

23,522. (Mr. Price.) Have you been drinking to-day or not?—Drinking to-day?

23,523. Yes, you were called once and were not here?—I have been at work to-day and had one glass of half-and-half, and that is all.

(Mr. Price.) You have told a story which may turn out very bad for yourself, about Mr. Smith and Mr. Allan. You had better think that over to-night.

23,524. (Mr. Anstey.) Let me hear the whole of it. It is not completed yet. What were you to have, and your sons to have, by way of reward, supposing you did what you were told to do? How were you to be rewarded for coming here and telling that story about the 30*l.*?—My sons will have to tell you that.

23,525. What?—Tell you what Allan would do, because I only go by their saying so.

23,526. Then no reward was ever offered you by either Smith or Allan?—No; no money was offered me by Allan.

23,527. And no other person?—Not at the last election.

23,528. I understand you to say also that one John Smith took you into a back cellar at York House, and all he said to you was, "You have heard what is expected of you." He did not tell you what was expected of you, did he?—He told me what my sons and they had agreed to do.

23,529. Who did?—Mr. John Smith.

23,530. He told you at full length all they were to do?—He told me this, "Now, Allan, we have agreed "on your son has got to say he had 30*l.*; and there is "you and your eldest son will have nothing at all to "do with it. You will get clear, and he will too by "telling the truth, by saying that."

23,531. Allan said so?—Allan was not there at the time.

23,532. Did Allan say anything to you about it?—He saw me in the street. I am a renter to Allan.

23,533. Did he say anything to you about what you were to come here and say?—Not that time. I told him Blackmore was going to split on him, and he says to me, "I do not care what he splits; I knows nothing, and don't you." He said that to me and my wife.

23,534. "And don't you?"—"And don't you."

23,535. When?—Before he went away.

23,536. I am talking about this Commission?—Oh, it was long ago; it was before Mr. Justice Blackburn came here.

23,537. You say there has been an attempt to get your sons to conspire to tell a falsehood in court here, and I ask you whether Mr. Smith said anything to you about it. You say he did. Now, I ask you, did Allan say anything to you about it?—No, not at that time.

23,538. When?—He did before that; that is, before he went away to America. He says I was not to know anything.

23,539. Was this after one of your sons had come and seen our secretary? You know when one of your sons came and gave some information to our secretary some time ago?—He told me so; Alfred.

23,540. Was what you say your sons told you, told you by them after your son had seen that gentleman (the secretary)?—Certainly it was, because they advised me to go and speak to the secretary myself, but I have not done so.

23,541. It was not before they saw him?—No. Since they tried to come down, and Smith and Allan tried to have them down there for him to come and have the blame on his own shoulders.

23,542. (Mr. Price.) Who was to?—My son, Alfred Buttle.

23,543. Tell me this, and pay attention. First, you say your son went to our secretary and told him something; then Smith comes to your sons and tries to persuade them to support by oath a story which they were to tell in court here. Thirdly, you come this day to blow all that up and to reveal to us the existence of this conspiracy. I ask, when did it first occur to you, or when did it suggest itself to you, to come here and blow up the plot by telling us the story which you have just told us?—I have told you nothing but what I heard.

23,544. When did you first think of telling us that story?—I hope I have not told a story; I am sure I have not.

23,545. When did you first think of telling us what you have about this conversation?—Not at all. I am taken now by surprise.

23,546. When was the first time you intended to come and tell us that?—I am doing nothing; I am telling you the truth.

23,547. When did you first make up your mind to come and tell us the truth, as you call it, about this story?—This morning.

23,548. Then it was not until this morning you made up your mind?—I thought a great deal about it before, and could not think but one thing, come and speak the truth, because I know I spoke wrong, but did it through fear.

23,549. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say your wife heard Smith say this?—Yes, my wife was on the pavement.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then both of you must be here to-morrow morning.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

Saturday, 18th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

J. A. Buttle.

18 Sept. 1869.

JOHN ALFRED BUTTLE recalled.

23,550. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you sober this morning?—Yes.

23,551. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to stick to the story you told us last night about Allan and Smith getting hold of your two sons?—Yes.

23,552. You mean to represent that that is the case?—I do. My son told me so. I made a mistake in his name, it was Edward Buttle who went to Smith's instead of Alfred.

23,553. (Mr. Coleridge.) Both sons are yours?—Both are here.

23,554. Both are sons of yours?—Yes.

23,555. (Mr. Price.) Have you anything to tell us about that?—I saw Allan in George Lane, and told him what the consequence would be of Blackmore going to split on him.

23,556. (Mr. Coleridge.) When?—I think about a week after the polling.

23,557. Before he went to America?—I know it was about a week after, my wife was with me.

23,558. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say this conversation with your son took place since we have been in the town?—That is what my son told me; this is before that with Allan and I.

23,559. That is before he went away?—Yes.

23,560. What did you say?—I said "Charles Blackmore is going to split. You have been giving away "money;" he says, "I know nothing about money, "and don't you." I certainly thought I was to be bound by him as I was a renter under him, as I was afraid to lose my shop.

23,561. You are a tenant of his?—Yes.

23,562. Do you mean to say that you being his tenant he did not wish you to appear to be bribed by him?—That is what I understood, at all events I took it.

23,563. Therefore you did not mind your son, who is not a renter under him, taking the blame for you and the other son?—He sent for my two sons, Smith and he, and had him in the warehouse and in the back stable, Edward, and told him what they were going to do.

23,564. Smith and Allan?—Smith. I do not know that Allan was with him.

23,565. Whose back stable was it?—Allan's

Mrs. E. Buttle.

Mrs. ELIZABETH BUTTLE sworn.

23,566. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear anything said some little time ago, since we have been in the town, by Smith to your husband?—No, I did not.

23,567. Nothing at all?—No, my husband made a great mistake in saying that. I did not.

23,568. You did not hear it?—No.

23,569. He made a mistake in saying you heard it?—Yes.

23,570. You heard nothing?—He meant I heard what Allan said.

23,571. What?—I saw Allan I think it was about a week after the election. I cannot say to a day or two.

23,572. Before he went to America?—Before he went to America. I saw my husband go out of the shop and speak to Allan in the road, and told him something someone had said about giving money away at that election, and I heard Allan say in this way, he turned round, "I do not know anything about money. "I have not given any money. I do not know any-"thing at all, and you must not know anything about "money; you must not say anything at all. I know "nothing."

23,573. (Mr. Coleridge.) You heard Allan say this?—I heard Allan say this.

23,574. Where?—In George Street.

23,575. Do you know anything about your sons being sent for to Allan and Smith?—I heard Edward Buttle speak of it, and I did not believe it.

23,576. That is your son?—They are my sons-in-law.

23,577. Stepsons?—Yes. I saw him, and he said he had been sent for, and I said, "Where? At Smith's. What about?" I said, and he said, "Why, "Allan and Smith want me to go and state to the "Commissioners that I had 30*l*." I said, "For God's "sake do not go and do that."

23,578. Since we have been sitting?—Yes, since the Commission has been here.

23,579. (Mr. Price.) You say you did not believe it?—I did not believe it, and I said, "John, you go "down to Smith's, and know about that. Gracious "me, you have done enough already. Don't say such "a thing as that."

23,580. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your husband does not know what he is doing sometimes?—Well, he is a little deaf.

23,581. And often drunk?—He takes a glass sometimes, and sometimes does not take anything for a week or a fortnight. He works very hard generally, and if he takes a little it makes him foolish, where a little more sometimes you would not notice it.

23,582. He is very often before the magistrates, is not he?—No, not for a long time.

23,583. (Mr. Price.) How long?—I cannot tell.

23,584. Which of your family is a kind of annuity to the magistrate's clerk, being brought up from time to time?—I do not know.

23,585. You never hear of these things?—Yes, I have heard of them.

23,586. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you brought him up yourself?—There has been a little unpleasantness through other people.

23,587. For assaulting you?—No.

23,588. Has he summoned you for assaulting him?—No, I never done such a thing in my life.

23,589. What is he continually going before the magistrates for?—Not for a long time.

23,590. How long? What do you call a long time?—Two or three years.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

Mrs. E. Buttle.

18 Sept. 1869.

23,591. How long has your husband been in the town altogether? He came from Glastonbury, did not he?—No, never.

23,592. Where from?—Devonshire.

23,593. How long has he been in Bridgwater?—I really cannot say how many years. I have heard him say so. It may be going on for 30.

(Buttle.) Twenty-six.

23,594. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many times has he been before the magistrates since he has been in Bridgwater?—I do not know.

23,595. (Mr. Price.) How long have you been married to him?—Going on for 12 years.

23,596. Is it so many times that you cannot remember?—He has been had up through his perhaps taking a glass to drink.

23,597. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many times?—I cannot tell you upon my word.

23,598. A dozen times?—No, I think three times.

23,599. How often have you?—I have not been had up.

23,600. Not as a witness against him?—No, I never went as a witness against him in my life.

23,601. How often have your stepsons?—I do not know. For a long period we were not friendly, and I did not feel interested.

23,602. (Mr. Price.) What do they do for a livelihood?—They are in business, shoeing smiths in Bridgwater.

23,603. (Mr. Coleridge.) The same business as your husband?—Yes.

23,604. Do you know what money your husband got at the last election?—10*l.*

23,605. What the time before?—Upon my word I think it was 40*l.* he had. I think Bussell gave him 40*l.* He did not want to go to poll, and would not go in the first place.

23,606. And the time before that, how much, Bagehot's election?—I cannot tell. He had 5*l.*, I know.

23,607. Since you have been married to him, has he ever voted without being bribed?—That I cannot answer.

23,608. You do not think he has?—Well, he may not have done so.

23,609. Do you think he has?—Well, I cannot answer.

23,610. You do not know whether or not?—No.

23,611. How much money have you received altogether since you have been married to him for bribery?—I know he had 10*l.* that Murlis gave him.

23,612. That was in 1847, I suppose?—That I cannot tell.

23,613. 10*l.*, and 40*l.*, and 10*l.*; has he had 100*l.* altogether?—No.

23,614. 80*l.*?—Well, I think he had about 55*l.*

23,615. He has told us more than that; two tens, and a five, and a forty?—I can speak to two tens, and forty, and a five; that is all I know. I do not know any more. We had great trouble, because he did not want to go at all.

23,616. (Mr. Price.) Did you persuade him to ask for 40*l.*?—Not to vote at all.

23,617. (Mr. Coleridge.) But which did you prefer, 40*l.*, or that he should not vote?—I do not know.

E. J. Buttle.

EDWARD JAMES BUTTLE sworn.

23,618. (Mr. Price.) You are a blacksmith, we understand?—Yes.

23,619. And a voter?—Yes, and I voted at the last election.

23,620. How much did you get?—10*l.*

23,621. Did not you get three 10*l.* notes, and say nothing to your father about it?—No, I did not. Allan wanted me to say so.

23,622. Did not you tell our secretary that you got three 10*l.* notes, and took care not to tell your father about it?—I did.

23,623. Was that true?—No, it was not.

23,624. Why did you tell a lie?—Because Allan told me so; he told me to do so.

23,625. To tell our secretary a lie?—Yes, he told my brother for him to tell me——

23,626. Never mind what he told your brother?—He told me when I walked in through the warehouse, and out into the stable; he asked what I was going to say.

23,627. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to go?—My brother told me.

23,628. (Mr. Price.) When?—That was Tuesday morning.

23,629. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long ago?—The day after the Commission was opened he asked me when I went inside, "What are you going to say?" I said, "Well, I must tell what I know." He said, "Look here, you do what I tell you." "What is that, sir?" "You say you had 30*l.*, and you stuck to it." I said, "How can I say that, sir?" He said, "Well, "if you say that it will get the old man off, and your "brother as well." I said, "I do not see I can say that, because I shall get myself in gaol over that." "No," he said, "you will not; you will get the old man off, and your brother as well." Then he stood there a minute or two, and Mrs. Allan came out and said, "Andrew." "All right," he said, "we do not want you to come here;" but she did come, and saw me in the stable with Allan.

23,630. (Mr. Anstey.) You are one of the new voters?—Yes.

23,631. And were examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Yes.

23,632. You want us to believe what you say to-day?—Yes, I am stating the truth.

23,633. Did you tell Mr. Justice Blackburn this: On being asked by Mr. Serjeant Parry whether Allan asked you for your vote, your answer was, "No." Is that false?—That is the truth.

23,634. You swear that?—Yes, it is quite; he did not ask me to vote.

23,635. "He never canvassed you?"—No.

23,636. And your answer is "No"?—He did not.

23,637. You stick to that, do you?—Yes, that is quite correct.

23,638. You also stated he asked if you had been at the "Deer Inn" on the day of the poll. You said, "Yes." You are asked, did you see Allan there, and your answer is, "I did not"?—I did not the first time I went there.

23,639. You were then asked if you ever heard him say anything about its being all right, that they had got the stuff now, or anything of that kind?—I did not.

23,640. Your answer is, "I did not hear him say those words." Then you are asked about your brother Alfred, "Do you know whether he is a voter?" and you answer, "I believe he is not." You are asked, "Do you know whether he had any money to vote, "by accident?—I do not. You never heard of it?—"No. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind." Is that true?—I do not know that he had any money.

23,641. You had not heard of it?—No. Why I stated on the last petition that I had no money was because two days after the petition I met Allan down by the "Clarence," and we walked as far as some place together. He said, "How are things going?" and I said, "They are sure to petition; do you think so?" "Yes," he said, "Well, look here, do not you "say a word; you say you had not the money; stick "to it, and do not say a word until after you are "dead."

23,642. (Mr. Coleridge.) After what?—After I was dead; "Never speak of it until after you are dead."

23,643. (Mr. Price.) So you went up and swore what was false in consequence?—I did, and two occasions; once he went into my shop, a week after the election. Two other occasions he told me not to say anything.

23,644. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did anybody else tell you not to say anything?—No.

23,645. I believe you also saw John Smith?—Not at that time.

23,646. At any time?—Yes.

23,647. When?—On Tuesday morning, just after I left Allan.

23,648. After the Commission opened?—Yes. The day after his lad, about 16 or 17 years old, came, and he asked if Buttle was there. I said, "My name is Buttle," and he said, "Smith wants you at 'York House,'" and I was introduced out behind to look at the pump; and he said, "Have you seen Allan?" I said "Yes." "Has he told you what to do?" I said, "Yes, he told me to say that I had 30*l.*, and kept it." And he said, "That is what you must say, "and the quicker you can make that statement to the "secretary, Mr. Purcell, the better." I done so directly; I went home and cleaned myself, and made that statement to the secretary.

23,649. And that is Mr. Smith who has been examined here?—John Smith, of York House.

23,650. (Mr. Price.) Now, I want to know something about your history. Are you working for yourself?—I am working for myself.

23,651. Do you keep a shop of your own?—Yes, just opposite my father's.

23,652. When was the last time you were in gaol?—What, sir?

23,653. When was the last time you were in gaol? You know what the gaol is, I suppose?—Yes, sure.

23,654. Then, when was the last time?—About four or five years ago. That was for an assault.

23,655. Will you swear that was the last time?—Yes; I was only in gaol but once, and that was three weeks for assault.

23,656. When was the last time you were before the magistrates?—That I cannot say.

23,657. Yes you can. Is it so often you cannot remember?—I cannot remember how long, because it is a good bit ago.

23,658. How long ago?—I cannot tell.

23,659. Years ago?—Yes.

23,660. Six months ago?—Yes, more than six months ago.

23,661. A year ago?—Yes.

23,662. Will you swear it is a year ago since you were up before the magistrates?—I cannot tell; two or three months.

23,663. (Mr. Coleridge.) What for?—I cannot say; it was nothing very serious.

23,664. If it was nothing very serious, you can tell us all the better?—I cannot tell, because I was never up before the magistrates for anything serious.

23,665. What was it for, the last time you were brought up?—I am afraid I cannot say.

23,666. We can find that out from the clerk to the magistrates?—Yes. You will find that what I have said is the real truth.

23,667. You have said nothing. What was it for you were before the magistrates?—I cannot say.

23,668. Yes you can?—I cannot, really.

23,669. You have no idea what you were up for? No; it may have been a squabble.

23,670. It may have been a number of things; felony or burglary?—No, I never was.

23,671. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it for assaulting your stepmother?—No.

23,672. Assaulting your father?—No.

23,673. What for?—I cannot bring to memory what it was for. If the magistrates are here I dare say they can tell you.

23,674. (Mr. Price.) We think it necessary to put these things to you to test your credit. You have made a grave charge against Allan and Smith, that they tried to tamper with you as a witness before us, and we want to test your credit and see what sort of fellow you are?—Yes, sure.

23,675. If you do not answer the questions we put to you, depend on it you will have no certificate, and you will be prosecuted. What were you before the magistrates for; do not tell us you cannot say?—I cannot say.

23,676. You have no idea?—No, I have not.

23,677. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many times this year before the magistrates?—None.

23,678. How many times last year?—I cannot say.

23,679. Half a dozen?—No.

23,680. How many times have you been in the lock-up?—Never but once.

23,681. Is that before you went to gaol?—No.

23,682. How often have you been in gaol?—Only once.

23,683. How often fined?—Fined? I cannot say; that may be two or three times.

23,684. A dozen times?—I should think not.

23,685. Will you swear you have not?—Yes.

23,686. Half a dozen times?—It may be three or four.

23,687. Will you swear you have not half a dozen times?—I should not like to swear that.

23,688. How often have you been to gaol?—Only once.

23,689 How often in the lock-up?—Only once, and that is when I went to gaol for assault.

23,690. Only in gaol once?—No, I have not.

23,691. You were always fined for these assaults. How many have you committed?—Not very many.

23,692. Fifty?—No.

23,693. Have you always been fined and not sent to prison for the assaults?—Yes, all but this once I was speaking of to you.

23,694. Is that the assault you were sent to prison for?—I was sent to prison three weeks for that.

23,695. What?—The assault.

23,696. Which one?—One Captain Harwood.

23,697. What did you assault him, about?—I did not assault him, if the truth was told.

23,698. But you went to prison for it?—I did.

(Mr. Price.) We have the superintendent of police here and he will tell us.

23,699. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you not tell us it was for an assault on Mr. Harwood that you went to gaol?—You did not ask me the question.

23,700. (Mr. Price.) Yes?—Then I mistook the word.

23,701. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for assaulting your father?—I never assaulted my father.

23,702. But you were brought up for doing it?—It was not known to me.

23,703. Do you mean you were never brought up to this court for assaulting your father?—I never was.

23,704. Nor your stepmother?—No.

22,705. (Mr. Anstey.) Any court?—No, I never was.

23,706. (Mr. Price.) We have sent for the superintendent to bring the books here with the charge sheet, and we shall see and know exactly what the charge was. Having told you that, do you mean to deny that you were charged with assaulting your father?—I do not believe that I ever assaulted my father in my life.

23,707. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you ever charged with it?—No, I believe not.

23,708. Or your stepmother?—I do not believe it.

23,709. Were you or not charged with that?—I believe not.

23,710. Will you swear you were not?—I believe I could.

23,711. Will you swear it? Take care that all the pains and penalties of perjury are hanging over you. Will you swear that you were never charged with assaulting your stepmother?

(Mr. Price.) Now if you do not answer you shall go to that place where you once took up your abode, and stay there till Monday morning, or for a longer period, when your memory will be better.

23,712. (Mr. Anstey.) Why do you not answer the question?—I cannot bear it in my memory whether I was charged with assaulting my stepmother.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

E. J. Buttle.

18 Sept. 1869.

23,713. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many times in all have you been charged before the magistrates?—(No answer.)

23,714. We shall know in a minute.—Upon what charges?

23,715. Any charges at all; how often have you been brought up before the magistrates of this town, or any other town, in your lifetime?—I was never charged at any other place without it was Bridgwater in my life.

23,716. And how many times in Bridgwater have you ever been charged?—It may be half a dozen times.

23,717. How much more?—I cannot say.

23,718. Have you a dozen times?—I should think not.

23,719. Will you swear you have not, on your oath?—I should not like to swear it.

23,720. Will you swear you have not been up before them a dozen times?—Well, I do not believe I have.

23,721. Have you two dozen times?—I think not.

23,722. Will you swear you have not been up 20 times before the magistrates in your life?—I do not believe I have.

23,723. Will you swear you have not?—Yes; I will take upon me to swear that.

23,724. Will you swear you have not been up 12 times?—I cannot answer the question.

23,725. (Mr. Price.) How old are you?—I suppose I am 30. I cannot tell my age.

23,726. (Mr. Anstey.) On how many occasions have you perjured yourself in a court of justice in your life?—I do not know that ever I did before I did this last occasion on the petition, and then I did it with the advice of Allan.

23,727. Were you examined before the committee of the House of Commons?—I was not.

23,728. On what other occasion have you taken a false oath?—None as I am aware of.

23,729. Have you taken a false oath to-day?—I have not.

(Mr. Price.) You may stand down for the present, but must not leave the court.

A. Buttle.

ALFRED BUTTLE sworn.

23,730. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get at the election for your vote?—I had no vote.

23,731. What did you get at all?—10*l.*

23,732. What for?—I do not know, I am sure. I was dragged into the room, and Allan was there, and he says ——

23,733. Where was the room?—The "New Inn."

23,734. What did Allan say to you?—He says, "Turn round," and I turned round.

23,735. What did he give you?—I cannot say. I turned round, my back was against him, and I had 10*l.* in my pocket.

23,736. Who put it there?—I cannot say.

23,737. Some one?—Yes.

23,738. And you were not a voter?—I was not a voter.

23,739. Was that given you for your father?—No, I suppose. I took it as my own.

23,740. And you kept it?—I kept it.

23,741. Did you go and vote for some one else?—No; I never went to the poll.

23,742. Did you personate a voter?—No.

23,743. (Mr. Price.) What were you to do for the 10*l.*?—Nothing; there was no words spoke to me.

23,744. What time was it?—I should think a quarter to four.

23,745. On the polling day?—On the polling day.

23,746. Just before the close of the poll?—Yes.

23,747. Since you got that 10*l.* has Allan said anything to you about it?—No, he has not ever spoke to me about it.

23,748. Never?—Not about that.

23,749. What has he spoken to you about?—He asked me just when the Commission was here, on the Tuesday as the Commission came here on Monday, where my brother Edward was, and so I said, "I think he is in the shop;" and he told me to say, "Walk right through the warehouse and out into the stable." I done so, and I told my brother Edward of it, and then I went away.

23,750. Did Allan say anything to you?—No.

23,751. Did Allan tell you to send your brother Edward to him?—Yes.

23,752. Did Allan ever say anything to you about saying you got 30*l.*?—No.

23,753. And you were to say that, and so the old man would be safe?—No, not me.

23,754. Was Mrs. Allan present at any part of this time?—I did not see her at all.

23,755. Is that all that Allan said to you?—I told my brother Edward to walk in through the warehouse.

23,756. Did he say anything about what you should say to Mr. Purcell?—No.

23,757. Did you go to Mr. Smith at all?—No.

23,758. Did Mr. Smith send for you?—I went down to Smith's, and my two brothers were there, and he said, "Do not come in;" and I said, "I am not in a hurry."

23,759. What is your brother's name?—John.

23,760. Is he here to-day?—Yes.

23,761. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your name?—Alfred.

23,762. You were examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No.

23,763. Then there is another Alfred besides?—Yes, there is father called John Alfred, and the eldest brother John Alfred, and one called Edward James, and myself.

23,764. Where is the son who was examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Outside.

23,765. And your name is Alfred John?—No, Alfred.

23,766. (Mr. Anstey.) Allan said nothing more to you then?—No.

23,767. (Mr. Coleridge.) He did not tell you to say nothing about the money?—No, nothing of the sort.

23,768. What did Mr. Smith tell you to do?—Nothing.

23,769. Merely to send your brother to him?—No; Allan told me that.

23,770. (Mr. Anstey.) You had no vote at the election?—No.

23,771. Did you tell anybody that a 10*l.* note or 10*l.* in money had been given to you?—I did not know whether anything was said to Mr. Veysey.

23,772. I will put it more plainly to you. Did you tell anybody at the time of the election, or after, that a sum of 10*l.* had been received by you to vote when you had no vote?—Since the Commission. I have said I have had money since the Commission has been here.

23,773. You were not examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No.

23,774. Did you tell anybody that you had received 10*l.* for your vote, not having any vote?—Not that I am aware of.

23,775. Did you allow your brother, John Alfred Buttle, to tell any one that you received the 10*l.* that he had got, and that you had no vote?—No, I never allowed my brother to take nothing at all about it.

23,776. Was there any arrangement between you and your brother John Alfred by which you were to say the 10*l.* which he in fact received, you had received?—No.

23,777. That you swear?—That I will swear.

23,778. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before Allan went to America did he say anything to you about this 10*l.*?—No, never; not more than saying——

23,779. What did he say?—I cannot mind.

23,780. Did he speak to you soon after the election?—I think I told him that Blackmore was going to split, or something.

23,781. What is his name?—Charles Blackmore.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

A. Buttle.

18 Sept. 1869.

23,782. Charles Blackmore and you were together with Allan, did you say ?—No, Blackmore was not with me for the day.

23,783. What were you going to tell us about Blackmore ?—I think I told Allan this, Blackmore was going to split on him, or something.

23,784. What did Allan say ?—He says, "He don't know nothing."

23,785. Did he say anything to you about your 10*l.* ?—No, not a word.

23,786. Have you told us one single word of truth ?—Yes, I have told you all the truth.

23,787. Allan never said a word to you about the 10*l.* ?—No.

23,788. At any one time ?—No.

23,789. At any time between the election and this ?—No, he never brought it up.

23,790. (Mr. Price.) He knew you had no vote ?—I suppose he did. He lives pretty close by.

23,791. How often have you been in gaol ?—Never.

23,792. How often before the magistrates ?—Not many times, and then we have only been up for our own folly in the shop for collaring one another's horses.

23,793. (Mr. Coleridge.) A dozen times ?—No.

23,794. Are you sure ?—Yes.

23,795. How often have you been fined ?—Only once, I think.

23,796. Only once ?—Yes, only once.

23,797. Will you swear that ?—I cannot be certain.

23,798. Have you been fined ten times ?—No.

23,799. Will you swear you have not ?—Yes.

23,800. Will you swear you have not been fined five times before the magistrates ?—I cannot tell before I go home, but I know I have not been fined.

JOHN ALFRED BUTTLE, junr., called.

J. A. Buttle, jun.

23,801. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know what that book is ?—Yes.

23,802. It is a testament ?—Yes. (The witness was sworn.)

23,803. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the last election ?—Yes.

23,804. What did you get ?—10*l.*

23,805. Who from ?—Allan.

23,806. Did Allan say anything to you about 10*l.* afterwards at any time ?—Yes.

23,807. When ?—I cannot say when, just afterwards; he told me not to say a word about it.

23,808. Was that before the petition was heard here, before the judge was down here ?—Yes.

23,809. Did you know then, and did he know there was going to be an inquiry ?—He heard so, I believe, because he told me so, not to say anything.

23,810. Then he told you you were not to say anything about it ?—He did.

23,811. Did he speak to you about it since that time ?—Yes.

23,812. When ?—Not very long ago.

23,813. Since this Commission has been sitting in the town ?—Yes.

23,814. You are quite sure of that ?—Quite sure.

23,815. What did he say to you ?—Well, we were in conversation about a mare I sold to him, which my brother authorized me to sell, and he told me that no one would know nothing at all about it. I was to say nothing at all about it.

23,816. About what ?—About the money he gave me.

23,817. Tell us what he said ?—That is all he said.

23,818. You were to say nothing about it ?—Say nothing at all about it.

23,819. Did he say who was to take the 30*l.* on himself ?—No, not then ; I have heard since.

23,820. Did he tell you ?—No.

23,821. Did John Smith tell you ?—He have since ; John Smith have.

23,822. What did Smith say ?—My brother told me he had sent for him, and he had been down ; and I did not know anything of it before ; and I said, "I do not believe it." He said, "Come down and hear "what he have got to say." And I went down and he said, "I was with Allan last night till 11 o'clock, and "this is proposed what for you to say." "What is "that ?" I said. He says, "That your brother Edward "had the 30*l.*, and stuck to all the lot, and did not give "you any; and that will clear your father." "Oh, "but," I said, "I cannot say that." But he said, "I "will forfeit my existence if that is not right ; I "know it is right." I did not believe it.

23,823. (Mr. Coleridge.) John Smith said this ?—Yes, he did.

23,824. Who else was present ?—My brother.

23,825. Which ?—Edward.

23,826. (Mr. Price.) He said that he and Allan had made up what you were to say ?—He did. He said he was with him up till 11 last night.

23,827. Did you agree to do so ?—Oh no ; I told my brother I should not agree to any such thing.

23,828. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that before or after Allan had been examined here ?—That was before.

23,829. (Mr Anstey.) Were you examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—Yes.

23,830. You were canvassed, I believe, by one Jeffery Denman to vote for Westropp and Gray ?—No I was not.

23,831. Will you swear he never asked you for your vote ?—Yes, the polling day.

23,832. You said just now he did not ?—You said "canvass." I did not understand the question.

23,833. Recollect there is such a thing as an indictment for perjury, which has consequences far more serious than we can inflict upon you in the exercise of our summary jurisdiction. On your being canvassed by Jeffery Denman did you say to him (there is some strong language, and an oath in fact), "I am not going to poll without money, or being paid for it" ?—I do not remember saying any such thing.

23,834. In the presence of your brother or your father was anything said of that kind by you to Denman ?—Not as I can remember.

23,835. You think you will escape by that, do you ?—I cannot remember I said any such thing to him.

23,836. Did you on that day, the polling day, receive 10*l.* from Allan ?—I did.

23,837. To vote for whom ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

23,838. And did you vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I did.

23,839. Did you tell Mr. Justice Blackburn, in answer to this question, put to you by Mr. Serjeant Parry, "Did not this gentleman, namely Allan, absolutely give you 10*l.* to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?" Did you in answer to this question say absolutely no ?—I believe I did.

23,840. Then you perjured yourself before Mr. Justice Blackburn deliberately not a year ago ?—I did.

23,841. And you expect me to believe you now ?—I cannot help it whether you believe me ; that is the truth.

23,842. (Mr. Price.) What induced you to commit perjury ?—Because I was put up to do it.

23,843. Who put you up ?—Allan.

23,844. (Mr. Anstey.) To what ?—Put up to do it. I should not have done it else.

23,845. How old are you ?—About four and thirty, I suppose.

23,846. You are not a child, and have had a great deal of experience in kissing the book, have you not, in courts of justice before ?—Not a great many times.

23,847. What do you mean by being put up to it, unless you were previously disposed to this most infamous of all crimes, next to bribery ?—(No answer.)

23,848. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you been sworn as a witness ?—I cannot say.

23,849. A dozen times ?—No.

23,850. Half a dozen ?—No.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

J. A. Buttle, jun.

18 Sept. 1869.

23,851. How many times have you been before the magistrates?—I cannot say.

23,852. Fifty?—No.

23,853. Twenty?—No.

23,854. A dozen?—No.

23,855. Tell us how many times?—Oh, three or four times, I suppose.

23,856. A dozen, have not you?—No.

23,857. How often have you been in gaol?—Once.

23,858. What for?—Taking my own part.

23,859. (Mr. Price.) Fighting you mean?—Yes.

23,860. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often fined?—Once.

23,861. Only once?—Yes.

23,862. Will you swear it?—Yes, I do swear.

23,863. (Mr. Anstey.) How often have you been prosecuted for perjury?—Never.

23,864. (Mr. Coleridge.) After Allan had been himself examined here, did he say anything about you need not stick to that story he told you before?—I have not seen him since he was examined here, not to speak to him.

23,865. Not seen him since?—I cannot say I have not seen him since; I have not spoken to him.

23,866. The last time he spoke to you was on the Tuesday after the opening of the Commission here?—No, he never spoke to me the Tuesday.

23,867. The Tuesday, you told us, after we first began to sit, was the time he told you to stick to the story about the 10*l.*—No; you misunderstood.

23,868. Who told you that then, John Smith?—John Smith.

23,869. And Allan has said nothing to you then?—No, not the Tuesday.

23,870. When?—Before that.

23,871. You mean soon after the election?—Yes; and since that.

23,872. When was the last time Allan said anything to you about what you were to say here?—When I sold him the mare. I cannot say the day of the month.

23,873. What did he say then?—That I was to stick to what I did before, and say nothing at all about it.

23,874. Were you to say you received 30*l.*, or nothing?—I was to say I received nothing.

23,875. The same as you swore before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—That is right.

23,876. And that you were to go and repeat your perjury over again?—He did.

23,877. You mean to swear that?—I do.

Mrs. Allan.

Mrs. Allan sworn.

23,878. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect since this Commission has been sitting any one of these family of the Buttles being down in the back yard with your husband?—I remember the morning one of the Buttles was posted to be examined; the breakfast was ready, and I went into our yard, at least our warehouse, to look for him, knowing he went in that direction, and when I came there I went in the stable just close by, and one of the Buttles was there.

23,879. Which of them?—I do not know unless I saw them together; not that man who was here or Alfred.

23,880. Edward?—Yes; he was the man.

23,881. Did you hear anything said at all?—Not a word.

23,882. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all. But when my husband came into breakfast, I asked what he was talking to him about. He said "I find his "name posted up for to-morrow; he has perjured "himself already, and I want to make him tell the "truth. My advice is, tell the truth, for I shall tell "nothing but the truth myself. I have nothing but "the truth to tell," and he advised him to tell the truth himself.

23,883. That was immediately after you had seen Buttle in the stable with your husband?—Just so. He came into breakfast, and that is why he said he had called him in just that he should speak; for Allan, if he had been examined before, would not have found it necessary to have told him.

23,884. At the last election did you give any money away?—Not to my recollection; the last election, no.

23,885. But in 1866 you did?—I cannot remember that I did; there was a lot of money passed. I saw a lot of money passing, but I do not remember giving.

23,886. (Mr. Price.) One man says he got 10*l.* from you?—He possibly might, but I could not swear. I know so much was passing, and so many persons at my house, that I really could not be accountable for persons there.

23,887. (Mr. Coleridge.) You cannot say you did or did not handle money?—I certainly did; I helped to account for it.

A. Allan.

Andrew Allan recalled.

23,888. You have heard that statement. Give us your version?—It is true that on the morning of the last election I did pay at the "New Inn" to the three Buttles 10*l.* each.

23,889. You did not tell us that on your first examination, did you?—Yes, I did.

23,890. How came you to pay one not a voter?—He was admitted to me. The checks outside admitted him up.

23,891. And you thought he was a voter?—I did not know he was not; it was no fault of mine.

23,892. (Mr. Price.) Now go on to the question whether you said anything of the sort we have heard?—From the moment I gave him that money until I went to America I never spoke to him.

23,893. Not one of them?—Not one of them. The old man spoke to me one day when walking down George Street passing his warehouse, it used to be mine, now his shoeing forge, and there is a door about nine feet in width, and the pavement is very narrow, so you are close to it, and he said, "What about the election; there is going to be a petition?" I said, "I do not want to hear anything at all about elections;" and I did not stop in my step, but went straight on.

23,894. Did you say, "I know nothing about money, and you must not"?—Nothing of the sort; I kept walking on.

23,895. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you told us previously, in one of your first examinations, that you made a rule never to allude to past transactions with persons who were in any degree cognizant of bribery; you never alluded to those?—I did not.

23,896. You made a prudential rule not to speak to them?—I did.

23,897. Did you act on that rule in the case of the Buttles?—I did more particularly in their case than any others, and for this reason: I gave Alfred Buttle 10*l.*, and he was no voter, and I knew it the same night or the next morning, and I would not go to him or any of the family for the 10*l.*

23,898. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nor when you came back from America?—When I came back from America I had no conversation with them on election matters. I would not allow them to speak to me on the subject, or I to them except on business matters. They have screwed some wheels on my trap, and I have spoken to them on business, but election matters never.

23,899. How did this one come into your stable yard on the Tuesday of the Commission?—I will come to that presently. If it was Tuesday morning he came to my yard, it was Monday night the Buttle's name was posted up on this door. After I came home from America I had spoken to almost every man who had communication with me on matters of bribery. I told everyone I was coming here to speak the truth, and I should tell the whole truth. I never told the Buttles, because I would not go near them; but when I saw their names posted I thought it not fair for them to come up and be in a different position from everyone who had communicated with me on bribery matters.

23,900. (Mr. Price.) He swore he was put up by you. That is untrue?—Positively untrue. There is not a shadow of truth in it. On Monday night I was going down street, and met John Smith on the bridge, and said to him, "The Buttles are up for examination "to-morrow. I wish some one would tell them I "mean to tell everything about it." I expected Smith to volunteer to do it, but he did not. I then asked him if he would, and he said, "I will send some one to do it." I did not see anything more of him that night, but on the Tuesday morning I went down to Smith and asked him if he had sent anyone to the Buttles, that I meant to make a clean breast of everything, and state all. He said he had sent last night, but they were gone to bed or out, his messenger did not see them. I felt if I did not do my own work myself it was never done, and I went home; and Buttle's premises is part of my back warehouse. I stood by my side door, the nearest door to Buttle's place, a quarter of an hour or 20 minutes, waiting an opportunity of seeing one of them, and I at length saw the one who gave evidence last. He was passing the door, and I said, "Alfred, will you tell Edward I want to see him." That was the first time I had spoken to him since the election. He said "Yes," and went in, and Edward came down to the warehouse and said, "Let us go in." The warehouse has windows and doors. "I do not know that there is an objection." He said, "Let us go back," and so we went back. I said, "My object is to tell you you are "up for evidence to-day; when it comes to my time "I mean to give a fair statement of everything con-"nected with the election. I want you to know that "before." Knowing the evidence he had given, I thought it was fair to him.

23,901. Knowing he had perjured himself?—Knowing he had perjured himself, I thought it fair to him to know that in going up. He said he should say the very same thing he said before to Mr. Justice Blackburn. Then I said, "It will be very different evidence from mine."

23,902. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say anything about 30*l.*?—He did to me.

23,903. What?—When he found I would not support him in the evidence he had given before Mr. Justice Blackburn, he says to me, "Will you say you "gave me the 30*l.*, and I will say I stuck to it, and "it will save the other two." I said "No, I will not, "for that would be a clear case of perjury on my "part. I could not support it." And on his telling that, I endeavoured to show him out of the door as quickly as I could, because I found my object had ended the moment I told him I was going to make a clear statement of everything, and when he wanted me to connive in a matter of that sort I certainly objected.

23,904. What time in the morning was it?—I think about 8 o'clock.

23,905. Did you say anything to him about seeing Mr. Purcell, the secretary?—I did not. I never mentioned Mr. Purcell's name.

23,906. To any of them?—To any of them. And I told him, "My only object in seeing you this morn-"ing is to tell you I am going to make a fair state-"ment, and as it happened. Now you can go, and "tell exactly as you please. You will be in the same "position as the others."

23,907. When did you first make up your mind to return and state the truth before this Commission?—Directly I knew there was to be a commission. I was telegraphed for, and I came straight home 4,000 miles to tell everything.

23,908. Who telegraphed to you?—My brother-in-law. I will produce the telegram.

23,909. You made up your mind in America to tell the truth?—Yes.

23,910. It was not an afterthought here?—No, I made up my mind before.

23,911. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say so before?—I did.

23,912. I do not understand what was the exact nature of the charge against you. What personal interest did this man Buttle suggest to you to move you to agree to concert with him this little scheme of the 30*l.*?—He gave no reason in the world.

23,913. You had no interest in the family?—None at all.

23,914. They were interested in one another. Were you interested in any way in the old man?—Not the least.

23,915. Therefore if you had conceded to what they proposed you would have done so gratuitously, without any possible motive whatever to induce you to commit that perjury?—Exactly.

(Mr. Price.) Still more if you had initiated the thing.

23,916. (Mr. Coleridge.) The old man is your tenant?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It seems to me you are bound to clear this up, if nobody else does, by indicting these people for perjury.

(Mr. Price.) I should like to hear Smith, and then we will consider what we will do.

(The witness.) I gave my evidence, and what I gave before shows I was no party to the scheme.

Mr. JOHN SMITH recalled.

Mr. J. Smith.

23,917. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what passed?—I never knew either one of the Buttles to my mind, and never had any transaction in the shape of bribery for the reason that I never believed it would be safe. I always had my suspicion of them. I never knew any of them, with the exception of the last witness. About 14 days ago I was up to dinner, and my shopman——

23,918. The more material part is, is it true that Allan asked you if you would be good enough to see the Buttles, and tell them that he, Allan, intended to make a clean breast of it, as he saw they were put down in the list of witnesses on the first day?—He did.

(Mr. Price.) That is enough.

(Mr. Anstey.) We do not believe a syllable of their story.

The Commissioners adjourned to consider. On their returning,

(Mr. Price.) Let the four Buttles come up in front. We have considered this matter you have brought before us, which, in the first place, has turned out to be a very great waste of our time, but that is only a small evil compared with what you intended to perpetrate, because we have not the slightest doubt in the world that you stand there before us, two of you confessedly having committed perjury before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and therefore we should have felt the greatest doubt in believing anything against another person if deposed to by a man who confessed himself guilty of perjury. That perjury ought not to go unpunished. In addition to that you have conspired together most deliberately and wickedly to commit perjury before us for the purpose of putting Allan and Smith in a very perilous position indeed, because if we had been of opinion that they had done what you wished us to believe they would have been guilty of a gross contempt of court and subornation of perjury, and would have to submit to the fate which we now intend to ask the authorities of this borough to subject you to. That is, on the very first occasion on which the magistrates of this borough meet that you be brought up by the superintendent of police who shall prosecute one and all of you. First, those who have committed perjury before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and secondly, all of you for the crime you have committed to-day before us, which, in point of fact, you have committed by perjury and conspiracy. Now we do it in this form for this reason: that although we feel perfectly confident that on our recommendation the Attorney General would undertake to do that, yet we think it of vast importance that there should be a speedier mode of vindicating justice by having you instantly, or as soon as possible, brought before the justices rather than that there should be any delay by communicating with the Attorney General on the subject. We now desire on the part of this Commission the authorities of this borough to take care that on the first meeting of the magistrates these men be brought up and be prosecuted for these offences, and we have named the superintendent of police, he being the proper person in our judgment to undertake the prosecution. We think there is a primâ facie case, but the magistrates will investigate the thing and see if there is any difference between you, and will point it out in their discretion. That is the position in which you stand, and we have nothing more to say to you. You are at liberty to leave the court; we do not want you here, and I do not know that your presence is desirable to any of us.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.
18 Sept. 1869.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

Mr. John Hawkey Bingham Carslake recalled.

23,919. (Mr Anstey.) Of course the register for this year is not complete yet, and will not be complete for some time, but I should very much like to see whether or not the number of persons on the lists, or who, not being on the lists, claim to be on the lists from which the register of the present year will be made, are in excess or not of the last year. I should like to see what the sum total is, distinguishing old franchises from new franchises, and how many claims there are in respect of lodgings. We had in evidence that there were very few lodgers last year, and I should like to see how many claims there are in respect of lodgings for the new year, if that can be done. Of course it will be in the lists; the register will not be complete till the end of the year. Can you do that without trouble?—I will do it. The revising barrister will be here shortly, and I think I shall be able to give you what will practically be the register. I will give the information to you now or then.

23,920. (Mr. Price.) I will just mention this to you—I do not know whether the clerk to the magistrates is here—that under ordinary circumstances we should not allow the transcript of our notes to be handed to anybody, but for the purpose of the prosecution the transcript of the notes can be applied for by the clerk to the magistrates, or the superintendent of police, and can be given to him for that purpose?—I am much obliged to you.

23,921. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell me how many poll clerks there were at the last election?—Five.

23,922. How many polling booths were there?—Five.

23,923. And five poll clerks?—Yes.

23,924. And do you know the names of the clerks, or can you get them for me?—Yes; Mr. White was one of them, Mr. Coombes was another, Mr. Lucette another—I will give you their names.

23,925. If you please?—I will do so. Would you like to have the names of those gentlemen in time to summon them, or shall I communicate with them? Which do you wish?

23,926. Whichever you please.—Do you wish them to be here on Monday?

23,927. (Mr. Price.) Yes, Monday at 12.—Then I will send to each of those gentlemen, or I will communicate to your secretary their names.

23,928. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose the mayor would not know?—He might possibly. He was at some of the booths, and saw the voters come in, but he took no part in it.

23,929. I forgot to ask you whether any, and if so, whether many, of the voters who came up to the different booths to be polled were in a state intoxication or not?—I believe I was not in the booth more than twice during the day, and I cannot charge my memory with seeing any men intoxicated.

J. Vearncombe.

John Vearncombe sworn.

23,930. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

23,932. Did you get anything for it?—No.

23,933. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

23,934. What time in the day did you vote?—Ten o'clock.

23,935. Did you have any promise made to you?—No.

23,936. Have you made any claim?—No.

23,937. Do you expect to get anything?—No.

23,938. Or did you before the election, when you heard that the election was going to take place?—No. I did not want anything.

23,939. Did you vote at the election before, 1866?—No.

23,940. Has not your name been returned as a person who has taken a bribe?—Yes.

23,941. How was that?—It happened in this way: I was at the "Duke of Wellington," to treat a man with a glass of beer, when William Harwood came in. He said to me, "You are a fool." He said, "Alway had 10*l.* to give you, and he only gave you 7*l.*"

23,942. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Alway give you 7*l.*?—No, I never had it. The man went on; I did not take much notice of him, I could see he was intoxicated; and he went on for some time, and he said, "He has got now 3*l.* for you." There were a number of people present, and I did not like it, and "I said, "If I thought Alway would give me 3*l.* I would go for it and fetch it." He said I had not pluck enough. I did not say more, but I went out and went home, and I took about 33*s.* or 34*s.* out of my drawer, and I went and saw Alway, and told him what had happened; and he said, "I should carry on a bit of a spree with him," just like that; and I goes back to Harwood, and said, "Are you going up with me?" and he said, "Well, if you are going up I will go with you;" and he came away with me, and he came as far as Mr. Rookley's door, the baker, which is close to my house, and I left him there and went on to Alway's, and when I got there I took out 30*s.* and put it on the counter, at least so I thought, but Alway told me the next day it was only 29*s.* I took it up, and he gave it to me again. I then went out, and on going back to Harwood I found him at the door of Mr. Rookley's, and he said, "Have you got the money?" I said, "I have got 30*s.*" It was my own money. And he patted me on the back, and said, "What will 'ee drink?" And I said, "If I have anything it will be a glass of gin and water." He goes back to the "Duke of Wellington;" I think there were several persons present, and I think he paid for 3*s.* 8*d.* worth of gin and water. He thought he had a fool to deal with; and so there was an end of it.

23,943. Mr. Alway did not bribe you?—No.

23,944. (Mr. Price.) You live near him?—Yes, close by.

23,945. Did you vote at the election before?—No.

23,946. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you give a different account of this to Jeffery Denman?—No. I never told any man I had money. Jeffery Denman was at the poll.

23,947. Did you never tell Jeffery Denman that you had received 7*l.* and 30*s.* from Alway, but could not get the other 30*s.* from him?—I swear I did not, and no other man in the town.

23,948. In the presence of other people?—I swear not.

23,949. Did you ever tell James Palmer that you had had 7*l.*, but could not get the rest?—To the best of my knowledge I never spoke to James Palmer but once in my life, and that was only "Good morning" or "Good afternoon" when I met him. I do not think I spoke but once to him in my life.

23,950. Did you meet William Baker on the bridge, after the polling day, and show him a sovereign, and say to him, "This is all I got for my vote"?—No; that was on another day.

23,951. You say it was on another day?—On another day I showed a sovereign to young Mr. Smith.

23,952. I ask you about Baker. Did you show it to Baker?—No.

23,953. Did you tell Jeffery Denman that your wife took out of your pocket the 7*l.* you had for your vote?—No. I never heard of any such thing before.

23,954. Why you were asked that very question before Mr. Justice Blackburn. I will read it to you. "Did you tell Jeffery Denman that you had had 7*l.* "for your vote, and that your wife took it out of your "pocket?" That is the question you were asked, and yet you say you were not asked that before to-day?—I deny it.

23,955. You swear you did not hear it before to-day?—I do not know that I ever heard about 7*l.* before to-day.

23,956. (Mr. Price.) It is down in the shorthand notes?—I do not remember it.

23,957. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl at all?—Yes, I voted at 10 o'clock in the morning.

23,958. Did you promise Mr. Westropp to vote for him?—No.

23,959. Are you a Conservative in politics?—No, a Liberal.

23,960. Had Mr. Westropp been to you to ask you for your vote?—Yes.

23,961. What did you tell him?—I told him I should not vote for him as I was a Liberal; and I am a better Liberal than many of the professed Liberals in this town.

23,962. Now we come to young Smith. Did you take a sovereign out of your pocket, and show it to Mr. Smith, the grocer's son, saying, "This is some of the money which I got for my vote"?—I should like to explain——

23,963. Did you or did you not do so?—No, not in that way.

23,964. Now tell me what you said?—We were coming over the bridge to meet Mr. Kinglake the day after the election, and when I came over the bridge he held up a sovereign to me, and he said, "That is what you bought Browne's bricks with," and I put my hand in my pocket and pulled out a sovereign, and showed it to him, and I said, "I have one of your party's sovereigns here which is a marked one." It was not my sovereign at all; it was a sovereign belonging to Harwood. The way I came by it was this: I was in a public house, when Harwood came in, and threw a sovereign down on the table; he wanted to lay a bet about something, and after a little while I said, "You had better take it up, and put it in your pocket," and I was going to hand it to him when he turned away affronted, and that was the very sovereign I showed Mr. Smith; and I said, "If you are going away affronted I shall mark it;" and when Mr. Smith held up the sovereign, and said, "This is what you bought Browne's bricks with," I showed him the sovereign that was marked.

23,965. You know Robert Bussell, the brother of Henry Chapman Bussell?—Yes.

23,966. Did you ever say in his presence that you had received that 7*l.*?—No.

23,967. You know William Harwood whom you have spoken of. Do you remember William Harwood saying to you, "I understand you received 7*l.* for your vote," or words to that effect, and did you answer him, "Yes, I have received it"?—No, I deny that I ever had it.

23,968. Did he ask you the question?—He said that I had had it.

23,969. What did you say?—I would not answer to anything he said, because I saw he was tipsy.

23,970. You said nothing?—I said nothing to him for a long time.

23,971. Did not he tell you that 10*l.* was your price, and that the man who gave you 7*l.* had robbed you?—Yes. He told me more than I wanted to hear.

23,972. Then how came the 7*l.* to be mentioned, if you did not say anything to him?—He came and accused me of having 7*l.* I had not seen 7*l.*, nor did I want to be bribed.

23,973. Now Robert Bussell, William Harwood, James Palmer, William Baker, and, if necessary, John Smith are the persons who may be called to make a statement of what you said to them?—Yes, and it is all false.

23,974. Do you mean to adhere to all you have said to-day with regard to those witnesses, that you never said to one of them, or in the hearing of one of them, anything like the things which I have asked you about?—Yes, I swear that I never did.

HENRY VEARNCOMBE sworn.

H. Vearncombe.

23,975. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter?—I am.

23,976. And brother to the last witness?—No, a cousin.

23,978. For whom did you vote?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

23,979. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

23,980. What time did you vote?—At a quarter past 8, or twenty minutes past.

23,981. Did you have any money promised you?—Not a farthing.

23,982. Did you never have anything from anybody?—Not a farthing.

23,983. How is it your name has been returned as a person who was bribed?—Well I have had money, elections back.

23,984. You had nothing the last election at all?—Nothing at all; not a farthing.

23,985. Now the election before that, did you get anything then?—Well, I had 10*l.*

23,986. From whom?—Mr. Hill.

23,987. Thomas Hill?—Thomas Hill.

23,988. Anything more?—I had 10*l.* at Bagehot's election.

23,989. No more at Vanderbyl's?—That is all.

23,990. Bagehot's 10*l.*?—Bagehot's 10*l.*, and Vanderbyl's 10*l.*

23,991. From whom did you get the money at Bagehot's election?—From Henry Bussell; two 5*l.* notes.

23,992. Is that all you got at that election?—That is all I got.

23,993. Now 1865, Sir John Shelley's election. Did you get anything then?—I did not get anything.

23,994. Did you vote then?—Yes, Kinglake and Shelley.

23,995. Did you get a farthing?—No.

23,996. Did you expect to get a farthing?—No. In fact, I never asked for any at all.

23,997. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you see Robert Bussell the night of the nomination day in 1865, on the bridge, or near the bridge?—I do not recollect.

23,998. Robert Bussell, the brother of Henry Chapman Bussell?—I do not recollect.

23,999. Were you on that night at Mr. Benjamin

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

H. Vearncombe.

18 Sept. 1869.

Lovibond's office; the nomination night?—No, I was not.

24,000. Between 9 and 10 o'clock where were you that night?—I cannot say.

24,001. Did you meet Robert Bussell anywhere in the street that night?—Not that I am aware of.

24,002. I will ask you whether this will refresh your memory. Do you remember that night Robert Bussell saying to you in the street, "Hilloa, Harry," and your saying in reply, "Well, I have been over; no one will see Smith," J. R. Smith, that means, "No one will see Smith for me," shaking, at the same time, something like coin in your hand. "I "have got the money, and now I shall vote for King-"lake and Shelley"?—Not to my knowledge; I never said the words.

24,003. Or anything like them?—I never said those words to him, nor to any man; not to my knowledge.

24,004. But to that effect?—I cannot say that I did; not to my knowledge.

24,005. (Mr. Price.) Do not say to your knowledge?—I cannot say I did.

24,006. (Mr. Anstey.) To make it quite clear to you, was it 150 or 200 yards from Mr. Lovibond's office, and just opposite Paul Reed's office?—I was not there at all.

24,007. Had you previously seen Bussell on the nomination day?—No, I do not remember seeing him at all.

24,008. Do you remember asking Robert Bussell to go and see Joseph Richard Smith for you, upon which he said, "What for?" And then you said you had been and asked him if he would support you in your contract for scavenging the town if you voted for Mr. Westropp?—Nothing like those words passed.

24,009. Nothing like it?—Nothing like it.

24,010. Do you remember telling Robert Bussell, "I have asked two or three times, and I have an "I O U from the other side;" that is, from the Liberals?—Yes.

24,011. "And unless somebody will intercede for me I shall accept it;" an I O U for 15*l.*?—Never such words passed.

24,012. (Mr. Price.) Now 1859; had you anything to do with the election of 1859?—No, I had not.

24,013. You did not vote?—No. The only vote ever I voted was Sir John Shelley and Kinglake. That was all ever I voted.

24,014. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not examined before the committee of the House of Commons in 1866?—I was not.

24,015. You are aware that Robert Bussell was examined, and deposed to that fact?—I have heard it is on the blue books that he was examined.

24,016. Did you hear that he had sworn to these matters before the House of Commons?—About me?

24,017. Yes?—No, I did not.

24,018. (Mr. Price.) Did you read it in the blue book?—I never saw my name brought up in the blue book about what Robert Bussell said.

24,019. This is the first time you have heard of it?—This is the first time I have heard of it.

24,020. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean to say you did not know that your name was mentioned in the House of Commons?—No, I do not.

24,021. It was mentioned, no doubt, but did you never hear of it?—No.

24,022. Did nobody ever chaff you about it?—No.

24,023. Were you up in London when the committee were sitting?—I was in London.

24,024. Were you present in the committee room when Bussell was examined?—No.

24,025. Or in the corridor?—Yes.

24,026. Did nobody come out and tell you what had been said respecting you, and talk about it with you?—No, I did not hear it.

24,027. Did anybody tell you that Bussell had mentioned your name?—Bussell never spoke to me at all.

24,028. Did anybody tell you that Bussell had mentioned your name?—No, not that I heard.

24,029. If they told you of it you must have heard it?—No, they did not tell me of it.

24,030. You did not know that your name was mentioned before the committee of the House of Commons?—I did not hear of it; if I had I should have mentioned it now.

24,031. (Mr. Anstey.) Not only was your name mentioned in the blue book then, but it was mentioned in the index afterwards. This is what is said, "Vearncombe, Henry. Statement tending to show "that a man named Henry Vearncombe was bribed, "and voted for Shelley and Kinglake; Bussell, 5310 "to 5325." You never heard of that, I suppose?—I never had a farthing.

24,032. Answer the question. You never heard of that?—I did not.

24,033. (Mr. Price.) You never heard of it?—I never did. If I did I would tell you of it now.

W. Luckes.

WILLIAM LUCKES sworn.

24,034. (Mr. Price.) Are you a mariner?—Yes.

24,035. You have come from Cardiff?—Yes.

24,036. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

24,037. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

24,038. For whom?—Mr. Westropp.

24,039. What did you get for it?—Nothing at all, the last election.

24,040. Any promise?—No.

24,041. Were you never told that it would be made all right after the election?—No.

24,042. (Mr. Coleridge.) No expenses paid you?—No.

24,043. Nothing for loss of time?—Nothing for loss of time.

24,044. (Mr. Price.) Are you the man of whom we have heard, who was discharged by one of Mr. Sully's captains?—Yes.

24,045. You are the man?—I am the man.

24,046. Just tell us your version of the story?—Well, I have not got very much to say about it, but I will tell you I was discharged ten days after the election, and I went to the magistrates to claim my wages, and for being discharged, and so forth.

24,047. Tell us why he discharged you?—He discharged me because he said he did not want me any more.

24,048. Was nothing said to you about your vote?—No.

24,049. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he give you any reason?—Nothing whatever.

24,050. Are you quite sure he did not say that it was because you had been idling, and neglecting your duty?—No.

24,051. Or anything about your having packed up your clothes on board?—No; they were not packed up on board, but were ashore to be washed.

24,051*a*. (Mr. Price.) Did he say, "As you have packed up your clothes you must go"?—No.

24,052. And he did not complain of your being ashore and idling about?—No. I had finished unloading the vessel, and had nothing to do.

24,053. Had you discharged your ship?—Yes.

24,054. The whole vessel was discharged, and all was ready for you to take in a fresh cargo?—I did not take in a fresh cargo, because I was discharged.

24,055. But you would have done so if you had remained?—Yes.

24,056. (Mr. Anstey.) It was ten days after the election that you were discharged?—Yes.

24,057. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote?—Yes.

24,058. Did Captain Turner know you had voted?—Yes.

24,059. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Turner vote for the other side?—He voted Liberal, and I voted for Mr. Westropp.

24,060. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you vote for Mr. Westropp?—I always voted for Mr. Westropp.

24,061. Did you ever have anything for voting for Mr. Westropp?—I got 10*l.* from Westropp in 1865.

24,062. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not vote for Mr. Gray?—I did not.

24,063. You plumped for Westropp?—I plumped for Westropp.

24,064. What time was it when you went to the poll?—The last election?

24,065. Yes?—About ten minutes past three.

24,066. Was Captain Turner by at the time?—I did not see him.

24,067. Had he spoken to you about your vote that day?—No.

24,068. Or Mr. Sully?—No.

24,069. Had Mr. Sully spoken to you about it before?—Never.

24,070. Did anybody canvass you for your vote?—I did not know of any canvassing going on; I was away at the time. I was sent for. I was away from the 3rd September to the 14th November.

24,071. You were at sea?—Yes.

24,072. Who sent for you to come here?—We arrived in the ship at Bridgwater.

24,073. (Mr. Price.) In due time?—In due time.

24,074. (Mr. Anstey.) And when you came here did anybody ask you for your vote?—No.

24,075. For Mr. Westropp?—No.

24,076. You voted of your own accord?—Yes.

24,077. (Mr. Price.) What made you vote in the afternoon; what was your reason for so doing?—I thought my vote was as good just before four o'clock as it was at eight o'clock in the morning. That is the reason.

24,078. You were not waiting about to see how the wind would blow?—No; I was waiting about to see if there was anything going on the other side.

24,079. (Mr. Anstey.) And if there had been money going on your side would you have taken it?—I should not.

24,080. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you had taken money before?—Ah, but I knew better last time.

24,081. (Mr. Price.) Had anybody told you about the new Act of Parliament?—Yes.

24,082. (Mr. Anstey.) You were examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Yes.

24,083. I will read your answers, and ask you to say whether they are strictly correct or not: "You "say you were discharged from the ship?—Yes. "Without notice or reason?—Without notice or "reason. Was that one of Mr. Sully's ships?—"Yes." And then you were asked, "At what time "did you poll?—About 10 minutes past three. Had "you been about the town all the day, or where had "you been?—I had not been in the town all the day. "I had been out of the town part of the day. Where "had you been?—Not on any particular business; I "was as far as Dunball. Were you engaged in your "ship?—No, I was not engaged in my ship. What "was your ship at that time; what ship were you in? "—The 'Carry Wench.' Was Captain Turner the "captain of the ship?—I believe so; he acted as "captain. What were you, the mate?—Yes. Who "discharged you?—I had no discharge"?—No, I had no discharge.

24,084. Then I understand you to say you had neither notice nor discharge, nor reason given, nor anything else?—No, nothing of the sort.

24,085. (Mr. Price.) When you were before the magistrates about this matter, what did you imagine was done by the magistrates? You had the captain up, first of all, for wages?—Yes.

24,086. What did you understand about that matter?—I believed I was in the wrong about the first matter; because when the articles were read over to me I thought I was to serve six months, and no longer and no shorter; but I found it was "not exceeding six months;" and I sued him for 2 months and 24 days.

24,087. Did you get any remedy against him upon suing him for that 2 months and 24 days?—No.

24,088. After that there was another complaint made against him, that he had not given you the proper form of discharge?—Yes.

24,089. In writing?—Yes.

24,090. And that he had to pay a penalty for?—He did.

24,091. The other complaint was not dealt with at all?—No, never; except that I had to pay the fees of the court. I paid a shilling for the summons.

24,092. You paid that when you took the summons out?—No, I paid the fees, and the summons had to be paid for.

24,093. Then your summons against your captain for nonpayment of wages you understood was never decided?—I paid for the summons myself.

24,094. But did the magistrates give any decision about the wages?—Oh yes.

24,095. What did you understand to be their decision?—I understood they dismissed the case.

24,096. You understood that?—Oh, I understood that perfectly well.

24,097, They dismissed the summons as far as the wages were concerned?—Yes.

24,098. And then the other matter was gone into?—Yes.

24,099. (Mr. Anstey.) Was any money offered to you on the Liberal side at the last election?—Yes, Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell offered me 10*l.* on the other side, on the bridge.

24,100. And you declined to take it?—Yes.

24,101. And you then went, within ten minutes afterwards, to make a statement to Mr. Boyle at the "Clarence"?—Yes.

24,102. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get in Vanderbyl and Patton's election, 1866?—That was the last election of Vanderbyl and Patton?

24,103. Yes?—I had 20*l.*

24,104. (Mr. Price.) The first time that Mr. Vanderbyl stood how much did you get?—I had 10*l.*

24,105. For whom did you vote?—Patton. I always voted on the Conservative side.

24,106. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,107. At the first time when Patton stood, what did you get then?—10*l.*

24,108. When did you get 20*l.*?—This last election of Vanderbyl and Patton.

24,109. This last election of Patton and Vanderbyl?—Yes.

24,110. You had 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,111. So that you had 10*l.* in 1865 for voting for Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

24,112. You also had 10*l.* in the first election in 1866 for voting for Mr. Patton?—Yes.

24,113. And 20*l.* for voting in Vanderbyl and Patton's election?—Yes.

24,114. How much have you had altogether?—40*l.*

24,115. (Mr. Price.) And the new Act of Parliament deterred you from taking any more at the last election?—Yes, I would not take any more.

(Mr. Price.) That is the only good thing I have yet heard that the last Act of Parliament has done in Bridgwater.

Mr. Clifford Symmons recalled.

Mr. C. Symmons.

24,116. (Mr. Price.) What do you wish to state?—I should like to be permitted to say this: I told you that on the polling day at the last election I went home at 12, and came back soon after 2. At 3 o'clock, or sometime after 3 o'clock, on that day somebody spoke to me and asked me to speak to Luckes, the last witness, and I said I would have nothing at all to do with him. They begged me to see him, I said I would not, but, however, I did go to Luckes, and I asked him, "Have you been to poll?" and he said, "I have not; I want to have something for myself first." I said "You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

24,117. (Mr. Coleridge.) This was the last election?—Yes.

24,118. And this is the man who said he was offered 10*l.* by Mr. Bussell, but declined to take it?—He subsequently told me he wanted 20*l.*, and I asked him if he really meant that he wanted 20*l.*, and he said he did; and he said he would not vote at all unless he got 30*l.*

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

24,119. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say?—I never offered that man (referring to Luckes) any money at all at the last election, because I should have been afraid to, for if I had offered him any money he would have been only too glad to have taken it.

W. Luckes.

WILLIAM LUCKES recalled.

[On entering the witness box the witness took the testament into his hand, as if expecting to be sworn again.]

24,120. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have been sworn already?—I was sworn before Her Majesty's Commissioners, and I come to speak the truth, and nothing but the truth. I never saw Mr. Symmons during the day. I have never spoken a word to Mr. Symmons for the last three years, good or bad. I never said to any living man the words he has spoken. I should recollect it if I had.

24,121. Who was it that you said it to, if it was not to Mr. Symmons?—To no one.

24,122. That you wanted 30*l.*, and would not vote without?—I never said I wanted it to anybody in the world.

24,123. (Mr. Anstey.) You see what you have now to answer is, not only Mr. Symmons's statement that you asked him for this large sum of money, but also Bussell's statement that he never offered you any money at all?—Yes.

24,124. Two contradictions of your evidence, instead of one. What do you say to that?—I say Captain Bussell offered me money, but I say "No" to Mr. Symmons's statement; it is not true.

24,125. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Bussell offer you any money?—He did.

24,126. Bussell says he did not; and Mr. Symmons says that he asked you if you wanted 20*l.*, and you said you wanted 30*l.*?—I say no.

24,127. (Mr. Price.) Who are you working for?—For the Conservative party. I always have.

24,128. I mean by whom are you employed? At one time you were in Mr. Sully's employ?—Never more than two or three months; that is all.

24,129. Who are your employers now, the Conservatives?—I work for Isaac Smith.

24,130. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he any relation to Mr. J. R. Smith?—Oh no, not in the least; I do not believe he is.

24,131. Is it the lawyer you mean?—Oh no, he is a shipwright; nothing to do with him whatever.

24,132. Can either you or Mr. Symmons give us the name of any person who will clear this up?

(Mr. Clifford Symmons.) Yes. Young Mr. John C. Hunt can clear this up. He was present when I had the conversation with Luckes.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

Mr. H. C. BUSSELL recalled.

24,133. (Mr. Price.) What do you wish to say?—I spoke to this man, but as to offering him money I did nothing of the sort. I merely asked him if he had been and voted, and I understood from him that he had. There was no necessity, therefore, for me to offer him any money.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Is Hunt in court?

(Mr. C. Symmons.) I believe he was just now.

W. Luckes.

WILLIAM LUCKES recalled.

24,134. (Mr. Price.) You say you went straight to the "Clarence"?—Yes, within five minutes after Captain Bussell offered me the money.

24,135. You told Mr. Boyle of it?—Mr. Boyle.

24,136. What Boyle is that?—He is the solicitor. I went to the "Clarence" direct.

24,137. To whom did you tell at the "Clarence Hotel" what had occurred, besides Mr. Boyle?—It was before Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and Mr. Phillips, a corn-merchant, and Mr. Brice, I think; I will not be certain.

24,138. Was your statement taken down?—It was, and I signed my name to it.

24,139. Where was it taken down?—In the "Clarence Hotel."

24,140. Who took it down?—A young clerk; I cannot say his name. He was a stranger to me, but he had his pen and ink on the desk.

24,141. You are a strong Conservative?—I am.

24,142. And you wanted to trip up the Liberals, if you could?—Well, I should not mind it.

24,143. That being so, just consider. Did you go and get up this story against them?—No. I am speaking to you the truth, and no man can come afterwards and speak against me.

24,144. (Mr. Anstey.) You have already told us that you were hanging about to see what the other side was doing?—Yes, but not to put money in my pocket.

24,145. But you did wait about to see if you could find them out?—Yes.

24,146. And you also told Mr. James, who cross-examined you before Mr. Justice Blackburn, that you wanted to catch them out, and if you could have got the money from them you would have wrapped it up in a piece of paper and taken it to the "Clarence"?—No such thing passed to Mr. James.

24,147. Here is your answer?—It is wrong.

24,148. (Mr. Anstey.) Just hear this. You told that to Mr. James, and you told the same thing to Mr. Serjeant Parry, you told them the same story you have told us to-day about Bussell, that Bussell came to you and asked you for your vote, and you told him you had not voted?—Yes. If you will allow me——

24,149. Stop a moment. I will not allow you at all. I will not allow you anything. After you had voted, you told Bussell you had not voted?—I did.

24,150. Then you are asked this question, "Why, "if you had voted, did you tell Bussell you had "not?—Because there was intimidation and bribery "about, and it was my place to catch them if I could"?—Yes.

24,151. Now had you been employed as a catcher of bribery and intimidation at all?—Oh no.

24,152. Then how was it your place to do it?—Well, I think it is my place as much as anyone's else when I see intimidation going on on the other side.

24,153. (Mr. Coleridge.) After being bribed at every election you ever voted at?—After their being such a great majority ahead, I think it was my place.

24,154. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you go on: "If you had "gone with him to his house, you would have caught "him quite out?—Yes. Why did not you do it?—I did " not want it. You wanted to catch him out?—Yes. " You would have caught him out if you had taken " the money and wrapped it in a piece of paper, and " had taken it to the 'Clarence'?—Yes. Why did " not you do so?—I did not do such a thing as that. " Why not?—I had no reason for it. You had no " reason for not catching him out?—No." It is a most confused piece of evidence, but that is what you stated. Now you say that that took place as you have stated, or is there any mistake about it?—All the mistake there may be is that I may be asked the question by the counsel which he put before me, but the mistake is this here, that I never said anything at all about catching of them out, because my mistake was that I would let anybody catch them out if I could, but not to catch any money from them.

(Henry Chapman Bussell.) I think if this witness had wanted so to catch us out——

(Mr. Price.) Well, you cannot argue about it, Mr. Bussell. You deny that you offered the money. We must judge of that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He had taken money at every previous election, and it is not very likely.

(Witness.) I have witnesses who see Captain Bussell talk to me on the bridge on the day of the election. My wife came up to me on the bridge.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He says he spoke to you.

(Witness.) He came up to me about half-past three o'clock, by Symmons's clock across the water, and he caught me by the left hand and said, "Bill, have you been to poll?" and I said, "No."

24,155. Then that was a lie?—Yes, but I am speaking the truth now. I have got evidence. I have got witnesses as well as they. I said, "No." He said, "Will you poll for our side?" I said, "Well, I don't know whether I shall vote for anybody at all." He said, "Why not?" I said, "If I don't vote I shan't please nor offend nobody." "That's a damned pack of stuff," he said, "come, and I will give you 10*l.*" He drew out his watch. "What time is it?" "Past three o'clock, there is no time to spare," he said. "Seventeen minutes to three," I said, "That's my time; that's the right time." Up comes my wife. "What are you going to do with he?" said she. "I am only going to take him to the poll."

24,156. Who was that?—My wife. My wife came up, and she said, "What are you going to do with him, Mr. Bussell?" "Only going to take him to the poll like a man." "He has been to poll," she said, "if not, at least he told me so, and if not he is not going to vote for you," and Bussell looked round and said, "Why did you tell me you have not been to poll if you have?" I said, "What's she got to do with it?" "Come along with me," he said.

24,157. (Mr. Anstey.) If your wife was there, she must have heard Bussell offer you the money?—Oh, no, she did not interfere with me. She stood on the bridge. The money affair was passed before that; before she come.

24,158. How much had passed before that?—No money was not passed, but the amount was 10*l.*

24,159. How long was it after?—Not a moment.

24,160. Then she must have heard it?—Oh no, she could not hear it.

24,161. She knew he was talking about going to vote?—She thought so much.

24,162. She said, "Mr. Bussell, what are you going to do with him"?—Our money affair was over.

24,163. Then it comes to this, that your wife is not prepared to support your statement upon oath by her oath?—Oh, she will support my statement that I was talking to Captain Bussell at the time.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Bussell says so.

24,164. (Mr. Anstey.) But not as to the bribery?—No. I reported it five minutes afterwards at the "Clarence Hotel," and why should I go and make that statement. I thought he was a man that would stand his ground like a man. I did not know when I was going up to the "Clarence Hotel" that he was a man that was going to run away. I did not know at the time that I made my statement at the "Clarence Hotel" but what Captain Bussell was going to stand and not going out of the country. It is not as if I thought that the man was going to run away that I should go and tell false. I did not know he was going to run away. I did not know anything about it.

24,165. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did not you mention the name of your wife when examined before the lawyers?—They did not wish for it.

24,166. You did mention it?—I did mention it.

24,167. But she would not support your statement?—They said, "We shall be quite satisfied with your statement."

JOHN CARTER HUNT sworn.

24,168. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say about this, Mr. Hunt?—I was just outside the "Globe Hotel" when Mr. Symmons was trying to get Luckes. He asked Luckes to go and poll, I believe. He asked him if he had polled. I went alongside Mr. Symmons and said, "If you take my advice you will have " nothing to do with that man, because we can't trust " him. He never could be trusted for voting on the " Liberal side."

24,169. (Mr. Anstey.) That was the day of the poll?—Yes, on the day of the poll, between three and four in the afternoon.

24,170 And the man was William Luckes?—Yes, William Luckes.

24,171. (Mr. Price.) Did you see Symmons speak to him?—Yes. With reference to money matters I did not hear that. They were talking together.

24,172. What did you hear them say?—He was alongside of him, and I went to him and told him to have nothing to do with him.

24,173. Was he talking to him?—He was talking to him, but I did not hear what he said.

24,174. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Luckes say anything when you said, "Don't you have anything to do with that man"?—No; I took Symmons away and said, "Don't have anything to do with that man."

24,175. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you knew Luckes had been paid on the other side at other elections?—Yes, I always imagined so.

24,176. (Mr. Anstey.) What Luckes denies is that he had any conversation with Symmons that day of the election?—He did have conversation with him, because I took Symmons away from him; I took hold of Symmons's arm and got him away.

(Mr. Price.) Well, there is certainly a distinct assignment of perjury against the man Luckes.

CLIFFORD SYMMONS recalled.

(Witness.) The words were "Don't touch him, he cannot be trusted." I said "Let me alone, John; I am not going to offer him money." Again Luckes has said he was never in the employ of the Liberals. He was master of a vessel belonging to my father for some time, I do not know how long, and my father is a Liberal.

24,177 (Mr. Coleridge.) He has sworn you know that you did not speak to him on the polling day?—I had ten minutes, conversation with him.

(Mr. Anstey.) I quite agree with what my colleague has said, that you have a very clear assignment of perjury against Luckes, and you are a person of means sufficient to enable you to proceed if you think fit. I know what I should do if I was in your case. Of course it is not for me to advise you; you must take your own course.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

18 Sept. 1869.

JOHN SQUIRE sworn.

J. Squire.

24,178. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Squire?—Master carpenter and joiner.

24,179. Have you men under your employ? do you employ a number of hands?—Yes, I have before now.

24,180. Are you still in the same business?—Yes.

24,181. Well, did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

24,182. Whom for?—Mr. Westropp and Gray.

24,183. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you always voted for the Conservatives?—I have until once.

24,184. When was the once you did not vote for them?—At least, it is twice; once was in 1857.

24,185. When did you not vote for the Conservatives?—Not at Mr. Vanderbyl's and Patton's election.

24,186. Did you get paid on both those occasions for voting for the Liberals?—No, not on the first; in 1857 I did not; on the last I did.

24,187. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 did you get anything from Vanderbyl's party for voting for him?—In 1866, yes.

24,188. What did you get?—15*l.*

24,189. Who gave it to you?—Bussell.

24,190. What did you get in 1866 for voting for Bagehot?—Nothing; oh, I got 10*l.* from Patton then.

24,191. So you vote which ever way the money goes?—No, not exactly like that.

24,192. What did you get at the last election for voting for Westropp and Gray?—Nothing at all.

24,193. What were you promised?—Nothing.

24,194. Not promised anything afterwards?—No. I would vote for Westropp and Gray if they was to come a thousand times.

24,195. That depends on the money?—No, not on the money.

24,196. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear in the canvass there was likely to be money going?—No, I never heard it in my life; but the question is this, when Mr. Westropp was served in the manner he was, if ever he came again I would vote for him.

24,197. How was that?—Because I always thought the man was disrespected.

24,198. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for voting for him in 1865?—10*l.*

24,199. (Mr. Anstey.) You thought he was ill-treated in having Mr. Patton put in instead of him. Was that it?—Well, don't you see, Mr. Westropp got defeated.

24,200. What do you mean by "disrespected;" I do not understand?—Well, here in this court, when he came even at the last election.

24,201. That was the last election. How could you have voted for him at the last election because he had been ill-treated?—I thought the party here rather spoke against him, and did not like him very well.

24,202. The last time you voted out of feeling for him?—I did.

24,203. And on previous occasions you voted, not out of feeling, but for bribes?—No, I did not. I voted for the man honestly.

24,204. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you vote for Vanderbyl?—I will tell you. Because there was a bill owing in 1857 for a lot of flag-poles that I made, owing by Mr. Kinglake, and that money was never paid. When Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley called at my house in 1865, Mr. George Sully, the mayor, Mr. James Sully, Mr. Wilton, Mr. John Smith, and Mr. Henry Lovibond, all the lot, and Sir John Shelley, came into my house. The bill lay on the table for that amount of money which I asked for.

24,205. How much?—2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* was the money I asked for, ever since 1857 to 1865. Twenty times I had asked for that money from Bussell and Smith, and could never get it. Foster told me to go and get it.

24,206. So you went round to the Tories?—I said I would never vote. When Mr. Kinglake came there and asked me for my vote, I gave him the bill myself. He said, "Do I owe this money?" he said to Mr. Smith, and Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Reed, and Mr. George Sully, and all of them left the room; they would not bide to hear it. "Do I owe this money? If I do," he said, "Mr. Smith, you pay it." "Very well," he said. Since that I have been to vote with Bussell, which he gave me the 15*l.*, and I was at the "Clarence" till half-past 1.

24,207. Mr. Vanderbyl paid you that bill, and so you got 15*l.* for your vote?—No, no.

24,208. You were paid at Vanderbyl's election?—No, I was not paid at Vanderbyl's election.

24,209. When were you paid?—About two months afterwards. Mr. John Smith paid me.

24,210. Your bill?—Yes.

24,211. If I understand, you got 15*l.* from Vanderbyl?—Yes.

24,212. 10*l.* from Patton?—Yes.

24,213. 10*l.* from Patton in the election before, you know?—Yes.

24,214. What did you get in the year 1859?—10*l.*

24,216. Which way did you vote?—Westropp, a plumper.

24,217. In 1859?—Yes.

24,218. In 1857, when you had this bill, how did you vote?—I think for Kingslake.

24,219. What did you get for that?—Nothing.

24,220. What did you get the time before?—1852?

24,221. Yes?—10*l.* from Tynte and Henley.

24,222. You did well by it?—Yes, but I should like to have done better.

24,223. What did you get the time before?—I never had a vote before.

JAMES FAR SQUIRE sworn.

J. F. Squire.

24,224. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Newsagent and keep a beerhouse.

24,225. Are you a voter?—Yes.

24,227. For whom did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,228. Did you get anything?—No.

24,229. Promised anything?—No.

24,230. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any bill?—No.

24,231. No beer sold, or news sold, or anything?—No.

24,232 (Mr. Price.) Are you the son of the last witness?—No, I am a brother.

24,233. You are a Liberal, are you?—Yes.

24,234. You have always voted Liberal?—Yes always, ever since I had a vote.

24,235. Have you always been paid for it, except the last time?—Except the last time.

24,236. What did you get in 1866?—10*l.*

24,237. What did you get at Bagehot's election?—10*l.*

24,238. What did you get in 1865?—That is all the votes I have had.

24,239. Did you get any bills paid?—No, only at the last municipal election I drew 19*s.* worth of beer.

24,240. Who for?—Mr. Cook paid me.

24,241. That was to vote for the Liberals?—No, I think it was after. I don't know whether it was before or after.

(Mr. Price.) It was the week before.

24,242. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you and your brother got any more money than what you have mentioned out of the two parties?—No, sir. My brother and me have nothing to do with each other.

ISAAC HOOPER sworn.

24,243. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A sail-maker.

24,244. Are you a voter?—I am

24,246. For the Liberals, or who for?—Westropp and Gray.

24,247. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

24,248. How did you vote at the election before?—Patton.

24,249. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever vote for the Liberals at any election?—I did.

24,250. When?—1865.

24,251. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

24,252. (Mr. Anstey.) Promised?—Nothing.

(Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to vote for the Liberals on that occasion?

24,253. (Mr. Price.) Is there another Hooper in the town?—Oh yes, several.

24,254. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for voting for Vanderbyl in 1866?—I never voted for Vanderbyl.

24,255. Who did you vote for?—Patton.

24,256. How much did you get for that?—10*l.*

24,257. How much the time before?—The same year?

24,258. Yes?—5*l.*

24,259. Who gave you that?—Really I cannot tell.

24,260. Who gave you the 10*l.*?—At Patton's first election I received 5*l.*, with a promise of another five of a man which I never saw before and never saw since, and in the same year, 1866, I received 10*l.* from an individual which I don't know. I only saw the hand. That is all.

24,261. (Mr. Anstey.) Your name is Isaac Hooper?—My name is Isaac Hooper.

24,262. Who is George Hooper?—He is a foreman belonging to Mr. Ritson.

24,263. Is he any relation to you?—Not at all.

24,264. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to vote for the Conservatives in 1866 when you voted for the Liberals in 1865?—I never voted for the Conservatives in 1866.

24,265. I thought you said you voted for Patton?—I beg your pardon. In 1866 I voted for the Conservatives, and so I did in 1865.

24,266. What did you get in Westropp's election of 1865?—10*l.*

24,267. Then you got two tens and a five, is that it?—What election?

24,268. (Mr. Price.) At different times you got 25*l.*?—In 1865, 10*l.* Westropp's election: in 1866——

24,269. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got 5*l.*, and then 10*l.*; did you get anything in 1859?—I had not a vote.

24,270. How much have you received altogether for your vote?—30*l.*

24,271. You have only told us of 25*l.*?—You won't allow me to speak. I believe the rule of this court is, or you wish to imply at least——

24,272. Well, there, go on?—The first was in 1865. That was my first vote, my maiden vote. I voted for Westropp and Kinglake. I received 10*l.* then for Westropp. In 1866 (Mr. Patton and Bagehot's election) I received 5*l.*, at Patton's election. During the interval between, that is Mr. Patton and Bagehot's election——

24,273. You got the other 5*l.* that you had been promised. Who gave you that?—Mr. Batten, Henry Batten,

24,274. Then you got 10*l.* at the next election?—Then afterwards in the same year, 1866——

(Mr. Price.) Well, you have told us that. That will do.

JAMES CHAMPION sworn.

24,275. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I work at Browne and Co.'s brickyard.

24,276. Are you a voter?—Yes.

24,278. Did you get anything for it?—No.

24,279. Were you a new voter the last time?—No.

24,280. You voted before?—I voted before.

24,281. Did you vote for the Liberals?—I did.

24,282. Did you have any promise?—No.

24,283. Not from anybody?—From no one.

24,284. What time in the day did you vote?—Just after dinner.

24,285. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was anything paid for your expenses?—No, nothing. I was never promised in my life, by no one; not at the last election.

24,286. It was a dry election then?—I had nothing to drink; no more than what I paid for myself. I am not much of a drinker myself.

24,287. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 did you get anything?—I did.

24,288. Who did you vote for?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

24,289. What did you get?—14*l.*

24,290. Who from?—Mr. Clifford Symmons.

24,291. He did not give you 15*l.*?—No, 14*l.*

(Clifford Symons.) Ten pounds I paid him. I did not pay more.

(The witness.) No, Mr. Symmons, you said if you gave me more than 14*l.* it would be out of your own pocket.

24,292. (Mr. Price.) Don't talk. You say you got 14*l.*?—14*l.*

24,293. How did you manage to get it? Had you been promised 14*l.*?—No.

24,294. How was it you got more than 10*l.*? How did you get the extra four?—I asked Mr. Symmons if he would get me 4*l.* more.

24,295. You asked for 14*l.*?—I did.

24,296. And you got it?—I did; and he said, "Jim, if I give you any more it will be out of my "own pocket." That is the words he said to me.

24,297. Did you get anything at the other election of 1866?—Yes.

24,298. Bagehot's?—Yes.

24,300. Who from?—Charles Bulpin.

24,301. Did you get anything in 1865?—Nothing.

24,302. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

24,303. Had you any promise?—No.

24,304. Had you any expenses?—No, nothing at all.

24,305. (Mr. Anstey.) You had no vote in those days?—I had a vote.

24,306. You had a vote?—Yes.

24,307. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote?—No.

24,308. Why did not you vote?—I did not feel inclined to vote.

24,309. Did you hear that no money was going to be spent?—I did not hear there was any money at all; nothing at all.

24,310. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore you did not vote. Is that why you did not vote?—Not altogether.

24,311. Why not?—The reason was I heard that Mr. Westropp was in a majority, and had won the election between 10 and 11 o'clock, and therefore I did not vote.

24,312. You heard that there was no money going amongst the Liberals, and Mr. Westropp was in a majority, and therefore you did not vote. Was that it?—Yes.

24,313. In 1859?—I was no voter then.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

J. Bussell.

3 Sept. 1869.

JAMES BUSSELL recalled.

24,314. (Mr. Price.) You had better sit down there?—I have been sworn.

24,315. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you recollect the trial at Wells quarter sessions of people who were sent from here for rioting at Bowen's house in 1832?—Yes; I have reason to remember it.

24,316. Did you after that trial go over to Wells, or see any of the jury after the trial was over?—I think you are labouring under a mistake, Mr. Commissioner. It was before the trial, and while the trial was on 24,317. Did you, I put it to you then, did you give any money to any persons who were on that jury?—Not a farthing.

24,318. Did you give any money to any persons who were in any way concerned in the trial?—Not a sixpence, or any coin whatever.

24,319. Did you hear of any person expending as much as 400*l.* or 500*l.* on that occasion?—No, nor yet 400 or 500 pence.

24,320. There was an election, you know, just before that, a general election, at which Twiss, Horace, Twiss, and Chatteris were candidates for the Tories, and were defeated, and Tayleur, for whom you were interested, and another, were returned?—Yes.

24,321. The first election after the Reform Act?—Yes.

24,322–4. At that election did you put on a surplice, go in procession with a coffin supposed to contain the effigy of one of the unsuccessful candidates, Mr. Astell, read a portion of the burial service out of the Common Prayer Book, and then consign the coffin to the river?—I did; not from the Prayer Book, but from the parody that I had written myself on the funeral service. I tell you, sir, that I did precede a coffin. Toryism was then in its throes, and we buried it; threw it into the river, committed it to the deep; and I was the clergyman on the occasion.

24,325. You profaned the service of the Church of England on that occasion?—I made a parody on it.

24,326. Just so, with the Prayer Book in your hand?—No such thing, no such thing.

24,327. Did you afterwards write a defence in the "Bath Herald" of the proceedings of yourself and the party at that election?—What, a report?

24,328. Defended, justified what you had done by writing articles or letters for the "Bath Herald" on the subject?—There is no question of it, for I wrote for several newspapers. I was correspondent for the newspapers.

24,329. And then, as soon as your friends came into power, which they did in 1836 or 1835, on the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act, they rewarded you for these services by making you superintendent of police and gaoler?—You are rather mistaken. On the 1st of January I was appointed to the weigh-engine to test its powers for what it was worth. I had it for nothing. Its produce was mine for my labour. I was also appointed night constable, and after the vacancy of Gover, who was then gaoler, I was appointed when he resigned to take the mastership of the union-house, I was appointed to succeed him; and I lived there for 26 years in all parties, Tories and Conservatives, as I am very proud to call them now, for they are as liberal as any others.

24,330. My question is, did not you get these two offices, that of superintendent of police and gaoler from your political friends in the borough?—There is no question of it.

24,331. And in the year 1835 or 1836?—1836, 1st of January, I first had an office.

24,332. Had you any other qualification for those offices except the valuable services you had rendered the party at the election?—Yes; head-piece, talent.

Adjourned to Monday next, the 20th September, at 12 o'clock.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

Monday, 20th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

20 Sept. 1869.

Mr. J. H. B. CARSLAKE recalled.

(The witness.) You wanted a list of poll clerks. Their names are Henry Cornelius White, accountant; Thomas Martin, accountant; Charles Lucette, schoolmaster; George Henry Hobbs, post office clerk; John Coombes, accountant; five poll clerks. It have written to them begging them to attend in obedience to your request. Mr. White is still unwell, I am informed, and Mr. Martin has gone into Devonshire; I do not know whether you wish to have him summoned, I could not get his address until last night. Then with regard to the numbers on the register for 1868, there was a total of 1,499, and you wish to know the number of lodgers, there were 7. This year the register would number 1,450, but no lodgers, and there is one claim only, and no objection made, so that practically the number on the register may be considered to be 1,451.

24,333. (Mr. Anstey.) Assuming the revision makes no difference?—Assuming that, and the revision is settled for the 2nd October, so that assuming your labours will end about that time you will be able to have the exact register. Then I have to inform you that in accordance with the directions of the Commissioners the authorities have taken steps with regard to the Buttles, and no time has been lost. I am instructed to make application to you to allow your clerk to furnish a copy of the notes on Saturday, without which we cannot proceed.

(Mr. Price.) Certainly.

(Mr. Coleridge.) So far as regards the Buttles you mean.

(The witness.) So far as regards the Buttles.

(Mr. Price.) What I think the magistrates will probably require is the attendance of the shorthand writer who took the notes, and who will then have to refresh his memory by his notes, and speak to the evidence given by the Buttles.

(The witness.) Yes, but my asking for a copy in the first instance is to ascertain what the complaint is; at present I have no means of knowing beyond the published print of the newspapers.

(Mr. Price.) Then of course you shall have them. Will you or the clerk to the magistrates require them?

(The witness.) I shall require them.

(Mr. Price.) Then they shall be furnished. That will be the proper mode, you will require a shorthand writer, and it so happens that the same shorthand writer took the whole thing, so that we can spare him easily enough.

(The witness.) I have taken steps to prosecute, but at present I do not know how to frame the charge.

(Mr. Price.) You had better have the transcript of Saturday's notes.

24,334. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to ask you in whom was the appointment of Bussell senior to the office of superintendent of police and gaoler vested at the time when he received the appointment?—I imagine in the town council, the corporation of the day.

24,335. The statement you have handed in shows that the first town council under the Municipal Reform Act, at least the first batch of magistrates and justices after passing the Reform Act, were all Liberal?—Yes, I believe that was so.

24,336. I do not know whether you are aware that according to an announcement made by the then Home Secretary, Lord John Russell, at that time, it was the intention of the Government to accept the recommendation of the town council as to the appointment of justices; do you happen to know whether those justices were recommended by the town council in the first place?—I was not in Bridgwater until 1841, and I do not know of my own knowledge, but I believe that was the state of things.

24,337. Then you think the town council had the appointment of the superintendent of the police and the gaoler?—I have no doubt.

24,388. Could the dates of those two appointments be found?—I will furnish them.

24,339. And also the fact that the town council appointed a person of Bussell's antecedents to the office?—I think I can find that as well.

Mr. George Henry Hobbs sworn.

Mr. G. H. Hobbs.

24,340. (Mr. Price.) Are you a post-office clerk?—I am.

24,341. And were you poll clerk appointed by the returning officer at No. 4 booth, Church Road, at the last election?—I was.

24,342. You were there the whole day?—Yes.

24,343. We want to know whether you remarked during the polling day that the voters came up in a state of intoxication in great numbers or not?—As regards the morning they were all very orderly, and I did not see any indication at all.

24,344. How long did that last, what you call the morning?—Somewhere up to one or half-past one.

24,345. After that did you observe any change?—There was a change, there was unmistakeable evidence of their having been drinking.

24,346. The great mass of them?—There was but a few polled up there.

24,347. At your booth?—Yes, at my booth.

24,348. Your booth at Church Road, was that one of the largest?—One of the smallest.

24,349. Still you did observe a change in the men who came up?—I did.

24,350. (Mr. Anstey.) A large proportion of those few?—Yes.

Mr. Charles Lucette sworn.

Mr. C. Lucette.

24,351. (Mr. Price.) Are you a schoolmaster in this town?—I am.

24,352. Were you poll clerk at No. 3 booth, Salmon Lane, at the last election?—Yes.

24,353. I want to know whether you observed anything in the demeanour of the electors who came up to the poll, as to their state of sobriety?—In the morning it was everything that could be desired, they were very orderly in the morning; after Mr. Kinglake left in the afternoon part they came in great numbers, and I should think four out of five gave unmistakeable evidence of drink, not exactly intoxication.

24,354. But you could see they were under the influence of drink?—Yes.

24,355. At which time in the day did the largest number poll at your booth?—After 1 o'clock.

24,356. Therefore at your booth the largest number polled after 1 o'clock, and a very large proportion, four out of five, had been evidently drinking?—Yes.

24,357. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were any so bad that they did not know what they were about, because we have had evidence that some really did not know what they were doing?—I think about four.

24,358. Later in the day?—Yes.

24,359. About half-past 3 or 4?—Perhaps about 3.

24,360. Do you happen to know who they were who were in that state?—No.

24,361. (Mr. Anstey.) And many others under the influence of drink?—And many others under the influence of drink.

John Coombs sworn.

J. Coombs.

24,362. (Mr. Price.) Are you an accountant?—I am.

24,363. You were the poll clerk at No. 5 booth, Polden Street, at the last election?—I was.

24,364. You have heard the question put to the other gentlemen. What is your experience?—I should say throughout the whole day about every man out of five was under the influence of intoxicating liquors.

24,365. Did you observe it more after 1 o'clock than before?—Well, it was more after I than during the morning.

24,366. Did large numbers poll at your booth?—About 300, I think.

24,367. And about one out of five were influenced?—About one out of five, taking the whole range of the day.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

J. Coombs.

20 Sept. 1869.

24,368. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any difference in their state of sobriety as to which side they were?—No, there were a larger number of Conservatives than Liberals polled; but I think, taking that into account, they were one as bad as another.

24,369. (Mr. Anstey.) Were some so bad as not to know what they were about?—Some were very drunk. I remember one man especially. He came in at one door and went out at the other two or three times before we could get him to record his vote.

24,370. And then which did he vote for?—For the Conservatives, if I recollect right.

24,371. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect his name?—I do not. He was more like a maniac than anything else.

24,372. Was he not able to give up the card and show how he would vote?—Well, I got the questions out of him by dint of great perseverance, but he was very drunk.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

Mr. John Hawkey Bingham Carslake recalled.

24,373. (Mr. Price.) Which was the largest booth of the whole, where the largest number of working classes vote, or is there any difference?—They are scattered very much over the town. I should say the north booth, where Mr. White was the poll clerk.

24,374. That is No. 1 booth in the High Street?—I think so. I think I can find that out for you.

G. Stacey.

George Stacey sworn.

24,375. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A gas fitter and tin plate worker.

24,376. Are you a voter here?—Yes.

24,377. What we call you about is more especially as to the Buttles. Do you remember at the last election being at the "New Inn"?—I do.

24,378. Did you see the Buttle family there, and if so which?—I saw them, all four of them.

24,379. The father and three sons?—The father and three sons.

24,380. Did you see them receive any money, or did you see them go upstairs anywhere?—I saw them come into the room.

24,381. Where the money was?—Where the money was.

24,382. You were in the room?—Yes.

24,383. Did you see them receive money?—I did not actually see them receive it, but I heard the jingling of it.

24,384. Did they go in singly?—They went in singly.

24,385. And as each went in was something handed to him?—Yes.

24,386. Which you heard the jingling of?—Yes.

24,387. You are quite sure of that?—Yes.

24,388. Is there anything else you have to tell us?—No, nothing else.

24,389. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to be in this room that day?—I went in with Allan.

24,390. Did you go to assist them?—Yes.

24,391. Then you must know a good deal about it. Tell us what took place?—I merely put the names down as they entered the room.

24,392. What names? Were you the person who checked the men who came up to be bribed, at the bottom of the stairs, and sent them up?—I had not anything to do with sending them up. I checked them in the room.

24,393. Did you recollect them before or after they were paid?—After. About the same time.

24,394. Did you hear the chinking in the same room where you were?—Yes.

24,395. Did you hear in whose hands the chinking was, Allan's?—I saw Allan counting it out.

24,396. As soon as Allan had paid these different men did you take down the names on a bit of paper?—In a pocket-book.

24,397. And the amount each had?—Yes.

24,398. Have you that pocket-book?—I have the book.

24,399. Have you the account?—No; the leaf I put it down on in this book I was going to copy, but Allan came and said, It does not matter about copying, and tore the leaf out, and that I have not been able to get since.

24,400. How much did those you checked amount to?—There were about 30 names to the best of my recollection.

24,401. Of what amounts?—10*l.* each.

24,402. That would be 300*l.*?—And myself. I had 5*l.*, which I considered for services and checking.

24,403. You had 5*l.* for services; how long were you engaged in this?—I was about all day.

24,404. Did you ever earn 5*l.* in one day in any other way?—Well, I have got very near that before now.

24,405. (Mr. Price.) At an election, I suppose?—No.

24,406. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got 5*l.* for your services, and voted for the Liberals?—I did.

24,407. What time did you vote for the Liberals?—About 2.

24,408. That was after Allan engaged you?—Yes.

24,409. You say you were about all day?—Yes, but not with Allan.

24,410. What were you doing the rest of the day?—Running about trying to get voters to come to poll.

24,411. Did you offer them anything?—No.

24,412. Did you say there would be money going?—No.

24,413. Did you say they would get something if there was anything, "anything" being money in Bridgwater?—I did not know until a quarter past 3 that there would be.

24,414. In fact you were only employed by Allan from half-past 3 to the close of the poll?—I was not employed by Allan.

24,415. Well, you were assisting Allan?—Yes.

24,416. And got 5*l.*?—Yes, that is it.

24,417. What did you do at the former election, Vanderbyl's?—Voted for Vanderbyl.

24,418. Had you anything to do with money then?—No.

24,419. Or in checking voters?—No, not in the least.

24,420. How is it that Allan did not ask for your services there?—Because I was a young hand at it, I suppose.

24,421. What made him ask you this time?—He did not ask me altogether.

24,422. Did you volunteer?—Yes.

24,423. And did you say, If I help you there will be something for me?—No.

24,424. When did you make arrangement for the 5*l.*?—I asked him when all the others were paid if there was anything for me, and then he gave me 10*l.*

24,425. (Mr. Price.) You would not have done it for love of the cause?—I should if there had not been any money going.

24,426. (Mr. Coleridge.) He first of all gave you 10*l.*?—Yes, and then I asked him if he could not give me a little more, as I had been checking the men and letting them in and out, and then he gave me 5*l.* more.

24,427. And then you had 15*l.*?—Yes.

24,428. Then you were bribed with 15*l.* as clear as any man in this court?—Yes.

24,429. What did you get at the election before for your vote, Vanderbyl's?—Vanderbyl and Patton's, I got 10*l.* then.

24,430. Who gave it to you?—Henry Jarman.

(Mr. Price.) What do you mean by saying that you did things for the love of the cause then?

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

G. Stacey.

20 Sept. 1869.

24,431. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you had gone out of that box without these questions having been asked you, probably you would not have got a certificate and would have been indicted. What did you get the time before at Patton and Vanderbyl's election?—Nothing.

24,432. Did you vote?—Yes.

24,433. How came you to get nothing?—I do not know.

24,434. Did you ask for anything?—No.

24,436. What did you get the time before that?—Nothing at all.

24,437. Had you a vote in 1859?—No, I had no any vote then.

24,438. How often have you been paid in all?—Twice.

24,439. What did you receive altogether?—30*l.*

24,440. That is all?—That is all.

24,441. Do you know anything else about any of the elections which you have not told us of your own knowledge?—No.

24,442. But at Vanderbyl's you say you neither promised nor gave anybody any money at all?—Not at all.

C. Satterthwaite.

CORNELIUS SATTERTHWAITE having been called and not answering.

(Mr. Price.) We wish it to be noticed that Satterthwaite having been summoned at Doncaster races, and having now been called twice in this court, if he does not appear to-day, and anything should turn out against him in the course of our inquiry, we shall not think it necessary to give him protection by being called as a witness at all.

E. Culliford.

EDWARD CULLIFORD recalled.

24,443. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you saw that day about the Buttles?—I saw all three at the "New Inn" about 4 o'clock.

24,444. Not four of them, only three?—I saw all four there.

24,445. Did you see where they went to?—I did.

24,446. Where?—They went up the staircase.

24,447. Do you know the room in which Allan was sitting?—I do not know the room, I knew Allan was there.

24,448. Do you know it now?—I do not, I never saw it.

24,449. Did you see them go into any room?—I did not, I saw them go up the stairs.

24,450. Did they go up singly?—They did.

24,451. And came down, and did you hear anything said by any of them?—I did not, I knew what they went up for.

24,452. How did you know?—They went up to Allan for money.

24,453. Did you know they went to see Allan?—Of course.

24,454. How did you know they had gone to see Allan?—We beckoned them up. I beckoned them towards the staircase. There was a man stood at the staircase to see there were no intruders. He stood there to see that no men went up who had not got votes.

24,455. What was his name?—Oliver Bridges.

24,456. He would be able to tell us?—He kept the bottom of the stairs I think Stacey would inform you.

24,457. (Mr. Price.) Were you the person to check intruders coming in?—I did endeavour to see that no intruders went up.

24,458. Did you know the voters?—Very well indeed.

24,459. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to let one go who was not a voter?—He slipped up unknown to me.

24,460. (Mr. Price.) You have no doubt that they went into the room where Allan was?—Not the slightest.

J. Brawley.

JOHN BRAWLEY sworn.

24,461. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An engine driver.

24,462. On the Bristol and Exeter Railway?—No, I drive a steam tug boat.

24,463. In whose employment are you?—Mr. Towell.

24,464. Is he a native of Bridgwater?—Yes.

24,465. Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—Yes.

24,467. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

24,468. What are you called for particularly to-day?—Because if you please the tug is stopped. I went to Burnham with her this morning and came back by train.

24,469. You voted for Westropp and Gray?—I did.

24,471. Did you get any promise?—No.

24,472. Had you voted at any other election?—Yes.

24,473. Who did you vote for at the election before?—Vanderbyl.

24,474. Did you get anything then?—10*l.*

24,475. Who from?—Bussell.

24,476. Why did you vote for Westropp and Gray at the last election?—I left word at my house with my wife to promise him when he came I should vote for him.

24,477. (Mr. Anstey.) You told who?—My wife.

24,478. (Mr. Price.) To tell anybody who should come?—Westropp and Gray, and nobody else; if the other parties should come to tell them not.

24,479. Why did you change your politics?—Because I had intended all along to vote for Mr. Westropp.

24,480. Had you voted for Westropp in 1865 then?—Yes, I had.

24,481. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—That was when Shelley stood; I got 10*l.*

24,482. Who from?—Temblett, at the "Bull and Butcher."

24,483. How did you vote next time when Patton and Bagehot stood?—I voted for Bagehot.

24,484. Then you changed about from one to the other?—I voted twice following for the Liberals.

24,485. In 1865 you say Westropp alone?—Yes.

24,486. He was a Conservative, and then you voted for Vanderbyl?—I think the next election was Bagehot's.

24,487. How much did you get for voting for Bagehot?—10*l.*

24,488. Did you get anything from both sides one time?—Yes.

24,489. Which time was that?—On the Conservative side.

24,490. When?—1859, the first time that Westropp came.

24,491. (Mr. Anstey.) You got 10*l.* from the Conservatives?—Yes.

24,492. Who gave it to you?—I had it. Mr. Markham and Mr. Pimm gave it to me.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

J. Brawley.

20 Sept. 1869.

24,493. What did you get on the other side?—5*l.*

24,494. From whom?—A man named Faun, a tailor.

24,495. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which way did you vote?—For the Liberals.

24,496. You were paid 10*l.* by the Tories in 1859 and 5*l.* by the Liberals, and voted for the Liberals?—I did.

24,497. Who did you vote for in 1865, Westropp alone, or Westropp and another?—I think there was only one, Mr. Westropp came by himself.

24,498. That is it, but there were two Liberal candidates?—Westropp alone.

24,499. You plumped for him?—I did.

24,500. You heard there was no money on the other side?—I did not think that.

24,501. Come, you heard there was no money going for Sir John Shelley, so you voted for Mr. Westropp. Now, be honest?—I will so far as is in my power.

24,502. Was not that the reason?—Well, I daresay I might have had money from the other side.

24,503. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had money from both sides at one time?—I did.

24,504. (Mr. Price.) Had you heard that Sir John Shelley was intending to spend no money?—I heard of it through the day.

24,505. Then you voted for Mr. Westropp and got 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,506. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the first time that you ever voted?—I think 1859 was the first time, when Westropp and Padwick came.

24,507. Then you got 10*l.* from the Tories?—Yes, 10*l.* from the Tories and 5*l.* from the Liberals.

24,508. And voted for the Liberals?—I did.

24,509. In 1865 you got 15*l.*?—10*l.*

24,510. From the Tories, and voted for Mr. Westropp?—I did.

24,511. At Patton's election you got 10*l.* from Bagehot, and voted for the Liberals?—Yes.

24,512. At Vanderbyl's you got 10*l.* from the Liberals, and voted for them?—Yes.

24,513. What did you get from the Tories that time?—Nothing.

24,514. The last election nothing?—No.

24,515. Only a promise, was not there?—No, no promise.

24,516. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear there was going to be a pure election last time?—Certainly I did.

24,517. What made you vote for Westropp and Gray particularly; was it because you heard Kinglake and Vanderbyl were not going to spend money?—No, I heard both parties before the election came on for some time, and I told my wife——

24,518. You have not any political opinions, you must have had some other reason.

24,519. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had Mr. Westropp done you any favour?—No.

24,520. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he been charitable?—Well, he had been in the town.

24,521. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear that Mr. Gray was a rich man?—Certainly I did.

24,522. Richer than Mr. Westropp?—I do not know.

24,523. (Mr. Coleridge.) You thought money would be going on the other side, I suppose?—Well, I had such things in my mind.

24,524. (Mr. Price.) How was it you got 10*l.* from the Conservatives and only 5*l.* from the Liberals, and what made you vote for the Liberals that time?—I was promised 10*l.* from the Liberals, but it was some time after the election before I had that.

24,525. Therefore you would not have voted for them if you had not expected 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,526. Did not you stand out for more than 10*l.*, having had 10*l.* from the Conservatives?—No.

24,527. Did they find out that you had had 10*l.* from the Conservatives?—That I do not know.

24,528. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you been paid on both sides?—Once.

24,529. Did you never try it on a second time?—No.

24,530. After tasting the sweets of double payment in 1859 did you never afterwards try it on?—I did not.

24,531. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at the meeting at the "Clarence" at 8 on the poll morning?—I was going into the room just as the other people were coming out.

24,532. Did not they tell you there was to be no money?—All I heard at the "Clarence" was that there was to be no money. "Go to poll like men, early." That was what I heard the rest of the voters say.

24,533. Did you hear what Mr. Westropp had said about money?—I did not.

24,534. Did they tell you?—The rest told me these words as I was coming in, and they were going out.

24,535. That is all they told you?—That is all they told me.

24,536. Did not they tell you there was no money at present; no money to-day?—They did not.

24,537. "We shall have it by-and-by?"—They did not.

24,538. None of them said that?—No, they did not.

H. Cook.

HENRY COOK sworn.

24,539. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An innkeeper.

24,540. Are you a voter for the borough of Bridgwater?—I was.

24,541. What inn do you keep?—At Chippenham.

24,542. Were you a voter for the borough at the last election?—No.

24,543. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anybody at the last election?—No.

24,544. (Mr. Price.) Had you anything to do at the election?—No, I had not.

24,545. Were you at Chippenham at that time?—Yes.

24,546. And had nothing to do with it?—Not the last election.

24,547. Had you anything to do with Vanderbyl's election in 1866?—Yes.

24,548. Were you a resident in Bridgwater then?—Yes.

24,549. What were you?—A brewer.

24,550. Carrying on business on your own account?—With a partner, William Heal.

24,551. How did you vote that time?—For Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

24,552. No, when Mr. Vanderbyl stood against Mr. Patton in 1866?—I voted for Mr. Vanderbyl.

24,553. Did you get anything for it?—No.

24,554. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anybody?—Yes.

24,555. Who?—James Abbott 10*l.*, and George Heal 15*l.*

24,556. (Mr. Price.) Was that all you did at that election in 1866, Vanderbyl's?—Yes.

24,557. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get that from?—William Heal.

24,558. (Mr. Price.) Did you account to him for it?—Yes.

24,559. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know that Abbott was paid on both sides, 10*l.* from the other side?—No.

24,560. Or 30*l.* I think he got from the other side?—No, I did not know it.

24,561. (Mr. Price.) At Bagehot's election did you take any part?—No.

24,562. Did you vote for Bagehot?—I did.

24,563. Did you get anything yourself?—No.

24,564. Or a promise of anything?—No.

24,565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you paid anything for your services in your life?—No.

24,566. Or any treating bills at your house?—No.

24,567. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of the receipt of the sums Heal received when he had 120*l.* that he never cleared up, and 130*l.*?—Yes.

24,568. What do you know about it?—Well, I believe he had it. I know Mr. Symmons got him the money in two different sums.

24,569. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you know it; did you see it?—I saw him give him the last, and the first I believe was 15*l.*, and I believe the second was 120*l.*

24,570. (Mr. Price.) What makes you say you believe?—I heard so at the time.

24,571. Who from?—Heal.

24,572. He acknowledged he had got 120*l.* and two 15*l.*?—One 15*l.*; that is how I understood it at the time.

24,573. But not in separate sums of 100*l.*, and 15*l.*, and 10*l.*?—I understood he had 15*l.* at first, and 120*l.* the second time.

24,574. (Mr. Coleridge.) And the second sum you saw actually paid?—I saw it paid in this way, on the stairs. I saw Mr. Symmons put it into his hand.

24,575. Was it a large parcel?—It was notes part of it. I saw paper. I did not count it myself.

24,576. (Mr. Price.) But you heard Heal say he had 120*l.*?—Yes.

24,577. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1865 did you vote?—At whose election?

24,578. Shelley and Kinglake's?—Yes.

24,579. How did you vote?—For the Liberals.

24,580. Did you get anything?—No, never in my life.

24,581. Did you give anybody anything?—No, that is the only election I ever did anything of the sort; Vanderbyl's first.

24,582. Did you do anything in 1859?—No.

24,583. (Mr. Anstey.) You were canvassed in person by Shelley and Kinglake?—Yes, I was.

24,584. You told Mr. Kinglake you should give him one vote and should reserve the other, and not say anything about it as yet, I believe?—What election was that?

24,585. When Sir John Shelley stood in 1865?—Well, I cannot say.

24,586. Did not you tell the House of Commons, "I said I should reserve that until some other time?"—I might have done so.

24,587. I will read you your evidence?—If you please, I should like to hear it.

24,588. "What did you do then?—I promised Mr. "Kinglake I would support him. Did you say any-"thing about your second vote?—I said I should "reserve that to some other time."—Yes, because at the time Sir John Shelley was a perfect stranger.

24,589. I only want your answer, yes or no?—Yes.

24,590. At that time Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was the only other person present besides the two candidates, I think?—He was.

24,591. And your respectable partner William Heal then came into the room, I think?—Yes.

24,592. Did you see Heal canvassed by the two candidates?—I did.

24,593. And did you hear his answer?—I did.

24,594. Did he promise or decline?—He would not promise him.

24,595. Did Benjamin Lovibond then take him out of the room?—He did.

24,596. Did you hear Mr. Lovibond say anything to Heal to this effect, "Heal, you are not going to leave us, are you"?—I heard them words.

24,597. Do you remember what he added to that, "If you leave us——"?—Mr. Lovibond, yes.

24,598. What was it?—"If you leave us I'll be damned if I don't put up my electioneering shutters."

24,599. What did Heal say to that?—He said, "I "shall not without I am paid what I was promised "at the election before."

24,600. What was that?—I do not know.

24,601. Did he mention the sum?—40*l.* I think I have heard.

24,602. What did Benjamin Lovibond say to that?—He told him to be at his office in the course of an hour.

24,603. Did he go to his office?—I am sure I cannot say.

24,604. Did he come to you afterwards and tell you so?—He never said anything to me afterwards.

24,605. Attend to this then. You remember the question being put to you by Mr. Longfield, objected to by Mr. Powell, but which the Commissioners decided ought to be put and answered. Did he tell you then what occurred at Mr. Lovibond's office, you gave evidence, about a column of the blue book as to what Heal said occurred at the office?—If it is there will you kindly refresh my memory?

24,606. In point of fact, did he come back from Mr. Lovibond's office and tell you he had stated to Mr. Lovibond 40*l.* was owing to him ever since the 1857 election, and that Mr. Lovibond had given him a general promise that he would see to it?—I do not remember.

24,607. Did you see Heal after the election in the presence of Mr. Barham, when a conversation took place between Mr. Barham and Heal about the return of Westropp that had just taken place?—I do remember their being together.

24,608. Had you heard of that 40*l.* before that day?—I never heard of the 40*l.* until Mr. Lovibond told Heal at the front door, that was the first time.

24,609. Did Mr. Lovibond repudiate it in any way?—He did not. He repeated the words I have stated, and told him to be at his house in an hour.

24,610. Were Shelley and Kinglake, who had been present just before, present at the moment when this conversation took place about the 40*l.*?—Shelley and the other candidate were in the parlour when this took place at the front door.

24,611. But I do not know the position of the front door and the parlour, therefore I must ask you, were they within hearing of what took place?—I should think not.

24,612. (Mr. Price.) At no former election you say had you anything to do?—No, nothing at all.

24,613. In 1865?—No.

24,615. In 1857?—No.

24,616. (Mr. Anstey.) Was your brother-in-law in some way related to Heal?—He married my sister.

24,617. (Mr. Price.) That was the way you were introduced to bribing by him?—I never bribed before. I never received a bribe during my life.

24,618. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you nothing for your services?—Never in my life.

24,619. Or expenses?—Or expenses, never. I never used to take part in electioneering matters.

CHARLES HASTE sworn.

C. Haste.

24,620. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for the borough of Bridgwater?—Yes.

24,621. What are you?—A carpenter and joiner.

24,623. Who for?—Vanderbyl.

24,624. Did you get anything for your vote?—Yes.

24,626. Who from?—Bussell.

24,627. Did you only vote one vote, did you give a plumper?—Who was the other one along with Vanderbyl?

24,628. Kinglake?—Yes, Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

24,629. (Mr. Coleridge.) You voted for those two?—Yes.

24,630. And got 15*l.* from Bussell?—Yes.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

C. Haste.

0 Sept. 1869.

24,631. What did you get from the other side?—Nothing.

24,632. Any promise?—No.

(Bussell.) That is the wrong election. He voted Tory at the last election.

24,633. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you vote at the last election of 1868?—Westropp and Gray the last time.

24,634. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

24,635. What were you promised?—Nothing.

24,636. Were you promised anything by the other side?—No.

24,637. Did you get anything after the election?—No.

24,638. Did you receive anything for your expenses?—No.

24,639. Did you receive plenty of drink at the election?—No.

24,640. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at the meeting at the "Clarence" at 8 o'clock on the polling day?—No.

24,641. Were you at the meeting a few days previously, or perhaps a day, at which Joseph Richard Smith spoke?—No, I was never at any one of the meetings without it was at this hall.

24,642. Were you here in 1866 when Vanderbyl stood first?—Yes.

24,643. Did you vote for Vanderbyl then?—I did.

24,644. How much did you get?—15*l.* from Bussell.

24,645. Did you vote at the election of 1866, when Mr. Bagehot stood?—Yes.

24,646. Bagehot and Patton, was not it?—Yes.

24,647. Whom did you vote for?—Patton.

24,648. What did you get then?—5l.

24,649. What?—Nothing; that was the first election.

24,650. What did you get from Patton for voting for him?—The last time nothing.

24,651. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote for Patton or Bagehot?—I voted for Patton.

24,652. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

24,653. You said 5l. just now?—The first time Patton came; that was the first time.

24,654. The first time Patton came you got 5l.?—Yes.

24,655. From whom?—I was promised 10*l.*

24,656. From whom; who gave it to you?—Frederick Temblett.

24,657. (Mr. Price.) Had he promised you 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,658. And only gave you 5l.?—Yes.

24,659. Is that the reason you voted for Vanderbyl the next time, and not for Patton?—No, not altogether.

24,660. (Mr. Anstey.) You had only got 5l. of the bribe that Patton's man promised you, and then Vanderbyl stood on the second occasion and gave you 5l. for yourself, and 5l. was it that was owing to you from Patton; was that it?—That was it. I only asked 5l. I had 15*l.* from Bussell, and 5l.——

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

24,661. (Mr. Price.) Did you pay him 5l. because Patten had not?—No, there was three of them I gave 15*l.* each to.

24,662. (Mr. Coleridge.) At Vanderbyl's election?—At Vanderbyl's election.

24,663. (Mr. Price.) Did they tell you why they wanted 15*l.*?—I had a good deal of trouble in getting them to go for it. They wanted 25*l.* I knew the election was won, and if they liked to come I would give them 15*l.*

C. Haste.

CHARLES HASTE recalled.

24,664. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you stand out for 25*l.*?—I never heard the words.

24,665. Who went with you?—John Squires.

24,666. Who else?—One Turner.

24,667. Did they stand out for 25*l.*?—I never heard the word.

24,668. What did they stand out for?—Nothing more than Bussell offered them.

24,669. What was the most you asked?—I did not ask nothing.

24,670. All you could get?—I did not ask nothing, but took what Bussell offered.

24,671. (Mr. Price.) How did you know the 5l. was given to you because Patton had promised you?—That was the election before.

24,672. You say you got 15*l.* from Bussell, 5l. of it because Patton had not paid you?—No; Temblett promised me 10*l.*, but did not give me but 5l., and the second time Patton came he told me I was not wanted. That is how I came to vote.

24,673. Who told you that?—Frederick Temblett.

24,674. And then you voted the other side and got 15*l.*?—Yes.

24,675. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the election of 1865 how did you vote?—For Shelley and Kinglake.

24,676. How much did you get?—I had nothing.

24,677. How was that?—I voted for Westropp.

24,678. For Westropp, did you?—Yes, always. I only voted once for the yellow party.

24,679. What did you get for voting for Westropp?—The first time he came I had 10*l.*

24,680. That was 1859?—That was 1859; that is all I got.

24,681. How often were you paid by both sides?—I have been paid twice by the blue party and once by the other party.

24,682. Had not you at one election been paid by both parties?—No.

24,683. Never?—Never.

24,684. Nor promised?—Nor promised.

24,685. Was 1859 the first time you voted?—Yes.

24,686. Had you no vote in 1857?—I cannot recollect the date.

24,687. How long have you had a vote?—Ever since Mr. Leader was here. I did not vote for Mr. Leader. My time was not up, not by a month or so.

24,688. What did you get at Mr. Leader's election?—Nothing; I was not a voter then.

24,689. Have you ever voted without being paid?—Yes.

24,690. How often?—I have not been paid but three times.

24,691. Were you never paid at Mr. Broadwood's election?—No.

24,692. When was the first time you were paid?—By Westropp.

24,693. Westropp was the first occasion?—Yes.

24,694. Who paid you then; Temblett?—No.

24,695. Who?—Frederick Harden.

24,696. Is he alive?—Yes.

24,697. Do you mean to say you were not paid before at any election?—No, I was promised, but never had anything.

24,698. Who promised you?—Several promised me.

24,699. What election were you promised at?—A man of the name of Horsford promised me at one election.

24,700. At what election?—I think it was the last election.

24,701. Well, whom did you vote for?—I always voted for the blue party except once.

24,702. That is when they would not pay you, and then you voted the other side?—No, they promised me, but never paid.

24,703. Then you turned round?—I should not then, only I was told I was not wanted.

24,704. At Leader's election do you mean to say you never received money for your vote?—No, only three times. Twice from one party and once from the other.

24,705. Do you mean to say you never received money long, long ago?—No; they always promised me and never paid me.

24,706. Who promised you?—Horsford.

24,707. What?—10*l.*

24,708. Did you ever get it?—No.

24,709. Did you vote in consequence of his promising you 10*l.*?—No.

24,710. What did you do?—I vote because I was always inclined.

24,711. Provided money was right?—Whether there was money or not I voted.

24,712. When there was no money at Patton's second election you went to Vanderbyl?—Yes, because the other party told me I was not wanted. I thought I might as well go just there to please them, and let them know I was not afraid of them.

24,713. What did you get at the last election of all, 1868?—15*l.* Bussell gave me.

24,714. Was that Vanderbyl's election or the last election?—That was the last one, I think.

24,715. Did you get twice paid by Vanderbyl's people?—No.

24,716. In 1866, when Vanderbyl stood alone against Patton, you got 15*l.* from Bussell?—Yes.

24,717. That was three years ago. Now do you recollect what you got last year?—Nothing.

24,718. Nothing at all?—No.

24,719. How did you vote; Westropp?—No, Patton, was not it?

24,720. Patton did not stand the last time in 1868; how did you vote?—Westropp.

24,721. What did you get?—Nothing.

24,722. Did you get any promise?—No.

24,723. Nothing after that?—No.

24,724. Who was it you asked for money afterwards?—Nobody.

24,725. Did not you go to Temblett?—No.

24,726. Did you go to Bussell?—No.

24,727. How came you after having money at three elections not to ask?—I did not hear there was anything going at all.

JOSEPH FRENCH sworn. J. French.

24,728. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An innkeeper.

24,729. What inn do you keep?—The "Rose and Crown."

24,730. In Bridgwater?—Yes.

24,731. Are you a voter?—I am.

24,732. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

24,733. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,734. Were you paid for it?—I was.

24,736. By whom?—Mr. Dyment.

24,737. William Dyment?—Yes.

24,738. Besides that, was there any treating carried on at your house?—Not the slightest; none whatever.

24,739. The house was not open during the polling day?—It was.

24,740. But not for treating?—No.

24,741. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you send any bill in afterwards?—For refreshments for the clerks at the booth near my house.

24,742. Then your house was open?—It was only for the clerks.

24,743. (Mr. Price.) Who ordered that?—Well they ordered it themselves, I suppose they had what they wanted.

24,744. Was it sent to the polling booth?—It was sent to the polling booth and to the committee room.

24,745. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much was your bill?—2l. 6*s.* 0*d.* That was charging a guinea for the room, and 1*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.* for the refreshments, that is all.

24,746. (Mr. Price.) Have you been paid?—I have.

24,747. Did you vote in 1866 for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I had no vote at all.

24,748. Was your house open then?—No.

24,749. Were you the keeper of the "Rose and Crown" then?—What year?

24,750. 1866?—Yes. I was keeping house open at the time.

24,751. Was your house open for treating, then?—No.

24,752. And you had no vote, then?—No.

HENRY JAMES WINSLADE sworn. H. J. Winslade.

24,753. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner.

24,754. Were you a voter at Bridgwater at the last election?—I was.

24,755. Did you vote?—Yes.

24,756. Who for?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

24,757. Were you paid?—Yes.

24,759. By whom?—Henry Chapman Bussell.

24,760. Did you vote at the election before in 1866?—I never had a vote before the last election.

24,761. You are one of the new voters?—I am.

24,762. You had nothing before at any election because you had no vote?—Nothing at all.

JOHN KITCH sworn. J. Kitch.

24,763. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a fitter.

24,764. Where do you work?—I work at Murch and Spence's iron foundry.

24,765. In this town?—Yes.

24,766. Are you a voter?—Yes.

24,767. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

24,768. Were you a voter for the first time at the last election?—I was a voter for the first time at the last election.

24,769. Did your get anything for you vote?—Yes.

24,771. By whom?—Mr. Bussell.

24,772. How did you get the money? Did he come to you, or did you go to him?—I was in Bussell's house, and while I was in the passage Bussell came out.

24,773. Who took you there to get it?—A young man. I went there to have a drink with him.

24,774. What is his name?—A young man named Wilkinson.

24,775. Did he tell you there was money going?—No, I guessed as much.

24,776. You guessed as much?—Yes.

24,777. You were a new voter. How did you know that Bussell was a bribery agent?—I always knew Bussell was the paymaster.

24,777*a*. And you were only disappointed you had not had a vote before?—No; I could have got a vote before if I had chosen.

ROBERT JONES HOWE sworn. R. J. Howe.

24,778. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A clerk.

24,779. Where?—At Mr. Gough's.

24,780. What is he?—A shipbuilder.

24,781. And are you a voter?—Yes.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

R. J. Howe.

20 Sept. 1869.

24,782. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.

24,783. For the first time ?—Yes.

24,784. How did you vote ? — Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,785. What did you get for it ?—10*l.*

24,786. From Bussell ?—From Carver.

24,787. Where ?—Given by Mr. Bussell for me.

24,788. Given by Mr. Bussell to a man of the name of Carver to you ?—Yes.

24,789. What is Carver's christian name ?—Francis James.

24,790. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did Carver get it ? —From Bussell.

(H. C. Bussell.) I gave Carver 10*l.* for this man.

(Mr. Price.) I know. We have had this man's name mentioned by Francis Carver, who was examined on Friday.

T. R. Richards.

THOMAS RICHARD RICHARDS sworn.

24,791. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—I am a ship owner and coal merchant.

24,792. You are called here a captain. Have you been the captain of a vessel ?—I have, of my own ship for many years.

24,793. Were you a voter at the last election ?—I was.

24,794. Whom did you vote for ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,795. Did you get anything for it ?—No.

24,796. Were you offered anything ?—No; never in my life.

24,797. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you promised anything ?—Never.

24,798. Did you ask for anything for your expenses home ?—Nothing at all 24,799. (Mr. Price.) Did you do anything in the way of bribing ?—Nothing in my life.

24,800. Were you not present at any time when any bribing went on ?—No, I never saw it.

(H. C. Bussell.) This is the witness that Palmer spoke about—that Palmer said was the gentleman who went up with him.

24,801. (Mr. Price.) Tell us about that ?—I walked with Palmer from the bridge to the Cornhill. I never heard about money or bribing.

24,802. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew it was going on, of course ?—I did not.

24,803. Well, you shrewdly suspected it ?—I heard about it an hour after Palmer left me.

24,804. This was not the first election you had been present at in Bridgwater ?—Oh dear no.

24,805. (Mr. Price.) At how many elections before did you vote ?—I voted first in Lord Henley's election, and at every election since.

24,806. That is from the year 1852 down to the year 1868 ?—Yes.

24,807. You never received anything at any election ?—I never received any money nor a promise.

24,808. And nothing for expenses ?—And nothing for expenses.

24,809. Is there any information you can give us ? —That is all. I walked beside this notorious Palmer for about 100 yards, and there was no talk about money or bribery.

24,810. (Mr. Anstey.) There was no talk between you and him you mean ?—Nothing.

24,811. Had you heard any talk between him and Bussell ?—Not at all. I met him by accident just near the bridge, and walked with him about 200 yards.

24,812. (Mr. Price.) He did not tell you what he was going to do, or had done ?—No, not at all.

24,813. That he had been playing a trick ?—Afterwards I heard it.

24,814. He did not tell you ?—No.

24,815. (Mr. Anstey.) You say he was "notorious" at that time ? — Afterwards ; I did not know him then.

24,816. How came you to walk 200 yards up the street with him if you did not know him ?—It was quite by accident. I did not know his name, and never knew the man in my life before.

24,817. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Bussell ask you to take him up to the poll ?—No ; I was standing on the quay, near the bridge, talking to Bussell, and Palmer was standing by.

24,818. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at Bussell's house when the people went into a back cellar, or room ?—I did not see anybody in the back cellar. I was with Bussell in the morning, and drank a glass of beer with him.

24,819. Were you at any time that day asked to take people to the poll ?—No.

24,820. Were you there when Crocker was there ? —Crocker was in the house at the time I was in the passage.

24,821. Did you hear him ask anybody to take people to the poll ?—No.

24,822. And were you asked to take people to the poll ?—No.

24,823. Did nobody ask you to take Palmer to the poll ?—Mr. Bussell.

24,824. Then he did ask you to take Palmer to the poll ?—Yes.

24,825. Where was that ?—On the quay.

24,826. You heard nothing pass between Bussell and Palmer ?—Nothing, not a word.

R. Glanville.

RICHARD GLANVILLE sworn.

24,827. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A painter.

24,828. A master painter ? — No, a journeyman painter.

24,829. Whom do you work for ?—Mr. Bunter.

24,830. Were you a voter at the last election ?—I was.

24,831. For the first time ?—No.

24,832. For whom did you vote ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,833. Did you get anything ?—I did not.

24,834. Were you promised anything ?—I was not.

24,835. What time in the day did you vote ?—As near as I can calculate it was between 12 and 1.

24,836. Did you vote at the election before that, in 1866 ?—I did.

24,837. Whom did you vote for then ?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,838. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, no. It was Patton and Vanderbyl ?—Vanderbyl only.

24,839. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything ?—I did.

24,841. From whom did you get it ?—10*l.* before the polling from Henry Jarman, and 10*l.* after the election was over from Bunter.

24,842. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are they both on the same side in politics ?—Yes.

24,843. (Mr. Price.) How was it you did not get anything last time ? Did you vote when you heard money was stirring ?—I suppose I voted generally like the rest. There was a general hubbub about money being spent.

24,844. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you hear that any money had been spent before the election ?—No.

24,845. Did you after the election ?—No.

24,846. (Mr. Price.) Did you wait till money was going ?—No, I did not get any.

24,847. Now in the election of 1866, Patton and Vanderbyl's election, you got 20*l.* ?—Yes ; 20*l.* I was sent for by a man on the other side, named Charles Oliver, to go to the "Duke of Wellington," and he said, if I would go down to the "Bull and Butcher,"

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

R. Glanville.

20 Sept. 1869.

I should have 25*l.*, and I said, "No, Charles, I have been to poll."

24,848. Did he tell you who would give it to you?—No.

24,849. Charles Oliver said, if you would go to the "Bull and Butcher," you should have 25*l.*?—25*l.*

24,850. Did you have anything at Bagehot's election?—Yes.

24,851. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have not finished Vanderbyl and Patton's election yet. Did you go down to the "Bull and Butcher"?—No, I did not. I said I would not go.

24,852. Whom did you vote for?—Vanderbyl. That was Vanderbyl's election I was offered the 25*l.*

24,853. (Mr. Price.) You told this man you had polled?—I told him I had polled.

24,854. You had already had 10*l.*?—I had already had 10*l.*, and 10*l.* after that election was over Mr. Bunter gave me.

24,855. Did you tell Mr. Bunter after the election that you had been offered 25*l.* on the other side?—No, I did not.

24,856. How was it that he came to offer you the second 10*l.*?—I was in a public-house called the "George," in George Street, and a man came there to offer me 25*l.* for my vote and my brother-in-law's.

24,857. When was this?—On the same day that I voted for Vanderbyl; and I went in, and I said, "Tom, "I am offered 25*l.* for you and me," and he said, "Go "and nail it." He said, "Have you polled?" I said, "I have, and I shall not go."

24,858. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your brother-in-law's name?—Thomas Gane.

24,859. (Mr. Price.) You voted for Vanderbyl?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

24,860. That was to be 25*l.* for you and your brother-in-law?—Yes.

24,861. Your brother-in-law said you were to go and take it?—Yes. He said, "Go and nail it."

24,862. And afterwards you got 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,863. How did you get the 10*l.* afterwards?—I was talking to my brother-in-law, and a party came up, and said, "What is up?"

24,864. What day was that?—The day of the election.

24,865. You got a second 10*l.*?—No; this was a conversation that passed between me and my brother-in-law.

24,866. How did you get the second 10*l.*?—The conversation was passing between me and my brother-in-law outside the "George," and Mr. Bunter, as far as I recollect, made the payment to me, and Mr. Jarman came along, and said, "What is up?" and he said, "I have offered Glanville 10*l.*, but he does not "seem satisfied," and Mr. Jarman said, "Will 15*l.* "do?" I made no reply, and he took me into Mr. Allan's house, and there was a decanter and some port wine, and he put 10*l.* on the table, and he went outside, and he said, "Mr. Bunter will give you the other," and a day or two afterwards, it might be the next day, Mr. Bunter gave me the 10*l.*

24,867. Did you have a glass of port wine as well?—I did; I had a glass of port wine.

24,868. What did you do at Bagehot's election?—I received 10*l.* through Charles Hydon. Charles Hydon gave it to Mr. Bunter, and Mr. Bunter gave it to me.

24,869. Did you get anything more?—A person named Charles Walter came to me when I was standing at my front door, and said he could make me right for 10*l.*

24,870. Was he canvassing for Patton?—On the Tory side. He took me over to Pimm's, and Pimm took me to Frederick Jarman's, and Frederick Jarman asked me if I had been to poll. I said, "No." He said, "Well, we are not going to spend any money to-day, but," he says, "you know you were treated through Westropp's election, we will only promise you;" and he said, "Will you take my word?" and the answer I made him was, "No, I will see you damned first."

24,871. And then you went and got 10*l.* from the other side?—I got 10*l.* from them. I was enticed by a man named Richards to go to the "Bull and Butcher." He said they would give me more than the Liberal party would.

24,872. Did he tell you how much you would get?—I do not know. He said I could get more from them than from the Liberals.

24,873. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get in 1865, Shelley, Kinglake, and Westropp's election?—I did not get anything myself.

24,874. How did you vote?—For Mr. Westropp.

24,875. (Mr. Price.) What did you get then?—I did not get anything myself.

24,876. Who did?—After I had been to poll, a person of the name of Irish had been into my place, or rather before that I was taken into Pimm's, and when I was in at Pimm's there was a great deal of drinking going on, and I had a glass of brandy and water.

24,877. What is this man Pimm?—He is dead now.

24,878. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he a publican?—Yes.

24,879. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of his inn?—The "Golden Lion."

24,880. Was that on the Conservative side?—That was on the Conservative side.

24,881. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are your politics?—Well, I am generally for the Liberal party.

24,882. Whichever pays?—Not exactly that.

24,883. Why did you vote for Mr. Westropp?—Because I was pressed by a man who came into the house; a man named Phillip came in and offered me 15*l.*, or rather my wife.

24,884. (Mr. Price.) Did you not know when you voted for Mr. Westropp that there was going to be no money spent by Sir John Shelley?—I do not know. That was the first time I was a voter.

24,885. The first time you had a vote, your politics being Liberal, you heard no money was going, and you voted Tory?—I voted because my wife had 10*l.*

24,886. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much did you get altogether?—40*l.*

24,887. At that election?—No. I got 10*l.* at that election.

24,888. Altogether you got 40*l.* at the different elections you have named?—Yes.

24,889. And you distributed your votes pretty equally between the two parties?—I voted three times Liberal and once Conservative.

24,890. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,891. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you in the "Clarence" on the polling day at the last election?—No, I was not. I was in the room where that was said in the "Clarence" by Mr. Westropp which has been referred to.

24,892. When?—The next morning afterwards.

24,893. After what?—After the election was over.

24,894. (Mr. Price.) You did not hear it in time to influence your vote?—No.

24,895. Is your brother J. Glanville?—No. He is no relation whatever.

ABRAHAM HAWKINS sworn.

A. Hawkins.

24,896. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A miller.

24,897. Do you work on your own account, or for somebody else?—I work for Spiller and Company.

24,898. Is that a large mill near Bridgwater?—Yes.

24,899. In one of the roads here?—Chilton Road.

24,900. A large corn mill there?—Yes.

24,901. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes.

24,902. For the first time?—Yes.

24,903. For whom did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

24,904. How much did you get?—10*l.*

24,905. From whom?—Henry Fisher

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

A. Hawkins.

20 Sept. 1869.

24,906. Who is Fisher?—The foreman at our mill.

24,907. He gave you 10*l.*?—Yes.

24,908. Were there any others of your men who were bribed by Fisher?—Yes, I believe there was.

24,909. How many?—I only know of one, and that I do not know the truth of.

24,910. How is Spiller in politics?—Liberal.

24,911. How may voters has he in his employment?—Well, I cannot say to one or two; 10 perhaps.

24,912. Ten you think?—I should think so; I do not know.

24,913. Do you know how they voted?—The greatest part of them voted Liberal.

24,914. Were they paid like you?—I do not know.

24,915. Were they new voters all of them?—No, not all of them.

24,916. Did your master ask you how you were going to vote?—No; he never asked me how I was going to vote.

24,917. You never had anything at the other elections because you were not a voter?—No.

J. P. Glanville.

JOSEPH PONTON GLANVILLE sworn.

24,918. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A plumber, painter, and glazier.

24,919. Are you a master?—I am.

24,920. How many men do you employ?—12 at the present time.

24,921. Are you a voter at Bridgwater?—I am.

24,922. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

24,923. Did you get anything?—Nothing.

24,924. Were you promised anything?—Nothing.

24,925. Were you employed in any way?—No.

24,926. In respect of the election?—Nothing at all.

24,927. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give anything to anybody?—Nothing.

24,928. Or promise anything?—No.

24,929. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election before?—Yes.

24,930. Did you get anything then?—Nothing.

24,931. Did you do anything in the way of bribing then?—Nothing.

24,932. Did you get any expenses paid?—No.

24,933. Or any bill?—There was one bill in Vanderbyl's election paid to my father for painting poles. I believe the poles were painted at Sir John Shelley's election.

24,934. Your father had an outstanding bill?—Yes. I think it was 3*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* paid by Henry Jarman to my father.

24,935. Had your father asked for it before he voted?—He had not.

24,936. How did he get to be paid at that election?—Jarman came to me and said, "You have a bill for "poles at Sir John Shelley's election; give me your "bill and I will pay it." The bill was given him and the money was paid him.

24,937. Did you vote at the other election in 1866?—I did.

24,938. For Bagehot?—For Bagehot; always Liberal.

24,939. And you got nothing then?—Nothing.

24,940. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

24,941. For Kinglake and Shelley?—For Kinglake and Shelley.

24,942. Did you vote in 1859?—I voted in 1859, Tynte and Kinglake.

24,943. Did you get anything then?—Nothing. I never got anything in my life.

24,944. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever get anything or promise anything in your life?—Never. I was never offered a bribe in my life.

24,945. Did you ever offer anybody anything in your life?—Never in my life.

24,946. Or were you ever offered anything for expenses?—No.

24,947. It is your name that has given rise to this?—It is connected with the bill.

24,948. (Mr. Price.) Is the initial of your father's Christian name "J."?—Yes, "J." My father's Christian name is Joseph.

24,949. Is he here?—No. I do not think he has been subpœnaed.

24,950. He can tell us no more than you have told us?—No more at all. In fact the bill for painting those poles was never entered in the books.

24,951. Did he get anything at the last election besides that bill?—Nothing at all.

24,952. Or any other election?—No, not at all.

F. Harrison.

FRANK HARRISON sworn.

24,953. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A boot and shoe maker.

24,954. On your own account?—No, for Mr. Bond.

24,955. Whom do you work for?—Mr. Bond.

24,956. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

24,957. For the first time?—Yes.

24,958. Did you get anything?—No.

24,959. Were you promised anything?—No.

24,960. Had you any work to do, or anything of that kind; had you any bill or expenses paid, or anything?—No.

24,961. Did you assist in bribing anybody at the last election?—No.

24,962. Then you can tell us nothing about the last election?—Nothing at all.

24,963. You knew nothing of the other elections; you were not a voter?—No.

J. Roberts.

JAMES ROBERTS sworn.

24,964. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A fitter by trade.

24,965. Are you any relation to Mr. Hook?—He is a son-in-law of mine.

24,966. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

24,967. For whom?—Westropp.

24,968. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

24,969. Were you promised anything?—Nothing whatever.

24,970. Did you vote at the election before?—I did.

24,971. For whom?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

24,972. Did you get anything then?—15*l.*

24,973. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Richard Thomas.

24,974. Why did you vote for Mr. Westropp last time?—I had always promised myself that whenever that gentleman came forward——

24,975. Promised yourself?—Yes. I made up my mind that whenever he came forward again, that whenever the chance occurred, I would vote for him.

24,976. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why?—Because I considered he had been used ill.

24,977. (Mr. Price.) Had you ever had any money from him?—Never in my life.

24,978. Why did you think he had been used ill?—Because I considered the Liberals had been as guilty of bribery as the Conservatives had been.

24,979. (Mr. Anstey.) Then why did you vote for Mr. Vanderbyl instead of Mr. Patton, at the election before?—There is an old saying, "necessity is the mother of invention."

24,980. I hope you do not mean to act upon it to-day?—That very morning, as I was going to vote for

Mr. Patton, I met Mr. William Symmons and Mr. Richard Thomas, and they asked me if I had been to poll, and I told them no. Mr. Symmons said, "Roberts, "we know that you have been always on our side, go "with Mr. Thomas and he will see what can be "done."

24,981. (Mr. Price.) Had you been on their side always?—For 16 years I had, during all the time I was at work for Browne and Company.

24,982. (Mr. Anstey.) You had been a Liberal all the while you worked for Browne and Company?—Yes.

24,983. And on ceasing to work for Browne and Company you ceased to work for a Liberal company, and went over to the other side?—Not exactly.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then I do not understand you.

24,984. (Mr. Price.) Go on with your invention?—During the 16 years I had worked for Browne and Company I was always a Liberal.

24,985. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get paid for it?—I received two 10*l.*

24,986. When was that?—Tynte's election and Lord Henley's; I received 10*l.* then.

24,987. Whom did you get it from?—At Tynte's election by William Hill. He came up to me first.

24,988. That is 1852?—I do not know exactly.

24,989. (Mr. Price.) Go on?—When I left Browne and Company I had accumulated a little money whilst working for them, and I thought I wanted to embark in business for myself of some kind, but I found my business was a failure, and after I had been on my own account some eight or ten months I applied to Mr. Wilton for a job of work, and he promised me on the nomination day that I should have work; but time passed on and he did not give it to me. In consequence of that I became a bankrupt; and on the very morning that Mr. Thomas met me and William Symmons I was to pass my last examination in the Bankruptcy Court. I went with Mr. Thomas and he gave me 15*l.*, and I thought it was quite a godsend.

24,990. That was the reason you voted at that time for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I did.

24,991. Did you vote for Mr. Bagehot?—No.

24,992. Did you vote for Mr. Westropp the first time he was here?—No.

24,993. Whom did you vote for then?—I voted for Mr. Kinglake and——

24,994. And Sir John Shelley?—And Sir John Shelley.

24,995. (Mr. Anstey.) You were then in the employment of Browne and Company?—That was on the promise of employment by Mr. Wilton.

24,996. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1866, Bagehot and Patton's election, whom did you vote for—the one before Vanderbyl's?—Mr. Patton.

24,997. What did you get for that?—5*l.*

24,998. Then you voted for Kinglake and Shelley on the promise of giving you employment?—Yes.

24,999. In 1859 how did you vote? That was Padwick and Westropp, and Tynte and Kinglake?—I did not vote at all then.

25,000. How was that?—I chose not to vote at that election.

25,001. Were you paid anything at that election for not voting?—Not that I am aware of.

25,002. Not that you are aware of? Were you paid anything?—No.

25,003. The 1859 election I am speaking of. Padwick, Westropp, Tynte, and Kinglake?—Oh, yes.

25,004. What were you paid then?—10*l.*

25,005. Who gave you that?—William Hill.

25,006. (Mr. Anstey.) You were in Browne and Company's employ then?—I was in Browne and Company's employ then.

25,007. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1857 whom did y vote for?—Which election?

25,008. The first time Mr. Kinglake came in?—Kinglake and Tynte.

25,009. What did you get then?—Nothing.

25,010. How was that?—I never got anything.

25,011. Did you expect anything?—No.

25,012. In 1859, Kinglake and Tynte. How did you vote?—I did not vote.

25,013. Did you get 10*l.* for not voting?—No.

25,014. Then you got three tens, one fifteen, and a five?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Altogether 50*l.* received by an independent Liberal.

25,015. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you the man who persuaded your son-in-law Hook to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

25,016. Did you advise him to vote for Vanderbyl?—Not a bit of it.

25,017. Did you tell him that plenty of money was going?—No.

25,018. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

25,019. Did you not speak to him at all about his vote?—I saw him when he returned from Bristol. I had then been to poll.

25,020. Did you then tell him there was plenty of money going?—I told him that I had heard there was plenty of money going.

25,021. That was after he had come back from Bristol?—Yes.

25,022. Did you advise him to go and vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I never said anything to him about his vote.

25,023. You advised him to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, as you had heard there was plenty of money going?—I told him to please himself, to use his own mind.

25,024. You told him to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, as you thought there was money going?—No.

25,025. You told him you had heard there was money going, thinking it would influence him to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I did not think it would influence him.

25,026. Then why did you tell him you had heard there was plenty of money going, if it was not to influence his vote?—I had been used rather cruelly.

25,027. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you promised Mr. Westropp in the election of 1865?—No.

25,028. Had you promised Kinglake and Shelley in the election of 1865?—No.

25,029. You are quite sure of that?—Quite.

25,030. Were you at the "Clarence" at the last election?—No.

25,031. Never once?—Not once.

25,032. Were you at the meeting at Gloucester Place?—Never in my life.

25,033. Then how did you hear there was to be no money?—What are you alluding to?

25,034. I thought you said at the last election you heard there was to be no money on the Conservative side?—No, I beg your pardon.

25,035. Where was it you heard there was to be no money? Did you tell your son-in-law there was to be no money on the Conservative side?—When my son-in-law came back from Bristol I told him expressly that I had heard there would not be a farthing spent on the Conservative side.

25,036. That was at the last election?—Yes.

25,037. I ask you again when and how you had heard that if you had never been present at any meeting?—Well, report soon flies. It passed through the town like a gust of wind or a flash of lightning.

25,038. Had you heard it from anybody?—No, nobody had offered me money.

25,039. You will please to tell me who told you there would be no money, where had you heard it?—I cannot say no more than that it was a current saying.

25,040. How long before the election was it a current saying, or was it a current saying only on the day of the election?—This was the very day of the election.

25,041. Had you heard before that that there was a current saying that there would be no money. What was the current saying the day before the election?—What election are you alluding to?

25,042. Why the last election?—I never heard of any other report from the time that Westropp called on me at my house and I promised him I would support him. No man courted my favours after, neither did I attend any meeting.

25,043. Will you please to answer my question. What was the current report the day before the election?—That there would be no bribery by either party.

25,044. And that you say was the current saying on the day of the election?—Yes.

25,045. And the day before that?—I will not swear that I heard there was to be money.

25,046. I did not ask you that. I ask you whether before the day of the election you heard a report that there was to be no money?—No.

25,047. That you swear?—That I swear.

H. C. Bussell.

H. C. Bussell recalled.

25,048. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say?—There is one matter I think the court should be informed of, with regard to this man [Roberts]. I have been told this morning up here that this man went to London, and that prior to his going to London he had made a statement with regard to Mr. Wilton, and was not to be found, and the Conservatives wanted to get him, and I believe that Hook made a bargain with the Conservative party, that if they gave a certain sum of money this man should be found to give his evidence as a witness. I heard that outside this morning, that Hook took charge of this man, and that Chapman, Smith and Boyle's clerk paid the money.

25,049. When was that?—1866, with regard to the evidence given in the House of Commons as to Mr. Wilton.

J. Roberts.

James Roberts recalled.

25,050. (Mr. Price.) What do you say about that?—I say it is a lie.

25,051. Were you taken to London?—I was not taken, I was subpœnaed to go. Mr. Temblett was subpœnaed at the same time.

25,052. Who subpœnaed you?—Mr. Temblett.

25,053. Mr. Temblett?—He did.

25,054. What were you subpœnaed for, what were you to say?—I was subpœnaed in this manner——

25,055. What were you to say? You knew what you were going up to prove. What were you to prove on going up to London?—That Mr. Wilton had offered me employment, and I think that Mr. Wilton had already acknowledged it.

25,056. Were you kept out of the way at all?—Not the slightest. I was carrying on my business as usual. I never absconded myself for one hour, or not half an hour, to my knowledge.

J. Strong.

John Strong sworn.

25,057. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A beerhouse keeper.

25,058. Are you a voter? Yes.

25,059. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes.

25,060. Have you ever voted before?—Yes.

25,061. How did you vote the last time?—For Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

25,062. Did you get anything for it?—No.

25,063. Were you promised anything?—No.

25,064. Was there any treating going on at your house?—No.

25,065. Had you no bill then at all for treating?—No.

25,066. Did you vote at the last election of 1866?—Yes.

25,067. How did you vote then?—For Vanderbyl.

25,068. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

25,069. How much?—10*l.*

25,070. Whom did you get that from?—Bussell.

25,071. How was it you did not get any money this last time?—I do not know.

25,072. What time of the day did you poll?—About half-past 1.

25,073. Did you hear there was no money going?—I did not.

25,074. Did you vote at the other election of 1866, Bagehot's election?—I did.

25,075. Whom did you vote for then?—Bagehot.

25,076. Did you get anything then?—Yes, 10*l.*

25,077. From whom?—Bussell.

25,078. Did you vote in 1865 when Sir John Shelley stood?—Yes, I voted then.

25,079. Who for?—I voted for Kinglake and Shelley.

25,080. Did you get anything then?—No.

25,081. Was there any treating going on at your house then?—No.

25,082. Did you vote in 1859?—Whose is that?

25,083. That was Westropp and Padwick, and Kinglake and Tynte?—Yes, I voted for Kinglake and Tynte.

25,084. Did you get anything then?—I did not.

25,085. Were you ever offered anything by the other side at these previous elections?—No.

25,086. Did you vote in 1857?—That was Padwick's?

25,087. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, that was before Padwick's?—1857?

25,088. Yes; it was when Kinglake first came in?—Yes, I did; I voted for Kinglake and Tynte.

25,089. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything then?—I did not.

25,090. Did you vote in 1852, when Lord Henley stood?—No, I did not.

25,091. Did you vote at any other election?—I voted for Padwick and Westropp at that election.

25,092. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us you voted for Kinglake and Tynte. Padwick and Westropp only stood together once, and that was in 1859. How came you to vote in that election for the Tories?—I never voted for the Tories.

25,093. You did at that election, according to your own account?—I voted for Kinglake and Tynte at that election.

25,094. (Mr. Price.) Is there any other election you have voted at?—No.

25,095. You have had 10*l.* twice?—Yes, I have had three 10*l.*

25,096. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the third?—There was Vanderbyl and Bagehot's, and the time that Padwick and Westropp put up.

25,097. You had 10*l.* at that time. You told us you had not?—Yes.

25,098. Is Emma Strong your wife?—No.

25,099. What is Emma Strong?—That is my daughter.

25,100. Did your daughter ever get bribed for you?—No.

25,101. Nor your wife?—No, never, my wife is dead.

25,102. (Mr. Price.) Is your daughter here?—Yes.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

E. Strong.

20 Sept. 1869.

EMMA STRONG sworn.

25,103. (Mr. Price.) You are the daughter of the last witness?—Yes.

25,104. What do you know about the election?—I really do not know what I know unless you ask me the question.

25,105. Had you anything to do with bribery at the last election?—No.

25,106. Did you take any money for your father?—No.

25,107. Did anyone come to canvass him?—Of course the candidates came.

25,108. Did anybody come and offer you any money for your father at the last election?—No.

25,109. None at all? None at all.

25,110. Was there any treating going on at your house?—No.

25,111. No treating at all?—None whatever.

25,112. And you have not made out any bill?—Not any.

25,113. The election before that?—None.

25,114. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did your father give you these 10*l.* he has spoken of as having got, for you to take care of?—No; I should like for him to have given them to me.

25,115. What did he do with them?—I do not know.

25,116. Do you know anything about any of the elections?—No, I do not.

25,117. About the bribery?—I have had nothing to do with my father's business except since the last year and ten months, since my mother died.

J. White.

JOSEPH WHITE sworn.

25,118. (Mr. Price.) Are you a glover carrying on business in the High Street?—Yes.

25,119. At the last election did you vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I did.

25,120. And were you requested by Mr. Reed to write to a man of the name of Lilly, who had left Bridgwater and had gone to Lowestoft?—I was.

25,121. And did you promise him his expenses?—I did.

25,122. Did Lilly come here?—He did.

25,123. Did you pay him any money?—I did.

25,124. How much?—4*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.*

25,125. Was that his expenses, or more than his expenses?—That was his expenses to and fro.

25,126. Did you pay him anything besides that?—I did not.

25,127. Did Mr. Reed reimburse you that amount?—Yes.

25,128. Did you pay anybody else at the last election?—I did not.

25,129. Did you get anything for yourself?—I did not.

25,130. Anything for your trouble?—I did not.

25,131. Had you any bill for gloves against the candidates?—No. I cannot say that I did not sell gloves to the candidates, if they came for them at any time.

25,132. What did you charge the candidates for them, a guinea a pair?—No, not beyond the price I should charge you.

25,133. At the first election of Vanderbyl's in 1866 did you get anything for your vote?—I did not.

25,134. Did you receive any money from Allan to distribute?—I did.

25,135. How much?—50*l.*

25,136. How did you dispose of it?—I disposed of it to Frederick Walters, Robert Walters——

25,137. 10*l.* each?—Yes.

25,138. You had better give us the names, and the amounts you gave to each?—Frederick Walters, 10*l.*; Robert Walters, 10*l.*; John Baker, 10*l.*; John Crocker, 10*l.*; and 10*l.* to Thomas Skinner for John Davis.

25,139. We have got another?—That is a mistake I have made.

25,140. It is Henry Bryant for William Dyment?—Yes; William Henry Bryant for William Dyment.

25,141. Of Back Lane?—Yes.

25,142. Was that all that you had to do with the election of 1866?—Yes, it was.

25,143. Did you receive anything for your trouble then?—Not a penny.

25,144. At Bagehot's election did you receive the same sum?—Either from Bussell or Allan, I am not quite certain.

25,145. How did you dispose of that?—10*l.* to Frederick Walters, 10*l.* to John Baker, 10*l.* to John Witteridge, 10*l.* for Davis by Skinner.

25,146. John Davis of Polden Street, by Thomas Skinner?—Yes, and 10*l.* to Bryant for Dyment on the same date.

25,147. Was that all you had to do with that election?—It was.

25,148. In 1865 had you anything to do with that?—Who were the candidates then?

25,149. Westropp, Kinglake, and Shelley?—I voted for Kinglake and Shelley.

25,150. Did you do anything in the way of bribery?—I did not.

25,151. In 1859 did you take a part in it?—Who were the candidates then?

25,152. That would be Padwick and Westropp, Kinglake and Tynte?—I voted for Kinglake and Tynte.

25,153. Did you do any bribery for them?—No, I did not.

25,154. Were those two elections of 1866 the only elections in which you acted as a bribery agent?—The only elections.

25,155. How came you to do it?—I did it after the public meeting was held at the George Lane rooms, what are called the public rooms. I was requested to see Bussell at the close of the meeting.

25,156. Who requested you to do so?—I suppose Mr. Bussell did; I cannot remember now.

25,157. Why should he pitch upon you?—Oh, there were others at the same time.

25,158. Were these persons you have spoken of men over whom you had any influence? Frederick Walters I see you bribed twice over. Were they men who worked for you?—No, not at all. Walters is a butcher.

25,159. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you receive any money yourself at former elections?—No.

25,160. (Mr. Price.) You were one of the persons who signed this petition of 80 to put down bribery?—That was previous to the time I got mixed up in bribery.

25,161. Bribery was said and was proved to have taken place on Mr. Westropp's behalf in 1865; and early in the year 1866 you signed a petition, you know, to the House of Commons; and then afterwards you took a part in bribery, and spent two sums of 50*l.* in bribes?—I must give you a history of my signing that petition.

25,162. Do so?—I was at home in my shop, and a person came to me, I do not know who it was now, and he said I was wanted at Messrs. Reed and Cook's office, and I went away immediately to Messrs. Reed's office and inquired who wanted me, and they said, "Here is a petition to be signed." There were two or three there who signed. I do not know who they were, or whether they had the control of the petition. I saw the petition and I asked what it was for, and they told me it was for the purpose of suspending the writ, and I then signed it and came away.

25,163. That is all you knew of it?—That is all I knew of it.

25,164. (Mr. Anstey.) If you had known it was a petition pledging both sides to put down corrupt practices, I suppose you would not have signed it?—If I had not signed it on that occasion I should have been perfectly free, and I should not have been affected one way or the other.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

25,165. It was only a month before Bagehot's election?—A month makes a great deal of difference sometimes.

25,166. (Mr. Price.) That is all the information you can give us?—That is all.

J. Hole.

JOHN HOLE sworn.

25,167. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A miller.

25,168. Do you work at the same mill we have heard of this morning?—Yes, Spiller & Co.'s.

25,169. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes.

25,170. For the first time?—No.

25,171. You voted before?—Yes.

25,172. How did you vote last time?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

25,173. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

25,175. Who from?—Fisher.

25,176. Did you vote at the election before?—Yes.

25,177. Who for?—Vanderbyl.

25,178. Did you get anything then?—Yes, 15*l.*

25,179. Where from?—Henry Bussell.

25,180. Did you vote at the first election of 1866?—Yes.

25,181. Who did you vote for then?—Patton.

25,182. Did you get any money then?—Yes, 10*l.*

25,183. Why did you change on the next occasion and vote against Patton?—Well, I promised Vanderbyl that I would vote for him.

25,184. But you voted for Patton and got 10*l.*, then when Mr. Patten came down again why did you desert him?—It was not my intention to vote that way again.

25,185. Why? Was not it because you had 15*l.* given you?—No, because I could have got the money on the other side at the time.

25,186. In 1865 how much did you get?—10*l.*

25,187. Where did you get that from?—From the "Bull and Butcher."

25,188. Who gave it to you?—I went into a room and took it off the table.

25,189. Did you vote in 1859?—No, I had no vote.

J. Bennett.

JAMES BENNETT sworn.

25,190. (Mr. Price.) Why were not you here before, Mr. Bennett, your name was put down fifth on the list?—I had a little order to settle this morning and I could not get away, I had a customer or two in.

25,191. You ought to have sent word, you know, if possible. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes.

25,192. What are you, a master?—A master timber dealer.

25,193. Do you employ men?—Yes.

25,194. How many men do you employ?—Seven or eight.

25,195. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes, I voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

25,196. Did you receive any money?—No.

25,197. Did you get any promise?—No.

25,198–9. Did you get anything in the shape of expenses for anything you did?—No, nothing at all.

25,200. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give any money at the last election?—No.

25,201. Or promise any to your men?—Never promised any.

25,202. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 how did you vote then?—I voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

25,203. When Vanderbyl stood against Patton?—I voted for Vanderbyl.

25,204. Did you get anything then?—There was some money left at my house in my absence.

25,205. How much?—I do not know whether 20*l.* or 25*l.*, I never saw the money.

25,206. Who got it?—It was left at my house, and I told my missis I would have nothing to do with it.

25,207. What did your wife do with it?—Well, she took it, and I suppose she laid it out for the family or on the house.

25,208. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you no idea how it came there?—I heard that a gentleman of the name of Thomas left it.

25,209. Who did you hear that from—My missis told me.

25,210. Mr. Thomas called at your house and left the money?—Yes.

25,211. (Mr. Price.) How had you voted at the previous election in 1866 that you managed to get 20*l.* or 25*l.* from Vanderbyl, when Patton and Bagehot stood?—I voted for Bagehot.

25,212. Did you get any money then?—No.

25,213. How do you account for having this 20*l.* or 25*l.* at Vanderbyl's?—I am quite at a loss to account for it. I never asked for it. I never saw anyone on the subject. I never expected it.

25,214. Did you get anything in 1865? Did you vote then?—I was ill then.

25,215. Did you get anything?—No.

25,216. In 1859?—I was not in Bridgwater in 1859.

25,217. You cannot account for this 25*l.*?—No.

25,218. Had you said anything to anybody about being in want of money, or that money would be acceptable?—Not the least.

25,219. You gave no hint to anybody whatever?—Not the least.

25,220. (Mr. Anstey.) The person who left the money with your wife must have known that you wanted money, and your keeping it shows that you did want it?—The fact was my circumstances were not so good at the time, but I never applied for anything of the sort.

25,221. (Mr. Price.) Who was this man Thomas?—He was in the employ of Messrs. Coulthurst and Symmons.

25,222. He is in London now, I understand?—I believe he is. He was here a week ago.

25,223. Did you see him?—Yes.

25,224. Have you ever done busines swith Coulthurst and Symmons?—Never any more than sold them a cargo of coal, or anything of that sort. I have done very little business with them.

25,225. How did Thomas come down to your house with 25*l.*?—I do not know. It was reported that money was so flush it was flying about in every direction.

25,226. Is your wife at home? Send for her?—I do not deny that the money was left in the house.

25,227. We want to know how it was. Do you mean to represent that they really did not know what to do with their money, that they had got so much that they threw it about in that way?—I cannot say. I heard that money was very general at the time.

25,228. Is that your idea about it?—I heard so.

25,229. Is that the way you account for this 20*l.* or 25*l.* being left at your house?

25,230. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is this the only sum of money you ever got at an election?—Yes, in my life.

25,231. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you tell me what your wife said to you?—She said that Thomas had left the money in the house.

25,232. She had it in her hand. What did she say?—She said he left the money. I said, "I will have nothing to do with it."

25,233. (Mr. Price.) Did she say anything about your vote?—Yes, that he wished me to go to poll.

25,234. Tell us the whole of it. Why do you not give us the whole account of it? Tell us what he said?—She gave me the account that there was some money left in the house by Mr. Thomas. I said, "I will have nothing to do with it."

25,235. For your vote; was it said so?—Well, that was the meaning of it.

25,236. Had you promised Mr. Patton?—No, I never promised a Conservative in my life. I always was a Liberal. The Liberal party knew very well that they did not offer me any money.

25,237. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock was this?—I think it was about the middle of the day.

25,238. Had you voted at that time?—No.

25,239. Then after your wife told you that this money was left with her and for your vote did she tell you what she had said to Thomas?—No, I do not recollect that she did.

25,240. (Mr. Price.) Had she promised for you that you should go and vote?—She knew that I was going to vote.

25,241. Did she promise for you that you should go and vote?—She told me that Mr. Thomas wished me to go to the poll.

25,242. (Mr. Anstey.) Did she tell you that she had told Thomas that you were going to vote for Vanderbyl?—I do not recollect that she did.

25,243. How long after this was it that you went to the poll, how many hours?—I should think it might be two hours.

25,244. Two hours?—I am not certain.

25,245. (Mr. Price.) You had time enough if you had virtue enough, I suppose, that is not to be expected, but you had time enough to send the money back to Mr. Thomas, you know, if you did not want to have anything to do with it?—Yes.

25,246. You did not think of that?—No.

25,247. I suppose your wife would not let you give it back?—She did not feel inclined.

25,248. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said your wife said she would have nothing to do with it?—No: I told my wife that I would have nothing to do with it. I came home then for the purpose of going to the poll, and I was going to the poll then.

25,249. (Mr. Price.) What is your wife's christian name?—Susan.

25,250. (Mr. Anstey.) How can you say you were on your way to the poll when you did not poll for two hours?—I came home on purpose to go and record my vote at the poll, and I had to clean myself. I had been out at the works, and I had to get some dinner.

25,251. It would not take you two hours to do that?—I am not certain about the time, but I should think it was about two hours.

WILLIAM HARWOOD sworn. W. Harwood.

25,252. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—Yes.

25,253. What are you?—A baker.

25,254. A master baker or journeyman?—Master.

25,255. How many men do you employ?—Only one boy.

25,256. Now do you recollect the last election in 1868?—I do.

25,257. Do you recollect this transaction about 30*s.*?—I do.

25,258. Now tell us all about it?—I was at the "Duke of Wellington" some evening after the election, and I saw John Vearncombe and joked him, and I said, "John, if it's true what I've heard thee'st only had "7*l.* instead of 10," and he said, "That's true; I'll "go to Alway and have the other." He said, "Will "you go with me?" I said, "No, it is not my "business." He then went away and returned with a handful of money, and said, "I got 30*s.* more." I said, "It's no use having 30*s.*" He said, "I'll go "and have the remainder; will you go?" I said, "No." He left the house, and just after he left I went after him. I walked across to the "Three Tuns" opposite his own house, and he went into Alway's shop. I went back and he returned to the "Duke of Wellington," and said, "It's all up, I can't get no more."

25,259. Did you look through the window?—No, I did not go to the window.

25,260. Did you understand it as a joke or as a real thing?—I thought it was true then.

25,261. Did you give evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No.

25,262. You thought it was the truth then? Had you heard that he was to have 10*l.*?—There was a talk about the town that he only had 7*l.* instead of 10*l.*, and I heard parties as were joking with him.

25,263. (Mr. Anstey.) It is not true that you were looking through the window?—I did not go near Mr. Alway's window that evening.

25,264. It is not true then that you were looking through the window, and that they were putting a trick upon you?—I did not go to the window at all.

25,265. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything for your vote?—No.

25,266. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

25,267. (Mr. Anstey.) At any election?—Yes.

25,268. When? You had better tell us all you do know?—I got 5*l.* on the first election of Mr. Patton.

25,269. From the Conservatives?—The Conservatives.

25,270. Have you always voted on the Conservative side?—I have.

25,271. We will take your evidence while you are here, and save you from coming again. Go to the other elections. Did you get anything on the last election?—I did not.

25,272. Did you have any promise?—No.

25,273. Who did you vote for?—Westropp and Gray.

25,274. Did you have any expenses or anything for your trouble?—Not a farthing.

25,275. In the election of 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl stood against Mr. Patton, who did you vote for?—Mr. Patton.

25,276. Did you get anything then?—10*l.* was put into my hand, but I gave it up again.

25,277. Who put the 10*l.* into your hand?—I do not know who it was. It was through a door; I only saw a hand.

25,278. Where?—At the "Three Crowns."

25,279. How did you get to the "Three Crowns," to the door where the money was?—I was invited to go upstairs by the landlord.

25,280. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Newton.

25,281. What did he say to you?—He said, "There's some coin going, you may as well have it "as anybody else." I said, "If it is going I may as "well have it." I took the cartridge, never opened it, and gave it up again at once.

25,282. You gave it back again?—I gave it to a man of the name of Collett.

25,283. Did you go and vote?—I had voted before.

25,284. Were you offered anything by the other side?—I was not.

25,285. In the first election of 1866, when Patton stood for the first time, and Bagehot stood, how did you vote?—I voted for Patton.

25,286. Did you get anything then?—I got 5*l.*

25,287. Who did you get that 5*l.* from?—It was from Mr. Temblett, I believe.

25,288. Why did not you take the 10*l.* the next time?—Because I did not care about it.

25,289. Really?—I did not care about it.

25,290. Did you vote at any election before that?—Yes.

25,291. 1865?—Yes.

25,292. Who did you vote for then?—Westropp.

25,293. Did you get anything then?—I did.

25,294. How much?—10*l.*

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

W. Harwood.

20 Sept. 1869.

25,295. Were you promised anything by the other side?—I was not.

25,296. Were you promised anything after the election besides the 5*l.* that you got?—No.

25,297. Only the 5*l.*?—Only the 5*l.*

25,298. How came you to take so little as 5*l.*?—I said, "I won't take this for my vote, it has cost me this for running about, one thing and another."

25,299. You took that for running about?—Yes.

25,300. That 10*l.* you took for your vote?—I did.

25,301. Was that the first time that you voted?—No.

25,302. Did you vote in 1859?—1859; who were the candidates?

25,303. Padwick and Westropp were the Conservatives, and Kinglake and Tynte the Liberals?—Padwick and Westropp? yes, I did.

25,304. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

25,305. How much?—10*l.*

25,306. Did you vote at the election before, in 1857?—I did.

25,307. Who did you vote for then? That was the time when Tynte and Kinglake and Follett stood?—Yes.

25,308. Who did you vote for?—Follett.

25,309. What did you get then?—Nothing.

25,310. Were you offered anything by the other side?—No.

25,311. Was that your first election?—No.

25,312. 1852?—1852 I think was Follett. Kinglake was thrown out, and then Follett, I think, who was the Conservative, and Tynte were returned.

25,313. Yes. Who did you vote for then?—Follett and Tynte.

25,314. Did you get anything?—I had 10*l.* for voting for Tynte, for splitting my vote.

25,315. Can you go further back than that?—I cannot.

25,316. How old were you when you first voted?—One or two and twenty, two and twenty.

25,317. And you have been at it ever since?—Yes.

25,318. Whenever you could get hold of anything, excepting in 1866 when you refused it, you took it?—I could have had 10*l.* at another election, but I gave that up.

25,319. When was that?—The last election of Mr. Patton.

25,320. With the exception of that you have always taken it?—I took it three times—four times—three tens and one five. I voted six times.

25,321. You have voted six times, and you have taken money four times?—I voted seven times, I believe.

25,322. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at either of the Conservative meetings at the last election?—I did go across to Gloucester Place one evening. I was not there about two minutes.

25,323. Was Mr. J. R. Smith there?—I did not see him at that time.

25,324. Did you hear any speeches made?—I heard a man of the name of Mr. Grabham making a speech.

25,325. What was he? Who is Mr. Grabham?—He was the landlord.

25,326. Was that at the "Clarence?"—No, that was at Gloucester Place.

25,327. Were you at the meeting at the "Clarence?"—I was there on the morning of the poll.

25,328. About 8 o'clock in the morning?—About 8 o'clock in the morning.

25,329. Did you hear anything said to this effect, that "there must nothing be said about money to-day?"—I did not.

25,330. What did you hear?—I heard Mr. Westropp when he was speaking say that not one farthing would be spent, whether they won or whether they lost.

25,331. (Mr. Price.) He did not say anything about "You don't wish me to go to prison, I am sure?"—Not that I recollect. I cannot recollect all that was said.

25,332. But that is rather an extraordinary sentence, you know, for a candidate to say, "You do not want me to go to prison?"—I cannot recollect his saying so.

25,333. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you recollect his saying anything like that, or to that effect?—I do not.

25,334. Or anything like money not being forthcoming, but that it would be all right afterwards?—I do not.

25,335. (Mr. Price.) Then at any rate it was that there was to be no money spent, whether they won or lost?—He said that not one penny piece should be spent, whether they won or lost.

25,336. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure there was nothing at all said by him about there being too much danger?—I never recollect any such words.

25,337. But anything to that effect; that he spoke as if there would be great danger in giving a bribe?—I do not recollect it.

25,338. Do you remember a meeting of the Conservative electors on the 10th October, about a month before the election when Mr. Westropp came into the town?—Yes.

25,339. Do you remember when Mr. Westropp came into the town on the 10th October, before the canvass began. Do you recollect there was some uproar in the town, because Mr. Westropp had previously stated, in the year 1866, that he was not going to stand again, and he had come into the town. Do you recollect a Conservative meeting being held on the 10th of October in consequence of that, and a great discussion taking place there?—In this hall, sir?

25,340. I do not know whether it was in this hall or in that hall, but do you remember any such thing; a meeting called in consequence of Mr. Westropp coming into the town?—I recollect a meeting being here.

25,341. Do you remember a resolution being proposed by somebody approving of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray as candidates. You can say "yes" or "no?"—Well I daresay there was someone, but I do not recollect who it was.

25,342. I said "somebody;" I did not ask you the name. Be so good as to give me an answer to my question. Do you recollect that resolution opposed and objected to by other persons present, and the chairman stating that he had great difficulty in saying whether it was carried or not. Do you remember all that?—No, I do not remember that.

25,343. You do not?—No, I do not.

25,344. Do you mean to swear that it did not take place?—Oh, I cannot say whether it did or not.

25,345. Were you there at the end of the meeting?—I cannot recollect whether I was there at the end or not.

25,346. Can you recollect whether it was a very uproarious meeting?—I do not. I don't very often go to a meeting.

25,347. You can recollect whether it was noisy?—I can recollect a noise being kicked up in this hall at one time.

25,348. At that meeting I say at which Mr. Westropp's candidature was proposed, was there an uproar?—I believe there was.

25,349. Well, can you tell me whether that was in consequence of having said that he was not coming and of his having come?—I do not know, I am sure.

25,350. Did you hear the speeches?—No, I did not.

25,351. Let me ask you, if you did not hear anything, and did not come to hear anything, what were you doing at the meeting?—I came to hear, but I do recollect what it was now.

25,352. Do you recollect Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray leaving the town shortly after that uproarious meeting?—I daresay they may; I cannot recollect.

25,353. You don't recollect?—No.

25,354. And the canvassing did not begin till more than a fortnight after that, did it?—I don't know, I am sure. I can't tell.

25,355. You swear you do not recollect any of these things ?—I do not recollect.

25,356. I thought you were a great supporter of Mr. Westropp ?—So I am, of the Conservative party, but I do not recollect. I do not keep that in my mind all the time.

25,357, Are you a member of the Working Man's Association ?—I am not.

JEFFERY DENMAN sworn.

25,358. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for the borough of Bridgwater ?—Yes.

25,359. What are you ?—An innkeeper.

25,360. What inn do you keep ?—The "White Lion."

25,361. Do you remember any conversation with Harwood or yourself about this 30*s.* and Vearncombe ?—Yes.

25,362. What was it ?—Vearncombe came in at the "Golden Ball" with Harwood ; Harwood then told what had happened, that he had been chaffing Vearncombe, stating that Alway had not paid him sufficient for his vote by 3*l.*

25,363. Was that said by way of chaff ?—That was said by way of chaff, and that Vearncombe had since been up for the 3*l.* and he had got 30*s.* of it.

25,364. Then you did not see any part of it at all ?—Nothing.

25,365. You only know what Harwood said ?—But Vearncombe said it was quite right what was stated. Vearncombe was there and he said it was quite right, and he said, "I have been and had 30*s.*"

25,366. Was Vearncombe speaking seriously ?—No, not very seriously. They were joking.

25,367. Did you think it was a joke at the time, or serious ?—I thought he had the money from what he said.

25,368. (Mr. Anstey.) Which was chaffing which ? Was Vearncombe chaffing Harwood, or Harwood chaffing Vearncombe ?—Harwood chaffing Vearncombe.

25,369. He was chaffing him and telling him, "You have not got all the money Alway promised you ;" because according to Vearncombe's account Alway had not paid Vearncombe all that he had promised him ?—Quite right.

25,370. Did you hear Vearncombe say that he had had 7*l.* for his vote, and that his wife took it out of his pocket ?—I heard him say that he had had 30*s.*, and that his wife had taken that out of his pocket.

25,371. Do you see much of him ?—On this occasion ?

25,372. No ; do you generally see much of him ?—No, no more than meeting other tradesmen as we pass.

25,373. Then it is not true what he told Mr. Justice Blackburn, "How came you to speak to Jefferey Denman at all ?" He said, "I works for him. I very often go there with work." That is not true ?—He has worked for me on several occasions.

25,374. (Mr. Price.) Did you at the time think he really had the money ?—I did.

25,375. What is your impression now about it since the thing has been inquired into ?—I question very much whether he had it or no. I should rather think not. At that time I did think so.

25,376. Well, that is all, unless you can give us some information about the elections. You are a voter, I suppose ?—Yes.

25,377. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.

25,378. For Westropp and Gray ?—Yes.

25,379. Was your house one of the open houses ?—No.

25,380. Was there no drinking going on there ?—No.

25,381. Did you have any bill ?—No.

25,382. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you promised anything ?—Never promised anything.

25,383. At the last election did you get anything for anybody else ?—I did not.

25,384. Did you bribe anybody ?—No.

25,385. Or promise anybody ?—No.

25,386. (Mr. Price.) Did you attend the meeting at the "Clarence" ?—I did.

25,387. What did you hear Mr. Westropp say ?—He persuaded them all to go to the poll like men, and if they would all stick together they would undoubtedly win.

25,388. Did he say, "You don't want me to go to prison, therefore we will say nothing about money" ?—No, I heard nothing of the sort mentioned.

25,389. In 1866 did you vote at Vanderbyl's election ?—At Vanderbyl's election I voted.

25,390. Whom for ?—For Mr. Patton.

25,391. Did you receive anything then ?—I did not. Vanderbyl's last election ?

25,392. At Patton's second election you voted for Patton ?—I voted for Patton. I had nothing.

25,393. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you have anything for anybody else ?—No.

25,394. Did you bribe anybody ?—No.

25,395. Or promise ?—Nor promise.

25,396. (Mr. Price.) You were not engaged in any way in that part of the business ?—I was not engaged in any way at all.

25,397. At the first election did you vote ?—Yes.

25,398. For Patten ?—Yes.

25,399. How much did you have then ?—10*l.*

25,400. Whom from ?—Frederick Harden.

25,401. When ?—Some time after the election.

25,402. How came you to have 10*l.* ?—He gave it to me. I was in his house and he gave it to me.

25,403. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it near the election of Vanderbyl ? —Yes.

25,404. They ran very near together ?—Yes, they ran very near together. It was before the other.

25,405. (Mr. Price.) Had you said anything about requiring money for your vote ?—No.

25,406. How came he to give it to you ?—He gave it to me. I do not know why.

25,407. Is there any reason why Harden should give you 10*l.* at that election ?—Because he gave me 10*l.* at the last election.

25,408. In 1865 did you vote for Westropp ?—Yes, in 1865. At the same election, the first election of Vanderbyl, I was offered also 15*l.*

25,409. By whom ?—William Heal, in the presence of Henry Cook.

25,410. Were you offered that to vote for Vanderbyl ?—Yes.

25,411. You voted for Patton, and a week after the election you got 10*l.* from Harden ?—I did.

25,412. In 1865 did you vote for Westropp ?—Yes.

25,413. Did you have anything then ?—Yes, I had 10*l.* then from Harden.

25,414. That is the reason why you suppose he gave you the other 10*l.* Had you anything offered on the other side ?—No.

25,415. In 1859 did you vote. The candidates were Tynte and Kinglake, and Padwick and Westropp ?—I had 10*l.* then.

25,416. Who from ?—John Bennett.

25,417. Which side ?—For the Conservatives.

25,418. Did you vote for Westropp and Padwick ?—I did.

25,419. Were you offered anything by the other side ?—I was not.

25,420. In 1857 did you vote ?—I voted for Follett.

25,421. Did you get anything then ?—I had nothing.

25,422. Were you promised anything ?—No.

25,423. Any offer ?—No offer, no promise.

25,424. Did you vote in 1852 when Kinglake first stood ?—No, I had not a vote then. I voted six times altogether.

25,425. (Mr. Coleridge.) And got paid four times ?—I got paid three times.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

J. Denman.

20 Sept. 1869.

25,426. (Mr. Price.) And had an offer at Vanderbyl's election?—I had 15*l.* put into my hands by William Heal.

25,427. And you gave it to him back?—Yes.

25,428. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say William Heal or William Hill?—William Heal.

ALFRED DYER sworn.

A. Dyer.

25,429. What are you?—A painter.

25,430. A master or journeyman?—A journeyman.

25,431. Whom do you work for?—For different masters.

25,432. Had you a vote at the last election?—Yes.

25,433. How did you vote?—For the Liberals.

25,434. Did you get any money for it?—No.

25,435. Did you hear of any money being sent for you?—Yes.

25,436. How much?—10*l.*

25,437. Whom was it given to, to come to you?—Mr. Jarman.

25,438. How do you know it was given to Mr. Jarman to hand over to you?—I did not know it before he gave his evidence here.

25,439. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came he not to give it you?—I do not know.

25,440. Have you ever asked him for it since?—Yes.

25,441. When?—About three weeks after the election.

25,442. You said you did not know it at that time?—He said he had not had it.

25,443. How came you to ask him for it?—Because he promised me.

25,444. When did he promise it to you?—About a fortnight before the election.

25,445. That if there was money going you should have it?—Yes.

25,446. (Mr. Price.) You did not know that he had got the money till you heard of it here?—No.

25,447. When you asked him for it did he say he had got no money then?—No.

25,448. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you press him?—No.

25,449. Did you ask him to give you something on account?—No.

25,450. Did he promise to give you something on account?—No.

25,451. (Mr. Price.) Were you a new voter last time?—Yes.

25,452. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have never got the 10*l.* yet?—No.

25,453. So that it is a moot question between you and Jarman now?—Yes.

25,454. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your qualification?—A 20*l.* house.

25,455. Then you are not a new voter?—Yes.

25,456. You have got a new vote and an old qualification?—Yes.

JOHN RICHARDS sworn.

J. Richards.

25,457. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Butcher and beerhouse keeper.

25,458. What beerhouse do you keep?—The "Cow and Butcher."

25,459. Do you know anything about the last election?—Yes.

25,460. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

25,461. Did you get anything?—No.

25,462. Were you promised anything?—No.

25,463. Were you offered anything by the other side?—No.

25,464. How did you vote in 1866?—Westropp and Gray, I think.

25,465. No, 1866, when Vanderbyl stood?—Patton.

25,466. You voted for Patton?—Yes.

25,467. Did you get anything then?—I got 5*l.*

25,468. Who from?—I do not know.

25,469. You do not know?—No. It was from a hand from a door.

25,470. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where was it?—At the "Bull and Butcher."

25,471. (Mr. Price.) You did not see whose hand it was?—No.

25,472. You knew it was for your vote?—I supposed so.

25,473. Did you get anything more after the election?—No.

25,474. You had only the 5*l.*?—No.

25,475. How came you to get so little?—I do not know.

25,476. Were you offered anything by Vanderbyl's people?—No.

25,477. Did you vote in 1866, at Bagehot's election?—In 1866, yes.

25,478. Whom did you vote for then? Patton and Bagehot stood?—Patton.

25,479. Did you get 5*l.* then?—Nothing.

25,480. Did you vote in 1865 when Westropp stood?—Yes.

25,481. Whom did you vote for?—Westropp.

25,482. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

25,483. How much?—10*l.*

25,484. Who from?—I do not know. From a hand, as I told you before.

25,485. From a hand at the "Bull and Butcher?"—Yes.

25,486. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you ever the luck to be paid on both sides at elections?—No.

25,487. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1859?—No, I had no vote then.

25,488. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you received altogether for your votes?—15*l.*

25,489. Is that all?—Yes.

25,490. You had two tens, had not you, or only 10*l.* once and 5*l.* once?—Yes.

25,491. Are you sure you have not received two tens?—I was offered 20*l.* in my hand to vote for Vanderbyl.

25,492. (Mr. Price.) When was that?—1867.

25,493. 1866, I suppose you mean?—1866, I was offered altogether 50*l.* or 60*l.* then.

25,494. Who by?—Stephen Colin Jones gave me 20*l.* into my hand.

25,495. You gave it back?—Yes. Stephen Crocker offered me 15*l.*, Henry Cook offered me 15*l.*, all in about 10 minutes.

25,496. And you would not have it?—No.

25,497. (Mr. Coleridge.) You resisted the temptation?—Yes, I suppose I did.

25,498. (Mr. Price.) You voted for Patton and got 10*l.*?—No, not then.

25,499. You got your 5*l.* a short time before for voting at the previous election?—The election before.

25,500. (Mr. Anstey.) About two weeks before?—Six weeks before, I think.

25,501. When did you get the money, on the day?—On the day.

25,502. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you get that second 5*l.* afterwards, that so many have spoken of?—No, I did not.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

W. H. Roberts.

20 Sept. 1869.

WILLIAM HENRY ROBERTS sworn.

25,503. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A coach-builder.

25,504. Whom do you work for?—On my own account, in the firm of Roberts & Son.

25,505. You are on your own account in the firm of Roberts & Son?—Yes.

25,506. Were you a voter at the last election?—Yes.

25,507. Was that your first time of voting?—No.

25,508. Whom did you vote for?—Oh, not at all. I did not vote for anyone.

25,509. Did you take any part last time?—No.

25,510. Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

25,511. Whom did you vote for then?—For Vanderbyl.

25,512. Did you get anything for it?—No.

25,513. Were you promised anything?—No.

25,514. Was your father employed for Vanderbyl at that election?—Yes.

25,515. As a briber?—He bribed, I believe, several.

25,516. Is he the man who bribed Hook, the provision dealer?—Yes.

25,517. You are sure you got nothing from him?—Yes, certain.

25,518. What, when he had money to give away, do you mean to say that he gave none to you?—I said I have not had any money.

25,519. I am asking, because it seems extraordinary that your father should go about bribing other people. Did you vote at the other election of 1866?—For Bagehot?

25,520. Bagehot?—Yes.

25,521. Did you get anything then?—No.

25,522. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did your father bribe at that election too?—No, I do not believe he did.

25,523. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at any election before that?—No.

25,524. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean you have never had anything at all for your vote?—I have never had any money or been promised any, either directly or indirectly.

25,525. (Mr. Price.) Do you live with your father?—I did when I voted for Vanderbyl. I do not now.

(Mr. Price.) The witnesses who have been called and have not answered will be put into the list for to-morrow, and then we shall have exhausted, so far as we know at present, the evidence to be given with respect to the bribing on the Liberal side. We propose next to go into the question of what bribery has taken place on the Conservative side.

R. Hurley.

RICHARD HURLEY sworn.

25,526. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Commercially a butcher.

25,527. Are you a master?—Yes.

25,528. Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—I am,

25,529. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

25,530. How did you vote?—Liberal.

25,531. Did you get anything for it?—No.

25,532. Were you promised anything?—I was not.

25,533. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you bribe anybody else?—No.

25,534. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election of 1866 when Vanderbyl stood first?—To save the time of the court I may say I have voted since 1852. I voted then for Kinglake and Mansell. There was a division in the Liberal camp just then. I voted for them, and I have never received anything for my vote in my life. I have never been offered anything but once.

25,535. When was that?—That was at Mr. Westropp's election in 1865.

25,536. What were you offered then?—25*l.*

25,537. Who by?—Edward Denner.

25,538. To vote for the Conservatives?—Yes.

25,539. Have you voted at every election since 1852, including the last, and never received anything for your vote, or had any offer except in 1865 by Edward Denner?—I have.

25,540. That is what you mean to tell us?—Yes.

25,541. (Mr. Anstey.) But, Mr. Hurley (I do not ask you out of curiosity as to your affairs), were you not in embarrassed circumstances shortly before the election of 1865?—I was.

25,542. Shortly after the election of 1865, is it true that your circumstances had so far brightened that your cheques were flying and circulating through the town?—Well, there was something said of that at the House of Commons by John Veysey, and I wish to call your attention also to the discrepancy in my evidence.

(Mr. Anstey.) Never mind that.

25,543. Shortly after the election had your circumstances so brightened as that you had recovered your credit, and your cheques were circulating?—I offered a composition to my creditors. If you will allow me I will go into the history of it.

25,544. (Mr. Price.) You can easily answer that question. Then you may explain as much as you like. Had your circumstances improved to that degree?—They had.

25,545. (Mr. Anstey.) Soon after the election?—Yes.

25,546. (Mr. Price.) And were your cheques going about the town?—They were, no doubt.

25,547. Well, now explain?—The previous election to 1865. Was that Mr. Follett's?

25,548. That would be Padwick and Westropp?—I am not sure whether it was the election of 1859 or 1857, but the Tories issued a paper here called the "Bridgwater Times," I believe, at that time, and they were defeated at that election, and they were very spiteful. They issued an article in that paper calling upon the people to exert exclusive dealing; and some of the tradesmen went so far as to put papers in the windows stating, "Exclusive dealing done here." It very much affected my trade, and there was a loss in stock.

25,549. That brought you into embarrassed circumstances?—It did. I lost 150*l.* in one season.

25,550. We will take that for granted that you were in embarrassed circumstances. Now tell us how it was that your circumstances brightened?—A report was rose by some ill-disposed persons that I had failed. I had to struggle with that for four years, until I was obliged to succumb to an offer of a composition. I offered a composition and it was accepted.

25,551. (Mr. Anstey.) When was that?—I think that would be some short time before Mr. Westropp was elected.

25,552. (Mr. Price.) In 1865?—Either 1865 or 1864, I am not sure which.

25,553. Well, how did your circumstances brighten after that election?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond sent for me, and he said, "Mr. Hurley," he said, "I have "understood that you have had a misfortune in your "business." I said, "I have." He said, "I have "inquired into your character, and I am much "pleased to find we have a man like you in the town. "You have always gone to poll without any trouble, "and we think it due to you to assist you if we "possibly can," and he offered me some money.

25,554. How much?—25*l.*, and I paid him five per cent. for the interest of it, and I paid him the principal before he died.

25,555. (Mr. Anstey.) When did he make this payment to you? How long before the election?—Oh, it was after the election. It was between some elections. It was between two elections; it was nothing to do with my vote whatever.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

R. Hurley.

20 Sept. 1869.

25,556. Was it between 1859 and 1865 you say you were in embarrassed circumstances, in consequence of the exclusive dealing of 1859, and that soon after the election of 1865 your circumstances improved?—It was after Sir John Shelley's election, between that and the next election.

25,557. Had he promised you this money before?—Never spoke to the gentleman in my life about my vote, or anything pertaining to politics, until that.

25,558. Not until he sent for you and told you this?—Yes.

25,559. Was that the whole amount of the assistance you got?—From him. I got some other assistance.

25,560. When?—At the same time.

25,561. Before the election or after?—At the same time.

25,562. (Mr. Price.) Was that the whole assistance you got from him?—It was.

25,563. 25*l.* would not enable you to send any cheques about the town?—I had other assistance.

25,564. Tell us how much altogether you had in the way of money assistance?—80*l.* at that transaction.

25,565. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were the other persons who advanced the money?—There was Mr. Francis Thompson.

25,566. Were they all of them active persons in the Liberal party?

25,567. (Mr. Price.) Is that Mr. Francis Thompson the ironmonger?—Yes.

25,568. How much did he advance you?—10*l.*, I think.

25,569. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there a subscription got up amongst the Liberal party?—I do not know how it was done. Mr. Lovibond did it.

25,570. Were they all Liberals who advanced the money?—They were.

25,571. (Mr. Price.) Did you pay back the whole?—I paid interest for the whole, and some I have paid all, and others I have paid portions.

25,572. Are you paying interest still?—I am. I think I have paid a little more than half of it.

25,573. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the whole amount of the assistance you got?—It is. I was offered assistance by the Tories just the same.

25,574. Did anybody inform you before the election that this subscription was going to be made for you?—Not at all. I never heard of it.

25,575. Were you ever employed to bribe anybody else?—It is out of my line altogether.

25,576. Well, were you?—Never. I may say in confirmation of that there is a party in the town who has been accused of having put about this bill (handing a printed bill to the court), but I am the author of the printing and issuing of that bill, and I think I ought to bear the blame of it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) This is calling attention to the penalties under the Act.

25,577. (Mr. Price.) When did you put that out?—Some short time before the election.

25,578. The last election?—I distributed them at all our meetings, and I sent one to each candidate by post.

25,579. (Mr. Anstey.) You signed the petition in 1866?—I am proud to be one who signed it.

25,580. Have you any information to furnish of the kind stated there; information of the corrupt practices committed in 1865, besides those proved before the committee of the House?—I think if the Commission had been sitting at that time there would have been ample. According to the statement given at that time there was about 100, and only seven or eight cases were gone into.

25,581. Can you furnish us now with any information besides that which we have in the report of the committee, there were about 93 cases left?—I am not intimately acquainted with bribery, and therefore do not know anything but by hearsay.

25,582. (Mr. Price.) You wanted to have a commission then to inquire?—I wanted to have a commission and have my character vindicated.

25,583. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are asked about this commission. There is nothing about your character?—There is a great deal if you were to be kind enough to look into the blue book.

25,584. The learned commissioner asked you whether when you signed that petition you really wished a commission of inquiry?—I did, and I was given to understand that a commission of inquiry would have done the same as the scrutiny into Sir John Shelley's seat. That was my object in signing, and another object was, if you will look at the blue book, and compare it with Mr. Westropp and Mr. Veysey's evidence, you will find there was a great discrepancy.

25,585. I do not find that you were examined at all except to prove agency. You were not examined about your circumstances?—No, agency, I mean.

25,586. Nobody doubts your evidence as to agency. What Mr. Veysey said you were not examined upon at all, he came after you, and there is no reflection on you in the blue book?—He said he did not canvass me. I did not want canvassing.

25,587. Whatever there was as regards your circumstances, you have thoroughly and satisfactorily explained it now, but you think you would have done so much earlier if you had had a commission of inquiry like this in 1866?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) I am bound to say you are only the second person hitherto discoverable who appears to have signed that petition with good faith and sincere adherence to its statement and its prayer.

Mrs. Susan Bennett sworn.

Mrs. S. Bennett.

25,588. (Mr. Price.) Are you the wife of Bennett who was examined this morning?—Yes.

25,589. And who says you received 20*l.* or 25*l.*, he does not know which. Tell us exactly under what circumstances you got it?—I do not know. Mr. Thomas left it there.

25,590. Tell us what passed, and do not give us the trouble to ask you questions. He came to your house. What did he say?—I cannot recollect all.

25,591. What did he say?—He brought the money and came in and told me to tell Bennett to go to the poll. I told Bennett, and he said he would not have anything to do with the money. He said I did not know the consequence of it.

25,592. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you said you did not care about the consequences and put it into your pocket?—I kept it.

25,593. You spent it?—Yes, I did, but Bennett knows nothing at all about it until after he came from poll.

25,594. He says he was absent, and Thomas came there and said there was the money, and he was to go and vote?—Yes, that is what Thomas said to me.

25,595. Is that all?—He might have said more, but I do not recollect, it is so long ago.

25,596. Did you tell him that he was going to vote Liberal?—He was always Liberal. Every one in Bridgwater knows that.

25,597. Did you say he was going to vote Liberal?—No, I did not.

25,598. (Mr. Price.) Did you know your husband would vote for Mr. Vanderbyl and did not want money for his vote?—If he had not had the 20*l.* he would have voted.

25,599. You know that?—Yes.

25,600. (Mr. Anstey.) As a matter of fact has the money been spent for domestic purposes?—No, it was not. I had some for a year and a half.

25,601. What has become of it? I was ill at the time and I went away. That is where I spent the money, and Bennett never had a farthing, and never a farthing went into the business.

25,602. Is it expended yet?—Yes, but I am not aware whether it was 20*l.* or 25*l.* I was under the impression at the time that it was 25*l.*

25,603. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all you know about elections here?—I do not know anything about them.

25,604. You never had another 20*l.*?—No.

JOSEPH REEVE sworn.

25,605. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A veterinary surgeon.

25,606. How long have you been in practice here?—20 years.

25,607. Are you a voter?—Yes.

25,608. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

25,609. How was that?—Because I did not feel inclined to have anything to do with it.

25,610. What are your politics?—My politics are Liberal.

25,611. Why did not you vote for the Liberals?—Because I did not feel disposed to do so.

25,612. Why not? It was a very critical time for your party, was not it, the last election. I mean both politically as well as in the town here?—It might have been, but I was determined not to have anything to do with it.

25,613. Why?—Because when I went to London on the petition there I did not consider I was sufficiently paid.

25,614. Then it was a question of money with you last time?—No.

25,615. (Mr. Coleridge.) If sufficiently paid you would have voted, I suppose?—Yes, if sufficiently paid.

25,616. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election of Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866?—Yes.

25,617. Who for?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

25,618. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

25,619. How much?—20*l.*

25,620. Who from?—Bulpin.

25,621. Did you vote at the election of Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

25,622. How much did you get then?—10*l.*

25,623. Who from?—Bulpin.

25,624. Did you vote at the election of 1865 when Mr. Westropp stood against Sir John Shelley?—No.

25,625. You did not vote at all?—No, I do not think I did.

25,626. It is a very curious thing. It seems that you did not vote the last time, when it was said there was no money going on the Liberal side, and you did not vote in 1865, when it was also said?—No; I have always taken it in this light, that there was always money going, and I thought I might as well have it as other people.

25,627. How were you treated at the petition in the House of Commons in 1866, which made you not vote last time?—Because there was no money going.

25,628. But you said just now the reason was you had not been treated well?—You mean referring to this last election?

25,629. Yes; you said you did not vote this last election, and I pressed you very much, and you said because you did not think you were well treated in 1866 in the matter in the House of Commons?—I was determined I would wipe my hands of it.

25,630. But after that you told us you took money twice?—Which, previous?

25,631. When you were before the House of Commons was in 1866, was not it?—Yes.

25,632. In respect of Mr. Westropp's election?—Yes.

25,633. How were you unhandsomely treated then?—I lost all my trade and credit in Bridgwater by going there.

25,634. Where?—Up against the petition.

25,635. Against the petition?—Yes.

25,636. Did you go up for Mr. Westropp?—I went against him.

25,637. He was unseated?—Yes.

25,638. Then you must have gone for the petition?—It was for him.

25,639. Did you go for the petition or for Mr. Westropp?—I went against Mr. Westropp.

25,640. How did you lose credit and business by going up as witness for the petition?—I was there nine days and lost trade, and people lost confidence in me.

25,641. How did they lose confidence in you if you spoke the truth? Were you examined?—Yes.

25,642. Did you speak the truth?—Yes.

25,643. Then how should you lose confidence with people if you did?—Well, such was the case.

25,644. You lost credit then with your own party, do you mean?—Yes.

25,645. You lost credit with your own party for speaking the truth?—I lost credit with everybody, they thought I had not anything to do with it.

25,646. What had you had to do with that election?—It was very trifling. I was asked whether Mr. Veysey had ever said to me "Were you a supporter of Mr. Westropp?" and such was the statement I made before the House of Commons.

25,647. Did you say that which was untrue then?—It was true.

25,648. I do not know how you lost credit; is it the case that when a man speaks the truth when he is a witness he does lose credit in Bridgwater?—I am sorry to say he does.

25,649. That you mean to represent?—I mean to say that people doubted my word whether I had spoken the truth or not.

25,650. Then you were accused of saying that which was false?—They interpreted it as such.

25,651. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you accused of; what had you said?—I said I heard Mr. Veysey say he was attending to Mr. Westropp's interests—he was one of his agents.

25,652. (Mr. Price.) Was that true?—That was true.

25,653. Then what was the harm in that?—I cannot imagine. I do not think there was any harm on my part.

25,654. Was that all you said?—Yes.

25,655. (Mr. Anstey.) Stop a moment. Did you vote at that election at all?—No, I did not.

25,656. Was not it about an examination with regard to your reasons for not voting at that election that you got into discredit?—No, I do not think so.

25,657. What were your reasons?—Because I was not sufficiently well treated.

25,658. Because there was no money?—No.

25,659. Because there was no money, you mean?—I am bound in justice to myself to say that there was money, and I accounted for it, but I was promised more than I got.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You were not bribed enough, that is the reason you did not vote.

25,660. (Mr. Price.) Who gave you that money at the election of 1865?—Morris.

25,661. On whose side?—Westropp's.

25,662. (Mr. Anstey.) And yet you did not vote at all?—I did.

25,663. (Mr. Price.) How much did Morris give you?—10*l.*

25,664. How much did you expect?—I was promised 20*l.*

25,665. (Mr. Anstey.) That is what you mean by saying they did not serve you well?—Yes.

25,666. They are what you call in your evidence the blue party?—Yes.

25,667. You were asked by the committee, "What "do you mean by the party not serving you well, do "you mean they refused to give you money?" And you said, "Oh no, they did." And the committee asked you, "What do you mean?" The question I have asked you several times myself—to which you answer, "They did not give me according to promise." So that what you meant to tell them was that they did and they did not; they did give you 10*l.* but not 20*l.*?—They did that amount, but did not give me sufficient.

25,668. Why did not you tell the committee that?—They did not ask it.

25,669. They did, and you give contradictory answers?—If they did I was not aware of the question.

25,670. Then probably the contradictory appearance of your answers gave you that bad credit which you say you have ever since obtained in this borough?—I think so.

25,671. (Mr. Price.) Have you regained your credit?—Partly.

25,672. How did you manage that?—By showing the public——

25,673. That you were in the habit of voting when you were paid for it?—As money was going.

(Mr. Coleridge.) By taking bribes at two subsequent elections?

25,674. (Mr. Price.) By taking money whenever you could get hold of it?—Yes.

25,675. (Mr. Coleridge.) You lost credit by professing to tell the truth?—Yes.

25,676. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a Liberal or a Conservative?—I am a Liberal.

25,677. (Mr. Anstey.) I will not go through the list, but did you sign the petition of 1866?—No, I knew nothing of it.

FRANCIS WESTLAKE sworn.

F. Westlake.

25,678. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

25,679. A master tailor?—No, foreman to Lott and Edwards.

25,680. In this town?—Yes.

25,681. Are you a voter?—Yes.

25,682. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

25,683. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

25,684. Did you get anything?—No.

25,685. Were you promised anything?—No.

25,686. What time of the day did you vote?—About 10. I think it may be a few minutes after.

25,687. Up to that time I suppose you heard no money was being spent?—I never heard of money being spent during the election.

25,688. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give any money to anybody at the last election?—No.

25,689. Or promise any?—No.

25,690. Or hand any to one of your men?—No.

25,691. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

25,692. For Vanderbyl?—Yes.

25,693. How much did you get then?—Nothing.

25,694. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

25,695. Were you offered anything on either side?—Nothing on either side. The Tories know it is no use to offer me.

25,696. In 1866, at Patton's election, did you vote for Mr. Bagehot?—I did.

25,697. Without money?—No.

25,698. No money?—I received 10*l.* after Bagehot's election; some time after the election I did.

25,699. You say it was no good for the Tories to come to you?—Not a bit.

25,700. Not with 20*l.*?—Not with 30*l.* or 100*l.*

25,701. You never have had the chance?—I might have had it.

25,702. But did you ever have it?—Yes.

25,703. When?—Well, I have been offered a chance at Shelley's election. That was my first go.

25,704. What were you offered?—Not offered, an inducement.

25,705. What was the inducement then?—That there should be something.

25,706. Who said so?—Well, I really cannot recollect at the present time. I know there were inducements held out.

25,707. (Mr. Anstey.) Who offered you?—No offer. I cannot remember now.

25,708. (Mr. Price.) That is the only account you can give?—Yes.

(Allan.) It is returned in this bill of 30*l.* paid by me to Charles Lott in 1866, and Westlake is one of the men Lott said he paid. Lott is now dead.

25,709. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) How about that. Did Charles Lott pay you?—Never one farthing.

25,710. In 1866?—Never one farthing.

25,711. Did you hear until now that he had some money and returned your name as one to whom he gave 10*l.*?—This is the first time, on my honour, I ever heard that Charles Lott ever received one farthing for me, or ever asked me which way I would vote.

25,712. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Lott a relation of yours?—No, I was foreman of Lott's establishment.

25,713. (Mr. Price.) And you never heard anything said about Lott returning your name?—No.

(Mr. Price, to Allan.) Did he return his name to you?

(Allan.) Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) How much?

(Allan.) He returned three voters for 30*l.* My business was with Charles Lott.

25,714. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) Now, Allan said Lott had 30*l.* of your money, and accounted for the 30*l.* that he had paid three men and gave in your name as one of the three he had paid?—It is not true decidedly. I never received one farthing from Charles Lott.

25,715. Are you now foreman?—I am in the same establishment. It is Mr. Isaac Lott and Mr. Edwards at the present time.

25,716. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Lott ever make you a present about that time?—Never.

25,717. Do you know of his giving money to any of the other men in his employ?—No.

25,718. Did you ever hear any mention that he had got 10*l.* about the election?—No, I did not, and I deny it in toto that Lott ever gave me the value of one yard of ribbon in his life.

25,719. (Mr. Anstey.) I see a name of Charles H. Lott, draper, to the petition of 80 to the House of Commons in 1866, was that the same person?—Yes, I have been foreman with him or the establishment 16 years.

25,720. You were called for that purpose no doubt as to the 10*l.* to clear yourself?—I hope I have done so.

(Mr. Price.) We cannot get the evidence of a dead man, so we must trust the living.

WILLIAM PREECE sworn.

W. Preece.

25,721. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A builder.

25,722. A master or journeyman?—Master.

25,723. Do you employ men under you?—Occasionally.

25,724. Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—I am.

25,725. Something has been said about your being supposed to have received money. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

25,726. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

25,727. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get any promise?—No.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

W. Preece.

20 Sept. 1869.

25,728. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the last election of 1866, Vanderbyl's?—No.

25,729. Did you get anything then?—Nothing whatever.

25,730. Who is it said you had money?—Gold, in his evidence he gave; he accused me of receiving 10*l.* to bribe a man named Gane. I never received it.

25,731. What election?—I understood Bagehot's election.

25,732. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you receive it from anyone else?—I received 10*l.* from Searle for the same man.

25,733. Then the only question is, whether you received it from the one or the other?—I received it from Searle, and it has gone forward that I have received it for my own vote.

25,734. Who did you give it to?—Thomas Gane, in my own house.

25,735. Did you keep any for yourself?—No, not a farthing.

25,736. Gave the whole 10*l.* to him?—I gave the whole 10*l.* to him.

25,737. (Mr. Price.) Did not you get anything for yourself?—No.

25,738. What did you get for your trouble?—Nothing.

25,739. (Mr. Anstey.) Who else did you bribe?—No one.

25,740. No other elector?—No other elector whatever.

STEPHEN CROCKER sworn.

S. Crocker.

25,741. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am nothing at all at present; lately an innkeeper.

25,742. Did you keep the inn next to Bussell?—A few doors below the "King's Arms."

25,743. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

25,744. Were you a voter?—No, I had no vote at the last election.

25,745. You had given up your house at that time?—I had.

25,746. Did you vote at the election before, Vanderbyl's?—Yes.

25,747. How did you vote then?—For Vanderbyl.

25,748. Did you get anything then?—No, I had 20*l.* of Andrew Allan to bribe John Richards with. That 20*l.*, they owed me 44*l.* odd, I kept towards my account.

25,749. Now let us have from you your account about being owed 44*l.*?—On the election of Sir John Shelley.

25,750. Who had you the 20*l.* to bribe?—John Richards.

25,751. And he never got the benefit of it?—He did not.

25,752. You embezzled it?—You may put that view if you like. No, I did not embezzle it, for I took the advice of a solicitor, and he advised me to keep it.

25,753. Who is the solicitor who advised you?—Reed and Cook, Mr. James Cook.

25,754. Did you undertake, when you got the 20*l.*, to hand that over to someone else?—I went after that for that purpose.

25,755. For the purpose of handing it to someone else?—Yes.

25,756. And you got it on the faith that you would hand it over to this man?—Ah, but I took it to him.

25,757. Did you give it to him?—Yes, and he told me he had voted, and gave it to me again.

25,758. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you return it to Allan as having been given to Richards?—No. I gave him the account, and gave him credit in my bill for 20*l.*

25,759. (Mr. Anstey.) Now about the 44*l.*?—At the election of Sir John Shelley I was keeping the "Lamb" at the time, and Mr. James Cook came and was made a Forester there, and ran up a drink score of between 1*l.* and 2*l.* On the 7th of July Sir John Shelley and several other gentlemen came, and were made Foresters as well, and they ran up a drink score of something like 4*l.* altogether, I think about 6*l.*, and I got an order on the day of the election for the balance. That made up an amount of 19*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*

25,760. How did it get up to 44*l.*?—I will tell you that in a moment. I gave an account in to Mr. James Cook. He sent for it in fact. That is the account (handing it in).

25,761. Did you send it in after Sir John Shelley's election?—They sent for it, and I sent that in, and at Mr. Bagehot's election I was keeping the "Lamb" and the "King's Arms." I got an order for 5*l.* at each house, and was to charge my own personal expenses, which I charged at 2*l.* That would be 12*l.* On the following election of Mr. Vanderbyl I received an order.

25,762. What were your personal expenses?—What I spent out of my own pocket in treating other people.

25,763. But you had your own beershop, and did not pay for it?—But I was not at home all the time.

25,764. You went about treating at other places?—Yes. If I fell in with a voter anywhere I took him to treat him. On Mr. Vanderbyl's election I charged 10*l.* again. I received the order on that occasion from Thomas Duddridge, in Brown and Company's employ, 5*l.* for the "Lamb" and 5*l.* for the "King's Arms," and I was told then to charge my own personal expenses. I charged half a guinea, having to go to Highbridge and Burnham.

25,765. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Duddridge authorize all those expenses?—Duddridge authorized to let go 5*l.* at the "Lamb" and 5*l.* at the "King's Arms," and on that occasion Allan let me have 20*l.* at the same election, and he asked me for it the next day. I told him I had not it in my pocket, but if he came to my house the following Sunday he should have it; but in the meantime I went to Reed and Cook, and told them I had this 20*l.*, and their advice to me was to keep it. If I gave it back to Allan I should never have the money.

25,766. They thought that Allan would not give it to you?—I do not know; the probability is I thought I should never get the money anywhere at all. Allan came to my house the following Sunday afternoon, and when he came there—I had had the bills made out—I gave him the bills, and gave him credit for the 20*l.* at the bottom.

25,767. Then you have not got the balance still?—No.

25,768. But you told Allan the whole of this when you gave up your account to him?—Certainly I would not have stopped it from Andrew Allan, but he promised me previously that he would see I was paid my first bill of Shelley's.

25,769. Allan had?—Yes, and Mr. Lovibond.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

25,770. (Mr. Price.) Do you want to explain this, Mr. Allan?—My experience of him was about a month from Bagehot's first election to Vanderbyl's election. At Vanderbyl's first election he brought in a bill of 16*l.*, which had been incurred at Bagehot's election about a month prior. On Vanderbyl's first election I paid Stephen Crocker his beer bill at Bagehot's election, a month prior. That was about 16*l.*, to the best of my recollection. He had 20*l.* of me to go and poll Richards with, which money he never returned, and he never polled Richards. Three or four days after the election I found his name in Smith's list as having received 10*l.* the same day.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

20 Sept. 1869.

Stephen Crocker recalled.

S. Crocker.

(The witness.) The 10*l.* I received from John Smith was to pay a man named Tooze, who kept the "Fleur de lis."

25,771. You never told us that?—I was going to tell you that I deny that Allan gave me the 16*l.*; I never had money in my life, barring the 20*l.*

Andrew Allan recalled.

A. Allan.

25,772. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he ever give you a receipt for it when you paid him the 16*l.*?—He gave me a bill, and I gave that into the hands of Mr. Lovibond, and I was paid.

Stephen Crocker recalled.

S. Crocker.

(The witness.) No doubt Mr. Lovibond has it if it was paid in. I never received a farthing from Allan, barring the 20*l.*

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond has given up all the papers which he has, so we shall see whether it is here.

25,773. Now about this 10*l.* from Mr. Smith?—10*l.* I gave a man named Tooze, I do not know his christian name, he keeps the "Fleur de lis;" I gave him that for him not to vote. He voted at Patton's election. I saw him at Vanderbyl's first election, and he would not go to poll for Vanderbyl, and I gave him 10*l.* to go away and not vote.

25,774. How is it Mr. Smith returned your name to Allan as the man who had received 10*l.* in respect of his own vote?—That would be the 10*l.*

25,775. How did you account for that if Smith knew that you were going to give it to Tooze?—I do not know.

25,776. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Tooze ever have the money?—Oh, yes.

25,777. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us?—That is all.

25,778. (Mr. Anstey.) What are you to Captain Crocker?—Brother.

Mr. William Thomas Holland sworn.

Mr. W. T. Holland.

25,779. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A merchant in the firm of Browne and Co.

25,780. And did you vote at the last election?—I did.

25,781. Who for?—The Liberal side.

25,782. Were you concerned in bribing at all?—None at all.

25,783. Either as receiver, payer, or promiser?—Not at all.

25,784. Or in offering bribes?—No.

25,785. Or in any way influencing?—Or in any way influencing the men.

25,786. Did you canvass them?—I did not canvass them, I refused to canvass them; I refused to go with the candidates when they came, and the only thing that I regret in my conduct is that I did not refuse any of the candidates coming to our yards. I gave permission to the lawyers on the Liberal side, and I immediately sent to the yards that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray were to be received with civility in the yards; but I would not have done that, only I had given permission to the other candidates. I am a signer of that famous petition, one of the 80.

25,787. Did you take a part in Vanderbyl's election in 1866 in offering bribes or bribing?—No, none whatever.

25,788. Did you at Patton's election?—No, I had no vote and purposely kept away.

25,789. You signed the petition?—I signed a petition when Mr. Westropp was unseated, for further inquiry. I came to this town in 1859, and of course had heard of the reports during six years residence here of the bribery and corruption which went on extensively at every election. When Sir John Shelley came here I became more interested and did all I could to secure his return. I went about with him, and when he assured us that he had plenty of evidence before him to turn out Mr. Westropp, and further than that to purify the borough, if we would back him in it, I became a subscriber to the fund which paid part of the expenses to turn out Mr. Westropp.

25,790. (Mr. Coleridge.) That club?—Yes; when Mr. Westropp was unseated, and when we were told that a writ would be probably issued, a good many of us who signed that petition got very indignant at it. We did not subscribe our money to unseat Mr. Westropp.

25,791. You hoped that further action would be taken in the House of Commons?—Yes, and signed it for that and for no other reason.

(Mr. Price.) You signed as one of the petitioners, and have given a very creditable account of why you signed it.

James Alfred Bounsall sworn.

J. A. Bounsall.

25,792. (Mr. Anstey.) You are an Independent minister, I think?—No, that is my father. I am a cashier in the employ of Brown & Co. at present.

25,793. (Mr. Price.) Were you a signer of the petition?—Yes.

25,794. And it is for that reason that you are asked to come here?—I really do not know.

25,795. Have you anything to do with any of the elections which you have been concerned in, either in the way of bribing or offering bribes?—I have not, no case.

25,796. Nor used the influence of your firm in controlling voters?—No, certainly not; no influence.

25,797. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

25,798. Did you sign the petition?—I did at the time.

25,799. Under the same impression as Mr. Holland?—Quite the same impression.

25,800. With a view to have this inquiry started, with a view of investigating?—Yes.

25,801. Not merely to stop the writ?—Certainly not.

John Turner sworn.

J. Turner

25,802. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a brickyard labourer.

25,803. Where do you work?—At Mr. Major's.

25,804. Have you a vote?—I have.

25,805. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

25,806. For whom?—Vanderbyl.

25,807. Did you get anything for it?—No.

25,808. What time of the day did you vote, 9 or just before, were you offered anything?—No.

25,809. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything after the election?—No, not a farthing.

25,810. (Mr. Price.) You never made any claim?—I never made any claim.

25,811. Did you vote before at Vanderbyl's?—No, I never voted before.

JAMES PARTRIDGE sworn. J. Partridge.

25,812. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A chemist and druggist.

25,813. Do you know anything about the last election?—No; I signed the petition.

25,814. Did you sign the petition for the same reason which has been given?—Certainly I did.

25,815. That there should be an inquiry?—Yes.

25,816. Not for the suspension of the writ merely?—No, certainly not.

25,817. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had anything to do with bribing anybody?—No, never.

25,818. At any election?—At Bagehot's election I received a list from the legal agents which contained the names of five or six persons with whom I might try my influence to bring them to the poll. I called upon some of them, and I saw very plainly that they wanted money, and I broke the thing up and went home.

25,819. You did not promise any of them anything?—No, certainly not.

25,820. Did you poll any?—Not one.

25,821. You had nothing to do with bribery at any election?—Not any election.

JAMES STUDLEY sworn. J. Studley.

25,822. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

25,823. Whom do you work for?—Mr. Gold.

25,824. For whom did you vote at the last election? Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

25,825. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

25,826. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

25,827. Were you promised anything?—No.

25,828. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything the election before? Did you promise anybody else?—I did not.

25,829. Had you anything to do with it?—No; I was aware that bribery was going on. I happened to be at the "New Inn," and saw the men going up and down stairs.

25,830. There is another man of your name?—No, not another in the town of the same name.

25,831. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you one of the voters in 1865?—No.

25,832. Any of your family at that time?—No, not in Bridgewater.

25,833. (Mr. Price.) Did you see money going at the "New Inn"?—I did not see the money, but I was almost sure.

25,834. Did you see the Buttles there?—I did.

25,835. Going in one by one?—Yes.

(Allan.) Studley was one of the agents.

(The witness.) I stood at the bottom of the stairs in no way employed with it.

25,836-7. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see the estimable Buttles going up?—Yes.

25,838. Did you pass that one not a voter?—He went upstairs and came back again, and says, "I cannot see anybody." I thought that strange, so many going up and down, and I went up and saw Allan, and young Buttle went in.

25,839. Did you not know that he was not a voter?—I did not. I suppose I could have had it as well as the rest if I had liked, but I did not.

RICHARD TOOZE sworn. R. Tooze.

25,840. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An innkeeper.

25,841. What inn do you keep?—The "Fleur-de-lis."

25,842. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

25,843. Did you get any money at the last election?—No.

25,844. Did you get any in 1866?—Not at the election.

25,845. After the election?—After the election.

25,846. Yes; Vanderbyl's election?—Some time after.

25,847. What did you get?—Five sovereigns and a 10*l.* note.

25,848. Who from?—Crocker.

25,849. Which?—Down near the quay.

25,850. (Mr. Coleridge.) Stephen Crocker?—Yes.

25,851. (Mr. Price.) He gave you 10*l.* and 5*l.*?—Yes.

25,852. You are quite sure about that?—Yes.

25,853. How long after the election?—I cannot say; a long time.

25,854. Did he tell you it was for your vote?—No, he did not.

25,855. What did he tell you? He did not say, "Here is 10*l.* and 5*l.*," and say nothing more about it?—No, he did not.

25,856. Then what was it? Tell us about it?—I do not recollect.

25,857. You must. You do not get 15*l.* paid you for nothing?—I never asked anybody for a farthing's-worth at any election.

25,858. What did you imagine you got the 15*l.* for?—I do not know what it was for.

25,859-60. Did not you know it was for your vote? Did not he tell you so?—I did not vote at that election.

25,861. Did he not tell you it was for not having voted? Did not he try to prevent your voting, and say you would get something for it?—He did not try to prevent.

25,862. Had you not voted at Patton's election before?—I had.

25,863. Had not Crocker asked you to vote for Vanderbyl?—He was speaking of Vanderbyl.

25,864. And did not you refuse, and did he not say, "I will get you money if you will not vote at all"?—I did not wish to have anything to say about elections.

25,865. Did he not say he would get you money if you would not vote at all?—Well, I think it was mentioned.

25,866. (Mr. Price.) Take care if you do not answer the questions.

25,867. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you go on lying in that way,——It is no lie.

25,868. What did he say about voting? Had you declined to vote for Vanderbyl?—I do not know what he did say.

25,869. Let us know what the effect of it was. I do not care about the words?—I said, I did not wish to vote.

25,870. You said, you did not wish to vote for Vanderbyl, but you voted for Patton before?—Yes.

25,871. Then why did you not wish to vote for Vanderbyl?—I did not wish to have anything to say.

25,872. What had you got the time before from Patton?—I am a person who does not understand election affairs.

25,873. What did you get from Patton the election before?—10*l.*

25,874. Now what was it that Crocker said to you about voting for Vanderbyl; he knowing you had voted for Patton before?—He was speaking to me about the election, but I cannot say what his words were.

25,875. Who did you get that 10*l.* from, when you voted for Patton?—Mr. Newton.

(Temblett.) That is wrong; I paid the man.

25,876. Where does he live?—At Budleigh. He did not say it was for voting.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

R. Tooze.

20 Sept. 1869.

25,877. You knew it was for voting. You do not get 10*l.* for doing nothing.

25,878. (Mr. Price.) Will you swear it was not Temblett who gave you the 10*l.*? Is that gentleman (pointing to Temblett) the person who gave you the 10*l.*?—Well, he gave me 10*l.*

25,879. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get 10*l.* from Newton besides?—Newton besides?

25,880. Yes; you have just sworn that you got 10*l.* from Newton. Did you or not get 10*l.* from Newton?—I did.

25,881. Did you also get 10*l.* from Temblett?—Not at any election.

25,882. Shortly after Patton's election?—Before any election came off.

25,883. When was it you got 10*l.* from Temblett?—I do not know.

25,884. Now come! On your oath, when was it that you got that 10*l.* from Temblett?—I do not know.

25,885. Was it between Patton and Vanderbyl's elections?—I do not know. Temblett knows, I daresay.

25,886. Will you swear it was not?—I will not swear at all about that. That gentleman must explain that himself.

25,887. When was it you got the 10*l.* from Newton?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Price.) You appear to have been drinking this afternoon, and have drunk yourself into a state in which you are not able to answer questions, and if you do not take care what you are about you will be sent to sober yourself in the gaol to-night. Now, answer the questions.

(Mr. Coleridge.) When was it you received that 10*l.* from Newton?—(No answer.)

25,888. (Mr. Price.) If you do not answer these questions, most undoubtedly we will commit you to prison for the night?—It was at Patton's election.

25,889. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it before or after the election?—At the election. On the election day, I believe.

25,890. And before you polled?—I believe so.

25,891. And for your vote?—Yes.

25,892. How long after that did you get another 10*l.* from Temblett?—I do not know.

25,893. Was it between that and Mr. Vanderbyl's election that you received the 10*l.* from Temblett?—No.

25,894. When was it?—It must be between the first election and that before Patton's election came off.

25,895. Before Patton's?—I should think so.

25,896. Did you vote in 1865; Westropp, Kinglake, and Shelley's election?—Yes.

25,897. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and also for Westropp.

25,898. What did you get for voting for Westropp?—Nothing, unless Mr. Temblett——

25,899. Then you got 10*l.* from Temblett?—Yes.

25,900. You got 10*l.* from Temblett after that election, and 10*l.* in 1866, and you in 1866 also got 15*l.* from Crocker?—15*l.* from Crocker?

25,901. You have sworn so?—I beg your pardon, gentlemen.

25,902. (Mr. Price.) You told us five sovereigns and a 10*l.* note?—I beg your pardon, gentlemen.

You have sworn it here. The fact is, you will go into custody of the police to the gaol for the night. You come here in a state of intoxication, and contradict yourself four or five times over.

Police-Supt. Lear.

Police Superintendent Lear was called into the box.

25,903. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of this man, Tooze?—I know him very well.

25,904. Is he stupid?—He is rather stupid in his way, and always was. He is a very steady going man. I never had a complaint made against him or his house. He is a stupid sort of man. I think he is taken by surprise.

(Mr. Price.) Then bring him back.

Richard Tooze was brought in.

(Mr. Price.) Now attend. Having made inquiry about you, it may be stupidity more than anything else, and as you were not summoned here to-day, and may not be prepared, we shall not send you to prison now, but allow you to go home. Now try and keep yourself as free as you can from liquor, and think over the circumstances of the money you have had, and the persons you received it from, and try and give us a clear account. To-morrow you will have it read to you from the shorthand note, so that anything you state will be brought against you.

W. Baker.

William Baker sworn.

25,905. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A cord-wainer.

25,906. Who do you work for?—My father.

25,907. (Mr. Anstey.) You had a conversation, I believe, at the last election, with John Vearncombe?—No.

25,908. Did Vearncombe ever state in your presence that you had received a bribe of 7*l.* from Alway?—No, he did not.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Tuesday, 21st September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Dr. HENRY BROOK sworn.

25,909. (Mr. Price.) We understand you are a surgeon practising here?—I am.

25,910. The man Tooze gave such confused answers that we were under the impression he had been drinking. What do you say?—That he is mentally weak at all times, and having to come before this Commission has made him a great deal worse. He is really not in a position to give an answer to any question.

25,911. Has he had any accident?—He had an accident some time ago, and suffers a great deal sometimes in his head.

25,912. What was the nature of the accident?—His head was cut open, and there is insanity in the family. I am afraid of his condition if you have him before you again.

25,913. (Mr. Price.) That is quite sufficient. We do not wish him to run any risk of that kind on any account whatever.

GEORGE ROSSITER sworn.

25,914. What are you?—A silversmith.

25,915. Do you carry on business in this town?—I am not in business now.

25,916. Were you at the last election?—Yes.

25,917. Had you anything to do at the last election in anyway?—Nothing whatever, more than voting.

25,918. You did vote?—I did vote.

25,919. For the Liberals?—I always voted for the Liberals.

25,920. Did you interfere in anyway in the election?—No, not in any election transactions or private affairs, not any more than attending public meetings to hear what was going on, but latterly I have not had anything to do with it.

25,921. You have not interfered in anyway in bribing?—No.

25,922. Or in paying or receiving bribes?—No.

25,923. I believe you were summoned because you signed the petition?—I signed the petition, I am happy to say.

25,924. Some gentlemen have given one account, and others another; what was your reason for signing it?—My reason is that I believe the prayer of that petition true, and it is high time that the borough should be purified, if possible.

25,925. That really the whole effect should be given to your petition, the writ suspended, and then a Commission of inquiry appointed?—Certainly my object was not to suspend the writ.

25,926. But that there should be such a Commission as is now sitting?—Yes, I have seen the necessity of it for years.

25,927. (Mr. Anstey.) You have had nothing to do with corrupt practices at any time?—No.

25,928. Have you any facts to state in support of this petition that we have not got already?—No; I had my own observation, and what I heard from those mixed up in the matter, the agents. My authority for my opinion would be Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. I have occasionally heard from him how matters were conducted, but I know nothing of it.

Mrs. MARY ANN TOOZE sworn.

25,929. (Mr. Price.) We are not going to examine your husband, because we are satisfied the display yesterday was not from any disinclination to answer, but really an inability; therefore, that he may not run any risk about injuring his health, perhaps you can give us the information we want?—Yes, all that I can.

25,930. What are the different sums of money he received at different elections?—Two 10*l.*

25,931. What election?—In 1865 he voted for Shelley and Westropp, when I know nothing of any money he had; if he had I am sure I should have known it; and the next was Patton's and Bagehot's in 1866. At that election he had 10*l.*

25,932. Who did he vote for?—Patton only.

25,933. Who did he get the money from?—I could not say. I did not see any one give it to him. I believe it was from Temblett. I always understood it was so. I do not think he gave it to him at the election, but, I believe, just before the next election. This was in June; and in July, a few days before the next election, was the time he had the 10*l.* given to him.

25,934. Then Mr. Vanderbyl came, and how did he vote then?—For Patton only.

25,935. (Mr. Coleridge.) The second time?—The second time.

25,936. And had another 10*l.*?—No, he had not. He had 10*l.* Crocker gave him. He went away for the day, I know. He was not in a state to be in the town, and I wished him very much to go away, and he went away just before eight by the train, and came back at half past four, and I heard nothing of any money until, several days after, he brought me 10*l.* I says to him, "Where did you get it from?" He says, "Crocker gave it to me for going away, because I should not vote against him."

25,937. Then he did not vote?—He did not vote at the last election of all; in 1868 he voted, but had no money at all.

25,938. Who did he vote for?—Westropp only; the only money I can account for are two 10*l.* I could not swear who gave it.

25,939. One 10*l.* for voting in 1865 for Westropp, and for voting one and one in 1866 he had one 10*l.*?—Yes.

25,940. And then another 10*l.* to stay away at the second election in 1866?—Yes.

25,941. Then he had no 15*l.*?—No; that is a mistake of his own. He cannot understand that he had ever had 15*l.*; that is a mistake, and everyone knew it was a mistake. There was something said about 5*l.* that Heal sent to him for going away to Weston-super-Mare, not to vote against him; that is quite wrong. He does not know Heal. We had the man whom he said gave it to him at Ham Ward, and he said he never gave him the money.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mrs. M. A. Tooze.

25,942. (Mr. Coleridge,) Yesterday he said he had 15*l.*?—It is quite wrong; he did not know what money he had. It was done up in 5*l.* packets of sovereigns.

25,943. He is absolutely incapable of recollecting?—Yes, he did not know. What money he got he gave me, and he says, "If I am called on I do not know what money I gave you." And I put it away, and he did not know what money he had. That money was quite wrong that they said they gave him at Ham Ward.

Mr. Henry Lovibond presented himself.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I wish to make an application with reference to my examination here the other day. The Court will doubtless recollect that I did not answer certain questions which the Court put to me, for I was unable to do so, in reference to a meeting at which Mr. Fennelly was present and Mr. Barham. The Court was under the impression that I was present at that meeting, and was able to give some answers, but the fact turned out from Mr. Barham's evidence that I was not at that meeting, and at the time I answered the Court I thought it was referring to another meeting, and the consequence was I was confused in my evidence; but as soon as Mr. Barham gave his evidence, within five minutes afterwards, my memory was refreshed, and I could then perfectly recollect the order in which the meetings were held. No doubt, one reason for my being confused was this; the Court put interrogatories to me instead of allowing me to tell my own tale, as the other professional men did.

(Mr. Price.) We were quite willing to have done that. The fact is, we gave you at first an intimation that that was what we hoped and expected. We did not expect to be obliged to drag the truth from professional men by question and answer; therefore, you had a full opportunity of stating it in that way.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I did not understand the Court to say that. In fact the Court put some interrogatories to Mr. Barham, and he begged the Court to tell his own tale.

(Mr. Anstey.) We expressly told you you were at liberty to make your own statement; and the questions put to you, particularly those which I put, were actually wrung from me by the manner in which you made your statement; and the questions you referred to, which had reference to what took place at a certain meeting, were not the only questions I put which I do not consider to have been answered. I may say that nearly every material question I put to you, whether referring to meetings or not referring to meetings, has been unanswered within the meaning of the Act; therefore we warned you that any statement you made would be made at your own peril.

(Mr. Lovibond.) If the Court will allow me, I am quite prepared to make a statement.

(Mr. Price.) You wish now to be allowed to make a statement.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I do.

(Mr. Price.) Which you will wish of course to be considered as your evidence.

(Mr. Lovibond.) Just so.

(Mr. Price.) As evidence taken upon oath.

(Mr. Lovibond.) Immediately after the last meeting I communicated the fact to your secretary that my recollection was refreshed, and I was then able to answer the questions which the Commissioners put to me, and then your secretary promised to communicate that fact to you on the following morning; and I heard from him that you were then considering whether you would call me or not. On Wednesday last I again applied to your secretary to know if you had come to a decision, and he gave me the same answer, that you were either considering or had not made up your minds. Upon that I thought the best course would be, having made a mistake, to come to the Court as soon as possible, to rectify that mistake. Now I have come here to make this application in open Court.

(Mr. Price.) We will retire.

[The Commissioners retired to consider; on returning:—]

(Mr. Price.) Of course we thought it our duty again to consider the position in which you stand with regard to your evidence before the Commission, and we have not come to any different conclusion from that which we arrived at at an earlier period. It is my duty, therefore, to tell you, that you may if you like, as we said before, make a statement now, or at any other time you think proper if you are not prepared now. You shall be at perfect liberty to make that statement, but we shall reserve to ourselves the right of distinguishing that statement which is now made by you, as something differing from evidence within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. You will be aware, no doubt, you must be, that to entitle a witness to a certificate the witness must have answered the questions to the satisfaction of all the Commissioners; and that he must have answered them in a way which satisfies the Commissioners that he is willing to tell the whole truth, and that it has not been wrung from him bit by bit. Under these circumstances, therefore, we have no desire to shut you out from making a statement, and you being a lawyer will no doubt have a perfect right, as any witness would, and a better knowledge of how to exercise that right, to make use of whatever privilege that will entitle you to at the conclusion of these proceedings. We shall also have the fullest right, and reserve to ourselves the right, of considering, as I have said before, whether that statement of yours shall be looked upon by us in the light of evidence, so as to bring you within the protection of the Act of Parliament. Under these circumstances, you may make your statement now if you please, or take further time to consider it and reflect on your further evidence; do just as you please about that; we leave it entirely to you; whichever is for your convenience.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I am obliged to you, and will take a little time, if it will not inconvenience the Court; perhaps either to-morrow or the next day.

(Mr. Price.) At any time before we leave this town you will have the opportunity of stating what you wish to say.

(Mr. Anstey.) You will understand that it is entirely with you whether you make a statement or not. If you do, it will be subject to what has been said.

T. Duddridge.

Thomas Duddridge sworn.

25,943 a. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Superintendent of part of Brown and Company's works.

25,944. You have been here before?—Yes; but I have been told by my son when he came home yesterday that Crocker had been trying to get me into disgrace, and I thought I would come here.

25,945. Are you the one?—He said Thomas Duddridge.

25,946. He stated that a Duddridge, I do not know what the christian name was, paid two sums of 5*l.* for treating at two public houses during the last election?—The last election?

25,947. Yes?—No, never in my life; no election.

25,948. Then it must be another Duddridge, and the difficulty arises which?

25,949. (Mr. Price.) How many are there?—I do not know; there are several of the same name; but I thought I would not give you gentlemen the trouble to send for me, and when I heard my name was at the door I thought I would come here.

25,950. (Mr. Anstey.) That was not only asked, but I asked him again to make it clear, and he said two sums, one at one public-house, and another at another; not only the house he keeps and frequents, but another one, and they were paid by Duddridge, which may have been you or some one else?—I never paid the man a farthing in my life.

25,951. Not at any election?—Not at any election at all.

25,952. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you ever paid anything?—No. May I be allowed to ask the election, because there are some elections I have been out of the town.

25,953. (Mr. Price.) I will read you what he said, that there may be no mistake about it. "At "Mr. Bagehot's election I was keeping the 'Lamb' "and the 'King's Arms.' I got an order for 5*l.* at "each house, and was to charge my own personal "expenses, which I charged at 2*l.*, that would be "12*l.* On the following election of Mr. Vanderbyl "I received an order. Q. What were your personal "expenses?—A. What I spent out of my pocket "in treating other people. Q. But you had your "own beer shop, and did not pay for it?—A. But "I was not at home all the time. Q. You went "about treating at other places?—A. Yes. If I fell "in with a voter anywhere I took him in to treat "him. On Mr. Vanderbyl's election I charged 10*l.* "again. I received the order on that occasion from "Thomas Duddridge, in Brown and Company's em-"ploy, 5*l.* for the 'Lamb,' and 5*l.* for the 'King's "Arms,' and I was told then to charge my own "personal expenses, and I charged half a guinea, "having to go to Highbridge and Burnham?"—It is an untruth. I never gave the man an order in my life.

25,954. It must be you?—If there is no other Thomas Duddridge it must mean me.

25,955. Then Mr. Anstey puts the question, "Did "Duddridge authorize all those expenses?—A. Dud-"dridge authorized all those expenses, to let go 5*l.* "at the 'Lamb,' and 5*l.* at the 'King's Arms;' and "on that occasion Allan let me have 20*l.* at the "same election, and he asked me for it the next day, "and I told him I had not it in my pocket," and so on?—He never saw me till about a twelvemonth after. I was walking on the Quay, where I go to my work every day, and he said, "I want to speak to "you; how about that drink?" "What drink?" I said to him, "What do you mean? The drink you "ordered." I said, "I never ordered no drink of "you, or anybody else." He says, "I must look to "some one to pay it, and I thought I would to you." And I said, "I never ordered a glass of drink for no "man—no voter."

25,956. There it stands. Did anybody allow him this 10*l.*, or has he ever been paid it? He was to let go 5*l.*, he says, and then he says he got 20*l.* from you? "I told him I had not it in my pocket, but if he "came to my house the following Sunday he should "have it; but in the meantime I went to Reed and "Cook, and told him I had this 20*l.*, and their advice "to me was to keep it."

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

25,957. (Mr. Coleridge.) This bill put in is not receipted?—Crocker had a bill for 40*l.* charged for beer at Shelley and Kinglake's election. He also had, I think it was about a 16*l.* beer bill and expenses at Bagehot's election, and after Bagehot's election and before Vanderbyl's election I paid him that bill.

25,958. (Mr. Price.) Then you state you found him put down in Smith's account for 10*l.*; he accounts for that by saying it was for that man Tooze?—Yes; he had from me 20*l.* to poll John Richards, and he wanted the balance of 20*l.* more.

THOMAS DUDDRIDGE recalled. T. Duddridge.

25,959. (Mr. Price.) You are clear about this. It is due to you that it should be cleared up?—Yes, I should like it cleared up.

(Mr. Lovibond.) It is quite right for me to say that Crocker had 20*l.* to pay a man, which I paid Allan. Allan says it was a gross swindle, and it never was paid. That may account for the evidence given yesterday.

25,960. (Mr. Price.) I think we must have Mr. Reed here, to know whether he is the person who advised him about it. It appears that he has had a great deal more than the bill, which is only 18*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*?—He admitted, in his evidence yesterday, having 10*l.* from Smith. Smith charged me 10*l.* in his list for him, and he had 20*l.* to poll John Richards with, which he kept.

(Mr. Price.) His bill is 18*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* It is not at all like what he said, to let go 5*l.* at the "Lamb."

(Mr. Anstey.) It was originally, I see, 19*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*; then an item is obliterated, and it reduces it to 18*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

(Mr. Price.) And it is all incurred in one day.

25,961. Did you ever tell him to entertain the bands, or anything of that kind?—No. To the best of my knowledge I was never in his house at an election; and one house, the King's Arms, I was never in it, unless I went to call for a captain of a vessel, and it is very seldom.

25,962. Had you any authority from anyone to give drink away?—Not the least.

(Bussell.) I recollect something about this drinking account, and I do not think Crocker is right, for this very reason, that there was a sum fixed for a certain number of men holding up their hands, and it was 15*l.*; and my impression is that it was divided between some eight or nine houses, so that it was impossible for one man to have 10*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) You mean paid to get the show of hands?

(Bussell.) Yes.

(Mr. Price.) You say you knew that he had a bill over due at Shelley's election?

(Allan.) That is the bill he had the 20*l.* for.

(Mr. Price.) That is not the way he accounted to us yesterday. The reason he kept the 20*l.* was, that he was ordered by Duddridge to let go 5*l.* at the "Lamb" and 5*l.* at the other place. It was 20*l.* altogether, and he had a bill from you owing at Shelley's election, and therefore he kept the 20*l.*

STEPHEN CROCKER recalled. S. Crocker.

25,963. (Mr. Price.) Take this bill in your hand, and tell us what is scratched out?—I have a copy of that bill (handing it in).

25,964. When was it erased?—It was erased by Mr. James Cook.

25,965. When?—Just after I gave him the bill. He said he considered that to be a debt of his own, and he should pay me that himself; but the other portion was to be considered as owing by Shelley and Kinglake's election.

25,966. (Mr. Anstey.) For the Foresters' meeting?—Yes.

25,967. (Mr. Price.) This is a bill incurred at Shelley's election?—Yes.

25,968. You told us yesterday that at Vanderbyl's first election you were ordered by Thomas Duddridge,

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

S. Crocker.

21 Sept. 1869.

in Brown and Company's employ, to let go 5*l.* at the "Lamb," and 5*l.* at the "King's Arms"?—Yes.

25,969. And that you did say?—Yes.

25,970. And that having 20*l.* from Allan?—You will understand there was 10*l.* as well at Bagehot's election.

25,971. 10*l.* as well?—10*l.* worth of drink at Bagehot's election; 5*l.* at the Lamb and 5*l.* at the "King's Arms."

25,972. That is 20*l.* at Bagehot's and Vanderbyl's, and 18*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* for Shelley?—Yes.

25,973. So that you made out you were out of pocket 39*l.*?—Then I was told to charge my own personal expenses, which I charged 2*l.* at each election and 10*s.* 6*d.* on one occasion at Bagehot's election, for going from Highbridge to Burnham.

25,974. Thomas Duddridge denies, positively, that he ever gave you such an order?—Probably he will; he has denied it before to me.

25,975. Have you anything to corroborate your statement?—Well, I believe I have.

25,976. What?—I believe I have a person who was living with me at the time, who can corroborate what I have said to be the truth.

25,977. Who is the person?—(Speaking to a person in court) Hodge, will you kindly ask the person who lives at your house, Miss Silke?

25,978. Have you been talking to this man about it?—No; never in my life.

25,979. There is Duddridge; do you mean in his presence to say——?—Most distinctly. He came to the "Lamb." I was keeping two houses at the time. I was at the "King's Arms." He came to the "Lamb" and gave an order there for 5*l.*

25,980. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you know?—Simply because I would not let it go until I had seen Duddridge.

25,981. How do you know?—Simply because I had some one who was there.

25,982. You were only told that?—I went to see Duddridge afterwards, and had the order from him.

25,983. (Mr. Anstey.) There are two houses; at which house did you personally receive the orders?—I received the orders for both. I told the party not to let go any drink until I had been and seen Duddridge myself. I went to see Duddridge.

25,984. When?—The same morning, 10 minutes after.

25,985. Which house, then, did yon get it for?—Both houses, to let go 5*l.* for the "Lamb." I said, "I "am living at the 'King's Arms' as well." He said, "You must let go 5*l.* there;" and on another occasion he said, "5*l.* in the neighbourhood, 5*l.* at the "'Lamb,' 5*l.* at the 'Market Inn,' 5*l.* at the Mansion "House," and I believe he said "5*l.* at the 'Duke of "Wellington.'"

25,986. (Mr. Anstey.) Let me see whether the figures are right according to this bill, 18*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* at Shelley's election, besides the sum which Mr. Cook took to himself. Then you say, to-day, there were two further sums of 10*l.* each at Bagehot's and Vanderbyl's election. Then, in addition to that, I understand there were two sums of 5*l.* which Duddridge gave the order for?—No; 5*l.* would be that.

25,987. (Mr. Price.) Then there are your own expenses?—4*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*

25,988. Therefore you make out as owing to you altogether 40*l.*?—Above 40*l.*

25,989. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much is there really owing?—It would have been 19*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*

25,990. Were these items put down, gin and water 6*d.*, or is it a lumping together of what you thought they ought to have drunk?—No; it was had.

25,991. Actually had?—Yes; there were a lot of brickyard men sent to my house at the "Lamb." We had a large room there, and a great number brought their wives and children. I had my windows smashed in by the children.

25,992. How often did you draw 20*l.* worth of drink in one day?—Not very often.

25,993. Did you ever at any time but at an election?—No, not 20*l.* I did on one occasion, 15*l.* odd.

25,994. (Mr. Price.) You had better have your witness, and let us hear what she has to say. Did you make out a bill for the whole of it?—Yes, I gave it to Allan, and the receipt for his 20*l.*

25,995. (Mr. Coleridge.) With all the items?—No; not with the items.

25,996. Then he could not tell us whether it was a true bill or not which you sent him?—Certainly not.

25,997. (Mr. Anstey.) How was Allan, or the attorney who employed him, to know that some of the men you put down had not paid themselves for their grog and beer with which they were supposed to be treated?—It is not a very frequent occurrence for people to pay for beer or grog on election occasions.

25,998. Had they any means of checking it, because you do not put down their names as if there was a score?—No.

25,999. It depends entirely on the fancy of the person who is serving at the bar at the moment?—Most decidedly. They are put on a slate, and reckoned up, and so soon as there was 5*l.* worth it was put on a book as being let go.

26,000. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose the 5*l.* very soon came?—It would very soon go.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

26,001. (Mr. Price.) Did he render any such bill as Shelley's to you?—I had nothing to do with Shelley's election.

26,002. But did he render any bill like this of Shelley's with respect to Vanderbyl's election of the matters he speaks of?—Yes; and that is the bill, 20*l.*, leaving a balance of 20*l.* still further due, which I passed to Mr. Lovibond.

26,003. Did he claim the balance of 20*l.*?—Yes.

26,004. Did he tell you that Thomas Duddridge had given him the order?—I do not remember his saying so at all; if so, he might have done it without referring to me. He never said anything to me about it.

S. Crocker.

STEPHEN CROCKER recalled.

26,005. (Mr. Price.) How long after the election did you first claim it of Duddridge?—I do not know. It might be a month or two that I spoke to Duddridge.

26,006. Did Duddridge repudiate all knowledge?—Yes.

26,007. (Mr. Anstey.) Duddridge says a year?—Did he say so?

Duddridge.—Yes.

The witness.—No; two or three months it might be; but I have spoken to Duddridge many times about this, and threatened to put him in the county court, but I have always considered I could not claim on account of its being an electioneering affair.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

26,008. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether he mentioned Duddridge or not; must he have mentioned some one as giving the order?—No; not necessarily.

26,009. Do you mean it is part of this profligate system of expenditure to allow any charge which anybody calling himself a publican on the Liberal side thinks fit to advance?—I did not pay any bills on my own responsibility, but always took it to the solicitors. I never gave an order myself.

26,010. How do you distinguish between utterly unfounded demands and the demands which, although illegal and wicked, are not unfounded in fact?—I had nothing to do with that.

26,011. (Mr. Price.) You left that to Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

26,012. As I understand the thing, you happened to be mixed up in this transaction simply because you called on Crocker to account for that 20*l.*?—Exactly; and instead of that he gave me a receipt.

26,013. He produces this bill of his, and tells you he has been advised to keep the 20*l.*, and intends so to do?—That is it exactly.

STEPHEN CROCKER recalled. S. Crocker.

26,014. (Mr. Price.) Who is your witness?—Miss Silke. She lives at Mr. Hodge's on the Cornhill.

THOMAS DUDDRIDGE recalled. T. Duddridge.

26,015. (Mr. Price.) Do you want to say anything more about this?—I say it is an untruth. I never gave Crocker an order.

26,016. Do not let us fence about words. Did you leave an order at either of the public houses that 5*l.* was to be spent?—No, never in my life. I think what Bussell or Allan said just now rather refreshed my mind. Something was said about the nomination day, I believe, in 1866. At Vanderbyl's election, John Smith said he had 15*l.* to separate between the houses, and after the show of hands the men were to go, and no doubt they did go; but I never gave an order or knew of one to this minute. I should never mix myself up with Crocker in any such thing as that.

26,017. It is not a matter worth your while to take a false oath about?—I would not.

26,018. It is not a matter that any one, I suppose, would take a false oath about, because there is no more in it than a hundred other things which have been proved against men quite as respectable as yourself in position, namely, that there was treating, but it is an extraordinary thing that we cannot get such a matter as that without perjury?—It is not. I was never at his house. I was never in the "King's Arms," to the best of my knowledge, and I believe I can swear it, while he lived in the house, except to look for a captain.

26,019. It resolves itself at last into a question of character, and one is obliged to put questions and ask what the characters of people are to see who is most likely to be telling the truth.

(The witness.) Thank you.

STEPHEN CROCKER recalled. S. Crocker.

26,020. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of the person you say received the order first of all from Duddridge?—Miss Silke.

THOMAS DUDDRIDGE recalled. T. Duddridge.

26,021. (Mr. Anstey.) You heard her name; did you ever give her such an order?—Never in my life.

26,022. (Mr. Price.) It will come to this, that we shall be obliged to inquire into what your character is?—Yes.

26,023. Whether you are a truthful man or not?—Yes.

26,024. Because it is a matter not worth while committing perjury about?—Certainly not. I tell you the truth. Duddridge stands there and perjures himself.

26,025. You must not say so.—He does when he says he did not give me the order.

26,026. He says the same thing of you, and we are to judge?—Yes.

26,027. Probably, when Miss Silke comes, she will place the thing in its proper light.

26,028. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last speak to her about it?—I have not spoken to her for many months. Not above once over a twelvemonth.

Mr. P. O. H. REED recalled. Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

26,029. (Mr. Price.) The matter we now want to get information about is this information of Crocker's. I rather fancy it is Mr. Cook who knows more about it, but perhaps you can tell us. Crocker says he had two bills against the parties at Vanderbyl's and Bagehot's election, 10*l.* each, for drink, and he also had an outstanding bill at Shelley's election of about 18*l.*; and he says, having received 20*l.* from Allan to bribe with, besides 10*l.* from Smith, which is not of importance, he was called on by Allan after the election to account for that 20*l.*, and he told Allan, as he tells us, that he was advised by Messrs. Reed and Cook's firm to keep the 20*l.* in respect of these bills he had outstanding for drink, and so therefore he did not return it; do you know anything about the matter?—No, not the least. I do not think my name should be mixed up with it. I never had anything to do with accounts.

26,030. He uses the firm's name, but probably it would be Mr. Cook. Who prepared the proofs in the brief that was got up for the Election Inquiry the other day?—They were prepared in our office, and some few were prepared in Mr. Lovibond's.

26,031. Which were prepared in your office; Mr. Vanderbyl's and Mr. Kinglake's proofs?—Mr. Kinglake's proof was prepared at Mr. Lovibond's.

26,032. Therefore you know nothing of that. Was Mr. Vanderbyl's prepared at your office?—No doubt.

26,033. By yourself or Mr. Cook?—By Mr. Cook.

26,034. And taken down from Mr. Vanderbyl's mouth?—I do not know, but I should say so, certainly.

26,035. Because Mr. Vanderbyl would never have gone into the box without having read what he was going to say. Then Mr. Kinglake's you say you knew nothing of?—We made a copy of the proof given us by Mr. Lovibond.

26,036. Then you had it put in your brief?—Yes.

26,037. Copied from Mr. Lovibond's?—Yes.

26,038. Because you had in yours, "Call Alexander William Kinglake." How came you to have the two candidates severed in their defence and appearing by different counsel? How is it you had a proof of Mr. Kinglake's?—We gave Mr. Lovibond all the proofs we took, if he liked to make copies, and Mr. Lovibond gave us proofs of some of those he took.

26,039. Can you identify this as the proof of Mr. Kinglake that came from Mr. Lovibond (handing a document to the witness)?—This would be a copy made by one of our clerks from it.

26,040. Did you see the one that came from Mr. Lovibond, and read it over, so as to be able to identify whether this is a correct copy?—I certainly read it at the time, and this is a copy; it is made by a clerk named Crocker at our office.

26,041. Then you have no doubt that that is a copy?—Not the slightest.

26,042. (Mr. Price.) There will be no harm in your communicating with Mr. Cook about this matter; but as he is on his holiday it is not worth while to bring him back till it ends. If you like to write to him we will take his recollection?—If you will pardon me, I think he would prefer making a statement personally.

W. Duddridge.

WILLIAM DUDDRIDGE sworn.

26,043. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner.

26,044. Were you a voter for Bridgwater at the last election?—Yes.

26,045. For whom did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

26,046. What did you get?—10*l.*

26,047. Who from?—Henry Bussell.

26,048. Is that the first election you have voted?—I had a vote nine years ago. I have not voted for nine years before that.

26,049. When you voted nine years ago who did you vote for?—Tynte and Kinglake.

26,050. Did you get anything then?—No.

26,051. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before that, did you vote?—Two elections.

26,052. Did you get anything at either of them?—No.

26,053. (Mr. Price.) Were you away at the other elections at sea?—No; I was home.

26,054. Why did not you vote then?—I had no house.

26,055. (Mr. Anstey.) What qualification had you last time?—10*l.* 10*s.*

G. Dimond.

GEORGE DIMOND sworn.

26,056. (Mr Anstey.) What are you?—A carpenter.

26,057. Did you take an active part in the last election?—Well, I did.

26,058. Did you distribute any money amongst the voters?—No.

26,059. Did you give any orders for treating?—No.

26,060. Did you treat any?—No.

26,061. Did you vote yourself?—I did.

26,062. Did you get anything for your vote?—I did not.

26,063. Nor any promise?—No.

26,064. Have you ever voted before?—No.

26,065. What is your qualification?—7*l.* I think.

26,066. Then you are one of the new voters?—Yes.

26,067. Have you ever taken any part in bribing or treating at any former election?—Never.

26,068. At the last election, were you present at a conversation between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Parker, the gentleman who proposed him?—No; I think there must be a mistake somewhere. I never spoke to Mr. Westropp or Mr. Parker in my life.

26,069. That is not the question. Did you overhear a conversation between Mr. Parker and Mr. Westropp?—No.

26,070. Is there another George Dyment?—I believe there are other Dyments; whether other Georges I do not know.

26,071. Is there another George Dyment?—Yes.

26,072. Your name is Dymond?—Mine is Dimond.

26,073. Do you know George Dyment?—I do not. I fell in with a man of the name of Dyment down at Dunwall last week, the first time I had the privilege of speaking to him, and I found his name was George Dyment.

26,074. Yours is Dymond?—I generally spell it Dimond.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I believe there is William Dyment.

(Mr. Anstey.) No; I am quoting from Mr. Cook's brief, where it is put down George Dyment.

Mr. G. S. Poole.

MR. GABRIEL STONE POOLE sworn.

26,075. (Mr. Price.) You are a solicitor practising in Bridgwater?—I am.

26,076. And have been very many years?—Yes.

26,077. How many years have you been in practice?—35 years.

26,078. Have you mixed up much in politics?—Not much.

26,079. Of late years have you taken any part at all in elections?—I have not taken any part at all of late years, for I have not been a voter for five or six years.

26,080. You live out of the town?—I live out of the town.

26,081. And had no vote?—And had no vote.

26,082. And have taken no part since when?—I have taken no part in the management of the elections at all from first to last.

26,083. I mean in any way being concerned in the contest?—Not since Mansell's election, I think was the last. I seconded his nomination, that was in 1852. I may have voted since that, I think I have voted since.

26,084. When did you cease to have a vote in the town?—About six years ago. I have taken no part whatever.

26,085. You can give no information whatever as to the elections, subsequent to the one you took part in by seconding the nomination of Mr. Mansell?—No.

26,086. At that election of 1852 did you know anything with regard to any bribery that took place at that election?—No, I did not.

26,087. Do you know whether it was an election in which there was bribery or not?—I always assumed that there is bribery at all contested elections; but I do not think there was any money spent by Mr. Mansell, beyond the small sum he paid for professional services.

26,088. I believe Mr. Tynte was a candidate?—There were five candidates: Lord Healey, Mr. Kinglake, Mr Follett, Mr. Tynte, and Mr. Mansell.

26,089. Who were returned?—Follett and Tynte.

26,090. That was the first election at which Mr. Kinglake stood?—That was the first election.

26,091. The Liberal party was split up very much then?—Yes.

26,092. The last election at which Mr. Follett stood?—No; he was beaten at the next election; he stood once more.

26,093. Did Mr. Follett spend any money?—I do not know. I only know that Mr. Mansell spent a certain sum of money, because he consulted me before he went to a meeting of Conservative agents as to what amount he ought to pay towards the expenses.

26,094. (Mr. Coleridge.) And what was that amount?—He came to me just before the election, to say he was going to attend a meeting of Conservative agents, to decide what portion of the expenses he ought to bear, and he wanted my advice upon it. I should say that I had been the agent of his aunt, who has some very large property in the neighbourhood, and therefore he came to me naturally to ask, independent of the agents, for advice.

26,095. (Mr. Price.) As to what was the proper sum for him to pay?—Yes.

26,096. (Mr. Coleridge.) And what was it?—The first thing I asked him was, whether his agents told him he had any chance. He said they thought he had very much, and then I asked him, "Why pay anything, if you are only put in for the purpose of taking Mr. Follett's second votes?" I thought he ought not to pay anything, and my advice to him was, if returned, he should pay half the expense, and if not, nothing; but he afterwards came to me, and told me that he had agreed to pay 200*l.*

26,097. (Mr. Price.) That would be a little over the legitimate expenses?—Hardly more.

26,098. Not very much more?—Not any more, I should think. I do not know how many agents were engaged, or what they were paid, or the printing, and of course there were the hustings expenses.

26,099. You believe that is all he paid?—I do not know, because it did not pass through my hands, but I am quite sure that is all he was to pay.

26,100. (Mr. Coleridge.) When the paid agents could vote there were probably more engaged than at present?—I do not know it, but I suppose all the solicitors were engaged.

26,101. At present, we know that paid agents have voted, contrary to law?—Yes; they do not have a retainer, and they have presents afterwards. I rather think it is made up in that way, but I do not know.

26,102. (Mr. Price.) Is there any election previous to that, which you can give information about, of your own knowledge?—I do not know of any expenditure of money at any election except that.

26,103. You have heard that there has been some question raised about this attack on Mr. Bowen's house in 1832?—Yes; that was in 1832.

26,104. Now your name has been mentioned, tell us your recollection of the circumstance?—I was there after the attack on Mr. Bowen. I was at a party of the Conservative electors that evening, and word was brought down that Mr. Bowen had been half killed, and several of us went up there. I think I arrived first, and found the whole place, the garden and the road going into his house, crowded with rioters with sticks, and they were very violent.

26,105. Did you understand that he had been attacked on his own premises?—On his own premises.

26,106. Not anywhere else; not at any meeting?—No; on his own premises. He went out from his house to try and pacify the rioters, and had a blow across his eyes which covered him with blood.

26,107. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see him afterwards?—I saw him afterwards at his house.

26,108. And in that state?—Yes; he had a blow which almost blinded him, and he was suffering from something like concussion of the brain.

26,109. Was he a gentleman of some standing here, at that time?—Yes; he was editor at that time of the Alfred Newspaper.

26,110. Was he capable of what is imputed to him of proceeding to a randying meeting at a public house?—Yes; it was a large meeting at the "King's Arms."

26,111. A randying meeting?—Yes. It was a large meeting; it is called a randying meeting.

26,112. (Mr. Price.) Was the attack made on him there?—No. He had quitted the chair. I have no doubt he had been sent for, and told there was a violent mob at his own house, because I see, by looking at the newspapers which were published at that time, that there was a serious riot there earlier in the evening, before I got there, when the Riot Actwas read.

26,113. Were there any persons armed with bludgeons or sticks, and in disguise?—Yes, a good many.

26,114. How were they disguised?—They had what are called south-westers on, and pea jackets.

26,115. Did you see whether the side flaps were down or up?—Down over their faces.

26,116. So as to disguise the faces?—Yes.

26,117. (Mr. Price.) So that it would be very difficult to distinguish the men?—We could not without pulling up their hats. As soon as we got strong enough, we turned them out in the road and garden, and then they began to strip off the disguise.

26,118. Your people did?—Yes.

26,119. Did you see any stripped off?—I saw some. I heard at the time that Mr. Sully was one whose disguise was stripped off, but I did not do it myself. I slept at Mr. Bowen's house that night; I and another gentleman, protecting the house.

26,120. Was that necessary, in your opinion?—We thought so.

26,121. How many rioters did you see there altogether do you suppose?—I should think 200; the whole place was filled with people inside.

26,122. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where was the house?—In Fryern-street; a house I afterwards bought myself, 26,123. (Mr. Anstey.) Who keeps that house now?—Mr. J. R. Smith.

26,124. Where any of the rioters inside the house when you got there?—No; I do not think there was any man inside the house. I think Mr. Bowen's brother and six or eight people; it is under the archway, and there is a backyard which runs down to the stable.

26,125. Mr. Sully says some of the people, he does not admit them to be rioters, but larkers, got into the house, and were driven out?—That perhaps was before I came.

26,126. Was there anything like larking about it?—No.

26,127. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you think it was a serious cause of alarm to the premises or the person of Mr. Bowen?—We did so.

26,128. Which?—The person of Mr. Bowen. It was against him the attack was made. He was editor of the "Alfred" newspaper, which was a Conservative paper at that time, and had made himself very obnoxious to the Liberal party in consequence of it.

26,129. Was there no other reason?—No, not that I am aware of.

26,130. (Mr. Price.) How many of those people were there in south-westers and pea jackets?—I cannot say now.

26,131. A dozen?—A good many of them; they were the leaders; so we thought.

26,132. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Sully appears to be under the impression that he saw amongst those who came to rescue Mr. Bowen your late father, Mr. Ruscombe Poole?— I do not remember seeing him when I was there. I think it was an earlier period of the evening that he must have come up with the mayor when the Riot Act was read, because the riot was over when I came there, because the few there in Mr. Bowen's house had been overpowered, and there were only 8 or 10 there with the mayor. All the others had gone.

26,133. Did you see Bussell there?—I do not remember that. There is one thing I remember being said, "Who would have thought that Captain Sully would have been there."

26,134. That you heard said?—Yes. I did not see him there, but I remember it being the subject of conversation among the party afterwards.

26,135. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Bowen seriously injured by that blow?—He was very seriously injured.

26,136. How many days was it before he recovered?—I do not know how long, but I thought at the time it was concussion of the brain.

26,137. (Mr. Price.) Did you go as a witness at all at the trial?—No; but I had a conversation with one of the parties this morning, who could throw more light on it.

26,138. Who was that?—Mr. Carter Reeves, a shoemaker.

26,139. Was he indicted?—Yes; and I think he could throw some light on the question as to whether the jury were bribed or not.

26,140. (Mr. Anstey.) At what trial?—At the sessions. He told me it was understood among the party that the jury were bribed, and it cost 500*l.* to do it; he told me so this morning.

26,141. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were any of the jury from this place?—I do not know; he told me that this morning.

26,142. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember the passing of the Municipal Reform Act, and its coming into operation in this borough?—Yes.

26,143. Do you recollect how long it was after that that Bussell senior got his appointment?—I do not remember; it was not long after. I think there was a general change of all the appointments.

26,144. Is it a fact that there was not a single person put into the new commission of peace for the borough who was of Conservative opinions?—I believe so. To the best of my recollection, there was no Conservative justice put in.

26,145. Was the town clerk, Mr. Trevor, himself removed?—Mr. Trevor held several appointments. One of them he was retained in; I forget which; I think as clerk to the magistrates, and he was paid a pension for the others.

26,146. He was turned out of the others?—He was turned out of the others, and I believe he had a pension of 200*l.* a year.

26,147. Which I understand is a burthen to the ratepayers to the present day?—Yes.

26,148. Was there no other reason for his removal but the fact that he was Conservative?—No; to make room for some one else.

26,149. You had nothing to do with the last election; but had you anything to do with those who had, the night before the nomination day or the polling day? Had you any conversation with those promoting Westropp and Gray's election?—I do not remember any particular conversation.

26,150. The question has been put to some witnesses, and I put it to you. Did it reach your knowledge in any way, before the election, that the party was discouraged, and it was contemplated that the Conservative candidates should leave the town?—I heard that on the polling day. I happened to go up in the middle of the day to see how things were going, and I saw the Conservatives were a long way ahead.

26,151. What o'clock was it that you heard they were going to leave?—I think about one o'clock. I had a conversation in the committee-room. I think it was with Mr. Trevor or one or two of the gentlemen there, and I was expressing some doubts about the majority having been obtained by fair means, because I could not understand how the Conservative party were so far ahead without spending, and they assured me not a single shilling had been given, and that no promise had been given. I still shrugged my shoulders, and they gave me their word about it, and said that the Conservative candidates had made up their minds to go away the night before. In proof of it they said, "We assure you they were going away last night, "until we had told them we had spent all the money "it was necessary to spend, and it would cost no more, "and so they did." It was brought forward to induce me to believe it was a pure election, and I did, in consequence, and in consequence of that I went and asked a gentleman to vote whom I knew would not vote if he thought there was any money passing,

26,152. Was there any one except Mr. Trevor?—Yes; I am not quite certain it was Mr. Trevor.

26,153. Which of them; John or James?—James, I think, but there were several present.

26,154. (Mr. Coleridge.) I need hardly ask you whether you have altered your mind?—No, I have not, about the Conservatives.

36,155. About the elections generally?—Yes.

26,156. Have you heard of the general system on the Conservative side of promising money after the election on the last occasion?—No; I do not believe there was any promise at all. I dare say many who went up, went up in the hope they would be paid afterwards, because I always heard that they do so. There are great numbers of men who expect to be paid for their votes. Numbers would go up and vote on the Liberal side and the Conservative side without being promised before, who would expect to be paid afterwards if money is going. That is what I have heard.

26,157. (Mr. Anstey.) There are three forms of corruption in this borough, one money down, another promise of money, and the third the general expectation founded on the depraved custom of the borough?—Yes. I remember one election, which is a long while ago, but which induced me never to take any part in any election again; the first election I remember; the election when Mr. Tynte, Mr. Astell, and Mr. Shirley were candidates.

26,158. In what year?—'31 I think, and a very close election; the election lasted more than one day, and almost all the honest votes had polled on the first day, there were not above five or six left; but there were about 20 or 25 balance men who had stood over and the question who should win depended on who should get these men, and it was very well known in the town that they were all bought, and the next morning, when they came to the poll, the bribery oath was tendered to them, and they all took it one after the other.

26,159. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you tell us anything about Leader and Broadwood's election?—No. I was here.

26,160. What was the general impression?—That he spent 12,000*l.* in three days.

26,161. And what did Broadwood spend?—I cannot tell, but not so much as that; a great deal, no doubt.

26,162. (Mr. Price.) But he had been member, had he not?—Yes; once before that, I think.

26,163. Mr. Astell was member, and with Mr. Tynte used to divide?—Yes. Before that occasion, in 1831, the two parties wanted to protect the town from this system of bribery, and it was proposed on one side, and accepted on the other, that Mr. Tynte and Mr. Astell who sat should be supported by both parties, to prevent a contest; and I found the first election that took place was in 1820, when Mr. Astell and Mr. Tynte were returned without opposition.

26,164. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not more ancient than that, or is this a mis-report of Mr. Ruscombe Poole's speech in 1806, mentioning the first instance of the kind, when Mr. Astell and some one else were returned, and it was renewed in 1811?—I do not know what may have taken place before that, but I believe it began in 1820. Mr. Astell represented the town 26 years. In 1820 there was a proposal, made, I believe, by the Conservative party, which was very much the strongest at that time, if the other side would take Mr. Tynte, who was a neighbouring gentleman, the other side should support Mr. Astell, and our side should support Mr. Tynte. In 1806 there was a contested election in the No Popery time, and Sir Colin Campbell, the late Lord Clyde, came down as a candidate for Bridgwater, and Captain Hall, of this town, was his chief supporter, I think.

26,165. (Mr. Price.) Are you sure it was Lord Clyde? Was it not the other Sir Colin Campbell? He was not Sir Colin Campbell until after the Punjab compaign?—Was he not? I always understood it was the same.

26,166. Was it not Sir Colin Campbell whose daughter married Mr. Phipps?—Very likely; but I thought it was the same. At that time, at all events, the Conservative party carried Mr. Tynte, against a man holding their own opinions, Sir Colin Campbell.

26,167. (Mr. Price.) To keep the treaty?—To keep the compact.

26,168. In 1830 Mr. Astell and Mr. Tynte were again returned?—In 1831 the Liberal party broke faith, and there was an end of it.

26,169. That was the agitation of the Reform Bill?—Yes; I do not think that one Liberal man voted for Mr. Astell.

26,170. From that time you believe every election has been contested by one and the other?—Yes; that is the struggle of the old Conservative party. I believe Allan is pretty right, that out of 1,500, 1,200 will take money.

26,171. (Mr. Coleridge.) And 250 will give it?—I do not think so.

26,172. Including lawyers, bankers, and all, only 50 just men?—I do not think so.

26,173. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember the petition that was presented against Mr. Broadwood's return, charging him with personal bribery, which he declined by a letter to the Speaker to offer any defence to; that is some months before the death of William the Fourth?—There was a petition against Mr. Broadwood.

26,174. Yes, on the part of Mr. Richard Brinsley Sheridan?—I remember he was a candidate once.

26,175. And before Mr. Richard Brimsley Sheridan could obtain the benefit of Mr. Broadwood's refusal to defend, William the Fourth died, which gave the opportunity to Mr. Broadwood's supporters to present a new petition, stating that they were ready to defend; and that so far protracted the proceedings that nothing took place until the new election, which put an end to it all?—No, I do not remember it.

26,176. Till the middle of the summer of 1837. You do not remember that?—No; I do not know anything of it.

26,177. Were you present at the trial at the sessions at Wells?—No, I do not think I was present.

26,178. You do not know whether it lasted two days?—I only know that it lasted two days from seeing a report of it in the paper within the last few days.

26,179. You do not know what the chairman, the Right Hon. Henry Hobhouse, said, in charging the jury?—I have only heard of it from what has been stated in the report within the last few days.

Miss Elizabeth Silke sworn.

Miss E. Silke.

26,180. (Mr. Price.) Did you live, in the year 1866, at the "Lamb" Inn, kept by Mr. Crocker?—Yes.

26,181. Do you remember when Mr. Vanderbyl came forward in 1866?—Yes.

26,182. Did anybody come to you on the polling day, and give any order about money being spent in treating, or what quantity of drink was to be given away?—Not to me.

26,183. Nobody did?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Stand up, Thomas Duddridge. (Thomas Duddridge stood up.)

26,184. Did that gentleman at any time during Mr. Vanderbyl's election—now remember, and be very careful—give you any orders at the "Lamb" that 5*l.* was to be spent in drink on account of Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, I do not remember.

26,185. Did you see him at all?—He was in and out there.

26,186. But you had no order from him?—Not that I remember.

26,187. Did you tell your master, Mr. Crocker, that Mr. Duddridge had been there, and given you an order that 5*l.* should be spent in drink?—No, I cannot remember it.

26,188. Or that any sum was to be spent in drink?—No, I do not remember it. He was in and out during the day.

26,189. So you could not tell your master?—No. They had a great quantity of drink there.

26,190. You say you did not hear him give the order?—I do not remember it.

26,191. Did anybody authorize you to go to any particular extent as to the quantity of drink you were to let go?—I do not remember it.

26,192. Then who had given you orders to give drink away?—Mr. Crocker had told me to give drink away, and I had entered it on the slate.

26,193. Mr. Crocker had told you about it?—Yes.

26,194. What had Crocker told you about the quantity you were to let go?—He did not say what quantity.

26,195. Had he told you that morning before he left what quantity you were to give away?—I do not remember that he did.

26,196. We want to know to what limit you were authorized to go. Did you have any authority to draw any amount of drink you liked?—Not any amount. I only know that I was to draw it for them.

26,197. Who had given you the limit?—Mr. Crocker.

26,198. What was the limit?—He did not tell me how much.

26,199. What did he say to you?—I cannot say that. I cannot remember.

26,200. Were you left to give drink to them to what extent you liked?—No.

26,201. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you seen Duddridge the day before the polling day?—No. Mr. Duddridge had been in and out during the day.

26,202. (Mr. Price.) Had he given you any orders about the amount of drink you were to give away, or any sum of money you were to be allowed to spend in providing drink?—No; I do not remember that he did.

26,203. You are quite sure about it?—No, I do not remember it. I only remember Mr. Duddridge was in and out during the day.

26,204. There were some of Browne's men there, were there not?—Yes.

26,205. And he was in and out looking after them?—He was in and out.

26,206. Did you see him drinking with them?—No.

26,207. Or hear him order any drink?—No.

26,208. (Mr. Anstey.) Were these men drinking?—Some of them were.

26,209. Some of them were drinking?—They were drinking, some of them, as they usually do at election times.

26,210. How many were there?—I cannot say. They were in and out.

26,211. (Mr. Price.) Are you sure Duddridge did not order drink for any of them?—I cannot remember.

26,212. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see any money distributed amongst them?—No, I do not remember.

26,213. Did you hear anybody say they were to have a pound's worth of drink?—No.

26,214. (Mr. Price.) You entered what you drew at once?—There were more than me there. Mrs. Crocker was there at the time. What I drew I entered on the slate.

26,215. Stephen Crocker (addressing the witness.) Will you kindly say whether there was a Miss Duddridge there, who gave you an order?—No; she gave me no order.

26,216. (Mr. Price.) Are you any relation to Miss Duddridge?—No.

Stephen Crocker recalled.

S. Crocker.

26,217. (Mr. Price.) You affirmed that it was to this woman you gave the order, and that she told you so herself?—Yes; she told me so herself, and I think she must have forgotten it; and I think if Miss Duddridge was here she could bring it to her knowledge.

Miss Elizabeth Silke recalled.

Miss E. Silke.

26,218. (Mr. Price.) Where is Miss Duddridge?—At Weston Zoyland.

(Stephen Crocker.) That is about four miles from here.

26,219. (Mr. Price.) You do not remember any orders being given?—As far I can remember, no orders were given.

26,220. Nor did your master give you any order?—No. I entered on the slate on the day what I drew.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Miss E. Silke.

21 Sept. 1869.

26,221. Mrs. Crocker was there?—Yes, she was there; and me and her niece.

26,222. She would be the person who would receive any order from Crocker?—Mrs. Crocker is not there now.

26,223. Was she living there?—Yes.

26,224. She would be the person who would naturally give an order, and not you?—She or her niece; I cannot say.

M. J. W. Veysey.

Mr. John Williams Veysey was then called, but did not answer to his name.

(Mr. R. Veysey.) Mr. John Williams Veysey has gone away. He went away yesterday morning. I understood he was going away on business to Dorsetshire.

(Mr. Price.) Who are you?

(Mr. R. Veysey.) I am Richard Veysey, but I have nothing to do with John Williams Veysey at all. He went away yesterday morning. I told him he ought not to go. He said his name was not down, and he would not be wanted. He certainly will come home to-night. I thought he would be home last night.

(Mr. Price.) Will you step into the box and be sworn, and then you can make your statement?

(Mr. R. Veysey.) I have nothing more to say than that.

(Mr. Price.) Will you go into the box, if you please?

Mr. R. Veysey.

Mr. Richard Veysey sworn.

26,225. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—No business.

26,226. Living on your own means?—Yes, certainly.

26,227. What were you originally?—Well, I was a grazier. I was a cattle dealer 40 years ago.

26,228. Have you retired from business all that time?—No; five years.

26,229. (Mr. Coleridge.) What have you been since?—A farmer and grazier.

26,230. (Mr. Price.) Are you a resident in Bridgwater?—Yes.

26,231. And a voter?—Yes.

26,232. And how have you voted?—For the Conservatives.

26,233. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

26,234. For the Conservatives?—Yes.

26,235. Did you take any part in the election?—Not any part in the election.

26,236. Well, in the election before, of Vanderbyl and Patton; did you vote then?—I always voted Conservative, for, I think, five years. I voted for the Conservatives always.

26,237. You voted for Mr. Patton?—Yes.

26,238. At both elections?—Yes.

26,239. Did you receive any money for your vote?—Never.

26,240. Or any gratuity or anything of that kind?—Never.

26,241. In the election of 1865, had you a vote then?—In April 1865 I was living in the country. Yes, I should suppose so, sir.

26,242. Now about your son. When did he go away?—Yesterday morning.

26,243. (Mr. Anstey.) Where is he gone?—I do not know.

26,244. You say you told him he ought not to go?—I did.

26,245. What did he say?—He said his name was not down, and he would not be wanted; but why he did not come home last night I do not know.

26,246. When do you expect him back?—Oh, to-day.

26,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does he live with you?—He does live with me.

26,248. I thought you said just now you had nothing to do with him?—I have nothing to do with him. I find him.

26,249. I do not mean to do with him with regard to bribery. You say you had nothing to do with him. You are his father, and you have to do with him?—I told him he ought not to go away.

26,250. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he make any remark when you told him that he ought not to go away?—Yes. I will tell you exactly what took place. He said his name was not down, and he would not be wanted, but why he did not come back last night I do not know.

26,251. Has he any business to take him away?—I do not know.

26,252. How did he know his name was not going to be down in the list?—I do not know.

26,253. Does he practise as a lawyer?—Yes; I think he has been on a particular business in the law now; I do not know.

26,254. We have it in evidence that he ceased to be employed by the Conservatives at or before the last election?—Oh, I know nothing of it.

26,355. You said just now that he lives with you?—Well, he does.

26,256. Then you can tell us if a man lives with you, who is your son, and who is a lawyer, whether or no he was employing himself, or taking any active part at all, in the last election?—Well, I do not know, I am sure.

26,257. (Mr. Price.) Perhaps you might tell us whether you took an active part yourself?—Well, I did not, on my oath.

26,258. Do you know a man of the name of Ambrose Dyer?—Yes.

26,259. Does he hold a piece of land of you?—Yes.

26,260. On an 18 years' lease?—Yes.

26,261. And with three years to run?—Yes.

26,262. Do you know that your son asked him to vote last time?—No; I know nothing.

26,263. Wait a moment; do not be so fast. You swear you do not know that your son asked him to vote?—No, I swear I did not.

26,264. Do you know a man of the name of Webber?—I know some Webbers, but I do not know about him.

26,265. Did your son ask Mr. Webber to vote for the blues, and tell him that if he voted for them he should have the piece of land Dyer had?—I do not know.

26,266. Has Webber ever applied to you for the land that Dyer held of you?—No; I do not know that he has.

26,267. You surely must know?—Not to me.

26,268. Have you tried several times to turn Dyer out, alleging that he has broken his covenants?—Yes.

26,269. Since the election?—Yes.

26,270. Why?—He broke up the terms of his lease.

26,271. Had you at any time accused him of breaking his covenants before the election?—That is a difference.

26,272. Never mind its being a difference. Had you at any time accused him of breaking his covenants before the election?—I did once before.

26,273. Is he now under notice to quit?—Yes.

26,274. To go at Christmas?—Yes.

26,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does he mean to go?—I do not know; I mean for him to go.

26,276. (Mr. Price.) I may be wrong about the election. Do you remember the election of 1866? Was it then that your son asked Webber to vote?—Oh, bless you, Sir, I do not know anything about him. The election has nothing to do with it.

26,277. Do not let us have any of your blessings. Was it after the election of 1866 that you gave Dyer notice to quit, and accused him of breaking his covenants?—Oh no, only just now; just before midsummer.

26,278. Do you know Webber?—I think I do. I would not swear I know him; I think I do.

26,279. Your son never asked you whether you would let Webber have the land?—I do not know whether he has.

26,280. Has your son ever asked you whether you would let Webber have the land when Dyer gave it up?—No.

26,281. Never?—No.

26,282. You never heard that?—I do not know whether Webber said he would take it or not.

26,283. Has your son ever asked you to let Webber have the land when Dyer gave it up?—No.

26,284. That you swear?—That I swear. He said there were many who would take it, and Webber may be one of them he mentioned, but not particularly.

26,285. Have you ever at any election had anything to do with bribery?—No, I never had in my life.

26,286. In 1865, which way did you vote?—Conservative.

26,287. Did you get anything then?—No; nobody would offer me any money, I should think.

26,288. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you wish me to take your last answer but one to be literally true, that you never had anything to do with bribery in your life?—I swear I never had anything to do with bribery in my life.

26,289. Do you not know that you are reputed amongst your own party and amongst the Liberals with having been one of the principal bribing agents in all the old elections?—If you will hear me give an answer, I will explain to you. You ask Mr. Henry Bussell if he has ever seen me take a part, and he will tell you he never saw me take a part.

26,290. I put the question to you again. I ask you whether you are aware that you are reputed amongst politicians of all sides in this borough as having been one of the principal bribery agents in all the old elections?—I swear on my oath I never have been.

26,291. That is not an answer. Do not you know that is your reputation on all sides?—I cannot tell.

26,292. Do you mean to swear that you cannot tell you are so reputed?—I should think not; I should think I was not so reputed.

26,293. (Mr. Anstey.) Your answer is quite sufficient for me.

26,294. (Mr. Price.) You swear you never had anything to do with bribery at any election?—No.

26,295. Has money ever passed through your hands?—On my oath it never has.

26,296. Is there any other person called "Veysey" in this borough?—There is my son.

26,297. No other "Veysey" of your style of life?—No, not that I am aware of.

26,298. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there any Veysey senior, retired cattle dealer, in Bridgwater, except yourself?—No, I should think not.

26,299. And you never heard that you were reputed as being a bribe agent in all the old elections?—I should think not. I never took a part in those things, I was never engaged in canvassing. I was never at a meeting, and I never was into a committee-room to ask how they got on in my life. This I swear on my oath; and furthermore, I say that I never voted for one of each party, I never did such a thing.

26,300. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you never vote for one of each party?—No.

26,301. Did you never vote for Tynte at anytime?—Yes.

26,302. (Mr. Austey.) When was your first election at which you voted?—I think I came to Bridgwater in April.

26,303. April of what year?—April five years ago.

26,304. You have not been in Bridgwater more than five years?—I was here in the year 1840. I could tell you by referring.

26,305. I ask you in what election in Bridgwater did you first vote?—Well, I do not think I was ever a voter before. I was away 18 years out of the borough.

26,306. (Mr. Price.) I understood you to say you did not live in the borough so as to have a vote until five years ago?—No, not until five years ago. I could tell you if I went home.

26,307. Where were you living before?—Out in the country.

26,308. Where? It has a name?—Coxpit Farm.

26,309. (Mr. Anstey.) How far from this borough is that?—A little more than a mile.

(Mr. Anstey.) And that you call in the country.

26,310. (Mr. Price.) I suppose you used to attend the markets at Bridgwater?—Yes.

26,311. As a cattle dealer and farmer?—I have not called myself a cattle dealer for 29 years past. I used to deal largely before.

26,312. What have you been doing during the last 29 years?—I have a very large property in Bridgwater. My father was born before me.

26,313. (Mr. Anstey.) When you said you had been 18 years away from the borough, you meant you had been living within a mile of it for 18 years?—Yes.

26,314. That you call being away from it?—Well, I was not a voter, I mean.

26,315. You did not tell us that?—That is what I mean; that I was not a voter.

26,316. You were not a voter?—No, I was not a voter.

26,317. Did you ever take any part in the elections?—Never in my life; not in the least way.

26,318. And you have never known you were a person who was spoken of as being a bribe agent?—I swear never did.

26,319. You never heard that you were so spoken of?—No, never in my life.

26,320. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any brothers here in Bridgwater?—No, not here.

26,321. Where then?—I have a brother in Taunton.

26,322. Did he take an active part in these elections here?—No, not that I am aware of.

26,323. Did he come up from Taunton to take part in any of the elections?—No, not that I am aware of JOHN CARTER REEVES sworn. J. C. Reeves.

26,324. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A cord-wainer.

26,325. What we want to ask you more particularly about, is the part that you took in the riot at Mr. Bowen's house in 1832. I understood you were one of those who took part in it, and were tried for it?—I was. I ought to know some little about it.

26,326. Tell us what you know of it?—I was 21 weeks in Taunton gaol before the trial for it.

26,327. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean they would not bail you?—No; I was a stranger in the town at the time.

26,328. How did you get mixed up with it?—I had a father in law living in the town, and he was opposed to me in politics, and I went to Bowen's in the night to see him; I could not see him there, and I went to the "Golden Ball," and I heard a cry of "the Friars." I heard Mr. James Sully's evidence here, but I do not believe Mr. James Sully would tell a lie on the subject but I think he quoted the defence set up by Mr. Serjeant Kinglake. That is what he referred to.

36,329. I do not know what you mean. Mr. Sully was there; he says so?—Yes; he makes it appear so mild.

26,330. You do not believe that it was so mild as he says?—Certainly not; when brick bats are flying about, it is not such a very mild thing.

26,331. (Mr. Anstey.) He was disguised?—Yes.

26,332. And these persons in the pea jackets and sou' westers were the leaders?—They were.

26,333. Amongst those that were disguised were Mr. John Snook, Charles Fann, J. Poole, George Gandell, Henry Fann?—Yes; Mr. James Sully, Mr. Gesty.

26,334. Robert Vearncombe in a kettle smock?—Yes.

26,335. And James Vearncombe?—Yes; that was the man who was with me the whole time.

26,336. You were committed to jail?—Yes.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

J. C. Reeves.

21 Sept. 1869.

26,337. And you say Mr. James Sully did a good deal with Mr. Serjeant Kinglake in getting up your defence?—No.

26,338. I thought you said so?—No; because I did not know it. The defence he made to the jury I mean.

26,339. To your great surprise you were acquitted?—It was a surprise to me, there is no question about it.

26,340. How do you account for it?—I believe the jury had been tampered with.

26,341. How much were they bribed?—I do not know. I heard they got as much as 500*l.*

26,342. Who raised the money?—I do not know.

26,343. Were you one of the parties who raised the money?—No; I have no money myself.

26,344. Can you give me the names of any of the persons who were wealthy enough to raise the money?—They were all wealthy men, the whole of them.

26,345. Mr. Sully?—I do not consider Mr. Sully a wealthy man. I mean they were men in a good way of business.

26,346. Was he wealthy enough to raise it?—Certainly.

26,347. Was there anybody else?—Mr. Gesty, wine merchant, for one.

26,348. Anybody else?—Mr. Hodge, Masons' Arms.

26,349. The Fanns were very well off?—Yes.

26,350. Was there money raised by some of the prisoners?—No; not that I am aware of.

26,351. You did not hear of it?—No.

26,352. The trial lasted two days, I believe, did it not?—No.

26,353. It lasted to the second day?—It lasted to the second day. The jury, and the bailed prisoners, before the trial was over, went and supped together at a public house, and had a jolly nice supper.

26,354. Where were you?—I was under lock and key.

26,355. The bailed prisoners went and supped with them?—That is what I have heard. I saw them together after I got out of jail.

26,356. Where were they?—In a public house.

26,357. All the jury?—No; some of the jury.

26,358. Who were they by name?—I do not know.

26,359. They were drinking with the prisoners?—Yes.

26,360. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know whether any of the jury came from this town?—I do not know.

26,361. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear Mr. Hobhouse, he was the chairman, sum up the case to the jury?—I did.

26,362. Did you hear him tell the jury that the riot had been clearly proved, and even admitted by the counsel for the defendants; that some of them had offered no defence; that the cases of the two Vearncombes, and perhaps one or two others, differed a little from the other cases; but it was for the jury to consider how far those cases were removed in character from the others, and that the jury would remember that 20 of those others had not called a single witness. Did you hear him tell them that?—I do remember it perfectly.

26,363. I believe altogether you were 37 in number?—That is the number.

26,364. Is it the fact that the jury, after about an hour's consultation, returned a verdict of not guilty as to all the 37, including the 20 who had not given any evidence?—Yes; and if you had seen the chairman, Mr. Hobhouse, when the jury returned, and gave their verdict, you would not have forgotten it, he was so surprised.

26,365. And disgusted too, I suppose?—Yes.

26,366. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you defended by counsel?—Yes; by Mr. Serjeant Kinglake.

26,367. You were all a batch defended by him?—Yes.

26,368. (Mr. Price.) Who paid the expenses?—I do not know.

26,369. Were they paid by subscription?—I do not know.

24,370. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anything?—No.

26,371. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Hobhouse say anything when the jury came in and returned that verdict?—I will tell you exactly what took place.

26,372. If you please?—The jury returned into court, and the names were called over, and the jury were first of all asked if the two Fanns were guilty; they said, "What think you, gentlemen, are they guilty, or not guilty?" And the foreman said, "Not guilty." And they went on seven or eight down the rank, and I saw Mr. Hobhouse turn his eyes up, and say "What! none of them are guilty?" And I saw the old gentleman throw himself back in the chair, and seem much surprised.

26,373. And you were surprised too?—I was.

26,374. You had no expectation of getting off?—No. We were sitting there with tears in our eyes.

26,375. You had no expectation of getting off at all?—No; and the vans were outside ready to take us off.

26,376. No vans were there; you could not be transported?—I do not know about that. It was a very serious crime in those times.

26,377. (Mr. Price.) You assaulted Mr. Bowen, and broke into his house. I do not know but perhaps you would have had a severe punishment visited upon you. Mr. Bowen was severely injured?—Yes; I was close to him when he was struck.

26,379. (Mr. Anstey.) You saw him struck?—I did.

26,380. Did you see the blow struck?—Yes.

26,381. Where was the blow struck?—Across the face with a stick.

26,382. Did you see him fall?—Yes.

26,383. And did you see him carried away?—Yes.

26,384. Was that on his own lawn?—Yes.

26,385. He was carried into his house?—Yes.

26,386. Some of them were made prisoners by the constables?—No; two of them were made prisoners.

36,387. That is some. Were the persons who were prisoners afterwards rescued, and carried out by your people?—No. I will show you how it was. They were not rescued, but there was a compromise come to between the two parties to get the men out. I will show you that one of the first parties to get into the room was a man of the name of Goose, and he was drinking that night. It is the same man who got Westropp unseated.

36,388. Do you mean Cooze?—Gooze.

36,389. (Mr. Coleridge.) How does he spell his name?—Some spell it C and some G.

36,390. (Mr. Anstey.) It is Cooze?—Well, he got in there by consent of some of Mr. Bowen's friends. We got in to get him out, and he swore he would not go unless he was paid for being made a prisoner, and four of us took him up in our arms, and while he was in our arms, and we were bringing him out by main force, a man of the name of Isaacs—he was a constable at the time, a special, I think—came up to my side, and struck him as heavy a blow as he could on the head, while he was in our arms, and I gave him one for it, and I knocked him down.

26,391. Is Isaacs living now?—Yes.

26,392–3. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did this riot arise?—It arose very simply. It originated through this Cooze. He was there, and the special constables were there, and some men that we called "watchers." They were appointed some years ago to watch the voters, and to patrol through the town. I rather think this was their rendezvous, at this particular house. This Cooze lives close by, and in passing by,—he was drunk,—and whether he interrupted them, or they interrupted him, I do not know, but so it was. He was passing by at the time, and this Cooze had got into a row with these constables, and Mr. Bowen came out on the lawn.

26,394. It was not a premeditated affair?—No.

26,395. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Cooze alive?—Yes, and news was taken to the low public houses, and there was a rush, and so the riot took place.

26,396. I was going to ask about the chairman. It was the Right Honourable Henry Hobhouse, was it not?—Yes.

26,397. Brother to Sir John Cam Hobhouse?—I do not know.

26,398. He was a Liberal in politics, was he not?—No.

26,399. Was old Mr. Bussell at Wells that day?—He was.

26,400. Was he one of the 37 prisoners, or not?—Well, I am not clear whether he was one of that lot, because he was tried at the assizes previously for conspiracy.

26,401. He was one of those who had been tried previously at the assizes for conspiracy?—I am not aware whether he was one of the 37, but he was there.

26,402. He was at Wells at the trial?—Yes.

26,403. He was one of those who were drinking the day after the trial at the public house with some of the jury?—I do not know. I only go from what I have heard him say himself.

26,404. What have you heard him say?—I have heard him say how he bribed them. I do not know whether he was laughing or not. I dare say it was a good deal of bombast; he was drunk. I heard him say that he bribed them at Wells.

26,405. Did you hear him say that at the time of the trial?—Within the last 12 months.

26,406. But about that time did you hear him say that?—I was not intimate with him at that time.

26,407. But since you have been intimate with him you have heard him say that?—Yes.

26,408. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter?—Yes.

26,409. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray at the last election.

26,410. Did you get anything?—No.

26,411. Nor any promise?—No.

26,412. Did you hear any promise made?—I do not think there was anything in the shape of a promise.

26,413. Did you hear Mr. Westropp say that if they would go and vote like men it would be all right?—Nothing of the kind.

26,414. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in Patton and Vanderbyl's election?—Yes.

26,415. Did you get anything?—Yes.

26,416. What did you get?—10*l.*

26,417. From whom?—Temblett.

26,418. Did you vote at Patton and Bagehot's election?—Yes.

26,419. What did you get?—10*l.*

26,420. Did you vote in the previous election of 1865?—Yes.

26,421. Whom did you vote for?—I voted for Kinglake and Westropp.

26,422. What did you get?—Nothing.

26,423. Did you vote in the election before that?—Yes; I was only bribed twice in my life.

26,424. Whom did you vote for?—I voted for Tynte and Kinglake.

26,425. In 1859?—Yes. Some months after that a gentleman came into my shop, and says to me, "Reeves, I am thoroughly surprised to see your name on the list in Lovibond's office."

26,426. Who was this that came into your shop?—A gentleman.

26,427. Give me his name?—I cannot remember his name. I would tell you in a moment if I did. Well, I says, "It is very possible you may see my name there, because, for two elections running, I have had the character of a man on night duty." He says, "It was not that; there was a ten pound pound note at the end of it." I said, "Well, if there is a 10*l.* note at the end of my name, it is more than I authorized any man to do; it was done without my knowledge or consent."

26,428. (Mr. Coleridge.) What year was that?—1859.

26,429. You got nothing?—I never had any money, and I could not bear the thoughts of it.

26,430. How did you come to take it afterwards?—Because it was put down in the list.

26,431. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it because you resented your name being put down in that list that you took a bribe?—No. Allow me to explain what I did. I went over to Mr. Lovibond's office, and I said to the clerk there, "Well, Freddy, here is a pretty thing you have put me in for?" He says, "What is that?" I say, "You have got my name down in your list for money." I said, "Did I ever authorize you to put my name down in the list?" And he says, "Never." I said, "I will have this cleared up; I will go to Mr. Tynte and Mr. Kinglake, and ask them about it;" and he seemed surprised at that, and said, "Will you?" I said, "So help me God, I will." He said, "Come over in a couple of hours." At that time I owed him 9*l.*

26,432. Owed whom? Mr. Lovibond?—Yes. I went over again in a couple of hours, and when I got over there, it was arranged that I should go home again; and I had not been home five minutes, when the clearance of the debt was sent over to my house.

26,433. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you got the document?—No.

26,434. Was that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

26,435. (Mr. Anstey.) That was the 1859 election?—Yes.

26,436. And in consequence of that, out of gratitude, you voted for Kinglake and Westropp in 1865?—I did.

26,437. What made you change your opinions, you who had always been so strong a Liberal?—Some of the greatest men in the land change their opinions, and I have a right to do the same.

26,438. When did you change your opinions?—After I had been ill used.

26,439. That was 1859?—Yes.

26,440. You changed your party in consequence of having been used ill?—No; it was not in consequence of that. I have been in the habit of reading a good deal, and I always read on two sides of the question.

26,439. After changing your opinion, did you not vote on two sides of the question, by voting for Mr. Kinglake on the one side, and Mr. Westropp on the other side?—I did.

26,440. You had not quite changed your opinion then; you were on both sides at once?—I was.

26,441. When did you come fairly over to the Conservative side?—I had more respect for Mr. Westropp than for Sir John Shelley.

26,442. When did you come fairly over to the Conservative side?—I had thoroughly made up my mind not to vote on that election.

26,443. Having voted once for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake, you made up your mind to vote altogether for the Tory candidate?—Yes; I thought I might as well go the whole hog.

26,444. And you got your reward. How many elections did you take a part in before 1859?—Right up to 1831. I voted for Mr. Shirley and Mr. Richard Brinsley Sheridan. That was my first vote.

26,445. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote for Leader and Broadwood?—No. It was before my vote was made good.

26,446. Did you know anything with respect to money going about in Broadwood's time?—There was not a child in the town but knew it.

26,447. Did you know it, is the question?—It was as common as a marsh-mallow.

26,448. Did you get anything?—No; I had not a vote. I had some drink.

26,449. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you one of those who invited Sir Thomas Lethbridge to come here and stand, promising him a majority if he stood?—Nothing of the kind.

26,450. Did you vote for or against him?—I voted against him. I forget who was at that election.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

J. C. Reeves.

21 Sept. 1869.

26,451. Sir Thomas Lethbridge against Mr. Broadwood?—I know I voted for the Liberals.

26,452. Do you remember the following election, when Richard Brinsley Sheridan stood?—I must have voted before Richard Brinsley Sheridan's election. I was not exactly clear. I know I voted at those two elections.

26,453. Did you vote at that election?—Yes.

26,454. For whom?—I voted for Richard Brinsley Sheridan then.

26,455. Do you remember the petition that was presented against Mr. Broadwood's return?—I do remember something of it, but not the rights of it.

26,456. Do you remember the petition that was presented about the same time, not against his return, signed by 156 of the most important personages in the town, praying that the writ might be suspended; in 1838 that would be?—Do you mean the purity men who signed that petition.

26,457. No. That was in 1866. I am asking you about the one signed in 1838, praying that there might be an inquiry into malpractices at Lethbridge's and Sheridan's contests, and the contest in which Broadwood was concerned?—I do recollect something of it.

26,458. Did you sign it?—No.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

26,459. (Mr. Price.) What do you wish to say?—This witness has himself told me the reason why he left the Liberal party and went over to Conservatives was because Mr. Salmon of Stuckey's bank had provided money to keep the bailiffs out of his house.

J. C. Reeves.

JOHN CARTER REEVES recalled.

26,460. (Mr. Price.) What do you say to that?—It is as big a lie as ever was uttered. I have dealt with Mr. Salmon ever since I have been in business, 18 or 19 years.

26,461. (Mr Coleridge.) Did Mr. Salmon ever pay a bailiff out for you?—No, never in my life.

26,462. (Mr. Anstey.) Has Mr. Salmon taken up bills for you?—Yes, when they became due; that is all.

26,463. To what amount has Mr. Salmon taken up bills for you?—I have no manner of knowledge of it. My daughter knows it.

26,464. What is her name?—Jane.

26,465. Is she at home now?—I do not know.

26,466. She is in Bridgwater, I suppose?—Yes.

26,467. When did Mr. Salmon first take up bills for you?—I have no recollection of the time.

26,468. Was it after the election of 1859?—Well, before that he had taken up bills for me. I should say so.

26,469. How much before?—I do not know.

26,470. A few days before?—I did not keep an account of it.

26,471. When was the last occasion of his taking up a bill for you; how long ago?—Oh, not these two years—three years.

26,472. Then from a period from before 1859 to 1867 he was taking up bills for you to an amount which you cannot state. Is that what you say?—I have no knowledge of it.

26,473. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who takes them up for you?—My daughter. She has the books to prove it.

26,474. Had you not better send your daughter here?—It is a matter of business, nothing more.

26,475. (Mr. Anstey.) Has your wife anything to do with it?—Nothing at all.

26,476. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your daughter's Christian name?—Jane.

Mr. J. W. Veysey.

MR. JOHN WILLIAMS VEYSEY sworn.

26,477. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A solicitor.

26,478. Practising on your own account?—Yes.

26,479. How long have you been in business for yourself?—Since 1864.

26,480. And before that where were you?—I was articled to Mr. Richard Smith in this town.

26,481. Then when you passed your examination you began to practise for yourself?—I did.

26,482. Were you employed at the last election of 1868?—No.

26,483. In no way whatever?—No; I was not spoken to even.

26,484. Not spoken to?—No.

26,485. You are a Conservative?—No; not spoken to in the least.

26,486. You are a Conservative in politics?—I voted for Westropp and Gray.

26,487. You are a Conservative in politics if you voted for them, I presume?—Yes.

26,488. Were you engaged for them in anyway?—No; in nothing whatever.

26,489. In anyway whatever?—No. Mr. Westropp asked me if I would vote for him, and I said I would.

26,490. In Patton and Vanderbyl's election did you vote?—Yes.

26,491. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Patton.

26,492. Were you an agent at that election?—No.

26,493. Had you anything to do with the distribution of money?—No. I voted for Mr. Patton.

26,494. Had you any money yourself?—I had 20*l.*

26,495. From whom?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

26,496. Had you any money at the last election?—No.

26,497. You had 20*l.* from Mr. Bealy Smith in Patton and Vanderbyl's election?—Yes; because it was a losing election.

26,498. How was that?—Vanderbyl was returned.

26,499. What had you done for your 20*l.* besides voting?—Well, I had kept a look-out for the party; nothing more than that.

26,500. Tell us what you had done?—I had done nothing whatever.

26,501. Did you do anything whatever for the 20*l.* besides voting?—No; except advising other people to vote.

26,502. You got 20*l.* for your vote. What do you mean by saying you got 20*l.* because it was a losing election? Did you expect more than 20*l.*?—I had 25*l.* the time before.

26,503. Whom did you get the 25*l.* from?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

26,504. Did you ask for 25*l.* at Mr. Patton's election?—No.

26,505. Mr. Smith said you could only have 20*l.* because it was a losing election?—He said, "We have lost the election, we have not too much money in hand, and you must not expect more than 20*l.*" I was paid that either at the end of February or in March 1867.

26,506. Did you make any claim for your vote at the last election?—Nothing whatever. I never asked, directly or indirectly.

26,507. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nor for your agency?—Nothing whatever.

26,508. (Mr. Price.) Nor for expenses?—Nothing whatever.

26,509. (Mr. Coleridge.) At those two elections, when you got 45*l.*, did you do anything for it? Did you work for it or keep lists?—No; I kept no lists whatever.

26,510. (Mr. Price.) What did you do?—I simply communicated any information I received; nothing else.

26,511. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you formally make a claim for it?—No.

26,512. You made no claim whatever for this 25*l.*?—No; none whatever.

26,513. (Mr. Price.) Not for professional services?—Nothing whatever.

26,514. In 1865, did you vote then?—I was not on the register then.

26,515. What part did you take in the election then?—There was a meeting on the 24th of June, or, rather, before Mr. Westropp came here, and my name was mentioned about attending at the committee-room.

26,516. Were you then under articles to Mr. Smith?—No. They had been completed. I attended the committee meeting in St. John Street.

26,517. Tell us all you know about it?—Well, just before Mr. Westropp came here there was a meeting in Mr. Lilly's office. I was asked if I would attend the meeting at St. John Street. I did do so, and I went over the register. There were different people at the meeting, and they had lists of the persons they knew, and they made reports of how those persons voted, and who they would vote for, and whether they would vote for us or not, and they would report from time to time—twice a day, for days together. I can tell you the names of the committee-men if you wish.

26,518. No; I do not care about that?—They reported from time to time that they had seen So-and-so, and So-and-so would do this, and So-and-so would be against us, and we found we had a majority for us, and that we were going to win the election. That was going on from time to time during the whole time.

26,519. Was anything said at these meetings as to whether money was to be spent?—We said money was to be spent.

26,520. Were those persons instructed to canvass the people, and say there would be money?—I cannot say that; to say it would be right, or something like that; nothing more than that.

26,521. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many persons have you made right yourself?—I did not make any right myself.

26,522. Did you promise anybody?—I may have said this——

26,523. (Mr. Price.) You may have said a hundred things?—They may have said, "Do you know whether there will be any money?;" and I may have said, "I "do not know; but if there is you will be paid the "same as the rest."

26,524. But have you said that?—Yes.

26,525. To several voters?—Yes.

26,526. (Mr. Anstey.) This was in 1865?—Yes.

26,527. (Mr. Price.) Did you do anything at the other election of 1866?—No. At the 1866 election I was unwell, and not able to get about very well. I voted myself, I should think, about mid-day, and the electors had a meeting. I saw one of the electors in the morning at the "Golden Lion." I heard nothing whatever about money. I heard about the "Clarence" hotel, that there were several voters. I went to look after several voters I knew, and the last man I came upon was Mr. Gilchrist.

26,528. What election are you on?—1866; Vanderbyl's election. I saw Mr. Gilchrist; I never said anything about money to him. Mr. Pym, at the "Golden Lion," asked me to call upon him. He is dead now. We went up to poll, and nothing was said about money.

26,529. Was there a "tally" at the "Clarence"?—I do not know.

26,530. (Mr. Anstey.) Were there voters at the "Clarence," "bottled up," as it is called?—Yes. I remember James Abbott was there.

26,531. (Mr. Price.) Where were they?—Upstairs.

26,532. In the ball-room?—Yes.

26,533. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who had charge of them? Mr. Leaker or anybody?—No; I do not think he had.

26,534. (Mr. Anstey.) Who had charge of them? You must know?—I do not know who particularly had charge of them. There they were.

26,535. (Mr. Price.) Who had control over these men? Who had them under command?—I do not know.

26,536. Who was the active party in taking care of them?—I do not know.

26,537. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you, that at the time you got up there, that these "bottled" voters were, to some extent, free?—They were free.

26,538. Had you been in the hotel at an earlier period of that day?—Yes.

26,539. When you were there before, was the door of the room in which they were "bottled" shut or open?—First of all, they were down below in another room.

26,540. What room was that; the tap-room, or what room was it?—No; a room on the right-hand side.

26,541. The room on the right-hand side of the door as you go in?—No; further down than that.

26,542. (Mr. Coleridge.) Through the bar?—No, not through the bar, I believe.

26,543. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a sitting-room or a kitchen?—A sitting-room.

26,544. When you first knew of their being there, was the door of that room locked or open?—Open.

26,545. Had you been there at all that day when they were under lock and key, or under bar or bolt?—No. I saw no bar or bolt, or anything of the kind.

26,546. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who kept the key of that room?—No; I do not know that they were "bottled."

(Mr. Anstey.) You said just now you thought they were.

26,547. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by "bottled" men? Kept against their wills?—No.

26,548. Then what do you mean?—I mean the voters who waited to the very end, who were going up in a body.

26,549. Were they drinking in a body?—Abbott was drinking. I know that he paid for a bottle of wine himself.

26,550. Was there any drink in the room?—There was no drink in the room but what they paid for.

26,551. (Mr. Anstey.) But was there drinking going on?—Yes.

26,552. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there free drinking going on; treating?—Not that I am aware of.

26,553. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there drinking going on?—No; I saw Abbott drinking. He told me afterwards——

26,554. As a lawyer, you know what he said is not evidence.

26,555. (Mr. Price.) Did you see anybody drinking?—I paid for what I had.

26,556. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not the fact that there is no election at which you, John Williams Veysey, do not go about at public houses with different members of your party, and drink beer at the bar with them?—I do.

26,557. Do you know a person named George William Heal; a notorious man?—Yes.

26,558. And do you know, that in 1865, that he, of all men in the world, was in the habit, at election times, of taking a glass of beer with you, of all men in the world?—I remember going to his brewery, and having a glass of beer.

26,559. And he is your companion?—I knew him through Mr. Kirk.

(Mr. Price.) What did you tell Gilchrist when you went to him?

26,560. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told him it was all right?—I do not remember telling him anything of the sort.

26,561. (Mr. Price.) Now we will go to Patton's election?—I was down at the "Golden Lion" early in the morning, and I came down and polled early from the "Clarence" hotel, and we found that the men were standing about, and no money was going about. Afterwards, I found out there was 5*l.* going, and a promise of 5*l.* more. Then we came out and we thought we had lost the election at the time. The next thing I recollect is, that I saw several electors go into the "Bull and Butcher," and then they went to poll.

26,562. That election was won at the last moment?—No.

26,563. At Patton's first election he got in by seven?—No; not the very last moment. I will tell you exactly what I heard. I found that Kiddle, at the "Salmon" inn, had not polled. I went out to Kiddle, and I found he had a man there who had not polled, and I said to Kiddle "come and poll."

26,564. Did you give him any money?—I do not know that he had any money.

26,565. That gives us no information. What we want to know is, whether there was any person bribed that day, or was offered money, or promised any?—I never saw a farthing pass.

26,566. Did you promise any?—No.

26,567. Did you say to anybody it would be all right?—No; I was kept away from it.

26,568. Now, 1865. You were going on with some story as to that election?—I was at the committee-room there in 1865.

26,569. (Mr. Anstey.) You had got so far as to say you had promised or bribed a number of voters at that election?—When?

26,570. 1865?—I may have said something about money.

26,571. Your attention was called just now to that absurd phrase, "I may have." You said, not that you "may" have promised voters, but you said distinctly that you did?—I told voters——

26,572. Did you or did you not promise them or offer them a sum of money? We cannot be kept here all day wasting our time by a man like you. Did you not promise or offer a sum of money to a voter called Osborne?—I did not, so help me God.

26,573. You swore the same thing before the committee of the House of Commons, and they did not believe you?—They did. It was not reported upon, excuse me.

26,574. Very well, we will see that. You are aware that the enquiry was broken off as soon as they had come to the conclusion that Gilbert and Jones had been bribed; you are aware of that?—Yes.

26,575. And there was a great dissatisfaction expressed. Your case was under consideration when the inquiry was broken off? Was not that so?—No, decidedly not. It was the first case mentioned.

26,576. Were you not contradicted in your statement upon that by old Mr. Osborne, the two Misses Osborne, and some other witnesses?—No; there was the old man and two daughters.

26,577. And no other witnesses?—No other witnesses, I believe.

26,578. You had none to support you?—No.

26,579. And the question which the Committee had to consider, and which of course we shall have to consider when we hear those other witnesses, will be, whether your character stood then so high in Bridgwater as to entitle you to belief, although contradicted by those three highly respectable witnesses?—Yes. What I said before the Committee of the House of Commons, and so reported in the Blue Book, is the truth and the whole truth in every respect. What the old man said about not having any scrutiny votes is totally false. As to what the daughters said, no doubt they overheard what I said, and they put a wrong construction upon it.

26,580. You need not tell me what they said; I have it all in the Blue Book. Do you mean to swear that they only swore to what they overheard pass between you and their father? Do you mean to swear that was all they swore?—No. They were not in the room in the beginning.

26,581. Do you mean to swear that was all they swore; what they overheard pass between you and their father?—They swore they heard me say so and so.

26,582. And no conversation passed between them and you?—Oh, a conversation did pass. I went there with them.

26,583. You had better take care what you are about. Do you mean to say that Miss Osborne's attention was not called specifically to the sum of 10*l.* as being the cost of a silk dress?—We ——

26,584. Answer my question. Did you or did you not call her attention to the fact that 10*l.* would go towards buying a silk dress for her?—She said——

26,585. Did you, or did you not say that to her?—She said ——

26,586. Will you answer the question? You can explain afterwards. On your oath, did you not say to Miss Osborne that 10*l.* would go a long way, or some way, towards buying her a silk dress?—I did not, to the best of my belief.

26,587. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by "the best of your belief"? Do you mean us to believe that you have not now a sufficient recollection, so as to be able positively to say, one way or the other, whether you made use of that remarkable expression to Miss Osborne, that 10*l.* would go a long way towards buying her a silk dress?—She has stated that she said that 10*l.* would buy her a silk dress, or something of that kind. I did not offer a single farthing to Mr. Osborne either directly or indirectly.

26,588. Never mind that. The question is, did you not say that 10*l.* would go a long way to buy a silk dress?—I did not, to the best of my belief.

26,589. (Mr. Anstey.) This is what she said,—it is 20*l.* I find: "What is 20*l.*? I could spend it all in a dress." That is her evidence?—I was not there when she gave her evidence.

26,590. You were not there?—I was not. I did not go up till after she gave her evidence.

26,591. (Mr. Price.) But did Miss Osborne say to you that she could spend more than 20*l.* on her dress?—Yes, she said something to that effect; that she could spend more than that on a dress.

26,592. She said that to you?—Yes.

26,593. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not that in answer to a remark of this kind: "Mr. Osborne, you are a very foolish man; 20*l.* is useful in a family"?—I do not remember.

26,594. Or anything to that effect?—I do not remember.

26,595. Did you tell Miss Osborne previously to that, that you had been discussing politics with Mr. Osborne, her father?—I did say something like that.

26,596. Did he say in that conversation about politics, "If you were to offer me 2,000*l.* I would not take it"?—He did say so; and I told him I respected him for it.

(Mr. Price.) I should think he would feel himself more insulted by your respect for him than by your want of respect for him.

26,597. (Mr. Anstey.) What made him say that?—He said, "Now, my neighbour, Isaac Drake, would take 10*l.*, but I would not."

26,598. There is not a word about Isaac Drake occurs in your evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons?—He said, "My neighbour no doubt would."

26,599. (Mr. Coleridge.) His neighbour is Isaac Drake?—His neighbour is Isaac Drake.

26,600. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you not mention about Isaac Drake before the committee?—I believe I did.

26,601. But you did not. It is not mentioned in the report in the blue book?—There are several misprints there.

26,602. But this is an important misprint. Nothing about his neighbour occurs in this report. Nothing appears about Drake, nor "my neighbour." Are we to believe your statement, or that of the respectable short-hand writer?—I am telling you exactly the truth.

26,603. Did he tell you, in answer to something you said to him, "Supposing I was to take the money, "and it was to be found out, it would not only subject "me to six months' imprisonment, but it would unseat "the member?"—He did not.

26,604. And did you tell him, "If you will take the money it will never be found out?"—I did not.

26,605. Did he tell you, "There is another thing; I have promised my vote?"—I believe he did tell me he had promised his vote.

26,606. Did he tell you, "If I could not get 20*l.* in "an honester way than that, I would not have it at "all?"—He said he would not take money for his vote; he said that.

26,607. Did he say anything to you to this effect, "If I cannot get 20*l.* in an honester way than that I will not take it at all?"—I cannot say whether he used those words; but he told me this, that he would not take money for his vote.

26,608. Did he mention 20*l.*, that he would not take 20*l.*?—He said, "No; 10*l.* would not buy me, nor 20*l.*, nor 2,000*l.*;" something like that.

26,609. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came he to be talking about money to you?—I went there and began to talk to him about the election.

26,610. About money, I suppose?—I did not.

26,611. How came he to talk to you about money?—We began to talk about the election.

26,612. You must have said something to him about what was going?—No, I did not.

26,613. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not know he was a Liberal when you went to him?—I did.

26,614. Did you not tell the House of Commons he was what was called an "old buffer?"—I did; a "buff."

26,615. You went to Mr. Osborne, knowing he was a Liberal, to ask him to vote for Mr. Westropp. Is that so?—When?

26,616. You know when. On that occasion?—On that Sunday evening?

26,617. Yes?—I did not go to him to ask him for his vote.

26,618. Then you have either perjured yourself here or before the House of Commons; for you were asked these two questions, "Did this conversation "take place? Did Mr. Osborne, the old gentleman, "say, "Well, Mr. Veysey, what is your pleasure?" in "a contemptuous sort of way, you perceive; and your "answer is, "Not that I am aware of." Then you "are asked, "Did you say, 'I am come to ask you, "Mr. Osborne, that you will vote for Mr. West-"ropp?'"; and your answer is, "No, I did not. "Then you are asked, "Did you say this, 'I will "tell you what I will do, we will have no scrutiny "votes, and you shall plump for Mr. Westropp, and "we will give you four smackers, smiting the action "to the word, that is 20*l.*?" And you say, "I did "not; I never heard the term 'smacker' applied "before." I had misread the passage I see?—No; I did not say anything of the kind.

26,619. Well, we shall see the Misses Osborne here, I have no doubt. Is Mr. Osborne alive?—I believe he is.

26,620. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where does he live?—Barclay Street.

26,621. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he not a highly respectable person?—I do not know much of him.

Miss Jane Reeves sworn. Miss J. Reeves.

26,622. (Mr. Price.) We understand that you keep your father's books, in which all his bill transactions appear?—Yes.

26,623. We want to know what bill transactions passed between him and Mr. Salmon?—I believe if you will look at this book you will find it (handing a small book to the Commissioners).

26,624. When was the last occasion that Mr. Salmon did anything in the way of a bill transaction for your father?—What he has done will appear on that book.

26,625. Has he paid any money at any time for your father to keep the bailiffs out?—No.

26,626. He has not?—No.

26,627. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he taken up any bills for your father?—He took up some bills.

26,628. Was your father threatened about those acceptances or bills?—No.

26,629. Threatened with an execution?—No.

26,630. When was the first occasion of his taking up a bill for your father?—You will see it on the book.

26,631. (Mr. Price.) It begins in 1865. Is this the earliest book you have?—Yes. That was the first time Mr. Salmon ever did it for him.

26,632. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure he never did anything for him in 1859?—It is not on that book as you will see.

26,633. But did he do anything in 1859? This book begins in 1865?—You will see on the book when the bills became due.

26,634. Did he or did he not do anything for your father in 1859?—I believe he did.

26,635. This book does not show it?—That book does not show it. It could have been only for a short duration, only for a few days.

26,636. Anything in 1860?—As far as my memory will serve me, he did.

26,637. And in 1861?—Very likely.

26,638. Very likely! I am asking you about your memory; do you remember?—I have not had time to charge my memory. I do not keep everything in my mind.

26,639. In 1862, 1863, and 1864, was anything done?—Whatever business we have done about bills was done at Stuckey's bank.

26,640. This is only the bank book?—That is the only one I have.

26,641. (Mr. Price.) The banker gives you that?—No. It is a book of my own, and Mr. Salmon enters it down for us.

26,642. (Mr. Anstey.) And that is the book you keep?—That is the only book we have for it.

26,643. (Mr. Price.) Does Mr. Salmon do all the banking business for your father?—He has always done all the banking matters for my father.

26,644. What is your father?—A boot and shoemaker.

26,645. Mr. Salmon has always done your banking business for your father?—Yes.

26,646. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Salmon a Conservative?—Yes.

26,647. Do you know whether Mr. Salmon has ever done anything for your father in the way of taking up bills, to prevent his being sued upon them?—No. He always did business of that kind himself.

26,648. I am asking you about taking up bills on which your father would be liable. I ask you, did you know of any bills of that kind taken up by Mr. Salmon in 1859; yes or no?—No, I have not.

26,649. You have not?—No.

26,650. What do you know of any bills having been taken up by Mr. Salmon, except the bills which are mentioned in that book?—Yes. I have other bills taken up.

26,651. Where are the bills referred to in that book?—We have never kept them, because we have never kept the parties long without the money.

26,652. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Salmon will know all about it?—Yes.

26,653. (Mr. Anstey.) How came Mr. Salmon to keep that book?—He never kept that book; he entered it down.

26,654. Did he never give you a book before?—No. We never required one.

26,655. You never asked for one?—No.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Miss J. Reeves.

21 Sept. 1869.

26,656. How came you to ask for this one?—I did not ask for it. He asked us for it, and we carried it over to him, and he entered it down for us.

26,657. (Mr. Price.) It is in several handwritings. Mr. Salmon is the manager of Stuckey's bank?—Yes. He is the manager of Stuckey's bank.

Mr. R. Salmon.

Mr. Robert Salmon recalled.

26,660. (Mr. Price.) What we want to know is about the business transactions which you had with Mr. Carter Reeves. It has been stated by Mr. Allan that the reason of Reeves changing his political views is because you had lent him money to pay out an execution, or to keep out the bailiffs; and then he denies that, but he acknowledges that you had bill transactions with him. Now just tell us about them?—La! There are so many, I can't tell you at all. He is not the only man in Bridgwater that I have assisted at times by scores. I know nothing of executions. I know nothing of that.

26,661. Was he a customer of your bank?—Well, a casual one.

26,662. Just look at that little book (handing a book to the witness).

26,663. (Mr. Anstey.) Do your transactions with him begin before the period to which the book relates?—Well, they may have been on for a great many years, but they are very minute transactions altogether.

26,664. (Mr. Price.) That book begins in 1865 only. Now just let us understand the relation in which he stood to your bank, Mr. Salmon, or to you?—I do not understand what you mean by relation.

26,665. Was he a customer of the bank?—A casual customer, that is all.

26,666. Now there is the book from 1865?—Yes.

26,667. When did his account first commence with you?—Well, I should think the man had been meeting his bills as a little tradesman, perhaps, for many years before this.

26,668. (Mr. Anstey.) How many years?—Well, now I really cannot tell you.

26,669. As far as from 1859?—Well, I really cannot tell you; I really cannot. It would be useless my guessing.

26,670. (Mr. Price.) Was it in the ordinary way of an accommodation as a banker that you did it for him as for anybody else, or was it done with reference to politics?—Not in the slightest. We know nothing about politics down at our place.

26,671. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he any custom or business at the bank that you know anything about, except when he went to get his bills taken up?—Nothing at all; decidedly not. That is all.

26,672. Except when he went to get a relief from your bank?—Yes.

26,673. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you talk about relieving people, you mean in the way of business?—Yes.

26,674. Not as a matter of charity?—No.

26,675. (Mr. Price.) Is it a regular bank transaction?—Precisely. Everything that appears in this book, and every transaction I have had with the man, has been in the shape of business, and nothing else.

26,676. I suppose a number of these small tradesmen are obliged to transact business in that way? They do business in the way of bills, and they come to a bank like yours?—The big and the little.

26,677. (Mr. Coleridge.) Just the same as the farmers, when they don't want to thresh wheat, and they give bills and hold over for better markets?—Precisely the same.

26,678. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that you ever advanced money for the purpose of relieving him from liabilities, when he had the bailiffs in?—Not that I am aware of at all. I cannot bind myself to answer that question. I think I have never advanced him any money, except it was for a bill due in a day or two; and perhaps he has said, "In a week I shall be able to meet it."

26,679. Can you mention any occasion when he did not meet it?—Yes, many.

26,680. What did you do then?—Then it was carried on as an over draught.

26,681. (Mr. Coleridge.) Without a renewal?—Yes. There was no chance of renewal, because he might have given the bill to you or some one else.

26,682. Paid it away?—Yes.

26,683. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it then written off as a bad debt?—No; he owes me money now.

26,684. What is the longest date from which he has been owing you money which is owing you now?—He has been owing us money since 1865. It is very idle to talk about politics and us, because there is no man would hold his situation as I do down at our place if he mixed himself with politics.

26,684. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Ford has?—But Mr. Ford is no pattern for me. I assure you that I could never hold the situation an hour if it was known that I had the slightest bias in politics, and I beg to make this public declaration to that effect. Our company would not allow it.

26,685. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you said you were a Conservative, the other day?—I do say so, and I defy any man living to say that business has ever altered me.

26,686. You mean no bias in the transactions of business?—I do say so.

26,687. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well, you know we have heard here that both the bankers in this town have mixed themselves up in a very awkward manner in these elections; therefore you must not be surprised if we should ask you just the same question?—Precisely.

26,688. (Mr. Price.) You would not have objected, as a banker, to do what Mr. Ford did?—I should, decidedly. I would not have done it for the best customer I ever had. I tell you this——

26,689. Well, don't make a speech. Supposing Mr. Brogdon, of the Conservative side, if there had been such a man, had come to you for the same thing when Mr. Patton first came here. Supposing Mr. Patton had a friend, we will call him Smith (I shall remember his name presently)—supposing he had come, or one of the lawyers on the Conservative side,—the Barham of the Conservative side,—suppose he had come to you with a cheque of this gentleman's upon a bank, we will say in Edinburgh, for 400*l.*, would you have cashed it?—Well, that would depend upon whether I knew that he wanted it for his own private expenses or not.

26,690. Do you mean to say that if, on the morning of the election, the Barham of the Conservative party, whoever he be, had brought you a cheque of this gentleman's (Mr. Patton's friend), and said, will you be good enough to let me have that in sovereigns, would you have gone, as Mr. Ford has done, over to Bristol, and brought the sovereigns?—No, indeed I should not.

26,691. Would you have inquired, "What do you want it for?"—No; I do not think if I was in that situation that I would have compromised the company at all.

26,692. Supposing a gentleman came to you, being a customer of your bank, the solicitor on the Conservative side. Mr. Brice, or Trevor, (I am speaking by way of supposition,)—supposing they had come to you, and said, "Will you be good enough to cash these "two cheques of Mr. So-and-So's for 400*l.* or 500*l.*", whatever it might be; would you have done it without inquiring whether it was for his own private purposes?—Decidedly I should not have done it; especially if he had told me it was for election purposes.

26,693. But it was not said that it was for election purposes. Supposing he did not say anything about that?—Well, very likely I might not, but if he asked me for sovereigns I should think it was a very questionable thing, because you must understand that sovereigns do not pass in large numbers in Bridgwater.

26,694. (Mr. Coleridge.) Except at election times?—I stand excused from that, because I know nothing about it.

26,695. You know it perfectly well?—Look here, I have been mixed up with money for 40 years in Bridgwater, and never in my life do I recollect a single transaction that has gone through our bank where they have favoured the parties with money. I make that solemn declaration.

26,696. Are you the manager here now?—I am.

26,697. And do you mean that at no election during those 40 years that you have known Bridgwater, you have never known any suspicious transaction take place at your bank during election time?—I never have; I never have.

26,698. You cannot call to mind any occasion on which a cheque for 500*l.* or 1,000*l.* has been cashed in gold, or anything of that sort?—I stood at that counter——

26,699. I do not ask that question. Have you known any such transaction? Answer that. That is all. Do you know within your 40 years' experience any instance during an election, or about an election, when a large sum of money has been withdrawn from the bank in gold or notes?—Never.

26,700. You never have?—Never.

26,701. Never since you have been here?—Never. I was more than 30 years behind that counter, and then the public asked for the situation for me, and I got it.

26,702. Did you never know during that time any such transaction?—Never.

26,703. You were behind the counter?—And had the whole control of the money.

26,704. Do you mean that during election times you have not found, or if you turned to your ledgers you would not find, that a much larger sum of money had gone out a day or two previous to or a day or two after the election than upon any other day in the year?—No.

26,705. Then I should like to see your ledgers?—Very well. I tell you this (and I do not take any credit for the Conservative party; I think it is six of one and half a dozen of the other; I think one party is as bad as the other), that the Tory party always managed differently. They never compromised us in any way whatever.

26,706. Do you mean they always brought the money down?—I do not know anything about that. I mean to tell you that it never passed through my hands, because if it did I must have known it.

26,707. You gave the answer to my friend just now, that if any man came in with a cheque, and had a balance, and asked for cash, you would not have cashed his cheque if it had been suspicious?—I beg your pardon.

(Mr. Price.) That was not it. I put the question, if the Brogden of the Conservative party had brought it in?

26,708. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose if any customer of your bank, having a thousand pounds balance on the election day, brought his cheque to draw it out in sovereigns, you would be bound to satisfy him?—I am not bound to satisfy him in sovereigns at all.

26,709. How should you manage?—I should have taken out my book, and satisfied him with Bank of England notes.

26,710. He is not bound to have your notes?—No.

26,711. (Mr. Price.) You generally ask a customer how he will have it?—Generally speaking. It is not convenient for us always to pay in gold. I have gone through some very hard runs in Bridgwater, and I know a little about it.

26,712. To what extent would you give him gold?—We do not strain the point. If he wanted 40*l.* or 50*l.* in gold I might give it, but if he asked for 100*l.* I should say, "I do not think I shall pay it to you all "in sovereigns, but in Bank of England notes," for you may soon run dry, you know.

26,713. (Mr. Anstey.) Take the period of a month after the election, and suppose anybody comes to you for gold or money, or anything of that kind, about that time, or a few weeks afterwards, or a few months, it does not matter, a person comes to you for a large sum of money, much in the same way in which, during the election, Mr. Barham came for money to Mr. Ford, and said, "Here are some cheques "on Manchester banks and other places which we "wish to have cashed, but for convenience we would "rather have them in gold," would you say to yourself, the election being over, "This cannot be for election purposes; I will attend to it"?—Well, your question is rather a long one, and perhaps I am not so clear-headed as some people, to answer long questions, but I tell you this: It is not our custom to pay in gold. If a man comes to us and wants a large amount of gold or Bank of England notes, which is frequently the case—— Perhaps a person comes to us, and asks for 1,500*l.* or 2,000*l.* in gold. We say, "What do you want it for"? "I want it for a legal tender." "Then take it in Bank of England notes, which are a legal tender." That is as common as can be.

26,714. (Mr. Coleridge.) Suppose he said, "I want to make a number of small payments, varying from 4*l.* to 10*l.*, and I would rather have it in gold"?—Then I think, if it was convenient, I should let him have it.

26,715. (Mr. Price.) If, however, it is the fact,—I am not saying it is,—that the Conservative bribery took the form of promises before and payments after the election, your bank might in that way be made the medium of payment?—There are various ways of drawing money out of our hands which we know nothing at all about.

26,716. Is your bank, as a matter of fact, the Conservative bank?—Well, I do not know whether we have a right to arrogate that to ourselves.

26,717. Messrs. Sealy and Prior's bank is?—Certainly not.

26,718. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you connected with the Mileses at all?—Well, it does not follow at all——

26,719. But I ask you as a fact?—I believe one of the Mr. Mileses has got shares in our company; but I do not think that it at all follows——

26,720. (Mr. Anstey.) I ask you whether it is not a matter of fact that the wealthier Conservatives chiefly bank with you?—Yes; I am bound to say so.

26,721. Is yours a company, in the ordinary sense of the word, or is it a private firm?—Oh no. It is a joint stock bank. They make choice of their shareholders.

26,722. Do you occupy precisely the same position that Captain Ford does in the other bank?—Well, I am manager of Stuckey's Banking Company. I do not know what his position is.

26,723. (Mr. Price.) Why is it called "Stuckey's"?—Mr. Stuckey first established the bank, when the joint stock companies were allowed.

26,724. In 1826?—Yes.

26,725. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the bank in Bristol?—Yes; we have a bank in Bristol.

26,726. Is that the bank in Bristol in which Mr. Montagu Bayly is a very large shareholder?—No, not that; we have a bank in Bristol called the Castle Bank.

26,727. Are you the bank in which the Mileses and the Harfords are mixed up?—No; that is another. That is the Mr. Miles you were speaking of just now.

26,728. Suppose one of the shipowners here came to you, having a balance, and said, "I want 3,000*l.* in sovereigns to take out as specie going abroad," would you require notice?—Yes.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Mr. R. Salmon.

21 Sept. 1869.

26,729. For an exceptionally large sum you would require notice?—Yes; just the same as you might come to me to-morrow, and say, "I want to "make a large payment in Dorchester of 5,000*l.* or "7,000*l.*, and I want Bank of England notes." I should do it, and I should say, "I will arrange for you to have it on Monday."

26,730. It is the custom, I suppose, for most of the banks, except very large ones, to require notice?—Yes; but our transactions are not so many.

26,731. (Mr. Price.) Is there a branch of the bank of England at Bristol?—Yes.

26,732. Therefore you would really have no difficulty?—No.

26,733. (Mr. Coleridge.) As far as your credit would go you would always get the cash?—We have always found it so. Sometimes we find a person like our friend Carter Reeve, gets credit when he has not got the cash. He does not stand singular in this town, nor yet in the neighbourhood, if you look at their books. I don't think it was worth their while, whoever it was, that dragged me up to tell you this. The same man may have had accommodation himself before.

26,734. You have given us a good deal of information?—Well, I am glad to do so.

26,735. (Mr. Price.) Then it is not so, that you gave any extra accommodation to a Conservative?—No; it is idle to talk about it. I never did it in my life.

26,728. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was stated here by Mr. Allan——

(Witness.) Mr. Allan! Who takes his word for anything? I don't.

26,729. (Mr. Price.) Allan does not say it himself.

(Witness.) If he makes up his account, Mr. President, as well as I can make up mine, I think you will be very well satisfied.

26,730. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan said nothing in disparagement of you at all. What he said was this. We were asking Carter Reeve about his different votes, and we found that he had voted on both sides, and we were asking the reason, and he gave us one, and Mr. Allan said, "This man gave me as a reason "for changing his voting that Mr. Salmon had done "him a favour by paying the bailiffs out of his "house." Therefore you must settle the matter with Carter Reeve. It is not an accusation of Mr. Allan's.—I do not think that I have anything to settle with Carter Reeve. I was here within five minutes of the question being asked.

26,737. I do not say anything about that. When you accused Mr. Allan of saying this thing, and said, "Who will believe him?" I do not think it was an observation at all called for by anything Allan had said about you, because Allan had told us nothing about you, except what he told us on the information of Carter Reeve. Therefore it was not worth your while in your position to make that remark about Mr. Allan.

(Mr. Anstey.) I am bound to say, whether you give credit to Mr. Allan or not,—I say nothing about this particular affair, though I believe that Reeves did say what Allan has stated,—I have no hesitation in saying, having observed Mr. Allan's evidence in this court, that I think him a very credible witness indeed.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I think we have all felt that.

J. C. Reeves.

JOHN CARTER REEVES recalled.

(The witness.) Will you be kind enough to ask Mr. Batten what he heard me say before I voted for Westropp, to show that I made my mind up to vote for Westropp just after the occurrence.

26,738. (Mr. Price.) That does not matter at all. Allan says that you told him that you had made up your mind to vote for the Conservatives because Mr. Salmon had paid an execution out, or paid the bailiffs out. He says he never did?—He never did; and I never had but one execution in my house, in my life, and I appeal to the Town Clerk as to who got that out of my house.

(Mr. Price.) It is a most extraordinary thing that we get so many different stories upon matters of the most unimportant kind, which it is not worth any man's while to perjure himself about.

(The witness.) I have not the slightest recollection of speaking to Allan in my life about it. I think I have told you all I know, and I have kept back nothing. I have attempted to tell all I know.

26,739. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your statement is that you never did tell Allan that you voted because Mr. Salmon had done a great favour in paying the bailiffs out of your house?—No; I never could have said so, because he never did.

26,740. (Mr. Anstey.) You told us some time ago that you left your party because they did not behave well to you?—They did not.

26,741. And it appears that Mr. Salmon did behave well to you in taking up your bills?—I dealt with him.

26,742. Is that so or no?—I will explain.

26,743. Did you consider he behaved well to you?—He behaved well to me years before this occurred.

26,744. When your party behaved ill to you, you left them?—I did.

26,745. You knew that Mr. Salmon was of the Conservative party?—I knew that perfectly well.

26,746. Did you ever go to Sealy's or Prior's Bank, or to the West of England Bank, or any Bank except Stuckey's Bank to get your bills taken up?—Never.

26,747. Why did you not go to Sealy's and Prior's Bank, that being what was called the Liberal Bank?—If you will allow me to explain I will explain. It is because the houses which I deal with always make their bills payable at Stuckey and Co's. Bank, so that I am bound to go there.

26,748. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean the wholesale leather houses at Bristol and elsewhere?—Yes, they always make them payable at Stuckey's Bank.

26,749. (Mr. Price.) How had your party behaved badly to you?—By using my name without authority.

26,750. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got your ten pounds?—Yes, certainly I did. I was not going to let the attorney's clerk have my money.

26,751. You do not consider it ill-treating you to let you off that 9*l.*?—I do, because he used my name without my authority.

26,752. Did you ever pay that again; that 9*l.*?—I intended to do it.

26,753. It is six or seven years ago. Have you ever done it?—He gave me the bill of it, and the receipt.

26,754. I know he did, but you say you were ill-treated by having your name put down for 10*l.* You actually received the 10*l.*; because you were let off a debt of 9*l.*?—After I had found out that he had used my name unknown to me, I went, and charged him with that, and he denied it.

26,755. And he sent you a receipt for the very money which you accuse him of putting your name down for, and you kept the receipt?—I did.

26,756. Then you got the 10*l.*, just as much as if you had had it paid you?—It is a hard thing to have my name used without my knowledge.

26,757. But you got the money?—

(Mr. Price.) You got the benefit of your name being used. You have have been forgiven a debt.

J. W Veysey.

JOHN WILLIAMS VEYSEY (recalled,)

26,758. (Mr. Price.) Now go on, and tell us all that you did at that election?—I had a register of the voters, and at different elections.

26,759. Is there a practice in the Conservative party of going over to men whom they know look for money, and giving them tickets or cards?—I believe not then.

26,760. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was there ever such a thing?—I never heard of such a thing.

26,761. Why did you say "not then"?—I heard of the association, you know. I never went to one meeting.

26,762. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you have heard?—I have heard that at the association different electors who were enrolled there had a card of membership.

26,763. The Conservative Association?—Yes; I know nothing more about it.

26,764. A card of membership?—Yes.

26,765. Was that to be presented afterwards, after the election, to entitle them to get any money?—I believe not.

26,766. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you ever recollect a man called Satterthwaite down here?—I do not know him.

26,767. Do you know "the man in the moon," who came down, and did the card trick?—I do not.

26,768. (Mr. Price.) What did you do in 1865?—We met there, and I had a register of the voters, and different men on the committee had a list of men who they were to look after, and they said, "So-and-so will "be with us, and So-and-so we cannot do anything with; he is on the other side." They presented reports from time to time. We discussed the roll according as it was, and they reported proceedings from time to time; them that would be with us or them that would be against us, as they were.

26,769. Well, go on. We do not care what was done about that. We want to know what you did about money matters in 1865?—Nothing whatever.

26,770. Then how was it that you were brought up to London, and that this accusation was made against you, if you had done nothing?—Because I was on the rolls, and they wanted to prove agency through me.

26,771. If you had done nothing, what was the good of making you an agent. A useless agent—what is the good of that? What was it you were supposed to have done for which it was worth while to prove that you were an agent?—Because I attended this committee in St. John Street, and they thought from that they might prove agency.

26,772. There is no good in proving agency unless they could prove an act done by the agent which would imperil the seat of the person petitioned against. Was it your agency they wanted to prove?—Yes.

26,773. They wanted to fix that for the purpose of proving the bribery done through you?—Yes.

26,774. What was the bribery?—They brought up this case of Osborne, which was utterly false in every respect. Then there was the case of Jones. I met Jones on the bridge between two and three o'clock in the morning, and at the same time there was a man called Reeve, who was very much intoxicated, also on the bridge, and they were rolling a barrel up and down at the same time, and his brother, who was called Isaac Jones, the horse dealer just up here, a brother-in-law of Mr. Kirk, he came up to me, and said, "My brother will go with you." I said, "No; he is in Mr. Mogg's employ." He was the last man in the world I should have thought of speaking to.

26,775. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Mogg a very strong man for the Liberals?—He was the leader of the party. One of the most respectable men. I do not know that he was ever mixed up with anything wrong. I never heard anything of the sort in my life. The man spoke to me, and asked me where I was going, just in the morning. He went to Mr. Harwood's, to have a cup of coffee, at the same time, and I never said anything to him. He said, "I suppose you are going to vote for Kinglake and "Shelley;" and when we were going by the Post Office, or Symons's, where the clock is, I met Mr. Bussell, and afterwards ——

26,776. Which Bussell?—Robert Bussell. He said that he had been promised so much money, and he would try to get it for him. I never directly or indirectly promised him any money. I went into Mr. Harwood's, and I left him. That was between two and three. I went round the district to see what was going on, round Union Street and Bath Road, and different ways; and then I found that the Bath Bridge House, where George Heal lived, who was examined here, was open, was open the whole night, and I heard that Gilbert was there afterwards, and several others on the Liberal side.

26,777. (Mr. Anstey.) Frederick Jones, I believe, swore distinctly before the Committee that that night he met you on the bridge you took him to Harwood? Is that so?—Yes; there were several Liberals.

26,778. But Mr. Harwood was on your side of the question in politics, was not he?—Yes; he voted for Mr. Westropp. He always has voted for the Conservative side.

26,779. Was Mr. James Leaker there; Mr. Leaker of the "Golden Bull"?—The "Golden Ball." He was, in the evening; and Mr. George Ralls, a farmer, was there.

26,780. They were all Conservatives, were not they?—No. Mr. John Smith was there the same evening on the Liberal side.

26,781. I am asking about when you took the man there. Were they all Conservatives at the moment you came there with Jones? The moment of the evening when you and Jones made your appearance there?—This was between two and three in the morning.

26,782. Will you answer the question? We call two or three in the morning the evening, if it is continuously dark. You know that very well. We want none of your word-splitting here. Answer the question. At that late hour of the night, or early in the morning, were they all Conservatives who were present when you and the man Jones came in. Yes, or no?—I believe Mr. Leaker was there then. I am not sure.

26,783. Were they all Conservatives there or not?—I think not.

26,784. Do you mean to say that there, on that occasion, in the course of your conversation with Jones, he told you, in answer to your question who he intended to vote for, "The side I can do the best for myself by"?—He did not. I never passed one word of that kind with him. He told me on the way there.

26,785. He never said a word about that?—I never said a word about that.

26,786. You are determined to evade my question. I do not ask you about what you said yourself. I ask you what he said. Did not you ask him which way he was going to vote?—I did.

26,787. Did not he answer,—not you, but he,—"The side I can do the best for myself by"?—Decidedly not. He told me he was going to vote for Kinglake and Shelley, and have his expenses paid.

26,788. Did you say "All right; we can do as well as any one"?—I did not.

26,789. Are you aware that he swore to that before the Committee?—I am.

26,790. Now, there was another case. Did you have any conversation with Philip Gilbert?—I did. I sold him two houses in Union Street.

26,791. Philip Gilbert is one of those found by the Committee's report to have received offers of money in order to induce them to vote for Henry Westropp?—Yes.

26,792. And for which Mr. Westropp was thereupon unseated. Now, did you tell the Committee that you did not canvass him to vote for Mr. Westropp?—I asked him.

26,793. Did you tell the Committee that?—I did not canvass him.

26,794. Did you tell the Committee that you did not canvass him to vote for Mr. Westropp?—I cannot say.

26,795. Well, here it is: "No, I did not canvass him." Is that true or false?—I did not canvass him.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

J. W. Veysey.

21 Sept. 1869.

What I call canvassing was with the member, with Mr. Westropp.

26,796. I believe you are very clever, sir, in putting meanings to words. You told the Committee you did not know the meaning of a scrutiny?—I did not.

26,797. Although you were at that time a practising solicitor?—I did not understand a scrutiny.

26,798. You were asked whether either under articles or out of articles you had never inquired the meaning of a scrutiny with reference to a Parliamentary election?—I did not understand how it applied.

26,799. Now, I suppose, you do not call it canvassing unless the member is by your side?—I spoke to the man. I sold the man two houses in Union Street. I did speak to the man. I asked him which way he was going to vote. He told me he had been inclined to be a Liberal. He told me also that he had voted at the 1857 election on a promise given.

26,800. I am not asking you a question about the 1857 election. I am asking the question to which this reply has been given. Did you canvass him?—I spoke to him. I asked him which way he was going to vote.

26,801. Did not you ask him distinctly and directly to this effect: "Mr. Westropp's poll is standing very well; you had better vote for him"?—I did say so on the polling day. I did.

26,802. Did he then tell you that he wanted a little money?—He did. He said he was building some houses. He had bought some pits from Mr. Cook, from the railway company.

26,803. He said he wanted a little money. That is the question?—Yes.

26,804. Did any person then present say, "We are doing 10*l.*"?—I did not hear that.

26,805. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you hear?—If you will allow me, I will tell you the whole transaction that took place.

26,806. What did you hear?—I did not hear anything. I left him up in the upper room at Pinner's, in the back room, sideways from Polden Street.

26,807. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he leave first—before you?—I left first.

26,808. As you were leaving, or at any period of that conversation, did you hear him say, "Recollect, I will not vote for Westropp for 10*l.*"?—I did not hear that.

26,809. That you swear positively?—I do.

26,810. Now who was the other person who was present at this conversation?—There were two or three people belonging ——

26,811. Was not the infamous William Heal present?—He was not.

26,812. Had you gone with Gilbert to Pinner's public-house?—He did go in the back way with me.

26,813. Had you gone there with him?—He went there with me.

26,814. Will you answer the question? Had you gone into that public-house with Gilbert?—I did go in with him.

26,815. Then why don't you say "Yes"?—Yes.

26,816. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can't you say yes at once?—Yes, sir; yes, yes.

26,817. (Mr. Anstey.) When in that house you went into the club room?—Yes.

26,818. There were other voters there?—Yes.

26,819. That is a Tory house?—Yes.

26,820. You were there about half an hour, I suppose?—I was not.

26,821. How long were you there?—Not a minute. I left him there.

26,822. What do you say?—I left him there.

26,823. There was drinking going on there, was not there?—I had none.

(Mr. Anstey.) You are giving a series of the most impudent replies in the most impudent tone and manner.

(The Witness.) No, sir, quite the contrary.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And with no earthly object either.

26,824. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there any drinking going on there when you were there?—There was not.

26,825. There were voters there?—There were.

26,826. Will you swear that Gilbert did not leave you there, saying, "I was not to stop only a few "minutes, and it is above a few minutes now, and "I must go"?—He did not. I went down the other stairs.

26,827. You are aware that Gilbert swore that "the other party" who was present, in Mr. Veysey's presence,—he says, "The other party" said, "We are "doing 10*l.*;" and that he added, "I don't see any "likelihood of getting anything here, and I shall not "stop any longer," and that thereupon you took hold of him, Gilbert, and held him fast by the collar of the coat, saying, "I won't keep you five minutes "longer,' upon which he promised you that he would stay for ten minutes. Is that true or false?—He did not.

26,828. (Mr. Price.) The whole of that is untrue?—That is untrue.

26,829. (Mr. Anstey.) He says at that moment there were twenty in the room, he should think; twenty persons?—I should think there were nearly twenty when I came in.

26,830. Was there a person there of the name of Lock?—I believe so.

26831. Did you hear Lock say, "If you had not spoken so loud we should have made it up to 15*l.*"?—I did not hear that.

26832. Did you hear Gilbert say, either afterwards or before this, "I shall not vote for 10*l.* for Mr. Westropp"?—No, I did not.

26,833. Did you say at any period of that conversation to Gilbert, "Don't hallo so loud so that every body in this room can hear you"?—I did not.

26,834. Nothing like it?—No.

26,835. Did you introduce him to Heal?—I did not.

26,836. Neither then nor afterwards?—No.

26,837. At any period of that day?—I did not.

26,838. Then if he has sworn that you introduced him to Mr. Heal after that meeting, that is untrue.—I did not see Mr. Heal at all.

26,839. Did you introduce him to anybody after that meeting?—No; he came in with me, and I left him there.

26,840. Did you see him pushed into a room?—I did not.

26,841. Will you swear that?—I do, really and solemnly.

26,842, Did you see him enter a room?—I did not, solemnly.

26,343. He has sworn that there were two or three pushing him into the room; that you were there, and that he then said to you, "You will recollect, Mr. Veysey, that I shall not vote for Mr. Westropp for 10*l.*" And this was said to you after you had introduced him to Mr. Heal?—No, I did not see Mr. Heal. I did not go with him.

26,844–5. (Mr Coleridge.) Did you see him at all that day?—No, I did not.

26,846. Not during the day?—No.

26,847. (Mr Anstey.) Will you swear that Heal did not say, "We are doing 10*l.*"?—Not in my presence.

26,849. Did you have any words with Heal about what passed that day?—No.

26,850. Did not Heal tell you that you had no business to send Gilbert in?—No.

26,851. He did not say so?—No.

26,852. Another thing. Did you at that election have any conversation with a voter of the name of Reeve?—No; not till after the election, when he promised me that he would swear against Lovibond, and Henry Lovibond seized my horse, and he swore against me.

26,853. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who seized your horse?—On the 16th of April, the very day when the witnesses went to London, there was a sham distress put in by Henry Lovibond into Reeve's house, and he seized my horse; and Reeve's things were put out of the way for two or three weeks. They came back afterwards.

26,854. How do you mean, he seized your horse?—My horse had something the matter with him. He had been to the races.

26,855. Oh! he was at the "bets"?—Yes; I took him to Reeve's. He stayed there some time, and Reeve offered me that he would swear against Lovibond if he had money, or against Mr. Edgar Haviland, so as to make a case; and I said no, I would not have anything of the sort; and I spoke to Mr. Bealy Smith, and he said no, he would not be a party to anything of the sort, because it was untrue.

26,856. Do you mean to say that Reeve told you of his own motion that he would go and swear that?—Yes; he would make a case against Lovibond, if we would pay him.

26,857. Did he say he had a case, or he would make one?—He said "I will make a case."

26,858. Invent one?—Invent one. He said, "I "will make a case against Lovibond, and swear that he "gave me money." He said, "I have been attending "Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's old white horse, and I will "swear that he gave me additional pay, and also offered "me money to keep quiet." He offered to do that if I gave him money. That is true; the man cannot deny it. This horse was standing there, and Reeve was told to take away his things, and he took them up by the county court, to the very inside of the county court, Lovibond's office. They went to Betty's, and there they stayed for three weeks. They put in a sham distress, and seized my horse.

26,858. What became of your horse?—They put him up; and I got him back, paying the money under protest.

26,859. You did not replevy?—No; I ought to have done so, I believe. Then they came straight up King Street. Do you know where the county court is?

26,860. No, I do not. What did they do with the horse there?—The horse was left in that place.

26,861. Well, never mind that?—Will you kindly allow me a minute or two. The horse passed straight by there, and the household goods of Reeve. Directly after the Commission was over. Just after that they all came back again.

26,862. What! the witnesses?—No; all the things came back; and that man did not seize again then. He knew the things were there. He knew his horse and trap.

26,863. (Mr. Price.) What was all this done for by Lovibond?—Some political reason; I cannot say what.

26,864. (Mr. Coleridge.) That does not matter. The important point is this, about this man Reeve, who is said to have offered to swear against Lovibond by false testimony if you would pay him for it?—Yes.

26,865. It is important to know what that was?—He told me he would make a case, provided we paid him well; a retainer, and I declined.

26,866. What did he say he wanted? How much?—He wanted 100*l.*

26,867. He told us yesterday he had been ill-treated, and had not got enough for going to London?—Yes; I was away to Dorsetshire yesterday, and did not come back till this morning.

26,868. Are you quite sure that he said he wanted 100*l.*, and he would get up a perjured case against Lovibond?—Yes. He said he would do it for fifty.

26,869. He tried to drive a bargain with you for his perjury?—Yes, and I declined it.

26,870. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, Mr. Veysey, did you tell that story to the Committee just as you have told it now?—I did not; because I came to London in haste by night, and when I was examined they never touched upon the point.

26,871. (Mr. Price.) Were you asked it?—No.

26,872. (Mr. Anstey.) You swear you were not asked about it?—I was not.

26,873. You are in the index as well as in the report itself. I will read to you the questions without your answers. You were asked, "Do you know "Reeve? Had you any conversation with Reeve "about the election? What was the conversation "since the election?" to which you make an answer. "Did he say anything more than that? "Did you see Reeve the night before the polling "day? In what state was he? Did he vote? "Had you any conversation about bribery, except "that in which he said he wanted a retainer? "Was that since the election? Was that the only "occasion?" Those were the questions you had put to you. Will you still persist in the answer you made rashly yet deliberately a minute or two ago, that you were not asked about it by your own counsel, Mr. Longfield?—I saw him that night on the bridge. He was intoxicated. I never spoke to him.

26,874. Now you are refreshed about it. Tell us what you told the Committee about the retainer?—He told me he wanted a retainer.

26,875. (Mr. Price.) A retainer? What for? He was a veterinary surgeon?—It was to make a case against Lovibond.

26,876. Did you tell the Committee that?—I did say something about a retainer.

26,877. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes; I have just suggested that to you. What did you tell them the retainer was for?—To prove bribery the other side.

26,878. I will just read to you the answers. First I will ask you, did you say anything about 100*l.*?—I did not there.

26,879. Or any sum of money?—No. Reeve was intoxicated when he was in the box in London.

26,880. But you were not intoxicated. I am not asking you about his evidence, but about your own. How could his drunkenness make you drunk? These are your answers, and this is all the story you told them, and on re-examination only. "I do not know "Reeve. I had no conversation whatever with "Reeve until since the election. He said he was "going into bribery, meaning with regard to the "election petition?"—Yes.

26,881. "Yes; he said if Mr. Westropp's side will "give me a retainer, I will prove bribery like a shot. "He said why should not I get my retainer as well "as anybody else? I saw him on the bridge speaking. He was awfully intoxicated. I believe he "did not vote. He went to bed drunk, and went to "sleep. He had no conversation with me about "bribery, except that in which he said he wanted a "retainer, and that was months since the election"?—That is true.

26,882. "That was not the only occasion on which "I saw him in the awfully drunken state I have "spoken of. On the night before last coming up in "the train I did?"—I saw him drunk. I did not speak to him.

26,883. That is what you said about Reeve?—Yes.

26,884. If your recollection is so clear in 1869 about the 100*l.*, why, in the name of goodness, did not you tell the Committee in 1866 about it, and all the details you have given to-day?

(Mr. Coleridge.) And about his coming down to 50*l.*?—Yes; he offered that before, but I did not mention that.

26,885. (Mr. Anstey.) I will bring you to the point about Reeve. You have mentioned this of your own accord. You knew what I was going to ask about. Did you see Reeve at the "Three Crowns," Union Street, Mark's Street?—St. Mary's Street.

26,886. St. Mary's Street, on the following day?—I did not.

26,887. Were you there?—I was not.

26,888. Did you canvass with Boys?—I did not.

26,889. Now recollect; Boys will be called?—Yes.

26,890. And we shall have, if he states otherwise,

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

J. W. Veysey.

21 Sept. 1869.

—we shall have to consider whether you or he will be refused your certificate?—I understand that.

26,891. And we shall have to consider something more important than that?—I state with a clear conscience I was not with Boys.

26,892. Had you seen Boys frequently at that inn?—No.

26,893. Had you ever seen him there?—I have been with him this year.

26,894. I am talking about the election, and you know it?—I was. I kept myself distinctly the other side of the river.

26,895. Do you mean to say that you were never with Boys at all during that election?—I was not.

26,896. Very well. That is an answer at last. Now did you tell Reeve; had you any conversation with Reeve about Mr. Westropp at the time of the election?—No.

26,898. Before the election?—No.

26,899. You mean to swear that you never told him that you were attending to Mr. Westropp's interest?—I never did.

26,900. You are perhaps aware that Reeve, after being asked that question by Mr. Powell twice, so answered it in the affimative twice, and then, being asked again by the Committee, "Who said that," answered for the third time, "Mr. Veysey"?—Well, he was intoxicated at the time, and he told me———

26,901. Did you say to him, either on that or any other occasion, or to anybody, that "a trifle shall not prevent Mr. Westropp being returned"?—Never, upon my solemn oath.

26,902. (Mr. Coleridge.) I just want to ask you one question about Reeve. Did Reeve give you any reason for his ill-feeling against Mr. Lovibond, that he wanted to make a case against him?—No.

26,903. But did not you, as a lawyer, naturally say, "What makes you so bitter against Mr. Lovibond, "that you should wish to perjure yourself, in order to "get up a case against him?" Did not it occur to you to probe his motives?—No. I knew that Reeve was a man that would swear anything. I knew he would swear anything for a half crown.

26,904. You knew that his oath was not worth 100*l.*?—I knew it was false.

26,905. (Mr. Price.) I understand you to say this distress was put in by Mr. Lovibond?—Yes; and Reeve's things were taken away, while my horse was seized.

26,906. You said it was a sham distress?—Yes.

26,907. Was that the reason why Reeve had an animosity against Mr. Lovibond?—No; he was working with Lovibond. I applied to the magistrates for a summons for conspiracy, but they declined to issue it.

26,908. (Mr. Coleridge.) Reeve voted on the Liberal side?—No; he did not vote at all. He came drunk into the Clarence room.

26,909. Now I ask you this question. Do not answer it if you don't like, because it may be a libel. Do you mean, when you say that he would swear anything for half a crown, that he is a man who by general repute would not be believed on his oath in Bridgwater?—No one living would believe him, and Lovibond knew it when he called him in London.

26,910. He called him after he had offered to make a case against Lovibond for 100*l.*? Then, you never told Lovibond that?—I never spoke to him. I would not speak to a man like that.

26,911. Do you mean Lovibond, or Reeve?—Neither one of them.

26,912. (Mr. Price.) Do you know Ambrose Dyer?—Yes; he rents land of my father.

26,913. He holds land of your father on a 20 years' lease?—Yes.

26,914. There are three years, or there were three years to run. The three years were from last Christmas?—It is either two or three years unexpired at Christmas.

26,915. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have threatened to eject him for breach of covenant?—Yes.

26,916. (Mr. Price.) Did you ask a man of the name of Webber to vote for the blues?—I asked him which way he was going to vote.

26,917. You must answer the question, "yes" or "no," to vote for the blues?—I think not. I think I said, which way are you going to vote.

26,918. You won't be sure you did not ask him to vote for the blues?—I won't be sure.

26,919. Did you say if he voted for the blues he should have the piece of land which Dyer holds?—No; because the lease has not expired.

26,920. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you are the lawyer in the matter? You were going to eject him?—I had no animosity against Mr. Dyer.

26,921. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell him so, or not?—I did not really.

26,922. Did you tell your father at any time that Webber wanted to have this land?—I told my father at different times that there were several people———

26,923. Will you answer my question? Have you told your father several times that Webber wanted to have this land?—I told my father———

26,924. Will you answer the question, "yes" or "no"?—Yes. I did tell my father he and different other people wanted it.

26,925. Every question has to be put three times over. Answer, and you may give any explanation afterwards?—I told my father Webber would like it, but my father was doubtful.

26,926. Did you tell your father that he could get rid of Dyer by alleging that he had broken the covenants of his lease?—No, I did not.

26,927. Did you discuss the question with your father as to how Dyer should be got out? Now, yes or no?—We did discuss the question.

26,928. As to how Dyer should be got out. And did you tell him, or was the result of your discussion, that if he could prove, or if he could allege, that the covenants had been broken, he could give Dyer a notice to quit or eject him and get rid of him? Yes or no?—We did discuss the question. Will you allow me to explain that?

26,929. You had better hear my questions about the matter, and then explain afterwards. Is Dyer now under notice to quit?—He is.

26,930. If you were going to eject him for breach of covenant, why did you give him notice to quit?—Well, in fact I do not wish to say anything at all about the matter.

26,931. Do you mean to say that you thought it necessary to give a notice to quit, although the lease has three years to run, or that the notice could be of any value unless he had broken a covenant of the lease?—The covenant was broken to a certain extent, but it had nothing to do with that notice.

26,932. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who drew the notice?—I did not.

26,933. Who did?—My father asked me to draw a sketch, but I did not copy it.

26,934. Did not copy it! But you did it?—No; I had nothing to do with the service.

26,935. You acted as lawyer in the matter. I suppose if that notice was bad you are liable for the negligence?—Yes, I suppose so.

26,936. (Mr. Price.) You drew the draft (lawyers know what the draft is), and it was copied out by your father, I suppose, and served by your father or somebody else?—Yes.

26,937. Did Webber vote for the blues?—When?

26,938. At the time you asked him?—Webber, I believe, voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl the last time.

26,939. Did he at that election vote for the blues?—Last time he voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

26,940. That is not the question?—He voted against the blues; for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

26,941. Did he vote for the blues at the time you asked him which way he was going to vote?—No; he voted against them.

26,942. On all occasions?—No. He voted for the Conservatives twice before, and at the last time against them.

26,942. Does Webber want to get the piece of land?—I do not know.

26,944. Did he ever ask for it?—He never asked for it.

26,945. Did he ever say that he should like to have it?—Yes, I think he did.

26,946. Was it before he said he should like to have it that he voted for the blues?—No, I think not. The first time I saw Webber was in London at the time of the petition. Then he voted for us, and next time he voted against us.

26,947. Had he, before he voted for you, said he should like to have this land?—No, never in the world.

26,948. When was the first time?—The first time anything was said about this ground was just after he had voted for Vanderbyl the first time in 1866. I was present talking to him about his having money on the other side; and the reason he alleged for going against us was that he got money on the other side. Mr. Frederick Temblett said, "Mr. John Veysey's father has land he will let you have," and I made no observation.

26,949. Did he say he should like to have Dyer's land?—He said he should like to take it, but I never told him the lease was on it. I knew the lease was on it, but I never told him anything of the sort.

26,950. At the last election he voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I believe so.

26,951. Do you mean to say that no pressure has been ever put upon Webber by you at any one of these elections which you have spoken of to vote for the blues?—Never in my life.

26,952. None?—Never in my life.

26,953. Is there any other explanation you want to give about that matter, because you can give it if you like?—What I was telling you was the disagreement between my father and Dyer. It was not anything at all about elections, but there was something said. I happened to mention it to him one day, he being a gardener—I believe it was in the market-house—in the market place, and we were talking about it, not directly but indirectly.

26,954. (Mr. Anstey.) Now going back to the evidence you gave before that Committee, Philip Gilbert, as I reminded you just now, was found by the Committee to have received offers of money to vote for Westropp. You were called, I believe, to prove that Philip Gilbert had confessed to you—that a witness called Staples had confessed to you—that the 10*l.* that Philip Gilbert had received was not received for a bribe at all, but for freight?—He told me he had it from——

26,955. I do not want a long rigmarole, and, most likely, utterly false story. Did you tell the Committee that you were called to disprove Gilbert's testimony? Did you tell the Committee that? Were you called to prove that, upon the statement of a witness called Staples, the money which had passed to Staples and Gilbert was freight money, and not bribe money?—I was. He told me he had had it from Mr. Richard Stone of Taunton, a gentleman I had business with.

26,956. But the Committee did not believe you?—I cannot help that.

26,957. The Committee found that Philip Gilbert's was one of the two cases in which money was offered to a voter for his vote?—No; I think you mean Staples. Staples told me he had the money from Mr. Richard Stone of Taunton, a man I know well, and have done business with; and he told me that he had the money for freight, and not for his vote. He told me that in his own house, and his wife will corroborate me, I believe.

26,958. You also told the Committee that you were secretary to that Conservative Association of which you were speaking?—I believe not.

26,959. I will read it to you. "There is a "committee-room at John Street?—Yes. I believe "that you are named secretary to that committee? "—I have heard so. I know nothing more. "Read that circular (reads it.) There is the "circular in which you have the honorable "position of secretary?—Yes. I never saw one "of these before in my life. I never heard before, "except on one occasion, that there was such a "thing." Do you mean to deny that you did admit that on one occasion in your life, and upon the occasion of this circular being issued, at all events, you were set down as a secretary of this Conservative committee?—There was a circular in my name, but afterwards it was changed. But I never saw but one.

26,960. Was not it for that purpose you were asked the questions, to connect you with the Conservative Association and committee?—I believe so.

26,961. Why did you not tell my learned colleagues that just now? Until that was put into your hands, all that you could be got to say was that you had heard so, and knew nothing more?—I never saw it before.

26,962. Will you deny that it was in that capacity alone that you were employed at the election, as secretary to that committee?—No; Walter Matthews was made the secretary; honorary secretary.

26,963. Will you deny that it was in that capacity only that you were employed by your party at that election?—Only that.

26,964. Do you know that they repudiated you, and would have nothing to do with you?—Yes.

26,965. You know that old Mr. Smith told you you were utterly unfit, from your youth and other matters, to take any part in electioneering?—Yes.

26,966. That Mr. Westropp, according to his evidence, shunned you, and found fault with nearly all your proceedings?—Yes.

26,967. And yet did you dine with him at the Clarence?—I did; after the election.

26,968. You are aware that he has distinctly sworn that you did not, and he has no recollection of it. If you dined there, it was at your own expense and at your own table?—I did not. I dined there on the night of the polling day.

26,969. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid?—I do not know; I did not.

26,970. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you dine at the same table with Mr. Westropp or in the servants' room, or where?—At the table with the rest; there was a large number.

26,971. With Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

26,972. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it in the ball-room?—I forget which.

26,973. The party seems to have had the same opinion of you as your own father, who says he had nothing to do with you?—I have not seen my father lately.

26,974. This is what Mr. Westropp says about that. "Mr. Veysey did not accompany me?"—I did not.

26,975. I am reading to you for your information. I do not want you to confirm Mr. Westropp's statement. If it is to be confirmed it must not be by you. "Mr. Veysey did not accompany me. I cannot "recollect where I met him, but on one occasion I "know I did meet him. Did he accompany you on "your canvass?—No; because, as I said just now, I "expressed to some person, whose name I really "forget now, a wish that he should not come with us. "Did you not also tell me that upon one occa"sion you had asked him to go and show you some "persons with whom he was acquainted?—That was "in Berkeley Street, the second time. And I presume "he did so?—He did so. Do I understand you to "pledge yourself that those were the only two occa"sions on which Mr. Veysey accompanied you during "your canvass of the borough?—To the best of my "belief they were the only two. You will not say "more than that, I think so. Has it happened that "this gentleman has joined you at Bridgwater?—No, "not that I recollect. I must beg you to recollect; "I have a reason for asking you the question, and I "will give you time to recollect it?—If I had my "journal here I could tell you in a moment. Have "you a journal of what took place during the canvass? "—No, a journal of ordinary things that occur, and of

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

J. W. Veysey.

21 Sept. 1869.

" the gentlemen who dine with me. Is that in London? " —I rather think it is. Is it or is it not in London? " —I am not sure whether it is or not, because when I " went to Ireland the last time I took over some with " me?—Did you not tell me just now that it was in " London; and now I ask whether it is or not you " cannot tell?—I really cannot tell you that. Will you be good enough to give me a distinct answer to a " plain question; did not Mr. Veysey dine with you at " Bridgwater?—My impression is that he did not. " Will you swear that he did not?—No, I will not. " Now I ask you this further; will you swear that he " did not dine with you after he had been out with you " canvassing?—Most certainly not, because he could " not have been out with me." Then the Chairman of the Committee puts it in another form. "On that " day, or on either of those days when you saw him, " did he dine with you?—I have said that to the best " of my belief he did not dine with me." Then on a subsequent day, after he has had time to refresh his journal, he says, that if you dined there it may have been the same room, but not at the same table; that he did not pay for your dinner; and he knew perfectly well if he invited those persons to dinner there would be bribery and corruption and treating. "And " I took care that I did not in any way give a penny " for that. I had heard on former occasions that " it was not right to do so, and I did not do it." Then the question is put, on re-examination by Mr. Sleigh: " Any persons who dined in the same room " as myself paid for what they had on all occasions." Is it true or false that Mr. Westropp so entirely repudiated you that he would not admit you to his table? You are said to have gone into the room where he was in the habit of dining, if you did you paid for your own dinner?—I did not pay.

26,976-7. Is it true that you have lost the small confidence of the Conservative party which you enjoyed in 1865?—I am not aware. I did not do anything to cause them.

26,978. Is it true that none of them would have anything to say to you at the last election?—It is not true.

26,979. Is it true that you sought to be employed at the last election, and were refused?—It is not. I never did in my life.

26,980. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any confidence to lose?—I am sure I do not know; I never cared for any, I know that very well.

26,981. Did you vote in 1858?—No; I was not a voter. I was only 16 then.

26,982. Had you anything to do with it?—I was at Mr. Smith's for some time; about a month.

26,983. What do you know about that election?—I was employed as a messenger for some time, and I heard that one party gave 10*l.* and another party 15*l.*

26,984. Had you anything to do with giving 15*l*?—Nothing whatever.

26,985. Did you ever see any of it given?—No.

26,986. And you know nothing about it?—No.

F. C. Temblett.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT sworn.

26,987. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I carry on the business now of baker and pawnbroker.

26,988. How long have you been in business for yourself?—11 or 12 years.

26,989. You have taken an active part in election matters. Perhaps I had better begin with the earlier elections with you. Did you know John Murlis?—Yes.

26,990. Had he for many years been manager of the Conservative bribery party?—He managed the election in 1859.

26,991. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the first election you know about?—It is.

26,992. (Mr. Price.) Was it under Mr. Richard Smith, the solicitor, that he acted?—I believe it was.

26,993. At that election did you get 20*l.* yourself, at Murlis' house, to pay two electors?—Yes.

26,994. Was that your first connexion with elections?—Yes, it was.

26,995. Were you a voter then yourself?—Yes.

26,996. Did you vote?—Yes.

26,997. How did you vote?—For Padwick and Westropp.

26,998. Did you get anything for it?—No.

26,999. Did you get anything by way of expenses?—No.

27,000. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or for services?—No.

27,001. How was it you were employed to take this 20*l.*?—I employed myself. I did not bribe the two men; I bribed one. In fact, I did not any of them, direct. I paid 10*l.* to Wm. White, of Durleigh, a farmer, to give to his brother. The other was for Matthew Wintle; but I took it back. He had had it from some one else.

27,002. You took that back?—Yes.

27,003. Whom to?—Murlis.

27,004. The whole of it?—The whole of it.

27,005. He did not tell you to keep any part of it?—No.

27,006. Do you know who provided the money at that election?—I do not.

27,007. Do you know anything about it?—No.

27,008. What money was spent on the Conservative side that time?— I do not know. Judging from what we have expended since, what we do know about it, perhaps 1,500*l.* was spent then; because since that, with a larger constituency, we pay more money.

27,009. Is that all you can tell us about the election of 1859?—Yes, that is all.

27,010. In 1865, had Murlis left the town, shortly before the election?—He had.

27,011. Was there a stranger come down, known as "the Man in the Moon"?—Yes.

27,012. Did he address you at your door, shortly before the election?—He did; on a Sunday evening.

27,013. Did he ask you for a private conversation?—Yes.

27,014. Had you been told by Thos. Boys previously not to be out of the way?—I had.

27,015. Did this man propose that you should meet the other agents, and make out a list?—He did.

27,016. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was this man like?—Something the growth of yourself; but a dark man.

27,017. Do you know his name?—I do not.

27,018. What name did he pass by?—Different names. Sometimes the name of Matthews, at other times Humphreys, at another time Mapleson, I think.

27,019. Taller than I am?—No.

27,020. Very dark?—Dark whiskers, and I think he had a moustache.

27,021. Did he pass by the name of Brown?—Never.

27,022. (Mr. Price.) Did you meet at Frederick Harden's?—I did.

27,023. At that meeting were all the following people present: yourself, Harden, Frederick Jarman, Truman, Batten, and Heal?—Sometimes we were there altogether. Heal I remember seeing only on one occasion there. I think the night after the nomination.

27,024. Did you object to his being present on the ground that he had robbed the Liberals?—I did.

27,025. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it William Heal?—William Heal.

27,026. (Mr. Coleridge.) This was 1865?—1865. It was previous to his coming into the room.

27,027. What did you know about him?—Nothing more than I had heard of the 100*l.* at the previous election.

27,028. (Mr. Price.) Where did this stranger live?—I cannot say. I believe he lived in London.

27,029. Where did he live when he was in Bridgwater?—With a widow. I never saw him at his lodgings. At a Mrs. Harden's in King Street. That is what I was given to understand.

27,030. Is she alive?—I believe she is. Her husband was at one time in Stuckey's bank; as a clerk there.

27,031. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who took those lodgings for him?—I cannot say.

27,032. (Mr. Price.) Used he never to appear except at night time?—Never in the day. Only in the evening.

27,033. How much did he distribute amongst you and these other men?—In 1865?

27,034. Yes.—About 1,900*l.*

27,035. Heal had 200*l.*, which he stuck to, he told us?—Yes.

27,036. And Harden had 300*l.*?—I do not know.

27,037. And you?—I should think 200*l.* or 250*l.* It may be more or it may be less. I do not remember.

27,038. How much did you have?—I cannot say. At the time, I made up after the election an account with the man, and gave an account of all the moneys I had expended.

27,039. How much was it?—I cannot say.

27,040. About?—I should think 200*l.* or 250*l.*; it may be over, or it may not be so much.

27,041. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did this man tell you who had sent him?—No.

27,042. How came you to adopt him all at once, a perfect stranger, without introduction?—I think that Boys came to me. He was in Mr. Smith's office at the time.

27,043. (Mr. Price.) Did Boys tell you that a stranger would come?—He told me not to be out of the way. Some one would call this evening.

27,044. (Mr. Price.) It was on the faith of what Boys told you that you trusted this man?—Yes. I should tell you that previous to that I had taken an active part in the registration. That is how I came to do with it.

27,045. (Mr. Price.) Tell us the names of those you bribed at that election?—I cannot; but I will tell you the names of a good many whom I bribed at all the three elections, but I cannot at any individual election tell you what I did, because I gave in a list at the time.

27,046. (Mr. Coleridge.) And kept no copy of it?—I kept no copy whatever. I never thought about these proceedings. We gave in our accounts, which were all satisfactory at the time, with the exception of Heal's, at that election.

27,047. What was the ruling figure at that election?—10*l.*

27,048. All round?—Yes; all round. There was no difference.

27,049. Can you recollect then the 25 people whom you gave the 250*l.* to?—No. A great many people I paid at all those three elections.

27,050. (Mr. Price.) Could not you by taking the register in your hand make out the names of the men you bribed?—I do not know. I could if it had been the only election I had had to do with, but there were three others.

27,051. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have to schedule the bribers and the bribees at each of these three elections, so it is necessary?—I should be sorry to give you a list of names. There might be a name among them as bribed when he was not.

27,052. You can do it then to the best of your ability, and we will call these people before us?—I will give it you to the best of my ability.

27,053. (Mr. Anstey.) Make a list of all persons who were bribed at the different elections?—As many as I remember.

27,054. You cannot say at which election?—I cannot say at which election.

27,055. Then it will be for them to tell us at which election it was?—Yes, that is it.

27,056. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose many of them you bribed three or four times?—Some of them I bribed at three elections.

27,057. And some only once?—Some were not usually my men.

27,058. In giving names, cannot you say, "I "bribed so and so three times"?—No; I would not undertake to do it.

27,059. (Mr. Price.) Did you not communicate from time to time with this stranger in London?—Yes, I did.

27,060. And at different other places?—Yes; Woolwich I think once.

27,061. Where did you address your letters to him?—To be left at the Post Office to be called for. I never knew where to send until I got a letter from him.

27,062. How used you to address them to him?—Sometimes in the initials "R. P.," to be left at the Post Office to be called for; and Mapleson, I think one time, and Sunflower.

27,063. Did you ever address him at Parliament Street?—Yes; I think once.

27,064. At the Post Office in Parliament Street?—Yes.

27,065. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever gather from his conversation or his expressions that he was a lawyer?—No; he appeared like a lawyer's managing clerk; he had got that style about him.

27,066. Or a parliamentary agent, or something of that sort?—Yes.

27,067. (Mr. Price.) Did he bring the money down with him?—I believe he did.

27,068. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it in gold or in notes?—In gold.

27,069. (Mr. Price.) When he distributed it among you and the other men, did he give it you in packages of gold?—Yes; done up in packets, cartridges. I think in packets of 5*l.*

27,070. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last hear of this man?—Just after Mr. Vanderbyl's first election.

27,071. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you never see him in London?—No. I heard Mr. Harden say he once saw him at Devizes, and has since seen him in London; but I have not at any other place than here.

27,072. Was it at the time of the election at Devizes that he saw him there?—I think not.

27,073. When did Harden tell you?—Some time afterwards. I think it was by an arrangement that Harden made with him.

27,074. What is Harden's Christian name?—Frederick.

27,075. (Mr. Price.) Had he been in the town for about ten days altogether?—At the first election in 1865, I think he staid perhaps more.

27,076. (Mr. Coleridge.) What day did he give you the money?—After the nomination, and about two or three in the morning.

27,077. Before the poll?—Before the poll.

27,078. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you notice anything in his pronunciation which would lead you to say he was a west countryman?—No; he appeared like a Londoner.

27,079. Did you observe whether he used his H's right?—No.

27,080. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was he dressed?—Like a gentleman, with a long black coat, and very respectable.

27,081. Did he stoop in his walk?—No; he was uprighter than I; very stiff in his back, and would swagger in his walk.

27,082. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any of the gentlemen of your party appear to take any notice of him?—Not that I am aware of. I think he kept himself aloof from them altogether.

27,083. Or they from him?—I do not know. I know he did from them.

27,084. (Mr. Price.) Did he give you any directions that you were not to know him in the street if you met him?—He did.

27,085. Did he also caution you against telling anything to Joseph Richard Smith?—Yes, he did.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

F. C. Temblett.

21 Sept. 1869.

27,086. Did he say why?—He did not; but two or three times he said to me, "Whatever you do, do "not say anything to the alderman." That is the way we spoke of Mr. Joseph Richard Smith.

27,087. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he never mention who his employers were?—Never; he was too dry for that.

27,088. Did you never have a glass of grog with him?—Yes, many.

27,089. He never opened out then?—He would not take so much that he would not know what he was about.

27,090. In fact you never got anything out of him?—No.

27,091. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he never tell you what he was to get for coming down here?—No; but I considered he was pretty well paid.

27,092. What made you think so?—I thought so from a remark that I or Mr. Bealy Smith made at one time.

27,093. What was it?—At the first election he asked me if I would act, when he told me there was to be another election, as Mr. Patton was about to accept office, and there would probably be another election; if there was a contest, would I undertake the management of it? I said, "No, certainly not." He said, "Well, if you would, it would save a good "deal of expense. It costs a good deal of money to pay this man coming down here?"

27,094. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where is Mr. Bealy Smith?—In Australia, I think.

27,095. Have you heard from him since the last election?—No.

27,096. Who is likely to have any correspondence with him?—His father, I should think; he has been away some year and a half. He went off his head some time before he went away.

27,097. His father is ill, I believe?—Yes.

27,098. (Mr. Price.) There were about 190 bribed at that election?—Yes.

27,099. That is in 1859 you are upon?—In 1865.

27,100. That would make the 1,900*l.*?—Yes.

27,101. (Mr. Coleridge.) Of that 190 bribed, how many names can you give us?—Of course I cannot give you any more than those I have to do with, and not all of them, because they were mixed up with other elections.

27,102. Will you do all you can to inform us?—I will do all I can. I have a list in my pocket which I will give you before I finish my evidence.

27,103. (Mr. Price.) Did these men poll early?—Yes; we polled them off like smoke.

27,104. By 10 o'clock the election was won?—Yes; by 10 o'clock the election was won.

27,105. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you win by?—By 70 or 80 majority.

27,106. (Mr. Price.) Yourself, Harman, Batten, Heal, Francis Jarvis, Frederick Jarman, William Truman, and Boys were the bribers?—I believe so.

27,107. You were the men who had the disposal of that 1,900*l.*?—We had.

27,108. Do you know anyone else?—No, I do not.

27.109. Do you believe any more than 1,900*l.* was spent?—I do not.

27,110. (Mr. Anstey.) The contest was between Sir John Shelley and Mr. Westropp, was it not; Mr. Kinglake's election being considered quite safe for him by 11 o'clock?—No; Mr. Kinglake's election would not be safer than any other person's election in this town.

27,111. But we have it in evidence?—People may consider so.

27,112. (Mr Coleridge.) Were any of your second votes given to Mr. Kinglake?—No, not many. We could have knocked him over at any time in the morning, and put up Sir John Shelley.

27,113. (Mr. Price.) If you had had a second man here, you conld have carried him?—Yes, or Shelley, and left Mr. Kinglake.

27,114. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Kinglake was in a majority, was not he?—Next to Westropp.

27,115. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Westropp at the head of the poll?—Yes.

27,116. (Mr. Anstey.) At 11 o'clock Kinglake had a majority?—No; he was ahead all day.

27,117. (Mr. Price.) Westropp?—Yes; there were overtures, I believe, from some one on the other side, to get us to turn out Kinglake and put in Shelley.

27,118. (Mr. Anstey.) Who made the overtures?—I do not know. I know that I have heard so.

27,119. You mean overtures from the Liberals?—Yes.

27,120. (Mr. Price.) To throw Mr. Kinglake over?—To throw Mr. Kinglake over.

27,121. The other side were playing a waiting game, I believe?—They were.

27,122. Were they desired to go at 11 o'clock to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, the night before the election?—I have heard so.

27,123. And put off until the next morning?—And put off until the next morning at six o'clock, and when they went there was no money, then I believe they were merely waiting to see the Conservatives show their hand, and see what they were going to do, and then they were prepared to expect money as well as the others; but I know up to that time men like myself who were about with the voters on the Liberal side had led them to believe there was money, and they were very much disappointed, and so were the men who were going to pay it out, that there was no money. I thought they were only waiting to see what the Conservatives would do.

27,124. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had not there been a report that it would be a pure election?—No.

27,125. (Mr. Price.) Not on the part of Sir John Shelley?—No.

27,126. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have had a great deal of evidence about it?—I daresay that you have.

27,127. (Mr. Price.) What makes you believe it was not?—Because men like myself about the town were telling the voters that there would be money.

27,128. Men on the other side?—Men on the Liberal side.

27,129. Like Henry Bussell?—Like Henry Bussell.

27,130. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear that stated during the election?—Yes.

27,131. By the Liberals?—Yes. I heard for one thing, William Bowering went to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office as late as 11 o'clock at night to get some money, and had to go again the next morning at six.

27,132. (Mr Price.) How many men do you think at that election were buyable?—I think nearly two thirds of the voters were.

27,133. At that election?—Yes.

27,134. You made 190, calling that 200, and on the other side 200 would make 400, only leaving about 200 unbribable?—That is about it.

27,135. Is that all you have to tell us about that election, with the exception of giving the names as far as you can?—Yes.

27,136. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to say something about what was said to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—I heard William Bowering had a list of men he had to pay. He went to get the money, and was told to come at six the next morning. When he went there he was told to wait a little longer, or something of that kind; in fact I believe it was a waiting game all through.

27,137. Was the next morning the polling morning?—Yes; the next morning was the polling morning.

27,138. Is this man Bowering alive?—Yes; he is a town councillor.

27,139. (Mr Price.) You think the voters nevertheless had all been led to think they would be paid on the other side?—Yes, up to the time.

27,140. It is not that they were waiting to let Mr. Westropp come in, and bribe, and petition against him?—No.

27,141. That was not the waiting game?—Not a bit of it.

27,142. Therefore they were outwitted by your having bribed?—I believe we commenced all at one time organising things about half an hour before the poll. The Liberals knew what we were doing. We had sent up so many more to poll that about nine o'clock we were about 50 ahead; about an hour after that we had come to 80 or 90; so before they found out we were spending money we had won.

27,143. By one o'clock then the constituency was polled out?—Very near upon it.

27,144. Now the election when Bagehot and Patton stood, Westropp was unseated, and Patton came down; did the same man-in-the-moon come down again?—He did.

27,145. How long before the election?—Some time before the election. We were expecting the writ to issue, and some time before it did he came down, and then through Sir Harry Verney there was a hitch in the House of Commons. He wanted a commission, or something of that kind, and the writ was postponed for two or three weeks, and this man went back again, and when they were about to issue the writ again he came down again; in fact I knew two days before the writ did issue that it would issue. When I say I knew, I knew what Mr. Smith had told me; he told me there had been an agreement between the heads of both parties in London, that Colonel Taylor was to move for the writ, and he was to bring up all he could to support it, and the Liberal whip on the other side would do the same thing so as to shut out Sir Harry Verney altogether.

27,146. To shut out the inquiry?—To shut out the inquiry. In fact nobody wanted the inquiry. It was merely to stave off the election.

27,147. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was your interpretation of that petition which was talked about?—It was all bosh. The only thing was to postpone the issuing of the writ, because they thought Mr. Westropp's money would have a certain influence in getting in another Conservative candidate.

27,148. They wanted to get rid of the effect of Mr. Westropp's money before fighting another battle?—Yes.

27,149. (Mr. Price.) When he came down the second time, where did this man stop?—At Robert Bussell's, in Fryern Street.

27,150. Did he put himself in communication with you, Heal, Boys, and Truman?—With myself. I think Heal, Boys, and Truman had nothing to do with it.

27,151. Heal had been found out then, I suppose?—Yes. He stated here he was not asked for a list. I heard at the time he was asked for a list, and he refused to give it, stating it was the worst thing in the world to have any documents.

27,152. He was discovered then to be a scoundrel?—Yes.

27,153. (Mr. Anstey.) What Mr. Smith was it told you about the two whips?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

27,154. (Mr. Price.) Did he say he had had that from London, from authority?—He did.

27,155. How was it that Boys was thrown over?—I suppose they thought he ought never to have been thrown in. He was managing clerk at Mr. Smith's office, and it was a mistake to have him.

27,156. The evidence had been proved against him on the petition?—Yes.

27,157. What was the reason of Truman not acting?—I do not know.

27,158. Did the man in the moon bring a second man down with him that time?—Each time he brought a second man; a tall raw-boned sort of fellow, with not much flesh on his bones.

27,159. Who brought him, the stranger?—The first man, the stranger.

27,160. (Mr. Price.) Is he the man we have heard described at the "Bull and Butcher," who put his hand through the door?—That is the man; we used to know him as Tom.

27,161. That was his station, at the "Bull and Butcher"?—Yes.

27,162. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he ever tell you that he had been at another job of the same sort elsewhere?—Yes. I do not know whether he ever mentioned any other place, but he certainly did say he had done that kind of business before.

27,163. Had he ever been at Windsor?—No.

27,164. Or Yarmouth?—No.

27,165. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he appear to know any of the boroughs in the north of England?—I cannot say what quarter; but he certainly did say he had been engaged in that kind of thing elsewhere.

27,166. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you whether he had been to Totnes?—He did not mention Totnes.

27,167. Do you recollect his mentioning any place?—He did mention a place, but I cannot tell where.

27,168. North or south was it?—I cannot remember where it was, but he did mention that.

27,169. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see much of Mr. Westropp when he came down here?—I had nothing at all to do with Mr. Westropp. I used to keep out of his way.

27,170. I will not waste time by reading the passages, but the general effect of his evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons in 1865 was this, that from the time of his coming down to the time of his going away he took care not to learn what the lawyers were doing, and his agents, and they had nothing to do with his movements, or he with theirs?—That is something about it.

27,171. And he was asked, "Was that studiously "done?", and he said, "Yes; done deliberately"?—Yes; and we on our part studiously avoided him.

27,172. And the object of that was to prevent each knowing what the other was doing?—Yes, that is about it.

27,173. (Mr. Price.) When this man came down the second time, that is at Patton's election, did he tell you how much he had with him?—Yes.

27,174. What did he say?—When he came first he said he very much regretted the result of the petition, "However," he said, "it is no use regretting a "byegone, byegones are byegones; the only thing is "to win again, and when you see me here you know "that I am come to win." I knew pretty well what winning was, and as he had been here before, I thought of it, and no questions were asked. That went on for some time, and a few days before the election he said his instructions were that we were to pick up 50 men. He had the names of 50 picked out, which he showed us a list of, and we were to find the 50 men to take 5*l.* each, and the others were to go up without anything; all the money he had was 250*l.*

27,175. Did you get any?—No. I said, "Is that "your idea of winning. You had better look sharp, "and get home again;" and I said, "I shall do the "same," and I got up to leave. I think it was at Robert Bussell's house. He called me back, and after a time he said, "I will see what can be done." I think I saw him again the next day, and he said he could manage 500*l.* I told him that would not do. Eventually he mustered about 700*l.* or 750*l.*; it was not over 750*l.*, and I do not believe it was under 700*l.*

27,176. Did you get that amount from him?—We did.

27,177. And set to work with that?—Yes, paying 5*l.* each only, and making promises in some places; and some did not get anything. We got some up without any money, and others would not go without 10*l.*

27,178. Did you promise them?—We promised them to make up the sum.

27,179. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the most you gave any one at that election?—I have no recollection of giving more than 10*l.*, with the exception, I think, that Robert Wills had 15*l.* I am not certain: I know that we had a trouble in getting his vote.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

F. C. Temblett.

21 Sept. 1869.

27,180. How was that?—I do not know. He wanted more money.

27,181. He would not go without?—He would not go without.

27,182. Was it late in the day?—It was late in the day.

27,183. (Mr. Price.) On the day of the election did you find yourselves behind Bagehot all the morning?—We did, up to something like 11, I should think. About 11 o'clock I went to the "Bull and Butcher," where my father lived, and I went to the "Clarence Hotel," and saw several of the clerks coming out with books under their arms. I said, "What is up." They said, "We are going home; "what is the good of staying here." I went in, and just about the same time Richard Hooper, who lived in Eastover, and had received 10*l.* from Henry Bussell ——

27,184. (Mr. Price.) Before Hooper came up did you see Mr. Bealey Smith about the same time?—About the same time; and Hooper, who had received 10*l.* from Henry Chapman Bussell, came to the Conservative room, and brought up the sovereigns, and told us all about it. Mr. Joseph Richard Smith got up on the balcony stating perfidy, and all that kind of thing, of the Liberals, petitioning against Westropp, and then coming down to bribe wholesale, was something disgraceful. That flew over the town like wildfire, and I think from that time the Liberals stopped paying, and Mr. Richard Smith said they would petition against the return of Mr. Bagehot; but everybody believed then it was a certainty for him. Mr. Smith said to me, "Temblett, I have been "looking for you; come in here for a moment, and "just tell me what you think of this matter, you "know more about it than I do." I said, "If you "will get me a list of the unpolled electors I will "tell you pretty well what I can do." There were some who had not voted at that time, and he came into the committee-room, and told the clerks to get out a list of the unpolled electors. It was done in a few moments; one took letters A and B, and another C, D, and he said, "Get into that little room there."

27,185. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this at the "Clarence"?—At the "Clarence" committee-room. I went into the little room by myself, and put a cross opposite the name of every man I considered we could have with money. I then called him, and said, "There is just about 30 there you can have, if you "can find the tin for them." I said, "If you can "get about 10*l.* each that would be 300*l.*"

27,186. At that time you had paid away all you had?—Yes.

27,187. The whole 750*l.*?—The whole 750*l.* I told him what we could do; there are 30 men you can have if you find 300*l.* He said, "Do not you think "you are too sanguine now, because if we poll 30 "we shall only be up to the others," who were about 30 ahead at the time. I said, "No, I do not think "I am sanguine at all, because I have looked through "the list carefully, and I think after we have polled "them there will not be another man left the others "can pick up; and where they can get one we can "get two."

27,188. Why?—I knew from the polling of the men we had left unpolled. There is always more left unpolled who are considered Conservatives than there is Liberals.

27,189. (Mr. Coleridge.) More balance men who are Conservatives?—No; good men, not to be bought, but still do not care about voting at all, and it took much trouble to get them up.

27,190. (Mr. Price.) Who only liked voting on the winning side?—Yes; or some reason or other.

27,191. What was done?—He said, Get the men together, and I will see if I can get the money, and he did. I set to work, and told one or two other friends that some money would come up directly, and set to work to get the men together. It did not take much trouble either; we soon picked them up.

27,192. Were they waiting about?—They were waiting about.

27,193. Did you drive them into the Clarence?—No; took them into my father's, the Bull and Butcher.

27,194. And penned them in?—They were not penned in at all.

27,195. Were they treated while there?—Well, very likely they were. I said to Harden, "They are a long time getting this money together; go down and see what they are up to." Down he goes to the Clarence, as he told me after. When he came, there was Wm. Heal, the man who nailed the 200*l.*, trying to get this money, and Harden asked them why they were so long. I do not know who it was, but some one made a remark to Harden, that Wm. Heal was there trying to make them believe that these 30 who were hanging about would go up and vote on his promise. I must tell you that Wm. Heal had never been given any intimation that we had any idea that he had nailed this money, because, till the election was over, we thought it would not do to say anything because it would blow the rose over us. That was 1865, and up to 1866 we never gave him any idea that we thought he had nailed this money. So Harden says, "Take, and send the money up to the Bull and Butcher."

27,196. (Mr. Coleridge.) How had you found out about Heal having nailed this money?—Frederick Jarman used to work with Heal down at the Golden Lion. On the morning of the poll, Heal was to have been down there between 7 and 8 o'clock. Heal did not appear, so we sent up for him; and I remember, some time after 8 o'clock, I was going across from my father's house to Harden's just opposite, and there I saw Heal. He had his hat on, a "jim crow," pulled down over his ears, walking along in this way (describing). I said "Holloa, Heal! how came you up here?" He said, "What for? I thought you were to be at the Golden Lion in East Over. Am I wanted down there? "You know you are wanted, don't you?" "Well," he says, "if I am, I am coming; in fact, I was going now." He got down to the Golden Lion, and when he got there the men were waiting about a long time. Jarman would not pay the money he had until Heal had come, and when Heal got there he put him into a room to pay the money, and Jarman took the men in. He new the men better than Heal did in that neighbourhood; they were mechanics who worked mostly at the works in the neighbourhood. After paying about five men, he sent in a sixth. He sent him back again, "Tell Jarman I do not want him." Jarman went in, and says, "What do you want?" "I want some stuff." Jarman says, "Go on, and pay what you have until it is all gone; then I will let you have mine." "Mine is all run out," he says." "You have only paid 5." He says, "I paid 20 men before I came down." Jarman began to smell a rat immediately, but did not say anything to him. He took care to keep in the room a little time until he paid the money, and I believe Heal paid the whole money at that time down in that part of the town. Jarman will tell you so.

27,197. Now you say Heal had gone down to try and persuade these men?—They got rid of him. Heal then found that the money was sent up to the Bull and Butcher.

27,198. How much came up?—I did not have the money, but I think about 300*l.* We got the men together there, and while waiting for the money, Newton come over from the Three Crowns, and got some of them away there, and wanted to get hold of the money, and pay it; but Harden went over and paid them. We trusted Newton then much the same as Heal. And the other money was paid by the man in the moon; that is, this tall fellow we knew by the name of Tom; and I kept the door and let the voters in.

27,200. You paid away 300*l.*?—Yes.

27,201. To 30 men 10*l.* each?—Yes.

27,202. You took them all to the poll?—Yes; polled all in three or four minutes.

27,203. Did that turn the scale?—It did.

27,204. Did the Liberals try to buy more votes, offering as much as 50*l.*?—Yes; I heard 50*l.* was got there.

27,205. You won by seven votes?—Yes.

27,206. Did you get any more after those 30, or did they give you the majority of seven?—I do not think we bought any more, but we polled a few more; the 30 about got us level; we polled about a man in an hour after that.

27,207. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many bad votes did you poll?—I do not think that was done on either side.

27,208. (Mr Anstey.) Was that Newton the same man who supplied the Tory voters with beer at the election of 1865, on tickets that were brought to him?—I never heard anything about tickets.

27,209. A man called Ford was asked about it, and he says, in his examination before the Committee in 1866, after stating that he went to the "Bull and Butcher" and so on, Boys, who was then briber for the Tories, asked for a pint of beer, which he gave him a note or ticket to take to Newton and get the pint of beer upon it. It appears that Newton was distributor of beer at that election. Was there anything like that at Mr. Bagehot's?—Every election.

27,210. That is the way beer was given?—Never given by tickets.

27,210a. Not in this way?—No.

27,211. But at all events, with or without tickets or notes, beer was given at every election?—Yes.

27,212. (Mr. Price.) Do you know how this 300*l.* was got together?—Yes; got from various tradesmen in the town.

27,213. By subscription?—By subscription.

27,214. Do you know if it was repaid to them or not?—I believe it was.

27,215. Whom by?—I believe it was paid by Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, through a young woman who then lived with him, and now lives with me.

27,216. She can tell us?—Yes. Her name is Edith Harkett.

27,217. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all the money that went at Patton's first election?—No. After that, between that and Mr. Vanderbyl first coming down, we paid up the whole of the men; or at least I do not know but what the whole were paid up. If not, it was by mistake. Everyone was supposed to be paid the other 5*l.*

27,218. Where did it come from?—There were 20 or 30 that they would not pay it the second time. Men who were paid in 1865, that they would not pay.

27,219. (Mr. Price.) Why?—I do not know.

27,220. How many had 5*l.* additional given afterwards?—The old ones. Some of them had not had anything. That man, Tooze, who was called yesterday, went up without anything.

27,221. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much was paid after the election?—About 1,700*l.*, 1,800*l.*, or 1,900*l.*

27,222. Therefore something like 3,000*l.* by Bagehot. 750*l.*, 300*l.* subscribed, and 1,900*l.* afterwards?—No; it made it up to 1,800*l.* or 1,900*l.*

27,223. Where did that last thousand, or whatever it was, come from?—The man-in-the-moon brought it down.

27,224. How long before the election?—About two days before Vanderbyl's election.

27,225. Where to?—Into the town; in my own house; I think he gave it to me.

27,226. The whole amount?—No; Frederick Jarman had a portion.

27,227. When he brought it to your house had he the whole amount with him or not?—He might or might not.

27,228. How much was it?—700*l.* or 800*l.*

27,229. He gave you what you wanted for your men?—Yes.

27,230. How much?—I do not remember. I had some of Harden's men.

27,231. Surely you can recollect how much?—No.

27,232. Had you 500*l.*?—No.

27,233. 300*l.*?—No. I should think it might be 200*l.* I don't know how much it was.

27,234. (Mr. Price.) You said how many men you dealt with at the "Bull and Butcher?"—I dealt with more men at Patton's than Westropp's.

27,235. Five pounders?—Yes.

27,236. Then the men you made promises to ——?—Yes.

27,237. All had to be paid?—All had to be paid. Then Harden was away in Devonshire, who had made promises.

27,238. Should you say any more than 1,900*l.*?—I should think not.

27,239. The same as Westropp spent then?—Yes, about the same.

27,240. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you suppose at that time Mr. Bagehot spent?—I heard about the same sum.

27,241. (Mr. Price.) That is your idea?—Yes.

27,242. We have been told they only spent 800*l.*?—I rather doubt it.

27,243. Is there a kind of combination amongst the voters here, or anything like an understanding, that both sides must pay the same?—No.

27,244. Or is it left to the bargain of each man?—Yes, that is it.

27,245. What is that?—On the Conservative side, as far as I have had anything to do with it, they always pay the same price all round.

27,256. Never more than 10*l.*?—Never more than 10*l.*

27,257. (Mr. Coleridge.) You may very likely assist us in finding this out. We are told there was no money at all at Bagehot's election, and then the four attorneys entered into a guarantee for 1,000*l.*?—On Bagehot's side?

27,258. On Bagehot's side; and out of that they spent about 700*l.*?—Yes; but then they had to take up their promises afterwards, the same as we had.

27,259. We have had no evidence whatever of any money employed for that. I thought you might give us some hint as to how that was supposed to be done?—Mr. Vanderbyl came down here afterwards, and they paid 25*l.* to some, perhaps including the old score.

27,260. At the second election they paid up the old scores?—Yes.

27,261. And also the old score of Shelley and Kinglake?—I believe he did.

27,262. (Mr. Price.) You say the second payments made by your side were made just before Mr. Vanderbyl came down; that is, there was very little time between the two elections; but do you know whether, before there was a knowledge that there would be a fresh election, it had been agreed that these men should have their additional 5*l.*; the men who had been promised?—Yes.

27,263. I mean, supposing Mr. Patton had not accepted office, and there had been no fresh election, had it been understood that these men should have this additional?—Yes; they would have been paid.

27,264. It had no immediate reference to the fact of there being a second contest?—Not the slightest.

27,265. Whether there had been or not they would have been paid?—The men must have been paid.

27,266. Are you sure of that?—Yes, no doubt.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past ten.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Wednesday, 22nd September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

G. Dyment.

22 Sept. 1869.

GEORGE DYMENT sworn.

27,257. (Mr. Anstey.) What are you?—A painter.

27,258. Were you present at a conversation between Mr. Parker and Mr. Westropp at the last election?—No; I never saw them together in my life.

27,259. (Mr. Price.) How do you spell your name?—Dyment.

27,260. How many are there in this place?—I know two.

27,261. What are the other two?—I am one, and Dimond, a carpenter, is the other; the one that was examined, yesterday I think.

27,262. George Dimond?—Yes.

27,263. Where does he live?—I believe he was examined yesterday, was not he?

27,264. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are there people called Dyment who spell their names in a different way from yours, in addition to the ones you spoke of?—No; we spell ours in the same way sometimes.

27,265. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you the brother of Mr. William Dyment?—No; no relation.

27,266. You say there is a George Dyment besides yourself in this borough?—I do not know that. They call him in common Dyment, but I do not know whether he spells his name the same.

27,267. Do you know Mr. William Dyment?—I do.

27,268. Is his brother George?—He had a brother at Thompson's; I do not know what his Christian name is.

27,269. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

27,270. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

27,271. What did you get for it?—Nothing at all.

27,272. How was that?—I do not know. I suppose there was not anything knocking about.

27,273. Were you promised anything?—No.

27,274. Did you vote the time before, in 1866?—No; that was the first time.

27,275. Did you never get anything at all that election?—No.

27,276. Then you are a very unlucky fellow?—Yes, I am.

W. Vickery.

WILLIAM VICKERY sworn.

(The witness.) Dyer has made a wrong statement against me about 10*l.*

27,277. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

27,278. How did you vote?—Liberal.

27,279. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

27,280. How was that?—Because there was nothing going. I did not see anything going.

27,281. Were you promised anything?—No.

27,282. Did you expect anything?—No.

27,283. Did you vote at the election before?—Yes.

27,284. Who did you vote for?—Vanderbyl.

27,285. What did you get then?—10*l.*

27,286. Who gave it you?—Ambrose Dyer.

27,287. The time before that, Bagehot's, what did you get then?—10*l.*

27,288. Who gave that to you?—Searle.

27,289. What has Ambrose Dyer stated wrong?—That I had 10*l.* at Bagehot's election.

27,290. But you have just said so?—That he paid me 10*l.*?

27,291. No; he said he gave Searle 10*l.* for you?—It was put on the paper that I received 20*l.* in that way.

27,292. Did you?—No; only 10*l.*

27,293. And that was Searle?—Yes.

26,294. So if Ambrose Dyer says he gave you 10*l.* he stuck to it?—I mean to say I never saw it. Whether he stuck to it or no I cannot say.

27,295. I suppose he did, if you did not get it?—Not the least doubt about that, unless he gave some account for it.

27,296. Are you quite certain you did not get 20*l.*?—Yes.

27,297. Did not you after the election get another 10*l.*?—No.

27,298. Or your wife?—No.

27,299. Are you sure about that?—Yes.

27,300. Do you think she would have told you?—I am sure she would.

27,301. The time before that, in 1865?—I had no vote.

27,302. So you have received 20*l.* in all, instead of 20*l.* at one election?—Yes.

27,303. How long after Bagehot's did you get the 10*l.*?—I received it before, on the poll day.

27,304. And when on Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—The night before.

27,305. Is that all you know about it?—That is all I know about it.

27,306. Had you any money to pay away to other people?—No.

J. Luckes.

JAMES LUCKES sworn.

27,307. ((Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner.

27,308. You want to go to sea?—Yes.

27,309. Were you a voter at the last election for Bridgwater?—Yes.

27,310. How did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

27,311. Did you get anything for it?—No.

27,312. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

27,313. Were you promised anything?—No.

27,314. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any expenses?—No.

27,315. Nothing for coming up?—No.

27,316. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election before Vanderbyl's?—No; I never had a vote before.

27,317. Are you one of those unlucky ones who never received anything for your vote in Bridgwater?—The same sort.

27,318. Your brother is one who votes for the Conservatives?—Yes.

27,319. (Mr. Anstey.) Who is Meaker?—He is a mariner.

27,320. What were you to do when you were told to mind Meaker?—When he came up in the train with me from Cardiff to Bridgwater, I suppose.

27,321. Did you get a telegram from Bussell?—I got a telegram from Bussell.

27,322. The telegram was, "Mind Meaker"?—The telegram was, "Mind Meaker."

27,323. What did you understand by that?—I had a telegram and produced it, and Meaker came home in the train.

27,324. Did you pay his expenses?—No.

27,325. Did you bring him with you?—He came along in the train with me.

27,326. Do you know what Meaker did when he came here?—No.

27,327. You went straight home, I think?—I went home.

27,328. You did not go to Bussell's?—Not at all.

27329. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were you to mind him for?—I do not know.

27,330. To see that he did not tumble out of the train, or what?—Perhaps so.

27,331. (Mr. Anstey.) Why do you think Bussell sent to you?—I do not know.

27,332. Bussell spoke to you on the polling day?—Yes.

27,333. What did he say to you?—"Luckes, have you polled?"

27,334. When was that?—About 3.15 I think.

27,335. About a quarter past three?—Yes.

27,336. What did you say?—"Hours ago."

27,337. Did he say then anything to you about money?—No.

27,338. Did he tell you that money was going?—No.

27,339. Had you heard of it?—No.

27,340. You have heard of it since, of course?—Oh, yes.

27,341 Have you claimed your share?—Have I claimed it?

27,342. Yes?—No.

27,343. Has nobody said anything to you about it?—Not a word.

27,344. At any former election, did you vote?—No, never before.

27,345. (Mr. Price.) Were you told why you were to come here; why you were wanted as a witness?—No.

27,345. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever sign any petition here?—No; that was too far out of my scale.

27,346. You do not know why your name was put down to come here?—No.

27,347. Did you receive a summons?—A summons?

27,348. Yes; to appear?—A fortnight ago it was left at my house, and I have not been home since.

27,349. Do you know Bussell well?—Very well.

27,350. Were you at his house on the day of the election?—No, nor since.

27,351. Treating there?—No.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled. H. C. Bussell.

27,352. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you know about this?—I only wanted to explain this, that on the day of the nomination I was walking along the quay, and I met his owner, and he said, "There is Meaker and Luckes over to Cardiff," and he said, "You had better try and get them over."

27,353. Who is the owner?—Mr. James Wood Sully. Then I telegraphed to Luckes. I did not know what vessel Meaker was in. I understood he was in a vessel over there, and I telegraphed to Luckes, and I said, "You must come home to poll, and mind Meaker." That is how it was. Meaker was another man in the same employ.

JAMES LUCKES recalled. J. Luckes.

27,354. (Mr. Price.) You and Meaker are in the same employment of Mr. Wood Sully?—Yes.

27,355. Did you and Meaker vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I believe Meaker did. I do not know for certain.

27,356. And did you?—I did.

27,357. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who asked you to vote?—No one.

27,358. Did not Mr. Wood Sully ask you?—No.

27,359. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you never taken any part in politics before?—No.

27,360. How did Bussell know which way you were going to vote?—He did not know.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled. H. C. Bussell.

(The witness.) It is a matter I have done, to look after these captains when they are away, and I telegraphed to him.

27,361. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever telegraph to any captain of a vessel to come and vote for the Tories?—No.

27,362. Then you had some notion of the way he would poll?—Yes.

27,363. How did you know he was going to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I had some anticipation he would, because I do not think among the whole lot of them, masters of vessels, there are three who are Conservatives.

27,364. Was the reason you telegraphed to him the knowledge that he was in the employment of Mr. James Wood Sully?—I knew he was in the employment of Mr. Sully.

27,367. Is that your only reason for telegraphing to him?—No; my reason was this, that with the exception of about three of the masters of the vessels belonging to the party they all vote Liberal.

27,368. Suppose this had happened to be the fourth?—Then it would have been our misfortune to have got hold of him.

27,369. Did not you telegraph to him because you knew the captains of vessels in Mr. Wood Sully's employment always voted as Mr. Wood Sully went?—I always understood that Mr. Sully had nothing to do with any election, and I know at this very election Mr. James Wood Sully had nothing to do with speaking to the captains.

27,370. (Mr. Price.) If Mr. Sully had not spoken to you you would not have taken the trouble to telegraph to this man?—I could not be aware of it.

27,371. Therefore he told you, "There is Luckes and Meaker over at Cardiff"?—No; he told me Luckes, and I found out afterwards that Meaker was there.

27.372. He told you Luckes was at Cardiff?—Yes.

27,373. And of course upon that you telegraphed for him?—I did.

27,374. And you were under the impression that Sully knew his politics, whether you did or not?—I anticipated so.

27,375. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid all these telegrams you sent?—Unfortunately, I did.

27,376. Did not you charge it to the party afterwards?—I have not had any chance.

27,377. Not this time?—No.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

22 Sept. 1869.

H. C. Bussell.

27,378. On former occasions?—I have always been paid.

27,379. (Mr. Anstey.) By whom?—Mr. Henry Lovibond has paid me every transaction.

27,380. (Mr. Coleridge.) And he has paid you for your trouble as well, has not he?—No, not a penny. I never charged a penny.

27,381. Do you mean you only sent in "telegrams 1*s.* 6*d.*," whatever it was, and did not lump it together with other things?—In the account for drink.

27,382. You put the telegrams and the drink?—Altogether.

27,383. Beer and telegrams all mixed together?—Yes; I did not put down telegrams.

27,384. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood that Mr. Sully told you these men were there; did he tell you that he knew which way they were going to vote, or must vote?—No.

J. Luckes.

JAMES LUCKES recalled.

27,385. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Sully ever ask you which way you would vote?—No, never.

27,386. Did you ever tell him?—Never.

27,387. (Mr. Price.) He must have formed in his own mind the conclusion that if you did come you were going to vote on his side?—He did not ask me the question.

27,388. Had you made up your mind which way you would vote?—I had before leaving Bribgwater.

27,389. Had you said so?—Yes.

27,390. To whom?—To my wife, or whoever was at home; no party else.

27,391. Then your wife may have told Mr. Sully?—No, I do not believe so.

T. Smith.

THOMAS SMITH sworn.

27,392. What are you?—A mariner.

27,393. And want to go to sea?—Yes.

27,394. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

27,395. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

27,396. How did you vote?—Liberal.

27,397. For Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—Yes.

27,398. Did you get anything for it?—No.

27,399. Any promise?—No.

27,400. And never made any claim?—No.

27,401. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any expenses?—No.

27,402. (Mr. Price.) Where did you come from? Were you resident here?—I came from Saundersfoot.

27,403. Were you telegraphed for?—Yes.

27,404. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you come up?—By train.

27,405. Did not you get your expenses for coming?—No.

27,406. You paid your own expenses?—I paid my own expenses.

27,407. There and back?—I paid my own expenses.

27,408. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the former election?—Yes.

27,409. The election when Mr. Vanderbyl first came, did you?—No.

27,410. The one before that?—Bagehot's.

27,411. Did you get any money then?—No.

27,412. Did you vote before that?—Yes.

27,413. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to get none at Mr. Bagehot's election?—Unfortunate.

27,414. Did not you ask for any?—No.

27,415. Did not you get any after the election?—No.

27,416. A good bit after?—No.

27,417. Do you mean you did not get a farthing directly or indirectly for your vote since you have been in Bridgwater?—No.

H. C. Bussell.

H. C. BUSSELL recalled.

(The witness.) This is one of three. There were a certain number told off for me to give 5*l.* apiece to, and I had 70*l.* to pay, and there were 17, I think, I was given to understand I should have to pay, and the result was that Mr. Lovibond gave me 70*l.* to pay it, and I paid it away, and if those men had been home I should have paid them likewise, and have been that money out of pocket; but this man did not happen to be at home at Vanderbyl's election, and the result was he did not vote, and he did not have the 5*l.*

27,418. (Mr. Coleridge.) He did not have the 5*l.* which he would have had for voting at Bagehot's?—Yes; but he always expected that 5*l.*, and has been under the impression that I kept the money.

T. Smith.

THOMAS SMITH recalled.

27,419. Did you ever hear that you ought to have had 5*l.* from Bussell?—I have been told so.

27,420. Who told you?—Some of the voters that got it.

27,421. Did you ever tell Bussell that you thought he ought to give it to you?—We have had a conversation about it.

27,422. If he had you would have taken it, I suppose?—No doubt but I should.

H. C. Bussell.

H. C. BUSSELL recalled.

(The witness.) In regard to this last election, this person who was at Saundersfoot telegraphed to me, and I took the precaution to reply to his telegram that if he came here he must come on his own expense.

27,432. (Mr. Price.) Why did you take the precaution to tell him he must come on his own expenses?—Because at that time I did not know anything of him.

274,33. He has made no claim on you for expenses the last time?—The fact was I lent him 30*s.*, and he has repaid it.

T. Smith.

THOMAS SMITH recalled.

27,434. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were you doing at Saundersfoot?—We were there with a cargo of culm in Carmarthen Bay.

24,735. Was it out of your own pocket that you repaid the 30*s.*?—I repaid it out of my own money.

27,436. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you did not consider that he owed you 5*l.* in such a way as that you had a right to deduct the 30*s.*?—No.

27,427. You paid it back honestly?—Yes, straight.

H. C. Bussell recalled.

(The witness.) It is quite right that he had a conversation on the second day when I was under examination; he said that I had got the 5*l.* and kept it.

27,428. (Mr. Price.) Those are imputations which men in your position lie under. We have no reason to suppose now you did not tell us the truth?—I am not surprised at it all. The fact is, at Mr. Vanderbyl's election, after the election was won, I saw Mr. Lovibond in the committee-room, and he came up to thank me for the services I had performed. I said I did not want anything at all. All I wanted was that he should satisfy these people's employers that I did not have 10*l.* and give them only 5*l.*

27,429. (Mr. Anstey.) Besides the bribing, what were the other services for which Mr. Lovibond thanked you?—Getting the voters up.

27,430. For bribing them, I suppose?—I never did anything unless I could.

Mr. Paul Octavius Haythorne Reed recalled.

27,431. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember, on the occasion of the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn, any telegrams being produced which were handed up by Mr. Serjeant Parry to the judge, and handed by the judge to Mr. Serjeant Sargood, and looked at by him, but never read publicly in court?—No; not the slightest.

27,432. Just before the inquiry closed?—No.

27,433. Nothing of the kind?—No.

27,334. Did you never hear of any telegram? The clerk at the telegraph office was called as a witness, was not he, or called to produce telegrams?—Yes.

27,435. And he declined to produce them?—Yes; at first.

27,436. And the judge insisted on their production?—Yes.

27,437. And they were then handed to Mr. Serjeant Parry?—They were.

27,438. What is the clerk's name; do you remember?—I have not the least idea.

27,439. What became of those telegrams afterwards?—They were handed back to the clerk.

27,440. Were they read aloud?—No. As far as I recollect, it was like this: Mr. Serjeant Parry perused the various telegrams, and apparently those that would be wanted, and then they were passed to the clerk again.

27,441. Before reading one, did he take the opinion of the judge about it in any way? Did he hand it up to the judge?—I do not recollect it.

27,442. After Mrs. Hobbs was examined, shortly before the adjournment of the court?—I have not the slightest recollection of such a thing.

27,443. And the judge pointing it out to Mr. Serjeant Sargood, and calling him up, and reading it himself?—No; I have not the slightest recollection of it.

27,444. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would probably have if it occurred?—I think I should.

27,445. You were watching the case?—Certainly.

27,446. Anxiously?—Yes, very.

27,447. (Mr Price.) Do you know of any telegrams that were sent on the day of the polling from this town to anybody at Taunton?—Not one.

27,448. You do not know of any?—No.

27,449. On the morning of the poll?—No.

27,450. Would you have the control, supposing there to have been a telegram, on behalf of Mr. Kinglake; would you be the person to know that, or Mr. Lovibond, or Mr. Barham?—Mr. Lovibond, I should say.

Mr. Eustace Barham recalled.

27,451. (Mr Price.) Do you know anythiug of a telegram being handed up to Mr. Justice Blackburn, read by him at the trial, and handed to Mr. Serjeant Sargood, at any time just previons to the breaking up of the inquiry, and not made public or read aloud?—No.

27,452. You do not remember such a thing?—No, I do not remember it at all.

27,453. Assuming it was a telegram from some one on Mr. Kinglake's behalf, either at Taunton or at London, would you know anything of it?—No; I was no party to sending it, and never received it.

27,454. You do not recollect the circumstance taking place during the trial?—I remember there was something about telegraphic messages during the trial, but I think they were not read.

27,455. (Mr. Anstey.) It was before Mrs. Henry Hobbs was examined, and the court adjourned, and Serjeant Sargood withdrew the opposition?—There certainly was something about telegraphic messages; that I do remember.

27,456. (Mr Price.) Do you remember the judge receiving it from Mr. Serjeant Parry; before he read it looking at it; and then calling up Mr. Serjeant Sargood, and handing it to Mr. Serjeant Sargood?—No; I do not remember that; but I do remember something occurred about telegraphic messages; what it was I do not know.

Mr. John Trevor sworn.

27,457. (Mr. Price.) Will you tell us all you know about the elections for this borough?

(Mr. Coleridge.) And what you know about the other side, as well as your own, as you go on?—Yes. I am a solicitor, and have been upwards of 39 years in practice in this town. I was articled in 1824, and the first election with which I was at all mixed up was in 1826. I was at that election.

27,458, 9. Who were the members?—The candidates were Mr. Astell, Colonel Tynte, that is the old Colonel Tynte, and Sir Colin Campbell.

27,460. Not the Sir Colin Campbell who was afterwards Lord Clyde?—No; but he was a K.C.B. I should say that previous to that election, for some years, I think for 25 years, Mr. Astell had represented the town.

27,461. Had he property in this neighbourhood?—No; he had no property. I think the first time he came here was in 1807, from the books and poll papers which I have, as Mr. Thoraton. That was his first introduction, and he afterwards took the name of Astell.

27,462. (Mr. Price.) He wast the great East Indian director?—He was an East Indian director, and for many years the chairman of the East India Company. He was returned for Bridgwater on the 5th May 1807.

27,463. And, I suppose, during the time of his reigning at the East India House, the Bridgwater people had their share of the good things in India?—They had on both sides. It was said in Bridgwater that he would do anything he could for us.

27,464. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which side was he in politics?—The then Tory side in politics. One of the Lord Pauletts had the patronage of the borough, and a relation of his, the Honourable Vere Paulett, came to oppose Mr. Astell, then Mr. Thornton, and Lord George Paulett.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

22 Sept. 1869.

27,465. (Mr. Anstey.) Which of the two opposing Pauletts had the distribution of the Government patronage spoken of in Oldridge's Parliamentary History? It is said all the Government patronage passed through the Paulett family, and they split, as you say; you do not know which?—It was Lord Paulett, because his relation, the Honourable Vere Paulett, came to oppose.

27,466. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the name of the place where Lord Paulett now lives?—Hinton House, Hinton St. George, is the place. The first recollection I have of any election at all is 1818, June 19th, as a boy, when Mr. Pocock, Mr. Moggridge, and Mr. Perkins were candidates, and Mr. Pocock and Mr. Astell were returned. My object in mentioning that is this, that I believe at that election, I am not certain, but I think that there was a petition, and there was a good deal of talk at that time of bribery.

27,466. Did you know anything about money being spent then?—Not the slightest in the world; nor, in fact, at any time. I have never been a party to expending money at elections.

27,467. No; I mean by general rumour?—Only as a boy. That was in 1818. I was ten years old then, but I recollect it very well as a boy. My reason for mentioning that is just to tell you that after that the gentlemen in the town came to a determination, if they possibly could, to get rid of that system of bribery and corruption which had existed; and with a view to that, Colonel Charles Kemys Tynte, the old man, was requested by his own party, who were Liberals, to come forward for this borough, in conjunction with Mr. Astell. Colonel Tynte declined to come forward. Afterwards, I believe, but I will not be certain, I know Mr. Richard Woodland and my late father, and, I believe, the late Mr. Ruscombe Poole, went as a deputation from the Tory party to Colonel Tynte, who, I believe, was at Bath at the time, when they requested him to come forward.

27,468. (Mr Coleridge.) Colonel Tynte was always a whig?—Colonel Tynte was always a whig, an old-fashioned whig, and he resided in the neighbourhood. He was a country gentleman, and did all the good for the town that he could as long as he was alive. Colonel Tynte took great interest in the town. In 1820, March 7th, Mr. Astell and Colonel Tynte were elected without opposition. In 1826, June 9th, the Catholic question was then mooted, and Mr. Astell and Colonel Tynte came down for re-election, and Sir Colin Campbell was then brought to oppose Colonel Tynte.

27,469. As a Conservative?—As a Conservative, to oppose Colonel Tynte. He was brought by a third party into the town. In those old-fashioned days there were two parties; the high party and the low party they were always called in my younger days; but then a third party sprung up, and the third party brought down Sir Colin Campbell. The arrangement having been made, all the Tory party voted for Colonel Tynte, and he was returned. I have the numbers here, if they will interest you at all.

(Mr. Price.) I do not think they are of any importance.

(The witness.) Then on the 30th July 1824 Mr. Astell and Colonel Tynte were again elected without opposition.

27,470. Were there rumours of bribery at that election too?—Not the slightest. Mr. Astell and Colonel Tynte were elected without opposition. Sir Colin Campbell merely came down for a special purpose. There was a strong anti-Catholic feeling.

27,471. Do you say 1830 was a pure election?—It was a pure election. Mr. Astell and Colonel Tynte were returned without opposition.

27,472. (Mr. Anstey.) There was no contest then, was there?—There was no contest.

27,473. Sir Colin Campbell did not stand at that time?—That was 1826.

27,474. In 1830 he did not stand again?—In 1830 his name was put down, but he went to Barnstaple instead, because I recollect going to Barnstaple and seeing him there. In 1831, April 30th, Mr. Astell, Colonel Tynte, and Mr. Henry Shirley were candidates. That was at the time of the Reform mania, and people in this town, and, I believe, all over England, were almost mad on that question, and the Liberal party—the Reform party in those days—did not keep faith with the Tory party, and it was a very close run. Mr. Astell polled 213, and Mr. Shirley 202.

27,475. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that afterwards General Shirley?—I do not recollect who he was. I will not be certain about that. That election was the last time that Mr. Astell ever came to Bridgwater.

27,476. Was there a good deal of money spent then?—I understood that there was some money spent. The election was adjourned, and I believe money was spent for Mr. Astell, or that he spent money. He was obliged to, to get his election. I believe it was that election; it was a very close run. Then Mr. Astell gave up his connexion with Bridgwater. That was in 1831. Then there has been a good deal said about the election of 1832, and I would only say this, that at that election two gentlemen came down here to contest the borough on the Tory side. They were a Mr. Chatteris and Mr. Horace Twiss, the Queen's Counsel.

27,477. Not the Mr. Chatteris who is the present Lord Elcho?—No. I do not think he was a man of any great standing. He was a merchant, or something of that kind, and he came down here. However, they found out that they had no chance at all, and party spirit ran exceedingly high. I recollect canvassing very well with Mr. Chatteris and Mr. Twiss, and it was almost dangerous to walk through the town. It was just upon the Reform Bill.

27,478. (Mr. Anstey.) Then Mr. Bussell, senior, probably meant the previous election?—No; I think it was that.

27,479. When he represented himself as having expended some thousands of pounds for Mr. Tayleur in 1832, he must have meant 1831?—Mr. Tayleur was candidate in 1832,—Colonel Tynte and Mr. Tayleur,—and he was returned without opposition.

27,480. Was he a candidate in 1831?—Not Mr. Tayleur; it was Mr. Astell, Colonel Tynte, and Mr. Shirley.

27,481. Although Mr. Bussell told us some weeks ago that he bribed very largely, and Mr. Tayleur spent some thousands of pounds, and he called it the election of 1832?—So it was, I believe, 1832, December 11th.

27,482. Probably he meant the candidate who succeeded Mr. Tayleur in 1831?—No.

27,483. He certainly gave that date?—I think he is right.

27,484. But it was without contest?—Well, it was, up to the night before the election.

27,485. (Mr. Coleridge.) And plenty of money spent?—I do not know. If it was it was on the Liberal side.

27,486. Was that Mr. Tayleur, the Liverpool merchant?—I think he was. He was a merchant; a very respectable man. That was the time these riots took place. I do not know whether you wish to hear anything from me about it. Several witnesses were asked about the riots at Mr. Bowen's.

27,487. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you agree with the account given of them by Mr. Poole?—Yes, there is no doubt of that, because my father and myself were the solicitors for the prosecution in those cases.

27,488. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you can tell us, perhaps, a good deal about that?—I recollect it very well, and I can tell you how those riots arose. Mr. Chatteris and Mr. Twiss had declined the contest, and the solicitors on the other side,—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was one,—were informed they had declined the contest. They wanted to see those two gentlemen, and did not see them, and they, I believe, were not satisfied. In those days there was no nomination; you could put up any gentleman on the morning of the poll, and propose any one you liked.

27,489. (Mr. Price.) There was no deposit of money?—There was no deposit of money, nor anything of the kind. There was a rumour in the town on the Liberal side that Mr. Astell was secreted at Mr. Bowen's house in Fryern Place, and in consequence of that a large mob, or a large number of persons—I will not call them a mob, because, perhaps, that is using a strong term,—but a large number of persons got round Fryern Place. I do not know whether you know it; it is enclosed with a lawn in front. There are four or five houses, and then a large house which Mr. Bowen built. They got inside in Fryern Place. I was with Mr. Bowen.

27,490. Is it a row of houses with a field in the front?—Yes.

27,491. Where the school feast is held?—Yes. I think there are four houses, and then there is a large house where Mr. Smith lives now.

27,492. His house was the further house?—The further house; a large house; and there was a private entrance to his house. That evening I was with a party of men. In those days they used to have what are called randyings, for the purpose of making speeches and drinking; and then, previous to the issue of the writ, there was no illegality in holding these meetings, and it was at a meeting at the "King's Arms" with Mr. Bowen. While there Mr. Bowen had a message to say there was a great riot at his house, and that they were afraid his house would be burnt down. I was sitting near him, and I immediately accompanied him to his house. We walked through a crowd of persons, and they were very orderly. I walked with him into his house. I stayed there some time, and then I found the people quiet, and I believe a good many left, and I went home. Well, after that, the numbers increased, and he went out,—I did not see this; it is only what I heard at the time, and from seeing the evidence in the brief,—Mr. Bowen went out, and then he was assaulted, and then there was a great riot, and I believe the Riot Act was read by the mayor.

27,493. (Mr. Coleridge.) What we want to know is about what the jury did at Wells?—Well, I can tell you that; there was an indictment against 34 persons for an assault and riot.

27,494. (Mr. Price.) Were any of those called leaders amongst them; we have heard of certain men dressed in south-westers and pea jackets, said by Mr. Carter Reeves to be the leaders; were any of those people in the dock for trial?—Well, Mr. Sully was there, who gave evidence the other day. He was quite a young man at the time; quite a youth. I should think that none of the old inhabitants were there.

27,495. But I am speaking of those who were said to be the leaders of the riot?—Oh, they were all tried, the leaders were.

27,496. (Mr. Coleridge.) This riot was something more than a spree; was it not a rather serious matter?—I daresay it commenced in a spree, but it was likely to end seriously.

27,497. (Mr. Price.) Was it an assault combined with riot?—Yes; they were indicted for riot and assault.

27,498. (Mr. Austey.) Did you see Mr. Wood Sully there when you walked up with Mr. Bowen?—No; I do not recollect seeing him.

27,499. Did you see him afterwards that night?—No; I went home afterwards.

27,500. You did not go back again?—I did not go back again. I was not aware till next morning.

27,501. Did you go up next morning?—I went up next morning.

27,502. We have it in evidence that some young gentlemen found it necessary to remain in the house all night. Were there any there when you went up?—I do not think there were. A good many were there. Mr. Gabriel Poole, I understand, and Mr. Ruddock, and many others. Mr. Bowen had a void house close by, and they slept there.

27,503. Mr. Ruddock is still in the town?—Mr. Ruddock is still in the town.

27,504. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was no endeavour made to get this case put off to the assizes, instead of being tried at the sessions?—I will tell you. There were three indictments preferred at the Wells sessions. It must have been at the Michaelmas sessions; and then the bills were found. The one for conspiracy, which you heard of, was removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, and tried at the Taunton assizes.

27,505. On the civil side?—On the civil side. I recollect perfectly well the late Lord Chancellor, Mr. Wyld, afterwards Lord Truro, and the present Sir William Erle, and the late Mr. Montague Bere were our counsel for the prosecution. Mr. Serjeant Kinglake defended the prisoners.

27,506. (Mr. Anstey.) No; Serjeant Coleridge was not it who defended the prisoners at the assizes?—I think he did.

27,507. (Mr. Price.) And Serjeant Kinglake at the sessions?—Either the conspiracy broke down,—I will not be certain,—but it was on the brief that the prisoners were acquitted.

27,508. (Mr. Anstey.) There is a report, which has been spoken to several times, and which we had in court yesterday, that states that the whole question turned on, was it a conspiracy or was it a riot and assault, and Mr. Serjeant Coleridge took that objection. The evidence really brought home riot and assault, but there was no evidence of conspiracy, and the judge took the same view, and therefore the jury, under his direction, acquitted the prisoners of that one charge?—Now you bring it to me, that is so, I recollect. Then at the next sessions at Wells, the Easter sessions, all the persons were tried for riot and assault. The case lasted a very long time, and being a misdemeanor, the Court adjourned the case till the next morning, and told the jury to go away.

27,509. (Mr. Coleridge.) They had no power to do otherwise?—They had no power to do otherwise. They took it rather late in the day, and to the astonishment of the chairman and every one in court, all the parties were acquitted.. Now I recollect particularly one man, I forget his name, there was a clear case of assault against. Several witnesses had spoken to him, and there was not one who gave evidence who offered to rebut it.

27,510. (Mr. Coleridge.) There were 20 defendants there who offered no defence?—There were a great many; but there was one man who clearly committed an assault; it is unquestionable he had; however, they were all acquitted. Afterwards it was notorious the jury had been tampered with by the defendants. Many of the defendants and the jury were drinking together that night.

27,511. (Mr. Price.) Several of the defendants were out on bail?—Several were out on bail. I think there were only one or two in custody.

27,512. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was one man here yesterday who told us he was 13 weeks in jail?—I think he was the only man in jail.

27,513. He had some companion there, he said?—I do not know that.

27,514. (Mr. Anstey.) Some of those out on bail were drinking with the jury, or some of the jury, on the night between the two days?—Yes; when the court was adjourned.

27,515. The witness we had yesterday, who was then in prison, stated that when he was released he found them, after the trial, about, drinking together?—They went so far as to say this, that Wells was exceedingly crowded at the sessions, and that some of the defendants could not get beds, and that they absolutely slept with some of the jury. That was the story current at the time.

27,516. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then if the prisoners were let out on the night of the trial, they had to be rebailed?—Just so.

27,517. They were rebailed?—They were rebailed, and let out for the night.

27,518. (Mr Anstey.) Was old Mr. Bussell that night in the town of Wells?—Yes, I think he was 27,519. He had been indicted for conspiracy at Taunton?—Well, I think he was one of the defendants at Taunton; I am almost certain.

27,520. (Mr. Price.) Then as to money, was anything said, besides drinking together, that money was spent?—It was said that the jury were bribed. It was openly stated afterwards.

27,521. The jury were a jury of the county, I suppose?—A jury of the county.

27,522. And I suppose none were Bridgwater men?—No.

27,523. I suppose some one watched the panel, to see who were called?—The jury at the sessions in fact are not a very high class of men—the petty jury at the sessions, but they are generally not selected from Bridgwater.

27,525. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the name of the person given who was supposed to have tampered with the jury by money?—No; I never heard the name.

27,526. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was the under sheriff who summoned that jury?—Old Mr. Nicholls must have been.

27,527. Which side was he in politics?—I do not think he interfered much in politics.

27,528. (Mr. Anstey.) Did the chairman give any opinion about the acquittal?—The chairman thought it was a monstrous decision of the jury.

27,529. He said so?—Yes, he said so at the time.

27,530. Then in 1835, that was the next election, Broadwood came here for the first time, 27,531. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was Leader's time?—That was Leader's time.

27,532. We want to know something about this?—I can tell you something about that; Mr. Broadwood, Mr. Francis Mountjoy Martin; he was Captain Martin, I believe.

27,533. (Mr. Price.) Now Colonel Martin of the Life Guards?—Now Colonel Martin, Old Colonel Tynte and Mr. John Temple Leader were candidates, I recollect very well. Mr. Broadwood and Mr. Martin had been here some days canvassing, and met with a great deal of support, and we were almost certain of carrying our election, and I think I am borne out by this one fact, that we ascertained at the time that Colonel Tynte had written his address taking leave of the electors, and it was in the hands of the printers to be published.

27,534. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who were you acting for at that election?—Mr. Broadwood and Mr. Martin; but Mr. Leader came down on a sudden, and Colonel Tynte's address was withdrawn, and I think there was a joint address from Colonel Tynte and Mr. Leader.

27,535. Mr. Leader was connected with the Luttrells, was not he?—Yes; the Reverend Alexander Luttrell married a Miss Leader, and I think Sir Peregrine Acland married a Miss Leader also.

27,536. (Mr. Coleridge.) But they were both Conservative families?—Yes. I know very well that after Mr. Leader came here the late Mr. Ruscombe Poole called on Mr. Leader. He rather found fault with him for coming here, and interfering with Bridgwater, connected as he was with Conservative families in the neighbourhood; and Mr. Poole went further, and told him, "The fact is, you have come here too "late, because Broadwood and Martin's election is "pretty safe." "Well," said Mr. Leader, "I wish "to have no misunderstanding at all with you, "Mr. Poole. The fact is, I have come here, not only "determined but prepared to have my election, cost "what it will.

27,537. What did it cost, do you know?—Well, I have heard various sums meetioned. I have no doubt it cost him from 8,000*l.* to 10,000*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) 12,000*l.* we have heard.

27,538. (Mr. Price.) So that the voters must have got more than 100*l.* apiece?—Well, they did so, I believe.

27,539. 200*l.* or 300*l.* apiece; there were only 400 voters then?—I recollect well. I will not say the name, because he is dead now, but men were coming out of his house, and as they saw me they rattled their pockets, and I heard the sovereigns chink.

27,540. (Mr. Anstey.) Would not it have been directly in accordance with old precedents, if some voters, at least, had received 100*l.* for their vote? What I find stated in Oldridge's History, volume 4, page 445, published in 1816, is this: "The contests "in this borough have been productive of the "greatest bribery. We have heard one elector "boast of his selling his pig for 100 guineas, and "being allowed to eat it himself. Another sold his "parrot for the same sum, and the candidate never "claimed his purchase. Some 300, 400, and 500 "guineas have been given for single votes"?—I do not believe it was so bad, for this reason, that the number of votes had increased, and it was not so necessary to give such high sums for votes.

27,541. That is what I said. Therefore, if Mr. Leader gave 100*l.* for a vote, it is not more, according to old precedents, than had been given at Bridgwater?—Just so; but I think Mr. Leader may have given 40*l.* or 50*l.* for a single vote; quite as much as that.

27,542. It may refresh your memory with regard to that particular sum you have mentioned, that the word "forty" was mentioned, was it not, at the election?—I think it was.

27,543. In connection with a piano?—It was a mistake about the piano. Mr. Broadwood was a son of the pianoforte maker, but he himself was a brewer of the Lion Brewery.

27,544. (Mr. Price.) Broadwood, Mundell, and Co.?—Broadwood, Mundell, and Co. I took the numbers, which were, for Colonel Tynte, 234; Mr. Leader, 208; Mr. Broadwood, 190; Mr. Martin, 102.

27,545. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you hear a speech which Mr. Leader is reported to have made, in which he said, if Broadwood brought his piano-forties, he would bring his piano-fifties?—It is very likely, I think.

27,546. (Mr. Price.) However, he realized his own prophecy?—Just so; they were not very particular.

27,547. And Colonel Tynte got the benefit of that expenditure?—Colonel Tynte got the benefit of the expenditure. He had a good deal of interest; he was a gentleman living in the neighbourhood, and Mr. Leader had plenty of money.

27,548. That would be the present Colonel Tynte?—No; the old gentleman, I think. The present Colonel Tynte at that time represented the county, or shortly afterwards.

27,549. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you done with the election of 1835?—That is in 1835.

27,550. Now I want to ask you,—I think that is the date,—if not it was the next year, but I am pretty sure it was 1835,—do you remember whether the result of that election was not to produce a petition, and a new election?—No, it was not so.

27,551. Then was there a vacancy? I will fix the date of the vacancy thus: a vacancy occurring about that time to fill up which a majority of those on the register signed a requisition to Sandhill, asking Sir Thomas Lethbridge to stand, and pledging themselves to support him if he had stood in the Liberal interest?—Oh, that was some time afterwards. I will come to it. I have all the elections here in rotation. In 1837, May the 16th, the previous election having been in 1835, there was a vacancy occurred in consequence of Mr. Leader having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, and stood for Westminster.

27,552. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the reason of his doing that?—I think vanity.

27,553. (Mr. Anstey.) It was to oppose Sir Francis Burdett, who had quarrelled with Mr. O'Connell and the ministers?—That was it. I think you are right; however, he lost Westminster and lost Bridgewater. Then there was a very sharp contest between Mr. Broadwood and Mr. Sheridan.

27,554. That was Sir Thomas Brinsley Sheridan?—No; Richard Sheridan.

27,555. Mrs. Norton's brother?—Mrs. Norton's brother. Then Mr. Broadwood was returned.

27,556. Was there a large expenditure of money then?—Well, I think not a very large expenditure.

27,557. Still it was not a pure election?—No, not on either side. I think Mr. Sheridan, from what I have heard since, was disappointed that he did not get the money he thought he should to oppose Mr. Broadwood.

27,558. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember a petition being presented against Mr. Broadwood's return?—No; it was the next election after that; that was not it. Was it not Sir Thomas Lethbridge's petition? His was July the 26th.

27,559. Well, that was the election; there were two petitions?—I will see if I have made a mistake. 1837, July the 26th, Mr. Courtenay, Mr. Broadwood, and Sir Thomas Lethbridge.

27,560. There were two petitions presented at once, you will recollect, the following year, or rather the end of that year, against both those returns; but the first return is what I am speaking of now, of Mr. Broadwood. Do you remember, Mr. Richard Brinsley Sheridan himself petitioned? I have it here?—I do not recollect it. It was a very common thing for a member to have a petition in his pocket if the other succeeded.

27,561. It is in the 92nd volume of the Commons Journal, folio 396–7, Mr. Broadwood, praying that the return might be set aside; and then Mr. Broadwood wrote to Mr. Speaker the usual letter, printed in the notes; stating that he did not intend to defend the said return?—You are perfectly right; I have referred to my almanack, and remember now that it was so, because it was in 1837, June the 20th, that William the 4th died, and the petition was presented against that return on May the 16th, 1837.

27,562. The petition was presented and referred on the 23rd of March 1837, and then Mr. Broadwood, by letter dated the 5th of June 1837, read to the house on the following day, reported at folio 439 of the same volume, declared,—these are his words,—that it was not his intention to defend his election or return, on which the further consideration of the petition was put off until a day which is the 11th of July following?—Yes. Then Mr. Sheridan expected to get in, but in the interval, on the 22nd or 23rd of the month, the King died.

27,563. On the 20th of the month. Then a number of the electors of the borough, who were Mr. John Woodland, Mr. Jonathan Toogood, Mr. John Reed, Mr. Richard Cave, Mr. Thomas Howell Watson, and Mr. William Poole, presented, on the 28th of June, a petition stating that it was their intention to defend. That of course prevented Mr. Sheridan from taking his seat, and a few days afterwards the necessary dissolution of Parliament, by reason of the demise of the Crown, took place?—Yes.

27,564. Is not that the fact?—Yes, that is it; you are perfectly right.

27,565. You are aware that that petition, which Mr. Broadwood declined to contest,—the petition against his own return,—charging him personally with bribery as well as his agents,—and the letter is unconditional, declining to defend either his election or his return,—do you happen to recollect, at this distance of time, whether there was evidence, in the opinion of Mr. Broadwood and of his advisers and friends, that would or might have fixed him personally, and not merely his agents, with bribery?—I have no recollection, but I should say, from knowing Mr. Broadwood, as I did most intimately, that it would take a good deal of evidence to convince me that he had been personally guilty of bribery. I do not think so; my own impression is, not having papers before me, that he was too discreet a man to do anything of the kind.

27,566. You see that he declined to defend the petition; and if he had defended the petition, would he not have had an opportunity, on the Committee, of saying, if the charge of bribery is withdrawn Mr. Broadwood might be ready to give up the seat. He did not do that, you see?—No. No doubt there was a good deal of bribery at that election, and they could not defend the seat; that was the object of his giving it up. Then afterwards, I imagine, the electors defending the seat was in consequence of the serious illness of the King, William the Fourth, and he died very shortly afterwards, and there was a dissolution of Parliament.

27,567. That cannot be, can it, because they did not present their petition until eight days after the King was dead?—That must be a mistake, I think.

27,568. No; I have it?—Would not it be, if the King was dead Parliament would be dissolved as a matter of course?

27,569. That is what I was going to ask you. Was not it considered important that Mr. Sheridan should not be allowed to take the seat that session, even for the few brief days that remained; therefore this petition was presented on the 28th of the month, pretending, or alleging, if a further time was given them, they could make a defence? Was not it considered important to the party that Mr. Sheridan should not be at liberty on the 11th of July, if the session lasted so long, to take his seat even for a day?—If you asked me, I should have said my idea of the law was this, that immediately on the King's death Parliament naturally dies.

27,570. Not immediately, you know, by the Act of Settlement; and it is not altered by the late Act; but still the session ran through its course, and Parliament was not dissolved until the 17th of July; that is nearly a month after the death of the King?—Just so. I have no recollection; but very probably what you say is the reason; no doubt of it, if that was so; but I was under the idea that the Parliament died at once.

27,571. (Mr Price.) They must meet for a certain time to vote the supplies, and to make other provisions, and then allegiance is sworn at the proclamation?—Just so.

27,572. No doubt there was time for all that, and no doubt it was to mortify Mr. Sheridan?—Then the next was in 1837, July 26th, and then Mr. Broadwood, Mr. Philip Courtenay, Sir Thomas Lethbridge, and Mr. Sheridan were candidates.

27,573. Sheridan again?—Sheridan again. I believe at that time they were very anxious to get up an opposition, and a requisition was sent to Sir Thomas Lethbridge.

27,574. (Mr. Anstey.) Of Sandhill?—Of Sandhill. He formerly represented the whole county. I acted as his agent when he was a Tory. The requisition was signed, I believe, by a majority of the electors, an immense number of electors, and it stated that they wished to return him for the borough; but when he came here he found that although they had signed the requisition that they were not so eager to promise him their support.

27,575. (Mr. Price.) They wanted a contest there in fact, and nothing more?—Well, there was no contest at all.

27,576. Their object in signing the requisition was to try and get up a contest?—There was no contest at all, in fact. I think it was more out of lark than anything else. The electors polled the next day, and the numbers were, Broadwood 280, Courtenay 278, Sir Thomas Lethbridge 5, and Sheridan 2.

27,577. (Mr. Anstey.) So the majority who signed that requisition to Sir Thomas Lethbridge kept the promise contained in it by going against him?—Just so.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

22 Sept. 1869.

27,578. (Mr. Price.) I suppose at that election there was money spent?—Well, I do not think there was any occasion for it.

27,579. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not you remember that in the following month of December there were presented a cluster of petitions, one complaining of the return at that election, and two or three more, not in the nature of election petitions, but praying the house, in the exercise of its ordinary privilege at common law, to inquire into the late election, into the election of Mr. Broadwood in the previous month, the previous election of Mr. Broadwood, and former elections? and there was a great discussion about it in the House of Commons. Mr. Gladstone opposed the reception of the petition. It was supported by the whole of the Liberal party. Mr. Courtenay spoke, and they all spoke, and all the leaders on both sides. Then it was finally withdrawn, on the Speaker pointing out that pending the election petition it was irregular to discuss the merits of the election in any other form, as it might prejudice the trial of the election petition. Then Sir Henry Ward, then Mr. Ward, member for St Albans, withdrew the petition for the present, and said that as soon as the trial of the other petition was over it would be presented again; but I cannot find from the journals that he ever did. Do not you recollect those circumstances?—I recollect the petition, and there were all kinds of proceedings at the assizes.

27,580. It was what I call a great petition?—It was the time of the action against young Mr. Smith.

27,581. Yes; but this petition I am referring to was a petition signed by 156 persons; and what may perhaps answer the question which was put to you by the Chief Commissioner a little while ago, as to the number of voters at the time when Mr. Leader stood, and paid those large sums, is this, that Mr. Ward, in presenting the petition, stated the sum total of the registered voters at that time to be 568?—Yes.

27,582. So that 156 signed it, and it gives the classes, "two yeomen, 13 gentlemen and esquires, six merchants, two dissenting ministers, three surgeons, one solicitor, one conveyancer, seven innkeepers, and 119 shopkeepers." Do you remember that petition going about for signature?—I do not recollect that.

27,583. Presented in the House of Commons on the 1st December 1837?—No; my recollection does not carry me back to those details.

27,584. However, there was an election petition against the last return, that is the return of the general election of 1837?—Oh, there was a petition, decidedly, because I recollect very well there were all kinds of proceedings taken then, as I said before. There were actions for libel against newspapers, and lots of proceedings taken, and I believe it was withdrawn after that.

27,585. The time for striking the committee, for perfecting recognizances, and so forth, was allowed to lapse, because it appears by an entry in the Commons Journal that the election petition was not brought on on the day named, nothing was done, not even the committee being struck. How did that happen, do you know?—Why, my own idea is, that Sir Thomas Lethbridge had had quite enough of law, and he did not wish to go on with the petition.

27,586. He signed the second petition?—Oh yes.

27,587. Not only the long petition, but he signed the second also, praying for the seat?—He was so disgusted with having this requisition sent him, that I think that had a great deal to do with his signing the petition.

27,588. Do you remember Mr. Sanford?—Oh yes, very well.

27,589. Mr. Sanford (waiting for the time of the petition to expire, so that he might be in order,) presented a petition on the 26th July 1838, referring to the same election, from Mr. Thomas Perratt of Middleshoy, now deceased, in which a very grave statement was made as to the collateral effect of corruption in Bridgwater upon electoral purity in the county. Do you remember that?—Well, I recollect; but the only thing I can say in answer to that is, that the only parishes that I think could at all be affected by the corruption of Bridgwater were two or three parishes in the neighbourhood, that very much supported Mr. Charles Sandford and Colonel Tynte at the election.

27,590. It was of those parishes that Mr. Perratt's petition particularly spoke. The petition stated, that when he and Mr. Sanford went canvassing in the neighbourhood, on previous elections, the voters promised or refused, without more; but of late, that is, since the Reform Act, Lord John Russell's Act, in no case would they promise unless a promise was made to them, and the argument they used was: "Why are not our votes as well worth 10*l.* as the votes of the people in Bridgwater." Therefore it must have been as you say, that it was the people in those parishes who made him that answer?—They were in the habit of coming in here at the elections, interfering with the nomination, coming in, and holding up their hands at the show of hands, and I suppose from that they got rather inoculated.

27,591. (Mr. Coleridge.) A sort of epidemic?—A kind of epidemic. I have heard that in those parishes some of the lower orders asked for 5*s.* for their expenses.

27,592 (Mr. Anstey.) No; they asked for the same sum as they had in Bridgwater?—I should hardly think so.

27,593 (Mr. Price.) It would be hardly worth while to purchase them at the same sum that was paid in Bridgwater?—No; it would not be worth while.

27,594. (Mr. Anstey.) This is what Mr. Perratt says in the petition:—"That in consequence of the notorious and systematic bribery which now prevails in the borough of Bridgwater many of the county electors at the last election did ask him to give money for their votes; a thing which never happened before. They stated that they considered they were as well entitled to money for their votes as the borough voters." This is what they stated to Mr. Sanford and Mr. Perratt?—Yes.

27,596. "That from the notorious and extensive "bribery which has been practised in the borough of "Bridgwater the whole of the neighbouring popula- "tion was much demoralised. That 5*l.* were "demanded for a vote, and this demand being "refused, he (the petitioner) was then immediately "told that there was an understanding that 5*l.* were "generally given for a vote, and that they, the "voters, considered they had a right to receive it." —That is, the county voters?—I should think there is a good deal of moonshine about that. That is my idea.

27,596. At all events, you say, it may be so, as to these parishes?—Well, not to that extent, that they asked for that amount, because it is absurd that a large body of men would do so. No gentleman would ever come forward for the county if that were the case.

27,597. That is how the petition stated it?—Oh, yes.

27,598. And Mr. Sanford, in presenting it, said, he was present when it took place?—Mr. Perratt was a very likely man to sign a petition of that kind, and he was a very great friend of Mr. Sanford.

27,599. Mr. Sanford backed it by his speech. He said, "I was present." Now you can go on?—Then the next election was in 1841.

27,600. By-the-by, you were going to tell us about the trial of Mr. Smith in the action for penalties?—Yes; the action for penalties.

27,601. Against Mr. Smith, for bribery at Taunton?—Mr. Smith was quite a young man at the time; quite a young man. I think he was a clerk in the office of a solicitor, a Mr. Symes, of this town. I think you have had that detailed to you. Mr. Jones stated in evidence that young Smith gave the money at the election, and he was tried for the 500*l.* penalty at the Taunton Assizes, and the verdict went against him.

27,602. Do you know who defended the action; what firm of attorneys?—Why, Mr. Symes.

27,603. Is he dead?—He is dead.

27,604. Where did he carry on business?—He carried on business in this town. Mr. Ruddock succeeded him.

27,605. Has Mr. Ruddock his papers?—I do not know.

27,606. This Mr. Smith, who was then a young man, afterwards became an attorney in large practice, did not he?—Oh yes. I shall be able to tell you a great deal about that when we get on with the election. I shall be able to tell you when he commenced.

27,607. What is his Christian name?—Richard.

27,608. We shall hear what he did afterwards. I want to know who paid the penalties for him. He was only an articled clerk then?—Nobody paid the penalties for him. He went through the court.

27,609. He could not pay them?—Well, he did not choose to pay them. His father was a man of good property.

27,610. He went through the Insolvent Court?—He went through the Insolvent Court.

27,611. Up in London?—Up in London.

27,612. In Portugal Street, that would be, in 1838?—He was in the Fleet.

27,613. That was according to the old law?—He went through the Fleet.

27,614. That was in 1838?—That was in 1838.

27,615. Were you at Taunton on that occasion?—I was.

27,616. You were in court when it was tried?—I was.

27,617. I have here a full report of the evidence taken, and I want to know if you can give me the name of the man who distributed the money. It was deposed by one or two witnesses that the method of the bribery was this:—I mention it to you now to refresh your memory, although that appears to be very good:—Jones stated, "I know Murlis's house." First of all, is that the father of the present Murlis?—That is the father of the present Murlis.

27,618. "Near the 'Rose and Crown.'" The Murlises, I take it, have always been on the Conservative side?—Well, one portion of the family.

27,619. This portion?—Yes.

27,620. The father was a very active man, was he not?—Yes.

27,621. And the present Murlis has stated,—rightly or wrongly it does not matter,—he has stated, which has been stated in fact in evidence in this court,—that he is to the Conservative party, or to the bribery portion of the Conservative party, what Bussell or Allan is said to be with regard to the Liberal party?—Well, that may be very likely. I must leave him to you.

27,622. Well, this is Jones's evidence:—"I know "Murlis's house, near the 'Rose and Crown.' It is "a private house. I know Murlis. He has lived "in Bridgwater ever since I have known him. "Nomination was on the 15th May. On the 14th "I saw a person called Bennett. Had some conver-"sation with him. He mentioned some things to "me. I had been applied to to go to Murlis's house. "I went there on a Sunday, about 5 o'clock in the "afternoon. I saw Mr. Smith within the door;"—that is the defendant, the young articled clerk. "I "saw Mr. Smith within the door. When you enter "the front door there is a door on the right-hand "side which leads into a small room. I saw Smith "in this room. He spoke to me. He said, "I am "'glad to see you, and hope we shall have you "'on our side.' I told him that was what I came for. "He said, 'Do you not know what we give?' I said "I did not. He said, 'We give 10*l.* at the present "'time.' He said, 'I believe the others give more, "'and if so, we shall.' Smith then left me, and I "remained in the room. He turned on his right "hand into the house. He returned in a few "minutes, and brought me a bit of paper, gave it to "me, and told me take it into the next room. I "went into a room on the opposite side of a passage, "and saw there a respectable looking person sitting "on the sofa. There was a table before him. The "sunblinds were drawn; the room was gloomy. I "did not consider it darkened. I did not know the "gentleman. Never saw him at Bridgwater before "nor since. He spoke to me. He said, 'Do you "'want me?' I told him I had a bit of paper "for him, which I handed to him. He told me to "see what o'clock it was. A clock was behind me. "I turned and looked. I told him the clock was not "right. It was pointed at two, and it was near five. "I heard a noise, and turned, and saw him withdraw "from a cartridge packet."—I suppose that means that he withdrew from something else a cartridge.—"I took it up, and he said, 'Have you got that?' "Upon that I turned to go away. He said, 'You "'will be with us at eight o'clock at the the "'Clarence.' I said I was ill, and could not spend "my evenings out. The 'Clarence' was Broad-"wood's house. He said, 'You will be with us at "eight o'clock to-morrow at breakfast.' That was "the day of polling. I went away again. When I "had left the house I opened the paper, which con-"tained 10 sovereigns. They were done up in a "small parcel of cartridge paper with the ends turned "in. When I got home I showed the money to my "wife," and so on. We have had that man's son here, and another witness speaks to the same effect, and there were one or two other cases. They all quite agree in this, that the persons were shown to Smith, who knew them, and then that he gave them the bit of paper to take to the respectable looking person (who never has, before or since, been seen in Bridgwater), sitting in the darkened room, that he went through some kind of form with them, and paid them their money. I have read to you this long extract, in order that I may explain to you why it is that I want what I want, and that is, any information, whether hearsay or not, which you can give us, to enable us to ascertain the identity of that "respectable "looking person?"—No.

27,623. The "man-in-the-moon" of 1837?—There was a man at one election that I heard came here, and he was a very celebrated man, and I think he is dead. I think that was Croucher. My own impression is that it was at that election.

27,624. He was down here with money at that election?—I do not know that he had money; but he was here, a stranger, no doubt for the purpose of expending money.

27,625. Was he known to Mr Broadwood?—That I cannot say. I only recollect seeing a man at the nomination in a peculiar dress. He had got a smock-frock on, and a low crowned hat, which were not so common as they are now; and I asked who he was, and they said he was a stranger from London, and I afterwards heard it was Croucher.

27,626. Have you seen this Mr. Smith lately?—I will not be certain whether at that period it was Mr. Richard Smith the solicitor, or the late Mr. Richard Smith, his father, who was very much interested, I think. Very likely it was his father, and not the young Mr. Smith.

27,627. He is described in the speech for the defence as "a young man," an "articled clerk"?—Then it was the same. Then I have seen Mr. Smith lately. I saw him one day in a carriage while this enquiry has been going on.

27,628. Supposing at his own house one of the Commissioners were to ask him, in the presence of the others, simply these questions, "What is the name of that respectable looking person?" and if he cannot tell us, then, "Can you give us the names of those who can inform us, if you cannot recollect it yourself?" Do you think that he is too ill to answer such simple questions as those?—Well, sir, from what I have seen and heard of him, I really believe he is. I will explain

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

22 Sept. 1869.

to you why I think so. I think it is more than twelve months ago, perhaps two years ago, that I met him on a matter of business; it is the only time I have met him at all upon any matter of business, and that was at a meeting of the charity trustees, of which we were both members. He came to his son's office, and remained there a very short time, and I was very much struck indeed with the alteration in him, and the manner in which he expressed himself, and so on. He had been there a very short time, when his man servant came, and told him he was wanted. and he left the room. Now that is the only time I have met him at all in a room, or upon any business. I have merely seen him in the street, and spoken to him.

27,629. Did he understand your questions when you spoke to him?—Oh, he perfectly understood the questions at the time; but from what I have seen and heard of him he is in that state that the least excitement,—of course I am not a medical man, but I acknowledge to the world, that if he were a brother of mine, or a son of mine, I should certainly say he was not in a state to be examined, and that I think that any examination or any excitement would endanger his life.

27,630. Supposing he was prepared for the examination, by having sent to him beforehand a paper containing the questions that were going to be put to him, ore tenuo; that would not excite him, would it?—No. I question from what I have seen of him, and what I have heard, whether he is in that state to answer these questions.

27,631. (Mr. Coleridge.) But there is a very important thing we have to find out, and that is, who, at the election of 1837 was the "man-in-the-moon."

(Mr. Anstey.) How would that excite him, supposing he had these questions put to him beforehand?—I will tell you of one instance that occurs to me. I remember at one election he was very anxious to come and record his vote, and his medical man would not allow him to do it.

27,632. When was that? That would be, perhaps, the last election?—Well, I think it must have been.

27,633. Was it at Patton's election?—Patton's election, 1866.

27,634. I mean Vanderbyl's election?—That was Patton and Vanderbyl.

27,635. That is three years ago, or more?—Well, sir, my impression is, he is no better at all.

27,636. But he answers your questions when you meet him in the street?—Well, I can only give my own opinion. I cannot give you more than an opinion, because I have only seen him once or twice in the street.

27,637. You are quite right?—I will go further, and say, my impression is this:—I have been asked to go down and call upon him, and I have refrained from calling upon him and having interviews with him, thinking it would excite him.

27,638. (Mr. Price.) Of course you are not a medical man, but do you think he has capacity and recollection enough for this process to be gone through. Supposing we administered the oath to Mrs. Smith, that she would truthfully relate to us the answers that she got from her husband, and, without his knowing that we were in the house at all, that she should go and ask him these two or three simple questions, and when she came back that she should communicate to us his answers to them. Do you think he would have capacity enough for that?—Well, I have no doubt if one of you gentlemen would see Mrs. Smith that she would be very happy to tell you, and give you every information in her power.

27,639. We want it direct?—From him.

27,640. Yes, from him. He may never have talked about it to her. Supposing, instead of his being hurried and excited by our presence, that we were there in another room, and swore his wife to report to us faithfully and truly his answers, and if she then asked him, "I want you to tell me who was the man who was down from London," has he really capacity and recollection enough to answer it?—Well, I have never seen enough of him to answer that question. As far as I am personally concerned, I should be very glad indeed if he were examined, because I have been mixed up a great deal with election matters, and he has had the management of them, and I should be very glad indeed if he were here to tell his own story.

27,641. (Mr. Anstey.) This Mr. Croucher you spoke of, how soon after 1838 was he said to be here, or was it in that year?—I think it was in the year 1837.

27,642. 1837, the year of the election?—I think that was the year.

27,643. What was this Croucher?—Well, he was a gentleman who was employed by Tory and Whig to go to the various boroughs in the kingdom and bribe. That was his employment, I understood.

27,644. Where was his domicile?—In London.

27,645. Was he a lawyer?—Oh no. He was a kind of under parliamentary agent, or something of that kind.

27,646. So I should think. To make it quite clear that it is the Smith we are talking of, and that there may be no mistake about it,—there are two or three Smiths, some pawnbrokers, some retired, and so on, —some related, and some not,—I will just call your attention to this. At the close of Mr. Serjeant Bompas's speech for the defence he says, "that the wit-"nesses were not worthy of credit, and supposing "them to be worthy of belief the giving a piece of "paper which was exchanged for money by another "person was not bribery. It was not pretended "that the money came directly or indirectly from "the pocket of the young man." The "young man," you see, "charged with the offence;" and he called upon them to consider the consequences, &c., &c. "If they had a doubt," &c., &c. "to give that doubt "in favour of the defendant, who was not of age, "and whose whole life would be affected by a verdict "against him"?—Yes.

27,647. Then it must have been the articled clerk?—It must have been the articled clerk. There were two counts, were there not?

27,648. Yes; there was evidence that he bribed Jones?

27,649. Yes; there was evidence that the witness who supported the second count had been spirited away. Then Lord Denman said, in summing up. "He considered it his bounden duty, at the very outset "of his remarks, at once to inform them that the law "laid down to them by the learned serjeant was "entirely wrong. It mattered not by what contri-"vance, by what indirect means, a bribe was con-"veyed to the voter's hands, the person aiding in "the purchase of the vote was guilty in law as in "fact." Does that tally with your recollection?—Yes.

27,650. Then you see clearly it must have been this Mr. Smith, who is now paralytic?—Oh yes; there is no doubt it must have been this Mr. Smith who was tried at Taunton, who had the action brought against him. I was under some doubt just now, but no doubt it is the same man, no doubt at all.

27,651. Have you seen Croucher here at any time since 1838?—No.

27,652. (Mr. Price.) As this unknown gentleman has been mentioned, I will take the opportunity of stating, that with regard to the person about whom we had evidence yesterday, who acted a similar part at later elections in 1865 and 1866, at the "Bull and Butcher," and several of the later elections, that we shall think it essential, before we close our labours, to get, if possible, at the identity of that man, whatever it may cost; and therefore, if there is any person in the borough, of whatever rank or degree he may be, who can give us any information about that, and withholds it, he will only be adding very much to the expense of this inquiry, which he, with others in the borough, will have to share the burthen of. Whatever may be the expense to which we shall think it necessary to go, and whatever means it may be necessary to use, we certainly shall use them, and we shall not close the inquiry until we have discovered who that person is. We cannot but think there must be persons in the borough who must know perfectly well who this man is, who acted a similar part to that of the man of whom Mr. Trevor has spoken. I am not saying this to you, Mr. Trevor. I give you all the opportunity of making it known, because the sooner it is made known that that is the determination we have come to the sooner they can make up their minds to come forward, and give us the required information, and in that way, possibly, save a great deal of expense?—You will perhaps allow me to say this, in answer to that observation, that until I came into this court, until this inquiry, I was not at all conscious of any money being spent at the "Bull and Butcher."

27,653. Oh no?—And let me further say this, that I will endeavour, as far as I can, to get that information for you, and, as far as I am concerned, it shall not fail for want of inquiry.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Smith is the person who must know it. Begin at the beginning, begin with Mr. Westropp and all the persons he employed. He must know who sent down this man. Either the parliamentary agents, or Smith, or somebody must know who this man was.

27,654 (Mr. Price.) It must be known where he comes from?—It must be known.

27,655. (Mr. Coleridge.) It must be known where he got the money?—On my own impression of Mr. Smith's health, I should not like to ask him the question. I should be afraid of what the consequences might be.

27,656. That is the question we wish to have answered?—I will make every inquiry I can and give every information in my power.

(Mr. Price.) If you please. The thing is discoverable somehow or other, and it will only entail a great deal of trouble and loss of time on us, and a great deal of expense on the borough, if we have to adjourn the inquiry from time to time till we get this information.

27,657. (Mr. Coleridge.) We must know where the money of Patton's came from in those two elections?—I wish I could tell you. Then the election of 1841 was the next. That was June the 29th. The candidates then were Mr. Broadwood, Mr. Forman, Mr. Drewe, and Mr. Robinson.

27,658. (Mr. Price.) Augustin Robinson?—Yes. Mr. Broadwood and Mr. Robinson were returned. Mr. Forman was a large iron merchant in Wales. Mr. Drewe was a Devonshire gentleman. I think he married a Leader.

27,659. (Mr. Coleridge.) No; he married a Genevese woman.

(The witness.) Mr. Robinson was a merchant, I think.

27,660. (Mr. Price.) No. I know him very well. He was at Oxford with me. He was a barrister, and he is now a magistrate for Middlesex, and a very rich man?—Well, he did not spend his money here.

27,661. He was a Liberal?—He was a Liberal. Then the next election was in 1847, July 29th.

27,662. That was not a pure election?—Which one?

27,663. The one you are speaking of?—1841?

27,664. Yes?—I do not know that money was spent in bribery. Mr. Broadwood spent a great deal of money here, but whether he got in or what he had previously done, or whether money was spent then, I have no recollection at all. But I have come now to what I think was a pure election, and that was in 1847, July 29th.

27,665. Who were the candidates then?—Mr. Broadwood, Colonel John Kemys Tynte, the present Tynte,—there were two Colonel Tyntes, and Mr. Serjeant Gaselee.

27,666. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Colonel Tynte who represented Cefn Maberley never stood for this borough?—No. He was asked, but declined.

27,667. (Mr. Price.) What makes you think he declined?—I will tell you. I think that was the last time that I took the lead in election matters. I did at that election, and I saw Mr. Broadwood in London, and I saw Colonel Tynte, and we were very anxious at that time to get Mr. Broadwood and Colonel Tyne returned, and to prevent bribery.

27,668. As you had done with Mr. Astell and the Colonel's father?—As we had done with Mr. Astell and the Colonel's father for years. I should say that Colonel Tynte was a personal friend of mine at the time, although we differed in politics. I had been with him in the yeomanry for a great many years. He was a personal friend of mine, and I believe he put a great deal of confidence in me, although we stood on different sides in politics, except on one occasion, when he stood for the county on Conservative principles, and then I did support him. I saw Mr. Broadwood, and I had one or two interviews with Colonel Tynte. I also had interviews at Cefn Maberley with Colonel Tynte, and in consequence of those interviews Mr. Broadwood and Colonel Tynte came to an arrangement that they would support each other.

27,669. Split their votes?—Yes; would be friends, and split their votes. The late Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was then acting and always had acted for the the Tynte family, and he was the leading man. When I say, "always had acted," at the first election, I remember Mr. Benjamin Lovibond held a brief for Mr. Astell, but at the next election he turned Liberal. But Mr. Lovibond was acting for Colonel Tynte at this election in 1847, and he, at some meeting of the Liberal electors, made a speech, and the other professional men were not satisfied with his speech, and they went to London, the late Mr. Thomas Ford and the late Mr. Bate, and I think Mr. Henry Lovibond,—I will not be certain. However, those two went to London, and they brought down Mr. Serjeant Gaselee as a third man, and they went to the poll. A great number of the Liberal party, respectable tradesmen and others in the town, voted for Broadwood and Tynte, and the Conservatives voted for Tynte and Broadwood, and they were carried in consequence.

27,670. How many did Mr. Serjeant Gaselee poll?—He polled 196.

27,671. The constituency was then about 700?—I can tell you exactly. I have the figures. The constituency then were 529 on the register.

27,672. It had rather decreased, then?—Mr. Serjeant Gaselee (I do not think he was serjeant at that time) polled 196; Colonel Tynte polled 395; and Mr. Broadwood 265. Well, then, there were 55 electors unpolled.

27,672. That rather gives the key to your belief that there was no expenditure in bribery, to a certain extent?—It gives a key to there being no expenditure, I should say.

27,673. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at the election?—Yes.

27,674. Was there drinking going on?—This is 1847. Well, most probably. I will not be certain about drinking.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is a matter of course, I suppose?—It might have been before the writ was issued. It would not have been illegal in 1847, I think not.

27,675-7. No?— They were more particular after the writ was issued.

27,677. Just go back. I have a question to ask you, which I meant to ask you before. Do you remember this being printed on yellow silk in 1835 (handing a yellow silk handkerchief with the poll-sheet of 1835 printed on it)?—This is John Temple Leader.

27,678. It is not usual to print the poll sheets on silk. Do you remember anything about that?—No.

I do not recollect the meaning of that. This was at Leader's election, was it not?

27,679. Yes?—Well, he was rather an extravagant man. That is the only way I can account for it.

27,680. Do you recollect any other instance of printing the polling sheets on silk?—No, never.

27,681. (Mr. Price.) Those were sent to the wives of the electors in gold colours?—Well, I cannot account for that at all, except money was no object with him. He was a bachelor.

27,682. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not that colour used by the Liberal party?—Oh yes, always here; orange purple and orange on the side of the Liberal party, and blue on the side of the Conservatives. Blue and pink it used to be.

27,683. I believe,—if I am wrong you will correct me,—but I believe that one of their flags, the flags which are put away when done with, and then brought out at the next election, is a yellow or golden coloured flag, is it not?—Yes.

27,684. With the words on it, whether seriously or ironically meant I cannot say, "purity of election"?—Oh yes; and I have seen 20 voters come up on the Liberal side, who were supposed, in fact who were known always, to have had 10*l.* apiece, with the words "honest voter" in their hats.

27,685. (Mr. Coleridge.) And take the bribery oath too?—Yes; because they did in Leader's election take the bribery oath.

27,686. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it to be supposed to be orange or gold colour?—Well, the two colours are so near that it may do for either.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It may be emblematical or not.

27,687. (Mr. Price.) In 1847, you think, so far as the expenditure of money was concerned, you had more knowledge then than you have now, but practically you think there was none spent on the Conservative side?—Yes.

27,688. And none on Mr. Serjeant Gaselee's side, he being a stranger, and those two gentlemen being well known in the town?—When Serjeant Gaselee was brought down, I understood there was a quarrel between the Liberal lawyers, and that the Liberal lawyers, Mr. Payne and Mr. Ford, and the others, absolutely paid Mr. Serjeant Gaselee's expenses in coming down here. That is what I understood at the time.

27,688. (Mr. Coleridge.) The lawyers paid the candidate's expenses coming down?—The lawyers paid the candidate's expenses coming down. Mr. Serjeant Gaselee was a very good speaker.

27,689. (Mr. Anstey.) There were some cases of treating proved?—I think a man named Lee swore he had an offer of 20*l.* I did not pay much attention to that, because I did not think there was much necessity for it. I understood there was an arrangement made between Colonel Tynte and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond that Mr. Broadwood should be returned.

27,690. If we believe that 20*l.* were offered to one man for his vote, it is not too much to believe, whether he accepted or refused that offer, that he was not the only person to whom that offer was made, and therefore it was not a pure election?—Well, I will give you another reason. As I have said, I do not believe that the offer of 20*l.* was made to him, because there was no occasion for it; and I will give you another reason. Although old Mr. Smith must have been and was mixed up with election matters, yet I do not believe he ever deceived any man. If he promised a man he always kept his promise.

27,691. He was a pawnbroker?—He was a pawnbroker, and the father of Mr. Richard Smith, the solicitor, and the father of Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, the magistrate.

27,692. He was a pawnbroker?—Yes; that Mr. Smith was. Those are the two reasons which make me believe it was not so. Then I come to 1852, July 7th. At that election, or previous to the election, Mr. Richard Smith, the solicitor, took the part of managing solicitor on the Conservative side, and he went to London.

27,693. (Mr. Price.) And you abdicated?—Well, I played second fiddle. I found that Mr. Smith was a younger man than myself, and a more active man; and he was very well up to his work, and had a much greater knowledge of the electors than I had, and in consequence of that I was very happy indeed to be second man.

27,694. (Mr. Anstey.) Who selected him?—Well, I think that was done by arrangement of the Conservative party.

27,695. Yes; but who selected him, and desired him to represent them?—Well, I have no doubt, if he had asked me, I should have said, "I shall be happy for you to take the lead, Mr. Smith."

27,696. But who was it thought of him to succeed you?—Well, I think he thought of it himself.

27,697. That was the same man against whom the action had been brought?—Just so.

27,698. Was not this the reason: I will first of all explain,—it is due to you that it should be stated,—that in 1866 Mr. Westropp, who was then guilty, by his agents certainly, of very great general bribery, when asked about the connection of your firm with him, said what I suppose you feel to be a compliment?—Quite so. I am quite aware of what you refer to.

27,699. That your firm were very "slow coaches," by which I understand him to mean, that you would not go with him and with the party in the depraved line they took?—Just so.

27,700. Now, having prefaced my question with that remark, I will ask you this: Is it not the fact, that the reason why Mr. Smith was selected, or selected himself, to act instead of you, was, that he was less scrupulous than you or your brother with regard to bribery?—Well, he had been, decidedly, because the penalty had been recovered against him.

27,701. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has the same system obtained here on the Conservative side as on the Liberal, of the attorneys employing the candidate, and not the candidates the attorneys? Has it been the practice on the Conservative side as well as on the Liberal one? Because we have heard that the fate of the candidate on the Liberal side is in the hands of the attorneys. Is that the same on the Conservative side?—Well, the candidates, generally speaking, who have been brought here, have been brought here by the attorneys on the Conservative side also.

27,702. In the same way as on the Liberal side?—In the same way as on the Liberal side. That is the way they have been brought here. Perhaps you will allow me to say, at this particular moment, with regard to the candidates, that there always has been an impression that all the lawyers in the town have wished to continue bribery in this borough, that we were always anxious to continue it; but I, and others, have always endeavoured to get rid of the system. I will give you instances in which we have endeavoured to get rid of the system. With that end in view, I have myself been to two or three country gentlemen here in the neighbourhood, and asked them to become candidates, and they declined.

27,703. Mr. Alfred Slade was very anxious to get rid of the system?—Yes. I asked him to become a candidate, and he declined; and the late Sir Alexander Hood, I waited on him, and asked him, and he declined, and the late Mr. Colson also.

27,704. Mr. Henry Luttrell?—Yes. We asked him to come forward, and he declined.

27,705. They all knew the place too well?—Yes. We thought if we made an arrangement with the country gentlemen we might have the place represented one and one, and the place was never so well represented as when the seats were divided in that way.

27,706. (Mr. Price.) When you went to London, was there a gentleman that you saw who acted the part of Mr. Drake on the Conservative side?—I saw Mr. Rose on one or two occasions when I went to London, and I saw Mr. Spofforth.

27,707. Neither of them, I believe, have received knighthood for their services to their party?—No; they have never been so fortunate as that.

27,708. (Mr. Anstey.) This is Mr. Westropp's description of his position towards the attorneys here, and those who manage the election. He says, "The only one who managed the election, who was "not a lawyer, was one who was very near a lawyer, "that is, a land agent and auctioneer, a Mr. Lilley," and he names him. Then he says, "The names are "Ruddock, Lilley, Bealy Smith the younger, "Mr. John Trevor"?—Yes, he was quite right.

27,709. You were one of those called "slow coaches," I suppose, because you would not bribe. "And Mr. William Brice and Mr. Payne." And this is his description of what he did after he was brought down by these gentlemen. "I have never taken "the trouble of looking since at the resolution pro- "posed with reference to myself, and adopted, but "there was one, appointing the committee in a "general way to further the purposes of the election, "but there was no one named, nor did I in any way "connect myself with that or any other committee. "On the contrary, I studiously avoided going into "any place of meeting or of committee, or being in "any way connected with the election. I had no "committee, in the proper sense of the term, during "the whole of the time, of persons acting for me; "not the slightest. I am not aware of any person "acting for me. Mr. James Trevor was my "election agent for election purposes, but my pro- "fessional agent was Mr. Smith, junr. In point "of fact, I spoke to Mr. Smith the younger upon "the general politics of the election." Then he was asked, "I believe Mr. Smith, senr., was not "engaged by you? Quite the reverse; Mr. Smith, "from the moment that the last election took place,—" that is the one in 1859,—"told me, in the most positive "terms, that he would not act." And then he states this again and again, and he is asked, whether he did not studiously avoid making himself acquainted with these matters, and his answer is, "just so." Now, is that exactly, as far as you recollect, the position which Mr. Westropp occupied towards those who brought him here?—It is such a long paragraph, I scarcely know what to say. The only thing I know is this, that he certainly placed implicit confidence in Mr. Bealy Smith, and Mr. Bealy Smith acted for him principally. We only came in if we were asked an opinion, and asked to do anything to assist.

27,709. His own counsel brought it out of him in examining him in chief, and the purport was this, that he was to studiously avoid knowing anything of what was being done by his creators, his patrons, those who brought him here. You are only mentioned as being one who acted in any way?—Yes.

27,710. And the others are named. Was that the system, according to your recollection, pursued with candidates in general? They are brought down here, and then they are told, that they must not have a committee, "We will do it all, and you must not "ask any questions about it. That is what he says "himself; he studiously avoided going to any place "of meeting or committee"?—Well, I have not had the opportunity of hearing the evidence. I was not there. You are speaking now, I suppose, from the report of the Committee of the House of Commons?

27,711. (Mr. Price.) Yes; 1865?—I had nothing to do with that.

27,712. (Mr. Anstey.) That is why I read to you those passages?—They are rather unconnected. I was not present.

27,713. I have read them quite correctly, and I ask you, is that the position in which he stood?—It is a very unusual position for a gentleman to stand in. It is very unusual with other candidates.

27,714. I was going to ask you is it usual with other candidates?—No. It has not been the custom at all.

27,715. (Mr. Price.) When you took an active part in the matter, and were in communication with Mr. Broadwood and other gentlemen, was that the sort or position you took up with regard to them?—Oh, certainly not.

27,716. That they were to keep their mouths shut, and not to attend meetings, and so on; nothing of that kind?—Oh no. It is absurd.

27,717. (Mr. Anstey.) How do you account for Mr. Westropp having said this, in respect not only of the election in 1859, but of the election in 1865, according to his own account; and it is not in cross-examination; it is asked him by his own counsel in his examination-in-chief?—I fancy he must have misunderstood the thing. His answer is rather an inconsistent one.

27,718. But it is asked in every form. You think he could not have understood it. Do I understand you to say, it is not consistent with what you recollect of Mr. Westropp's words and deeds, and sayings and doings, while he was here at those elections?—Well, it is putting my opinion against Mr. Westropp's.

27,719. Well, I should like to have it. Perhaps I would rather have yours. Do you remember any words or acts of his which are not strictly consistent with the passages I have read to you?—Well, I should think the answer was an inconsistent one.

A short adjournment took place.

MR. FREDERICK FARMER, recalled.

Dr. F. Farmer.

27,720. (Mr. Price.) We wanted to know from you, Mr. Farmer, what report you can give us of Mr Smith's health, and particularly as to whether you think he has sufficient capacity of intellect, supposing we pursued this course: that we attend at his house without letting him know that we were there, and then, having an interview with Mrs. Smith, administering to her an oath to report to us truthfully his answers to certain questions, that she should then see him as to the questions which really require a mere name; in point of fact, as to inquiring the name of an individual; and then that she should ask him those questions. Would he be of sufficient recollection and sufficient capacity to be able to understand and give an answer?—I had better state first that Mr. Smith is not in Bridgwater. He is in Exeter. He was obliged to go away. The very idea of this being about had made him excitable, and it was necessary for him to go a little distance away, so as to be out of the atmosphere of it; but he is within that distance that anything can be done, and in my opinion anything judiciously done, just in a very simple manner, with very short questions, and not many of them, would not be hurtful.

27,721. Well, then, would it be necessary for him to come back, or do you think he ought not to be brought back to Bridgwater?—If it could be done without bringing him back, I think it would be better.

27,722. Supposing our secretary?—I would go down with your secretary, if you wish, or assist in any way I could. I would go down with him, and be present.

27,723. Supposing we were to do this; supposing we were to administer the oath to you to truthfully represent his answers, and you went down there, and saw him, and asked him the questions, do you think that would be hurtful?—No, I do not think so.

27,724. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing we give you the questions that we want answered in writing, or, which perhaps would be better still, a short statement founded on the point which we want to ascertain. Then you will take your own course, and get the information from him?—Certainly, I will do so with pleasure, and I do not think that would injure him.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

22 Sept. 1869.

GEORGE DYMENT, sworn.

G. Dyment.

27,725. (Mr. Anstey.) What are you, Mr. Dyment?—A clerk and assistant to Thompson Brothers, the ironmongers.

27,726. Was your evidence taken down by Mr. Cook just before the election trial?—I was questioned about a report that I had heard and I believe——

27,727. The part I want to know is,—I don't want the rest, about the treating and so on,—but I want to know is it true, as stated in the brief, that you can speak to a conversation between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Parker his proposer, with respect to illegal expenditure at the then approaching election; that is, the last election?—Oh no; I know nothing of it. I never heard Mr. Westropp speak, beyond in public, in my life.

27,728. Did you tell Mr. Cook anything about it?—I told him that I had heard a report that he was overheard to say, "No, I'm damned if I do."

27,729. "Damned if I do," what?—I don't know more than that. That is what I told Mr. Cook. I believe he made further inquiries, and found there was no foundation for the affair at all.

27,730. Perhaps the person who made the statement would be more communicative. Who is the person?—That is what I can't tell you.

27,731. Why?—Because I do not know. It was a report that went about from one to another. I told other people, as it was told to me, casually.

27,732. Do you think Mr. Cook would put so positive a statement in his brief if you had not told him a little more?—I never spoke to Mr. Cook about it in my life.

27,733. To whom did you speak about it?—I spoke to my brother. He was in communication with Mr. Cook.

27,734. What is your brother's name?—William Dyment.

27,735. (Mr. Price.) Your brother had learned it from you?—Yes; I told him the same as I told other people. I told him of it soon after the election, but I heard nothing more of it until just before the petition was tried.

27,736. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the William Dyment who has been examined here?—Yes.

Mr. J. Trevor.

Mr. JOHN TREVOR, recalled.

27,737. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Trevor?—I think now, sir, we were going to the 1852 election. 1847 is the last unless you want to ask anything more about that.

27,738. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not consider that a pure election of 1847?—Well, I consider it myself so far a pure one that (I do not know what arrangement was made between Mr. Broadwood and Col. Tynte). I do not believe any money was spent at the election in bribery.

27,739. We have got witnesses who have sworn that they got money in 1847. Perhaps they may be confused about it?—The only evidence I recollect (and I have attended the court pretty regularly) was that of a man who swore that old Mr. Smith offered him 20*l.* I do not recollect any other man. That is my impression, that only one person spoke of it. That is George Lee, who gave rather confused evidence, if I recollect.

27,740. (Mr. Price.) He did.

(The witness.) He says that old Mr. Smith offered him 20*l.* I think he is mistaken. I won't say that the man stated what was untrue, but I think he was mistaken.

27,741. But supposing it was true, you would not be so positive then in your belief that it was a pure election?—No; but my reason, as I told you before, was, that I do not think there was any occasion to spend money, there having been an arrangement, and the great majority of the respectable Liberal tradesmen and others having voted for Broadwood, and the Conservatives having voted for Col. Tynte. I think it would have been a reckless expenditure of money.

27,741a. (Mr. Price.) I should think that a more forcible observation if you had not given us the numbers; but it appears that Serjeant Gaselee polled 196, as against Mr. Broadwood's 200 and something, 260, or whatever it was, which showed a large majority over Gaselee; but it was still a large number for Gaselee, under the circumstances?—There were a great many balance men in the borough then.

27,742. There were 50 men unpolled, I think you said?—Yes, there were 55 unpolled.

27,743. (Mr. Anstey.) But you also do not know whether there was treating during the election?—No. I would not say that there was not treating, because I am only speaking, you know, from books and memoranda and poll papers. I could not go so far as that, to say whether in 1847 there was treating or not; but I should think, as there was an arrangement, that every precaution was taken that the election should be a pure one.

27,744. Still there was a contest?—I will tell you another reason, which is (I do not think that he was a serjeant at that time,—Mr. Gaselee, however I may call him Serjeant Gaselee)——

27,745. Oh yes, he was a serjeant at that time?—Well, he came in, I believe, on the morning of the poll. I recollect breakfasting with others at the mayor's, with the corporation, and he drove up through the town, very much to our astonishment. We thought we were going to have a walk over. That was the morning of the poll, and that therefore strengthens my impression and belief that no money was spent.

27,746. But a similar impression existed, we are told, on both sides, with regard to the last election, almost at the moment of the poll, did it not, that the Liberals were in an enormous majority, and could get the election? That was the opinion of the Conservatives, was it not?—Well, it was so far the opinion, certainly, that at one time, the evening before the poll (the day of nomination), it was seriously discussed whether Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray would not leave the town. And then on the other side, I believe——

27,747. So also at the very time when you were having those misgivings similar misgivings were entertained on the other side?—Yes.

27,748. And nevertheless, or, perhaps, therefore, there was a considerable deal of bribery committed on the following day?—Well, I should say, in answer to that, that on the evening of the day of nomination our party had come to the determination that no money at all should be spent. That was an understood thing, that no money would be spent in any shape or form; and we were under the impression that the other side would not spend money. And having this Conservative Working Men's Association, a large body of men who were tired of being all one side at the elections, as at Mr. Vanderbyl's, and so on, (these were an immense number of fresh men,) we were under the impression that we should carry the election by these men.

27,749. Yet you thought the same night that the candidates had better go?—We did.

27,750. I will put this shortly to you. Can we therefore found any belief as to the non-existence of bribery, merely upon the fact that down to the last moment it was supposed there would be no contest?—Well, we were under that impression certainly, but it is very difficult for any man to come to the belief that any election in Bridgwater could possibly be a pure one, after the evidence that has come out in this inquiry.

27,751. (Mr. Price.) It may possibly have been in the election of 1847, as in other elections, that there may have been a whip made at the last moment,—a subscription, or something of that kind, to secure a certain number of men just to get a majority?—Just so.

27,752. (Mr. Anstey.) And for instance, did you suppose, when you commenced the poll on the polling day, that Mr. Serjeant Gaselee, in the face of such a compact as had been made between Tynte and Broadwood, would have pressed Broadwood so hard; did you suppose that?—I do not know that we had time to make any calculation. The thing took us so by surprise.

27,753. (Mr. Price.) But I should imagine, from the numbers that Serjeant Gaselee polled, that he must have had a very large number of split votes with Tynte; for surely he could not have polled 196 votes, plumpers?—Well, I think I could tell you.

27,754. I mean it is hardly possible, I suppose, that he could have polled 196 plumpers; therefore there must have been some little treachery or something on the part of the Tynte people which may have assisted him, Broadwood spending money?—I have got an analysis here of the poll paper. I think I can account for some now without mentioning names. I know that some gentlemen connected with the Liberal party voted for Gaselee.

27,755. (Mr. Coleridge.) In what way?—Why this: that they did not choose to allow their party to know that there had been any compromise.

27,756. (Mr. Anstey.) That would account for a few of them?—Well, yes; it would account for several.

27,757. (Mr. Price.) I should have thought that Mr. Serjeant Gaselee coming down in that unexpected manner on the morning of the poll, after a compact of that kind, would have been pretty much in the same position as Brinsley Sheridan and Lethbridge were on a former occasion. He might have polled 20 or 30 votes, but he would be in a hopeless state; whereas 196 is a very respectable minority?—But there was this distinction: Mr. Sheridan was an old candidate, who had spent money here previously, and Sir Thomas Lethbridge had been here with Mr. Broadwood.

27,758. Therefore it would be all the more surprising?—No, excuse me. The electors found out that they would not spend money on the night before, and then they ran away, and the people in the town were going about with lanterns to look for them.

27,759. (Mr. Anstey.) If anything could be predicted with certainty of a Bridgwater election, it might have been supposed that Sir Thomas Lethbridge, at least, was sure of his return, having had a requisition signed by a majority of those on the register; and yet that very number, or nearly so, represented the majority which voted against him?—My experience of an election at Bridgwater is this: that no man is certain of his election until the clock has struck four.

27,760. Therefore it would be vain—that is my question which I put to you some time ago—vain to form any belief now, at this time of day, upon those probabilities which you have suggested. They are all founded upon the fact that there was a compact between one Whig and the solitary Tory candidate, and that it was meant to be honourably kept on both sides?—But you know they were both the representatives at that time. At the time that this compact was entered into they were both representing the town, and they were both anxious to keep out a third person from coming. There has always been a party in Bridgwater anxious to get a third.

27,761. (Mr Price.) No doubt the candidates would be only too glad to do it, but the question is whether (or in fact there is no question that) they are not the persons who pull the strings. It is somebody else who pulls the strings behind the condidate, and though they may have had every intention and every desire to keep out a third, yet at the last moment Serjeant Gaselee is brought down here, and tumbled out of his carriage into the borough all of a hurry, and polls 196 votes?—Yes, and I think if he had come the day before he would not have polled so many. I think it was on the spur of the moment.

27,762. (Mr. Anstey.) Which of the Liberal lawyers were the patrons of Serjeant Gaselee?—Mr. Ford and Mr. Bate the Conveyancer.

27,763. Do you think they would have relaxed their efforts to get Serjeant Gaselee returned instead of Broadwood?—No; but then Mr. Lovibond, on the other hand, although apparently I daresay he voted for Gaselee.

27,764. (Mr. Price.) Well let us see how Mr. Benjamin Lovibond voted?—(After referring) Oh yes! He voted for Gaselee, but at that very moment he was doing all he could to prevent Gaselee getting his election.

27,765. (Mr. Anstey.) His doing all he could to prevent Gaselee's getting his election necessarily implied, did it not, to you, who must have known Mr. Lovibond's character, necessarily implied per fas aut nefas, or rather per fas et nefas?—I can only give you my impression, you know. I am still under the impression, and nothing I have heard shakes me in my belief, that at that election———

27,766. (Mr. Price.) Assume that Mr. Bate was patriotic enough on another occasion to advance 1,100*l.*,—at a future contest, a subsequent contest,—to advance 1,100*l.* to the then candidate, which he saw his way to having back again, there is no great improbability that if they were keen enough to go to London, and unearth Mr. Serjeant Gaselee, and bring him down on the morning of the poll, Mr. Bate might have been equally patriotic then, and have advanced a sum of money to Serjeant Gaselee, and so have got 196 votes?—Well, my answer to that is, that Mr. Bate did not see his way clear to get his money back from Serjeant Gaselee. I think the other was a professional advance to Mr. Kinglake, and I dare say that if Serjeant Gaselee had spent money at that election he would have got in.

27,767. But although Serjeant Gaselee might not have been a rich man, in the Bridgwater sense, he might have been able to spend money if he chose to do it?—I think it very probable he might have got his election if he had.

27,768. Very well, then we will go to 1852?—1852 just brings us to that election at which I said just now Mr. Richard Smith, the solicitor, undertook the management of the elections, and he had an introduction to Mr. Spencer Follett. I recollect having a letter from Mr. Follett, asking with regard to the Bridgwater election and concerning it. Knowing what had taken place, I answered it, and probably I gave rather a discouraging answer to Mr. Follett's candidature, for he wrote afterwards, and requested that I would have an interview with him, and on the 19th of March 1852 I accompanied Mr. Smith to London, and dined at Mr. Follett's, and talked the election matters over, and told him the chances of success and so on.

27,769. How had Mr. Follett been mentioned as a candidate?—That I do not know. How Mr. Smith came to bring forward Mr. Follett I have not the slightest recollection or the slightest knowledge. I only know that having taken, and my father before me, having taken an active part in the elections, and being well known in the town, Mr. Follett was desired to communicate with me, and he wrote to me, and upon that I went to London, and saw Mr. Follett. I think I saw him on the 19th March. I think that was on a Friday, and I think Mr. Smith returned home the next day. In consequence of this interview with Mr. Follett he either then or shortly afterwards made up his mind to come to Bridgwater, and he came here. I went with the deputation. Something has been said about Mr. Mansell being a cat's paw or something of that kind.

27,770. (Mr. Anstey.) I think Mr. Gray was said to be a cat's paw?—Oh, that was the last election.

27,771. (Mr. Anstey.) Not Mr. Mansell?—I thought there was something said about Mr. Mansell.

27,772. (Mr. Price.) There was something said about his being only put forward as a cat's paw?—Something of that kind, I know. But he came forward as a gentleman connected with the town and neighbourhood. He had property here, or his relations had, considerable property here at the time, and he came forward; and it was a perfectly understood thing that Mr. Follett was to be the first man and Mr. Mansell the second. They made the arrangement between themselves, and there is no doubt that that was the fact; that Mr. Follett was the first man, and Mr. Mansell was the second. Well, they came here. I think Mr. Follett came here on the 3rd of April; he and Mr. Mansell; and the election did not take place till the 7th of July. Mr. Follett was indefatigable in his canvassing; no man more so. He worked hard, and got a great many promises in the town. Well, then, on the 7th of July 1852, the candidates were Mr. Follett, Mr. Mansell, Colonel John Tynte, Lord Henley, and Mr. Kinglake.

27,773. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have not heard yet about what was the cause of Mr. Kinglake first coming forward. This was his first election. Perhaps you can tell us?—This was his first election. I think he was introduced by the late Mr. Bate. He was a client of Mr. Bate; and then he was connected in some way with Mr. Sealy. There is a kind of connection between Mr. Sealy and the Kinglakes, and he was introduced by Mr. Bate, I think.

27,774. (Mr. Price.) Not a bad thing to be introduced under the patronage of a banker?—Well, no, sir.

27,775. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose that the bankers here, as elsewhere, have all the trade in their hands?—The bankers. Oh, they have great influence. I recollect very well Mr. Follett being very much annoyed, at the time of his coming here, because he had been on very intimate terms with Mr. Kinglake and his brother. He knew Mr. Kinglake very well. And there was a split in the Liberal party. Mr. Kinglake, I believe, was a great deal too moderate a man for some of the Liberal gentlemen, and he would not pledge himself to the ballot. Lord Henley did.

27,776. (Mr. Price.) Before you go into that further, Mr. Trevor, how was it Mr. Broadwood then gave up the representation of the place?—He retired of his own accord. Then the split was the consequence in the Liberal party, and Mr. Follett and Colonel Tynte were returned.

27,777. (Mr. Anstey.) That was not a pure election, as we have heard?—Oh no; certainly not; that was not a pure election.

27,778. You took no part, I think, in that, except ———?—I took no part in any illegal expenditure of money, but I heard that money was going, and pretty freely, that a good many men had 10*l.* apiece at that election.

27,778. On your side?—No; they voted for Tynte and Follett.

27,779. Well, on both sides then?—Well, I do not know what arrangement there was. I was never aware that Mr. Follett had spent any money at that election, and I know he always impressed me with the idea that he would not, because Lord Derby's Government were either in power or coming into power at that time, and he came forward, and would not spend any money in bribery.

27,780. (Mr. Price.) Well, I should have thought that might possibly be rather a reason why he would, if he was very anxious to get in, seeing his party were in power?—Well, I really think that Mr. Follett and Colonel Tynte were on intimate terms, and that Colonel Tynte was rather afraid of Mr. Follett, it being an object to Mr. Follett to get into Parliament, and being a lawyer he was rather a formidable opponent in case of any bribery.

27,781. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether the polling day was in July?—The polling day was the 7th of July.

27,782. I will take this opportunity of ascertaining a certain date. The only other election that was in July, except the first election of Mr. Vanderbyl, was the election of 1865, and can you tell me, Mr. Trevor, for I have no date to the document, what is the date to which this petition refers. It states, "The election of last July." It does not seem to have ever been presented to the House of Commons. It is signed by Gabriel Poole, Carey Bailey Mogg, Henry Lovibond, John Sealy, John Lovell Sealy, James De la Hook, Robert Russell Sewell, M.B., James Haviland, Paul O. H. Reed, and Alfred Haviland. It is a petition stating, "That it is notorious that bribery and other "corrupt practices have been much resorted to at "every election of members to serve in Parliament "for this borough within the memory of the oldest "inhabitant; that at the general election of 1847 the "leading men of both parties in the borough entered "into a coalition to affect the return of a member of "each political party, for the avowed purpose of "preventing such corrupt practices; but a third "candidate having arrived in the borough on the "morning of the election, it was then found that in "spite of this coalition the election could not be "carried without again resorting to bribery."

(The witness.) I think this is the first time I ever heard of that petition.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then it goes on to say, "That at "the general election of July last———"

(The witness.) That must be July 1852.

27,783. When Lord Derby advised Her Majesty to dissolve, on his becoming for the first time Prime Minister, "That at the general election in July last "one half the number of electors would not promise "their votes previous to the day of election, when "nearly half the electors who voted were bribed, "bribery being carried on openly in the streets and "in the public houses. That your petitioners are "prepared to prove the above allegations. Therefore "they pray that your Honorable House will be "pleased to cause an inquiry to be made into the "existence of corrupt practices at the election of "members to serve in Parliament for the said "borough of Bridgwater; and to pray Her Majesty "to cause an inquiry to be made, under the powers "of the Act passed in the 16th year of Her said "Majesty's reign, entitled an Act to provide for "more effectual inquiry into the existence of corrupt "practices at elections of members to serve in "Parliament, by appointing commissioners for the "purpose of making such inquiry. And your "petitioners will ever pray, &c." Now that Act, you know, was passed at the end of the spring of that year, 1852, and this was a petition to Parliament presented after "the last general election," and that would be therefore either at the end of 1852 or some time in 1853, if it was in that year. Now, from the names that occur there, both the Sealys names being to it, and others, will they enable you to say whether it was 1852 or 1865 that is meant by the words that I have read to you, "At the general election of July "last?"—Oh, no doubt that was in 1852. No doubt at all that was in 1852; and I think I can now———

27,784. But you have never heard of that petition before, I think you said?—No, I never heard of it.

27,785. You see it is signed by gentlemen on both sides, headed by Mr. Gabriel Poole, and it is signed by gentlemen who were not of his party?—Yes. I do not know what made Mr. Poole sign. I do not think he took much part in politics, not in borough politics, a that time.

(Mr. Price.) We hear of some very remarkable names here, when you come to look at it. There is Henry Lovibond and Mr. Mogg. Then there is Mr. Paul Reed. All very remarkable names connected with future events.

27,786. (Mr. Anstey.) And also you see that the very fact which you mentioned, viz., the arrival at the last moment of Mr. Serjeant Gaselee, which you thought of importance in 1847, is assigned as a reason why they were obliged to resort to bribery again?—Let me say, with respect to two names which you have mentioned, the Mr. Sealys, that one of those gentlemen, John Sealy, who signed that petition, voted for Broadwood and Tynte.

27,787. (Mr. Price.) Then that you see is consistent, because he says there was a coalition to prevent bribery?—He went over with Mr. Kinglake. When Mr. Kinglake came here Mr. John Sealy went over his side.

(Mr. Price.) His voting for Broadwood and Tynte is quite consistent with his signing this petition, because it says that for the purpose of putting the corrupt practices down there was an attempt to form a coalition, so as to get a member of each political party.

27,788. (Mr. Anstey.) And the more so because the petition goes on to say that the object of the coalition was frustrated in that very election; therefore the whole thing may be supposed to have fallen to the ground?—There is no doubt.

27,789. (Mr. Price.) The election could not be, you see, they say,—in consequence of this candidate coming down the election could not be carried without again resorting to bribery?—My impression with regard to that petition was this, that that petition was after Mr. Kinglake was defeated, and it was got up by friends of Mr. Kinglake.

27,790. No, no; look here! Here is Mr. Gabriel Poole?—Well, Mr. Poole took no part in the election except voting for Mr. Mansell.

27,791. (Mr. Anstey.) There is Mr. De la Hook?—Well, Mr. De la Hook was on the Liberal side, I believe, at that time.

27,792. The two Havilands?—They were always Liberal, and they were friends of Mr. Kinglake.

27,793. But Mr. Gabriel Poole is not?—Well, he was a friend; he was connected with the Kinglakes.

27,794. (Mr. Price.) But I assume that these gentlemen would not put their hands to that petition, stating that the election of 1847 could not be carried without resorting to bribery, because they say that the leading men of both parties tried to effect a coalition which would ensure the return of a member of each political party, to prevent corrupt practices, and then they say that a third candidate having arrived on the morning of the election, which was Gaselee, of course. In spite of this coalition the election could not be carried (that is, the election of the two members, I suppose),—the election could not be carried without again resorting to bribery?—Well, that does not alter my view which I took of that election. That is, my impression and my recollection. You only ask me my own impression, and I think, notwithstanding, that it was merely with that view.

27,796. (Mr. Anstey.) I did not read it with the view of shaking your impression; it was merely to fix the date?—Well, now you have fixed the date as 1852, I think with certainty, and I believe that is almost the only time that I heard of any bribery to any extent. That was the election of 1852. I happened to go into a shop in this town, and there saw a friend of mine, who was Mr. Tynte's agent. He is dead now, Mr. Gooden, the solicitor, and from what I heard in that shop I was led to the belief that a large body of men were going up to vote for Tynte, and that they had received 10*l.* apiece. I went back to the Clarence Hotel, and I there saw a connexion and friend of Mr. Follett's, the late Mr. Hennet, who was an active partizan and a very clever man, and thoroughly understood anything that he took in hand. I told him the impression that I was under, and while I was talking to him a band of music passed the hotel. They came down at the back of the hotel by Stuckey's Bank, and they then went down, I think through the square, and then I saw a tally of men, about 20 voters, with their favours in their coats, and I told Mr. Hennet. I said, "Those are the men." "I will be after them," said Mr. Hennet, and he did. Well, afterwards he told me that he went down, I think to the Fountain Inn, on the quay, and went upstairs. He followed these men into a room, and he there addressed them, and he said, "Now I "know that every one of you fellows have got 10*l.* "apiece, and unless you go up and vote for Follett "as well as Tynte I will split upon you." Those men went up, and they voted for Follett and Tynte. Now that is the only thing that I know.

27,797. None of them denied "the soft impeachment"?—No.

27,798. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Hennet was the brother-in-law of Mr. Follett, was not he?—Yes. I think he married Miss Follett.

27,799. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he any relation to Mr. Hennet of the firm of Hennet and Spinks?—He is the father of Mr. Hennet.

27,800. (Mr. Price.) You were going to say that was the only thing that led you to do something?—That led me to have very strong suspicion of bribery. Do you wish to ask anything more about that election?

(Mr Price.) Nothing.

27,801. (Mr. Coleridge.) Unless there is something you can tell us?—No; there is nothing that I can recollect. I do not think anything can be brought up in judgment against me.

(Mr. Price.) You were too slow a coach, Sir, for the times.

(The witness.) 1857, March 28th, was the next election.

27,802. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Tories had not become reformers in your days?—I think there was a good deal of reform at that time. The next election was Mr. Follett and Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake.

27,803. (Mr Price.) There never was another attempt made, such as was made in 1847, to try by a coalition to return one to one?—No. Mr. Broadwood was gone then.

27,804. I know; but there was never another attempt after that. Mr. Tynte had been returned, and Mr. Follett seems to have coalesced to a great extent, but there was no further attempt made to try and carry them out?—It would have been perfectly useless, and I believe it would be at the present moment, and if we were allowed to have two members, I don't think that even after what has taken place in this court it would be possible to return one and one.

27,805. (Mr. Anstey.) I will put another point. Was it ever possible, and if so, would it now be possible, suppose you had another election either of a single member or of two members, or of any number of members, to come to an understanding on both sides, by which each side would be bound and hold itself bound to abstain from corrupt practices, so that each side would have reliance on the other side adhering to the compact?—I think not.

27,806. Never?—I do not think it would be possible.

27,807. And never was possible?—Oh yes, it was possible, because I have given you my evidence that years ago, when the gentlemen of the town had more influence———

27,808. That was the annus mirabilis, the year of the reform. But since the year of the Reform Act has it been possible?—I think not.

27,809. Then is your experience, Mr. Trevor, that purity of election has not been promoted by an enlargement of the franchise?—Quite so. I believe that the enlargement of the franchise would only have this effect in this town, that they would come and vote for less money.

27,810. (Mr. Price.) It would enlarge the area of corruption and the number of recipients, but lower the tariff?—Just so.

27,81d. (Mr Anstey.) And if we went back to the limited number of electors there were in 1816, I presume that we should only return to the period when a pig or a parrot was sold for a hundred guineas apiece, and not delivered after the payment was made, and other votes were sold without the pig or the parrot for three or four hundred guineas a head?—Well, after the immense amount of bribery that has taken place here it would be very difficult indeed to instil pure principles into the minds of the voters.

27,812. (Mr. Price.) Especially when you have instances of gentlemen coming down, like Mr. Brogden, who comes down, not for his own purpose, but comes down with a deliberate intention to corrupt the constituency, or at all events, if not with the intention, the principle carried out in practice of corrupting the constituency, can you ever hope to stem the torrent?—No, certainly not.

27,813. Commercial men of large fortunes get into Parliament, who not only bribe for themselves, but come down and bribe for their friends?—My own desire has been, previously to the last election, to have this place disfranchised, and my hope is to live to see the day. That is as far as I am concerned.

27,814. (Mr Anstey.) Would that have the effect of letting loose the many hundreds of persons who have been educated in bribery upon the hitherto virtuous county constituencies?—There are not a great many, I think, who would be county voters.

27,815. Are you in favour of what is called personal disfranchisement, nominal disfranchisment, disfranchisement by name?—Well, that would prevent of course———

27,815. (Mr. Price.) So that a man who has once taken a bribe for his vote in the borough could not hereafter have the chance of having a vote in the county?—That was done by the New Shoreham Act.

27,816. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you probably know that at Yarmouth and Totnes all the persons who were scheduled there were forbidden from voting thereafter for the county?—Yes, and a very good resolution.

27,817. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to say something as to 1857?—In 1857 Mr. Follett was again a candidate, and Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake. Then Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake's party united, and they canvassed and acted together, and Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake were returned.

27,818. Then in 1859?—1859, that was when Mr. Padwick came.

27,819. (Mr. Price.) Padwick and Westropp?—Padwick and Westropp.

27,820. Is there anything with regard to the election of 1859, any peculiarity?—Nothing that I am aware of at the present moment, nothing at all.

27,821. Now, Mr. Trevor, we will not trouble you at greater length, unless there is anything more with regard to the elections which is special. It is not necessary to go into everything in detail. We won't trouble you to do that. If you can give us any information other than that we shall be very glad to have it?—No, I can give you no information at all. The only thing I can say is, that Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp were brought here by Mr. Smith, and I never saw them till they came.

27,822. (Mr. Anstey.) You knew nothing about them until they came?—Nothing at all, either by name or reputation.

27,823. Did you know anything about Mr. Gray until he came?—No, except that he was introduced here by Mr. Toogood.

27,834. Which Mr. Toogood?—William Toogood. Mr. Henry Toogood had nothing to do with it.

27,825. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Westropp any connexion with the borough at all?—Not the slightest.

27,826. He was brought down here under the auspices of Mr. Smith?—I think Mr. Westropp was introduced, I won't be certain, by the late Sir Frederick Slade. I am not quite clear about it.

27,827. (Mr Coleridge.) As far as you know, Mr Trevor, has Mr. Smith been the motive power on the Conservative side for the last ten years in bringing members?—He has, ever since 1847.

27,828. (Mr. Price.) There is one thing you may tell us, and give us information about, the mode in which the solicitors on the Conservative side have been remunerated. You told us something about presents. We know that on the other side they have received sums of more or less amount in the shape of presents, on the Liberal side?—At the last election, as you are aware, there was an Act of Parliament which prevented paid agents from voting.

27,829. (Mr. Coleridge.) They all seem to have done so here?—I will tell just how that was. At the last election, when Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray came here, we intended,—I can speak for myself and for the other professional men,—I know that my brother and myself did, and I believe all the others, intended to have been paid for our services, and it was so arranged that we should be paid for our services. On the morning of the poll, seeing that so many men had voted for Westropp and Gray, and that we had a very good chance of getting the election about the middle of the day, I think about one o'clock or between one and three (I won't state exactly the time, because I do not recollect exactly what time I polled,) we came to the determination that we would not accept anything for our services, but that we would vote instead.

27,830. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you are aware, Mr. Trevor, that the clause prohibiting you from voting does not appear in the Reform Bill at all, but is in the new Registration Bill?—It is in the new Registration Bill.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, it seems to have slipped in there in a curious manner.

27,831. (Mr. Price.) Many people were quite unaware of it at the last election, and really required to be informed of it?—We were aware of it.

27,832. (Mr. Coleridge.) And it seems also that it is simply a corrupt practice, and it is a great question whether it is anything more than a vote to be knocked off on a scrutiny?—Well, we did not even want. We thought possibly that our votes might carry the election when they began to poll up.

27,833. You knew they would go off on a scrutiny, but they would not void the election otherwise?—They would not have voided the election, even if they had gone upon scrutiny, because we had taken the liberty of seeing Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and saying that we would take nothing for our services.

27,834. (Mr. Price.) You avoided the difficulty, by saying you would take nothing, and therefore your votes were perfectly good?—Just so; our votes would have been perfectly good.

27,835. Otherwise the votes of the professional gentlemen would have been struck off?—We were so strongly under the impression that we should get the election, that I should have been very glad to sacrifice anything.

27,836. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you and the other gentlemen who acted at that election afterwards paid, after the whole thing was over?—Never paid a farthing.

27,837. (Mr. Price.) How were you paid on former occasions?—On former occasions we were paid in this way; after the election, I believe Mr. Smith, who had had the management, used to send us what there was for the professional men. He sent us our share.

27,838. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the best paid election you have ever had?—I think the largest sum was 75*l.* between my brother and myself.

27,839. 75*l.* apiece?—No; between us.

27,840. (Mr. Coleridge.) You never came in for a couple of hundred pounds, like Mr. Levibond?—No, we never had that chance.

27,841. (Mr Price.) When you had charge of the purse, before you were a slow coach, and were put on a siding, when you were on the main line, how much did you get then?—I never had command of the purse.

27,842. Before Mr. Smith had it, how much did you get?—I do not think I ever had more than fifty pounds at any time.

(Mr. Price.) Then there was a kind of fee of fifty guineas.

27,843. (Mr Anstey.) You spoke of yourself and your brother; but did any professional man on your side receive a present after this last election?—I can only answer for myself.

27,844. That is what I thought. I do not think you understood the Chief Commissioner's question?—What I said was that Mr. Smith sent our share.

27,845. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Smith kept the purse?—He kept the purse; just so.

27,846. From having kept the purse he may have made of you the same example as was made of Messrs. Reed and Cook by Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham, giving 50*l.* between them, and 200*l.* for themselves?—I do not say so, because I am not aware of it; they understood from me at the last election we were not paid anything.

27,847. We quite understand that you made up your mind, and voted?—Just so.

27,848. (Mr, Anstey.) That is, you and your brother?—Yes.

27,849. And the other professional men as well, as far as you know?—I was present when it was arranged together; we would not take anything ourselves.

27,850. Will you undertake to promise and vow so much in favor of Mr. Veysey, for instance?—He had nothing to do with us.

27,851. Not now?—Mr. Veysey was not employed at the last election.

27,852. Was not he at all?—He was not at all, that I am aware of.

27,853. I want to get you to consider an answer which you made a little while ago. You said you had always been of opinion that this borough ought to be disfranchised. You were not of that opinion in 1866?—When I signed the petition to the House of Commons?

27,854. You were the third in the list of 820 who described themselves as electors and other inhabitants of the borough of Bridgwater, presented between the 18th and the 30th of May. You may have my book back again; it is from the Appendix to the 24th Report of Public Petitions for that year (it was handed to the witness,)?—Yes; I think I can explain that.

27,855. What do you state there?—This is, "The "humble petition of the undersigned electors and "other inhabitants of the borough of Bridgwater "in the county of Somerset, sheweth that your "petitioners have been deprived by a decision of a "committee of your honourable house of one of their "representatives. That a petition signed by a small "number of the constituency has been presented to "your honourable house, praying an enquiry into "certain alleged corrupt practices at the last election, "having for its object vexatious delay in the issuing "of the writ for the election of another member. "That your petitioners believe that corrupt practices "did not extensively prevail at the last election, and "that the spirit and prayer of the petition which has "been presented to your honourable house is in direct "opposition to the wishes and feelings of a very large "number of electors and other inhabitants of the "borough of Bridgwater of all shades of political "opinions. Your petitioners therefore humbly pray "your honourable house will direct that a writ be at "once issued for a member to serve in Parliament for "this borough, and thereby restore to your petitioners "their undoubted right to be represented by two "members in Parliament; and your petitioners, as in "duty bound, will ever pray. Signed Joseph Richard "Smith Thomas."—That is a mistake; I do not know such a name.

27,856. Who is Hatley?—That is a mistake.

27,857. Who can it be?—I cannot think at all.

27,858. The third name is "John Trevor"?—"John Trevor." I am the third.

27,859. And there are 817 others?—Yes. 820 altogether. I will explain that. I do not think I have said I have always been of opinion that it would be a good thing for the disfranchisement of the borough, but I certainly said so previous to the last election. I do not say all my life I had said so, because I could not have been of that opinion when Mr. Askell and Mr. Tynte represented the town. But, in answer to that, I may say that just shortly before this petition was presented, a petition was presented by several of the small party of the Liberal electors praying that a writ should not issue.

27,860. That is the petition of the 80 purists?—Of the 80 purists. When that petition was got up and brought to me, I signed it, coming to this conclusion.

27,861. (Mr. Price.) To prevent confusion, do you mean this petition we have been speaking of by the purists, or do you mean the other?—The other, to which my name is attached. When that petition was brought to me for signature, I signed it, because I considered this petition was merely meant and signed for the purpose of being presented to the house for the purpose of staying the writ, and not going into a parliamentary enquiry.

27,862. (Mr. Anstey.) It so states here, having for its object a vexatious delay in the issuing of the writ?—Yes; just so, and the only object was this, that if we had got the writ at once the Liberal party were in that state in consequence of presenting the petition that they would have no chance of success at that election.

27,863. (Mr. Price.) I believe it is a fact, is it not, that in all boroughs like Bridgwater the party who petitions, although he may succeed the man who is opposed, is not popular at the next election?—Certainly not. That is our view of the popular party, and I was anxious to get the writ down.

27,864. (Mr. Anstey.) You state distinctly that you believe the real object of the other petition was to cause vexatious delay in the issuing of the writ; but then the last passage in the stating part, not the prayer, is your petitioners believe that corrupt practices did not extensively prevail at the last election. Now, in the month of May 1866, it was after the committee had made its report, and gone through its inquiry; therefore were you of opinion, in the language which I have just read to you, that corrupt practices did not extensively prevail. That was the election of 1865, against which a petition had been presented. Do you mean by the setting aside?—Well, I certainly am under the impression that corrupt practices had not to any great extent prevailed in the borough at that time.

27,865. That is what you say here?—Just so. I was not before the House of Commons, but I read the report in the paper, and my idea was———

27,866. I ought to ask you, did you get up the defence of the seat?—I had nothing on earth to do with it.

27,867. Therefore, had you any means of knowing the truth, not only with respect to the seven cases, I think there were, which were enquired into, but with respect to the hundred and more which were not enquired into; Mr. Baxter, the chairmam of the committee, having thought that he would break off the enquiry at that point?—I was not aware. I had not seen the brief, and knew nothing at all about it.

27,868. This part of the petition to which you subscribed your name represented the then state of your knowledge?—Yes, just so.

27,869. Who presented this petition?—By which I mean, who drew it, and got it up, your petition?

(Mr. Price.) The one of 820?—Really I do not recollect.

27,870. Would it assist you to know that the first name was Joseph R. Smith? Would it be his doing?—No, I should think not.

27,871. Then it would be his brother, the lawyer's, doing?—Very likely.

27,872. Especially as he was a great patron of the borough at that time?—Yes, very likely.

27,873. You cannot give me any idea of who this misprinted "Hatley" is?—Not the slightest idea.

27,874. Is there any leading Conservative whose name is Thomas in the borough?—There is no Thomas beginning with "H" that I know.

27,875. That may be in itself a misprint?—I cannot say.

27,876. Now, with regard to the electors and other inhabitants, do you happen to recollect how many of the 820 were electors and how many not?—No. I think I must have signed that petition on its being brought to me, for I have no recollection of the manner in which it was got up; in fact, if I had not heard of it at this enquiry I should have had no recollection of having seen such a petition.

27,878. Then I suppose it will be useless to ask you the question which I have asked former witnesses; I think the town clerk, and some other gentlemen connected with the borough; and that is, the original petition having disappeared from the Journal Office of the House of Commons, being unable to obtain inspection of the other signatures, no account being given at the Journal Office of the manner in which it was lost, do you happen to know how that accident occurred?—I was not aware that it had been lost, until I heard of it at this inquiry.

27,879. You never heard how it is?—No, never in the slightest way.

27,880. It was presented, I suppose?—It looks so, by the minute of the House of Commons.

(Mr. Anstey.) It was presented by Mr. Gore Langton, and printed by the order of the house.

27,881. (Mr. Price.) He was the county member?—He was the county member, and is now.

27,882. (Mr. Anstey.) It had a number in the Journal Office; the number is there, but the place of the original petition is vacant?—I have no recollection whatever.

27,883. Where those 820 persons of great mark or not?—I have no recollection of having signed it myself, and really could not tell you a man who signed it.

27,884. (Mr. Price.) That is perhaps all you can tell us?—That is all. I shall be happy to answer any questions.

27,885. Then the last election; will you take us to that?—I had very little to do with the last election.

27,886. (Mr. Coleridge.) Perhaps you had better sketch through all the elections?—I will. We left off in 1865, Bagehot's election, when Mr. Patton came down here.

27,887. (Mr. Price.) Who brought Mr. Patton down?—I think he came through Mr. Smith.

27,888. The lawyer?—The lawyer. The first time I saw him was in Bridgwater, and there is only one observation which I wish to make with regard to him, and I think it due to him to say so, that when he came here at that first election I verily believe, and am satisfied in my own mind, that Mr. Patton had not the slightest idea of any corrupt practices whatever being used or being about to be used on his behalf; that is my firm conviction.

27,889. (Mr Price.) What makes you think that?—From the conversation I had with him.

27,890. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it only from what he stated to you?—From what he stated to me, and the man himself, and his manner, and Mrs. Patton's manner.

27,891. You and your brother, that is your firm, as well as yourself personally, would be precisely the gentlemen, would not you, from whom any one meditating or aware that others were meditating to use corrupt practices on his behalf would certainly conceal the fact, having regard to the reputation of yourself and your firm?—Quite so; but Mr. Patton expressed his surprize on seeing the manner in which he had been received here by the electors. I suppose, having been resident in Scotland, he was quite surprized to see the warmth of the south of England, and he certainly left that impression on my mind, and what I stated. He was returned at that election. The next election Mr. Vanderbyl came, and Mr. Vanderbyl was returned, as we have heard in this court, by expending a very large sum of money.

27,892. Did you hear, when Mr. Patton was here on the second occasion, of corrupt practices being had recourse to on his side of the question?—I believe from what I have heard there were corrupt practices.

27,893. Did you hear that at that time, whilst the election was going on, that corrupt practices were going on?—Well, I will tell you why I think so, because Mr. Patton expressed his desire on the hustings to petition against the return of Mr. Vanderbyl.

27,894. That would be after the result of the election; but my question is, whilst going on?—That satisfied me at the time that Mr. Patton, even up to that time, was not aware of any corrupt practices, because if he had been, on his own side, he was not a man who in his position would have on the hustings declared his intention of petitioning against Mr. Vanderbyl.

27,895. Your answer then to the question I put to you will be this, that you did not hear, whilst the election was going on, of any corrupt practices?—Oh, I did hear so.

27,896. Then what you mean is, that Mr. Patton had not heard of them?—Mr. Patton had not heard of them, certainly.

27,897. And you found your belief of Mr. Patton not having heard on the fact that he made that declaration which is reported in the newspapers, that it would not rest there?—Just so.

27,898. That there should be an inquiry?—Just so.

27,899. Into the means by which Mr. Vanderbyl's election had been brought about?—Yes.

27,900. I had intended to draw your attention to that; but is not it a fact that neither Mr. Patton nor any of his party did venture to present a petition against Mr. Vanderbyl's return?—Certainly not. They did not venture, for this reason, they found afterwards that they could not venture on presenting a petition.

27,901. And as it was all one parliament, and one session of one parliament, they must have been fully aware that the malpractices at the election of the month before, when Mr. Patton was returned, would or might have been brought forward?—Quite. And I have no doubt it weighed with Mr. Patton afterwards.

27,902. (Mr. Price.) You, as I understand you, believe that Mr. Patton was so far guileless of corrupt practices that in his position of Lord Advocate he would not talk about his petition against Mr. Vanderbyl unless he had intended also to pray for the seat?—I do firmly believe it.

27,903. That in his petition he would not have condescended to petition out of spite against Mr. Vanderbyl?—Certainly not.

27,904. But it would be really to gain the seat?—Quite so.

27,905. And would not have pledged himself or spoken in that way if he had had any knowledge of it?—Yes.

27,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) Holding those views, how do you account for the large sum which Mr. Patton undoubtedly did send down to this borough at both of the elections; because we have it beyond doubt that he did spend a large sum in bribery at each of these elections?—I account for it in this way, that he had friends of his who came down here, and they must have brought money here without his knowledge.

27,907. Where do you imagine it came from?—I have not the slightest knowledge.

27,908. Have you any doubt that in reality it came from the Carlton Club or the Conservative party in some way?—Well, my own experience of clubs is that you get very little money for a borough from any club.

27,909. What is your experience of Colonel Taylor, apart from the club, or the gentleman who represents Colonel Taylor? Do you not think that there is a purse master of the Conservative party as well as there is of any other party?—Well, if there is any great election to be fought they would then get a considerable sum of money;—but if you go to-morrow about a general election, and asked at the Conservative head quarters for money, they would laugh at you.

27,910. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you advise Mr. Patton not to petition; you personally?—Well, I do not know. I do not think at the second election I saw him.

27,911. He was in Mr. Smith's hands, the same as Mr. Westropp was?—No; I do not think he would be then. I think Mr. Smith was ill at the second election.

27,912. Well; young Mr. Smith?—Young Mr. Smith.

27,913. You recollect Mr. Westropp told the committee in 1865 that young Mr. Smith was his agent and adviser in what he calls the politics of electioneering, and that your firm only advised him in matters of election agency in general? Was Mr. Patton in the same position with regard to Mr. James Smith the younger, that is to say, was Mr. Jomes Smith his adviser in all matters in respect of all politics and electioneering?—Well, my own impression is that Mr. Patton was a man quite capable of coming to his own judgment as to whether he would proceed with the petition or not, without having been told what had taken place.

27,814. His judgment could only proceed on information, and who would give him the information, Mr. James Smith the younger, I suppose, would not he?—Mr. Bealy Smith you mean.

27,815. Yes?—Well, that might be, or it might perhaps be through Mr. Patton's own friends.

27,816. But you at all events did not give him any information?—No.

27,917. (Mr. Price.) Have you heard since in any way, on any reliable authority, what amount of money Mr. Patton did spend at the two elections or at either of them?—I have not the slighest knowledge what he spent; not the slightest.

27,918. (Mr. Anstey.) As you come now to the end of those elections at which you say you believe there have been corrupt practices on your side, I wish to ask you did you ever hear, or not, that the way in which the bribery at those elections was conducted was the same way as that described at Taunton, namely, a person, going into a room, receives his ticket or order for a bribe, and then goes into a dark room to receive the money in exchange for that voucher?—I heard that for the first time during this inquiry; it has come out in evidence. That is the first time I have heard of it.

27,919. Have you heard the name of any person besides Croucher as that of the man who brought down money into the borough at any of those elections for distribution on the Conservative side?—No.

27,920. Croucher is the first and the last you have heard of?—The first and the last I have heard of. I do not think he brought the money; he merely came to spend it.

27,921. To distribute the money, which is more important?—Yes.

27,922. Do you know the names of any of the gentlemen in London of the Conservative party with whom on those various occasions communication was had about money?—No.

27,923. For instance, whether it would be the patronage secretary to the treasury, or the Carlton Club, or the firm of parliamentary agents, or in fact who it was?—I do not know at all; but I will tell you at once that I have not the slightest notion where the money came from. My brother reminds me of one gentleman who was here, and that was Mr. Pitman of Edinburgh; he came here as the agent of Mr. Patton.

27,924. Did he bring money with him?—That I do not know.

27,925. Did he distribute money?—Not that I am aware of. He might have brought a large quantity of money, for what I know.

27,926. I thought you said your brother had reminded you?—My brother reminded me of this gentleman having come here as the agent of Mr. Patton.

27,927. At which election was that; the first or second?—I think both.

27,928. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you ever in communication with the firm of Baxter, Rose, and Norton before or at the time of those elections?—Yes; those are the parliamentary agents; Mr. Rose; it is Mr. Spofforth now.

27,929. Have you had anything to do with Mr. Spofforth at the last election?—No, I had not, at the last election; I had at one election.

27,930. Who had on behalf of your party?—My brother, I think.

27,931. In the election of 1866 had you communication with Mr. Spofforth,—Mr. Patton's election?—I think the last communication I had with Mr. Spofforth was when Mr. Edwards came forward as a candidate.

27,932. Mr. Francis Edwards?—Yes; I forget what election that was.

27,933. That was the general election of 1865?—I went to town with Mr. Smith while the election was going on in 1865, to try and get a second man to come here, and I went to Mr. Spofforth, and found that we had got such a bad name that they would not recommend any one to come here.

27,934. What had Mr. Edwards to do with it?—His name was mentioned to us as having gone to Barnstaple to stand there. I think there were two Conservatives, and he went down as a third Conservative, and there were two Liberals also.

27,935. Mr. Hawkins and Mr. J. Stucley?—Yes. He went down there, I believe, to make a little mischief, from what I heard afterwards, and on his way from Barnstaple he heard Bridgwater wanted a man, and he stopped here on the Sunday evening.

27,936. Did you see him?—Yes, I saw him. He stopped at the "Clarence," and we were in one room and he was in the other. He had got his family, I think, with him. His daughter I know was with him, and his servants, and so on. Mr. Smith saw him privately, and then came into the room where we were. I forget who was there. I know I was one, and he then introduced Mr. Edwards to us, and said he would be the candidate with Mr. Westropp the next day, which was the nomination day.

27,937. (Mr Coleridge.) Then he had had no canvass?—No; this was on the Sundayevening, and his address was written,and there were large placards posted, about, or were to be, next morning, inviting electors to meet him, and and give him a grand reception.

27,938. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he state in his address, "Having been called upon by a numerous and "respectable body of electors of the borough of "Bridgwater"?—I dare say he did. It is generally the commencement of any electioneering address.

27,939. (Mr. Price.) A common form?—Yes. Well, the first thing I heard the next morning was, that Mr. Edwards would not come, he had changed his mind, and I found out afterwards that was in consequence of some Liberal gentlemen in this town knowing his brother, and Mr. Lovell Sealy, wrote to his brother, who is a magistrate living in the neighbourhood of Rington, and told him there was not the slightest chance of his success, and he would have to spend a good deal of money, so Mr. Edwards declined the honour.

27,940. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know who or what he was?—He was a London attorney.

27,941. (Mr Anstey.) Did you know anything then of his atecedents?—I thought he was an attorney.

27,942. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes; he is an attorney in Delahay Street?—Yes I thought so. I thought he had gone to Barnstaple to make mischief.

27,943. That is all you know about him?—That is all I know about him.

27,944. What way?—Because there were two Conservative candidates there, and be down as a third.

27,945. (Mr. Price.) He was a man they rather wanted to get rid of than support him?—Well, I suppose they thought he would do for Bridgwater.

27,946. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had Mr. Edwards any connection with this county?—Yes; his brother was a magistrate who took great interest on the Conservative side in the eastern division.

27,947. He lives at Brockley Coombe?—Yes.

27,948. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Mr. Wellington Guernsey, sometimes called Major Wellington Guernsey, at that time?—No; I never heard of him till this moment.

27,949. Was there anybody with Mr. Westropp at that election from London?—When was that? 1865?

27,950. (Mr. Price.) Was there any gentleman down here to prepare the way for Mr. Edwards?—Not that I am aware of.

27,951. Passing under the name of "Wellington Guernsey"?—Not that I am aware of; it is new to me.

27,952. And he found out the thing was so tremendously expensive, or might be, that he was the means of turning Mr. Edwards aside from his intention?—I do not think so, because I was offered to be introduced to Mr. Edward's brother after the election, and a gentleman told me that I should hear the whole story.

27,954. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember some one coming from Barnstaple with Mr. Edwards. He came on the Sunday night? Do you recollect his being in the company of any one?—No; my impression is that he was on his way to his brother, and stopped here, having heard that we wanted a man.

27,955. That may be, but as a matter of fact was any one, a stranger, with him that night?—I have no recollection. If you ask me, I should say, to the best of my recollection, no.

27,956. Did you see much of him that night?—No, only a short time, and we looked at his address, and he wished us good night, and said he should be down in the morning.

27,957. What o'clock was that?—I do not recollect; I should think about nine.

27,958. At the last election, did you attend any meeting of the Conservative party before the nomination day?—At the last election I have no doubt I attended meetings.

27,959. Do you remember whether there was not some disunion in the ranks of the Conservative party about Mr. Westropp coming at all, after having announced, some few years ago, that he was not going to stand for Bridgwater?—Well, as far as I am personally concerned, I advised him on several occasions not to come to Bridgwater.

27,960. Now I am asking with reference to a meeting here; was not there some uproar, or disunion at least, at the first meeting held on his arrival here at which that matter was broached?—No, I do not think I was at a meeting.

27,961. A meeting on the 10th of October, was not there?—Yes.

27,962. He came on the 6th, I think?—No, he arrived on the 10th. I have a memorandum here, and I attended the meeting in the Town Hall at the evening, and I think the two were cordially received.

27,963. Now was not a resolution moved at that meeting to the effect that he and Mr. Gray should be accepted as Conservative candidates?—Yes; they were accepted.

27,964. Do you remember some uproar arising?—No, I do not remember any uproar.

27,965. Do you recollect the chairman saying from the show of hands he could not say which side got it, for or against?—No, I do not recollect; very likely it may have been.

27,966. Do you remember Mr. Westropp at any time making any observation on the subject of corrupt practices, and the new law passed with regard to it?—No; the only thing I know about Westropp is that he said he should fight a pure election.

27,967. Do you remember his saying at any time, "You cannot expect me to go to prison"?—No; I never heard him say that. I do not think he said it; never in my presence.

27,968. Had he, to your knowledge, in that interval between 1859 and 1868, been distributing large sums annually in the borough?—Yes, he had; and I was going to say, with regard to that, I recollect his telling me one day, "Since my election I have spent nearly 300*l.* a year;" and I made rather a short answer, and perhaps a very rude one. I think I said, "More fool you."

27,969. Did he tell you how he had spent it?—I knew how he spent his money. If any Bridgwater man got into difficulty, and wanted money, he would send down 5*l.* or 3*l.*, and he would spend it in charities, and send it to people who were opposed to him in politics, and so on. He made himself very popular with the lower orders in consequence; but I told him at the time I did not think he would get a vote for it.

27,970. Do you remember his giving anything to children?—I dare say he did.

27,971. (Mr. Price.) Is it the fact, that since he came here almost all the male children have been christened with his Christian name, and that silver cups have followed the christening?—I do not know.

27,972. Because I am told that all the boys have been christened Henry John in Bridgwater since 1865?—I have no children so young as that.

27,973. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember Mr. Westropp's last canvass; that is, the last election; it begins about the 26th of October?—Yes, I think it begins about that time.

27,974. And when did it end?—I canvassed the first time with him on the 30th of October.

27,975. When was the canvass closed on his side?—On the nomination.

27,976. Not until then?—Not till then, I think.

27,977. After the day of nomination there was despondency, as you have already said, among his friends?—Yes.

27,978. At what o'clock?—That is not on the nomination; it was the evening before.

27,979. On the Sunday night?—You are right; it was on the evening of the nomination. I was confusing the election with the nomination.

27,980. After the nomination had taken place, and a poll had been demanded, and the meeting broken up, was there despondency among you, and an idea that he had better go away from the borough?—There was a division amongst the party; some thought he had better go away.

27,981. Was that because it had been ascertained on the canvass, which had then closed, that he had no chance of success?—Quite the reverse; he thought he had a very good chance of success, but that our opponents were going to spend money.

27,982. What did you ascertain, not personally, but according to your informants; what had been ascertained as to the relative strength of your party, and Kinglake and Vanderbyl's party, if no money had been spent?—I certainly was under the impression at that time,—it might have been a false one,—that there was a good chance of success on account of this Conservative Working Man's Association.

27,983. What would the canvass disclose ?—The canvass, I believe, showed a very good result.

27,984. Did it show a majority ?—That I will not say.

27,985. Because you have heard, I dare say, before you heard it here, or knew it, the canvass books of this borough contain not merely for and against, but doubtful for and doubtful against, and so forth, and that those doubtful for and doubtful against and so forth mean easy bribable on the one and less bribable on the other side, cheaply bribable on the one side and less cheaply bribable on the other side. And in like manner the opposite column means just the converse of that, more cheaply to be bought by the Liberals and less cheaply by the Tories ; whereas the converse to that is, more cheaply to be bought by the Tories and less cheaply by the Liberals. Was that the result of the canvass at Mr. Westropp's last election ? Was there a majority of doubtful fors and doubtful against ?—Well, I could not say ; I did not see the result of the canvass ; I only heard what the result was.

27,986. Then your opinion was not founded on the canvass ?—Only from what I had heard. My opinion was formed on his popularity in the town with the lower orders of the people, because at the election at which he was returned I went round with him in the carriage afterwards, and I never saw any man in my life so popular in the town, almost every one was in his favour, and so it was when he canvassed. Perhaps it had to do with that little anecdote of the chairman's.

27,987. (Mr. Price.) His popularity in the nursery ; that he was godfather ?—All the women decidedly were very much in his favuor.

27,988. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish you to keep your attention to that point. I do not want other reasons. But was there or not a majority of promises in his favour ?—I cannot say.

27,989. (Mr. Price.) Your impression, whatever it was, of his chance of success, was not founded upon the canvass ? — I should not give any one a chance of success upon the result of a canvass in this borough, because it is a most unsatisfactory thing, the result of a canvass, because we know that a good many promise you, and you are not quite certain of their fulfilling their promise.

27,990. Then your answer is, that it is not founded on the success of the canvass ?—No, certainly not.

27,991. Then I understand that at the close of the day, when you and the rest of them thought he had a good chance of success because of his personal popularity, you heard something which made you think that the profusion of the other side was about to be called in to purchase them some popularity like that which he had acquired. What time of the day was that ?—I think the turning of the election was between one and two.

27,992. No ; I mean on the nomination day you heard there was a chance of the other side going to try to purchase a little popularity for themselves ?—It was on the evening of the nomination day.

27,993. What did you hear ?—Why, it was only from Mr. Vanderbyl's antecedents.

27,994. But what did you hear that evening ?—All kinds of rumours. We heard the other side was going to spend money.

27,995. Had you heard what had taken place, or anything like what had taken place, the day before, at the different meetings we had heard of ?—On the Sunday I had heard of all that, because I had been at one of the meetings.

27,996. Was it that made you think they were going to purchase popularity ?—I will tell you why I thought they were going to purchase popularity, because Mr. Vanderbyl had proposed to come to a compromise with Mr. Westropp, and we heard no more of that, although they were to let us know, and from that very fact I thought they intended to spend money, and win their election.

27,997. That is what I want to bring you to. Were you present at one of those conversations ?—I was, at Mr. Brice's.

27,998. Was Mr. Westropp there ?—He was.

27,999. Was Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No; I did not see him at all.

28,000. I understand from a witness that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp met face to face ?—No. My impression is, that Mr. Westropp had a note from Mr. Fennelly, saying that Mr. Vanderbyl would meet him at Mr. Kennett's ; but, instead of Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Fennelly came, and Mr. Westropp was rather annoyed at that.

28,001. Mr. Westropp and Mr. Fennelly met ?—They met.

28,002. Were you present there ?—No.

28,003. Did Mr. Westropp communicate to you what took place between him and Mr. Fennelly ?—Yes.

28,004. Will you tell us what that was ? — That they wanted to make an arrangement, and when they asked me, I at once said, " No ; although disliking " Mr. Kinglake, as I do, I certainly, after what has " been said of Mr. Vanderbyl in the public prints, will " not vote for him as a candidate at the election."

28,005. I particularly want to ask you what Mr. Westropp told you had been proposed to him by Mr. Fennelly, and I want more particularly to know whether Mr. Westropp told you this :—I am quoting from the brief which was held in support of the petition,—that Mr. Vanderbyl had put himself in his, Mr. Fennelly's, hands, and that he, Mr. Vanderbyl, had had a row with his agents, Messrs. Reed and Cook, and at the same time offered Mr. Westropp to meet him half way. Upon which Mr. Westropp said to the gentleman who prepared this brief, I suppose that he inferred that Mr. Fennelly's meaning was that Mr. Vanderbyl would join him, Mr. Westropp, in bribery ?—No ; I have no recollection of ever having heard that.

28,006. Who prepared this brief ?—Is it the brief on behalf of the petitioners ?

28,007. Yes ; the brief on behalf of the petitioners ?—It was prepared by Mr. Brice and my brother. I have never seen it. When I say that I have never seen it, I have never read a page of it. My brother, perhaps, can throw a light on that.

28,008. (Mr. Price.) So far as any part you took in it, you objected to the compromise on the ground of what had appeared about Mr. Vanderbyl in the public prints ?—I did.

28,009. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell me all that Mr. Westropp stated that had passed between him and Mr. Fennelly ?—He merely stated that there had been an offer of a compromise. I did not pay much attention, because I did not at all fall in with it with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl.

28,010. Then you were in a state of despondency ; and who was it thought your candidate should leave the town and have no contest ? Do you remember ?—No, I do not.

28,011. Mr. Poole has mentioned that either you or your brother told him next day that one of you, I think, you or your brother, said, " No ; as the expense is already incurred, let us go on " ?—I daresay I did. I know I had a good deal of talk with Mr. Poole on that day.

28,012. I mean what took place the night before ?—

(Mr. Price.) That you or some one had said to Westropp, " It is no good retiring now all the expense

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

is incurred; fight it out." That is to say, I presume the hustings and all the legal expenses?—That could not have been me, because I was not there that evening.

28,013. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you know nothing further about that election?—Not that election. Very little indeed.

28,014. Was it you who went up to town about the election petition, or your brother?—I went up once.

28,015. Did you go up the first week after the election?—I will tell you in one moment, if you will allow me to look at my notes. I went to London on the 3rd December. I should say that my brother had been up previously to London to prepare the petition.

28,016. It was your brother who went up?—Yes, my brother went up.

28,017. And then you went up, and joined him in London, did you?—No. Mr. Lovibond had made an offer to my brother, proposing a compromise, and my brother came home on the Friday night,—it was the 27th November,—and told us the offer which Mr. Lovibond had made, which was that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire at the end of a twelvemonth; and my brother had said that he could give no answer to that; he would consult his friends at home. Upon that we had a meeting, and it was agreed that the thing was not feasible at all, and we did not feel at all satisfied by such an offer, that he was to retire in a twelvemonth. Then on that Mr. Lovibond called on me, on the 2nd December, and I had been informed before that there had been some misunderstanding between him and my brother, that is, that that he put a different construction on what my brother had said; that he thought he had acceded to a compromise, when my brother said he certainly had not, and he could not do anything without consulting his friends. In consequence of that Mr. Lovibond urged on me very strongly again a compromise. I said, "Well, I think it is quite useless to say anything more about it." "Well," said he, "would not your brother go to town again?" I said, "My brother is laid up at home; he "has an attack of bronchitis, and I know he cannot "go with you." After a good deal of talking I arranged to go to Stowey with Mr. Lovibond to see my brother. I went over, and my brother then satisfied Mr. Lovibond, I believe, first of all with regard to this misunderstanding. He quite put himself right there with regard to the offer of compromise, that he must consult his friends, and we then told him that we did not think there was the least chance. However, Mr. Lovibond pressed us a good deal, and I said at once, "Now to show you that we "will do all we can, if you wish it I will go to "London with you, instead of my brother." Well, I went to London with him. That was on the same day; we went up that evening, and the first day had a conversation with Mr. Lovibond at the "Tavistock," and afterwards had an interview with Mr. Westropp, and told him the arrangement which Mr. Lovibond had proposed.

28,018. (Mr. Price.) What was that distinct arrangement; the last?—The distinct arrangement at that time was with regard to the twelvemonth. Then in the evening I saw Mr. Gray; he was to meet us at the Union Club, and Mr. Gray met us, and Mr. Toogood, and that evening the petition was signed by Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

28,019. The petition had not been signed then?—It had not been signed then. The petition was signed by them in my presence.

28,020. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Gray disposed, if other matters had been settled, not to have allowed his own claims to interfere; would he have retired so as to enable this compromise to have had effect?—He would.

28,021. From first to last, was he very anxious to get a seat in Parliament?—Well, he was anxious to get a seat, no doubt of it, but he said he would do everything to secure Mr. Westropp his seat, and I should say he was a man who took a good deal of time to consider, because it was arranged in the morning. I sent to my agent to meet me there to sign the petition, and he did not come, but sent a message that he would come in the evening instead, and then the petition was signed. Then the next day Mr. Westropp came to me at the "Tavistock," and there we had a conversation with Mr. Henry Lovibond, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Kinglake, and there it was proposed that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire at Easter; and I recollect very well that there was some little hesitation, some little doubt, while talking matters over; and Mr. Vanderbyl was very anxious to retain his seat at that particular moment, on account of what had taken place recently with regard to the Lundy Granite Company, and so on. It was of great consequence to him to keep his seat, and he laboured rather under the impression perhaps that it would be doubtful with regard to our getting the seat or not.

28,022. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whether he would give it up or no?—Just so; and Mr. Kinglake said, to secure that he would give it in writing, that in the event of Mr. Vanderbyl not retiring, he, Mr. Kinglake, would retire, and that letter was to be lodged in the hands of Mr. Gore Langton, to be used if necessary.

28,023. And was there to be any undertaking that they would not stand again?—There was something of that kind as well, that they would not stand again, and their friends in the country would do all they could to secure Mr. Westropp. Then Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Cook were to see Mr Vanderbyl, and we agreed to meet again in the afternoon.

28,024. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Kinglake was there, and discussing this matter, and offered to do that, did anything pass from his lips as a reason why he should sacrifice himself? We are told that his friends thought a great deal of his gaining a seat this last time. Was there any reason given by him of his knowledge of corrupt practices that his seat could not be preserved on petition?—No; Mr Kinglake said nothing, but it took me by surprise his coming at all; and I drew my own conclusion.

28,025. Can you account for it in any other way?—I cannot account for it in any other way.

28,026. Mr. Kinglake, a man of position, and in the House, being ready to sacrifice himself, rather than that there should be an election inquiry, unless he was confident his seat could not be preserved on inquiry?—I think I so remarked to Mr. Westropp on the occasion, that I was astonished at seeing him there, and there must be a good deal behind the scenes we were not aware of.

28,027. (Mr. Anstey.) You had not expressed any wish that Mr. Kinglake should be present?—Not the slightest. He came voluntarily. I had no idea of meeting him there. Then Mr. Westropp and myself went to see Mr. Gray in Great St. Helen's, and told him, and he said he should like to have a little time to consider, and we agreed to meet again in the evening, and Mr. Westropp and myself returned to the "Tavistock Hotel," and then we said the matter would not come to anything, and we did not see a chance at all of coming to any arrangement. Then in the evening I met Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and then Mr. Westropp fully came to the determination that he would not be a party to the compromise in any shape or form; and I should say this, that I had consulted his brother-in-law, who is since dead, who was a judge in Ireland, and he told him that the thing was full of difficulties, and advised him to have nothing to do with it.

28,028. (Mr. Price.) After the petition was filed the thing was full of difficulties?—The petition was not filed then. I think it was filed the next day. It was filed on the 7th December, and this was on the 4th.

28,029. (Mr. Anstey.) But independently of that Act, there was the Corrupt Practices Act passed in 1843, which would have placed a great difficulty in the way?—That would have been a question. There was no money to pass at all.

28,030. But there was the indemnity against having to pay money in the shape of costs. However, did you see Mr. Kinglake again or Mr. Vanderbyl about this?—No, never.

28,031. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl at all?—I did not see him at all.

28,032. (Mr. Anstey.) At the trial of the election petition in this hall, it is stated by one witness that he rushed forward to you when Mr. Vanderbyl was pronouncing upon himself a panegyric ascribing to himself purity of motives and innocence of heart down to that moment; do you recollect Mr. Cook or Mr. Reed rushing forward to you, saying, "For God's sake do not have Mr. Vanderbyl cross-examined."?—I think that must have been my brother.

28,033. Your brother took the active part?—Yes.

28,034. I will ask you, as a matter of form, do you know anything of this telegram I have spoken of this morning which was handed up by Mr. Serjeant Parry to the judge, and passed by him to Mr. Sargood shortly before the termination of the inquiry?—I know nothing about it. My brother will tell you. I think he saw all the telegrams.

28,036. You were a town clerk, I think?—Yes.

28,037. From what year?—I think I was appointed in 1832 or 1833.

28,038. Was that in succession to your father?—In succession to my father.

28,039. Then in 1835 the Municipal Reform Act passed?—Yes; it came into operation the 1st January 1836.

28,040. Do you recollect the first meeting of the Town Council?—Yes, very well; that was the 1st January 1836.

28,041. Do you remember a speech being made by any member of that new body on the subject of the patronage vested in their hands, in which words to this effect occur: "And now, gentlemen, let all our appointments be political"?—Yes.

28,042. And who was it said that?—It was the late Mr. Joseph Thompson, who was an ironmonger in the town, and who was also a justice of the peace.

28,043. Did he make any specific proposal with regard to your office?—He was one of those who turned me out of office as clerk.

28,044. (Mr. Price.) How did he get rid of you?—I thought the town clerkship was for life?—So it was.

28,045. Then how did he get rid of you?—By removing me. It was for life, but they had the power of removing me, and making me compensation.

28,046. You were competent to perform your duties?—I had been, a good many years.

28,047. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not finish your answer. I asked, did Mr. Thompson make a specific proposal with regard to you?—He did afterwards.

28,048. Not on that occasion?—Not on that day.

28,049. Was the tenor or effect of his proposition, that Mr. John Trevor the town clerk be removed, and that a Liberal be appointed in his place?—I held office some time; I suppose to the 30th July 1836.

28,050. I am not asking that, but was that the tenor of the proposition made by Mr. Thompson?—No; the proposal was not made openly, to turn me out. That was the first thing done, underhand.

28,051. But the speech was made openly?—Yes; that was that all the appointments should be political.

28,052. Was that proposal adopted by the Town Council?—Yes, decidedly.

28,053. And from that time were all the appointments political?—Yes, they were, all of them.

28,054. Before coming to your case, was at that time the office of Bussell, the jailor, vacant?—He was appointed on the 30th January 1836, therefore in the same month.

27,055. What was he appointed?—He was appointed at that time weigher to the engines.

27,056. Did they displace some one to put him in?—I do not recollect. Then, the 20th of June, he was appointed jailer.

28,057. And when superintendent of police?—September 1849, I think.

28,058. Was any reason whatever given for the appointment of Bussell to those highly responsible offices?—Well, the jailer, a man named Gover, resigned, and there were several candidates for the office of gaoler, and several were proposed at the meeting. It was understood at the time that this office would be vacant, and three or four were nominated to the office; and a very singular thing is, that they all voted for Bussell; although other men were proposed and seconded, the proposers and seconders did not vote for their own men, but for Bussell.

28,059. (Mr. Anstey.) The same as they did at Sir Thomas Lethbridge's contest?—Yes.

28,060. (Mr. Price.) What kind of qualifications had he? He had never performed police duties in his life?—It is very right to say of him, that he was a very capable man.

28,061. (Mr. Anstey.) Bussell says he has now come over to the Conservative body?—Yes. I do not think he has any vote now.

28,062. About appointing Bussell; did they give any reason for it beyond his being a political partisan?—They gave no reason at all for it when they proposed him. They proposed him, and he was seconded and elected.

28,063. And they turned you out about the same time?—I held two offices; in fact several offices, under the charters. I was the town clerk, clerk to the magistrates, and clerk of peace. Then the two offices of clerk to the magistrates and clerk of peace were incompatible. Then, under the Act of Parliament, we were obliged to apply to the Queen for a grant of quarter sessions, and the application was not made for that immediately, but in February.

28,064. (Mr. Price.) Had Bridgwater no separate quarter sessions before that time?—We had separate quarter sessions, and a barrister, here, who was recorder. Then in February 1836 I was removed from the office of clerk to the justices.

28,065. (Mr. Coleridge.) On what ground?—Political.

28,065a. Had you compensation for that?—I had 101*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.*, I think.

28,066. Was that equal to what you had before?—No; it was not; only one third, but I forget the basis. I had to give in an account of every fee I had received for years, and I luckily kept books, and the committee who were appointed, after going through the books a few months, were satisfied.

28,067. Do you mean you only got one third of the aggregate you got when performing them?—One third.

28,068. (Mr. Anstey.) That remains a charge for your life on this borough?—It does; it was two thirds.

28,069. You were well capable during the whole of this period that has elapsed between your removal on political grounds to the present moment of performing all the duties of all those offices?—I will say this, in answer to that question, I have been for 10 or 12 years past clerk to the magistrates of the county.

28,070. (Mr. Price.) There is nothing in the duty of town clerk or clerk of the peace for the borough, or clerk to the magistrates, in which political feeling can be displayed?—Not the slightest.

28,071. (Mr. Anstey.) And I suppose you were removed by the justices?—I was removed by three justices.

28,072. From the clerkship to the justices?—From the clerkship to the justices. One justice would not vote for my being removed; a Liberal, Mr. Inman. He said, if the other justices would give him a bond for the payment of my compensation, if any should be granted, he would vote with them, and he stated that openly in public.

28,073. Were all the justices at that time of the Liberal party?—They were.

28,074. The town council, of course the town council which removed you from the town clerkship, was also Liberal?—Yes; there were only two Conservatives out of 24.

28,075. Is that the way in which the patronage has been distributed by the local authorities from the time of the Municipal Corporation Reform Act, 1845, down to the present time, in rewarding, that is to say, political partisans, and mulcting political opponents?—Well, it has generally been so, except, I think, there was one time a kind of arrangement between the parties that one gentleman should hold the office of town clerk on one side, and the clerk to the magistrates should be held by one on the other. When Mr. Smith was town clerk he resigned that, and Mr. Carslake was appointed town clerk, and Mr. Smith clerk to the magistrates.

28,076. (Mr. Price.) It is so now, is not it? Mr. Brice is clerk to the magistrates?—Yes; he succeeded Mr. Smith.

28,077. (Mr. Anstey.) With the single exception you have mentioned, is it the rule in this borough to distribute patronage in the way I have described, so as to reward political partisans and punish political opponents?—I will not go so far as to say to the present moment, but it was to a certain period, certainly.

28,078. What happened to Mr. Parker in the month of November last?—Well, he was removed from the office of alderman simply on political grounds.

28,079. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they offer you a lump sum instead of this annual pension at any time?—No; they would not do that; that is what one magistrate wanted them to do. It was a proposition from some one, I know.

28,081. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there any office vacant now in the gift of the corporation?—Not that I am aware of.

28,082. (Mr. Price.) Did not the ratepayers protest against so outrageous a thing as the charging of your pension on the borough rates, a gentleman in the prime of life?—So far as this, that the Conservatives are in a minority in the town council again.

28,083. Whom did they put into the town clerkship in your place?—Mr. Thomas Ford, and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond became clerk to the magistrates. Mr. Ford was a town councillor at the time. He resigned office, and took the town clerkship.

28,084. Are you quite sure that no office in the gift of the town council is now vacant by resignation or otherwise?—I do not know, I am sure. It has been talked of the bailiff resigning.

28,085. Why is not that filled up?—I do not know whether he has resigned. There was a talk of Bussell being appointed.

28,086. Old Bussell?—No; Henry Chapman, the only man acquainted with navigation matters.

28,087. The council at present consists of two Liberals to one Conservative?—Quite that.

28,088. 16 to 8; Yes, I think it is.

28,089. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose, taking it altogether, this is a Liberal borough. There is no money spent in any shape or way by the Liberals?—Well, I believe if no money was spent the respectable portion of the constituaney, if you will allow me to put the others aside,—I will not say now———

28,090. But now, taking the new voters, is not it a Liberal borough?—It is a Liberal borough, for this reason that the great employers of labour are Liberals.

28,091. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing there was no undue influence exercised, or apprehended, which is the same as exercised, on those in the employment of those great men, would it be a Liberal borough, or what?—I will give you this answer, having been Conservative or Tory all my life, I have never been an advocate of the ballot; but I believe if it were in operation in this borough we should have a much better chance of success than we have now.

28,092. That is, with respect to undue influence?—With respect to undue influence.

28,093. Do you take any interest in the Conservative Working Men's Association, so as to be able to give some information?—I never attended a meeting there. I do not know how many voted at the last election.

28,094. Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—No, I do not.

(Mr. Price.) We are much obliged to you. You do not require any commendation from us, or that we should express our thanks to you.

You will be sorry to hear, that in consequence of a paragraph which appeared in the Times, we thought it right to telegraph to Mr. Patton's friend, Major Malcolm, and the answer is that the Lord Justice disappeared on Monday morning, and has not been found. He is supposed to be drowned.

Adjourned to to-morrow at ½ past 10 o'clock.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Thursday, 23rd September 1869.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. JAMES WOOD SULLY recalled.

28,095. (Mr. Anstey.) I asked you some questions about a man of the name of Robert Coles, and your answer was, that he had been excommunicated because of the perjury he had committed before the House of Commons?—For swearing false.

28,096. The perjury, you said, consisted in this, that he was asked whether he had been at the "Golden Lion," and he said he had not. I have referred to the Blue Book since you were here, and at least half a dozen times he stated positively he had been there?—I may save the time of the Court by saying to the learned Commissioner that I have a memorandum here to correct that statement on my first examination.

28,097. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was it made?—Which I made here on my last examination.

28,098. (Mr. Anstey.) But when did you make the memorandum?—This morning, in the prospect of coming here.

28,099. Why, when you discovered the error, did not you at once correct it?—I did not know it, until last night I had a copy of the shorthand notes.

28,100. (Mr Price.) How do you mean a copy of the notes?—A copy of the notes of the shorthand writer, taken at the Committee of the House of Commons.

28,101. (Mr. Anstey.) But that is in the blue book, which has been printed nearly four years ago?—Yes, I am aware of it.

28,102. We do not want any other copy of the shorthand notes than that?—It is to that I refer.

28,103. What made you refer to it this morning?—In consequence of Mr. Whitby telling me I was in error on that point.

28,104. When did he tell you so?—Since my examination.

28,105. But he told you immediately after your examination, did not he?—No, not immediately.

28,106. The same day?—Not the same day.

28,107. The day after?—Possibly it was. I cannot say.

82,108. Why did not you, in justice to the man Robert Coles, at once correct that error?—I had not any opportunity of seeing this copy till last night; he told me I was in error, and found this copy for me yesterday.

28,109. You told us that you had a certified copy of these very notes, which had been sent to you from London, before they were printed at all?—I had the copy when we met at Mr. Perkins', that Mr. Whitby read those extracts, or read the whole of Coles' evidence to him, which at that interview he contradicted, and said it was no such thing.

82,110. Had you that copy in your power when you gave your evidence last?—No; I borrowed it for the time from Mr. Lovibond's clerk.

28,111. You say he was not excommunicated for perjury?—No; I do not say that.

28,112. Coles is coming here, and perhaps the Commisssoners may not wish to call you back again. You had better, therefore, be careful in what you say?—I hope I shall.

28,113. You had better state what he was excommunicated for. The question is, was his excommunication intended to act in terrorem over those of the congregation who voted as he voted, or whether it was really intended to discountenance wickedness and crime?—It had nothing to do with his vote, and so he was told distinctly, over and over again; it had nothing to do with his evidence. We believed, and the minister believed, that he had sworn that which was false, knowing it to be false; and I think in his evidence you will find that he stated that he went to the "Golden Bull" on the morning of the election with his son, and he was asked which son, and he stated the son at Mr. Backwell's, the grocer. On cross-examination he altered that statement by saying it was not that son, but the son that was at Mr. Bealy Smith's, the solicitor. He was asked, in cross-examination, if he entered in the house, and he admitted he did; and there he was in error.

28,114. Stop a moment. I see no statement in his examination in chief about his having had his son, who was at Mr. Backwell's?—No; I think if you refer to his cross-examination by Mr. Powell you will find it there.

28,115. I see nothing of the sort. He is asked the question, "What is your son?" And his answer is, "Well, he is at the grocery now, Mr. Bartley's, one of my sons?" Then it is, "Which is the son that went to the 'Golden Lion' with you? Not that son?" He expressly says, giving the account of his son in that employment, that it was not that son. Then, "Which is the son that you took into the 'Golden Lion'?" The one at Mr. Smith's. Then he goes on to say, "Mr. Bealy Smith." Now was that all that was laid to his charge?—No.

28,116. What else?—He stated he was in the house of the "Golden Lion" ten minutes or a quarter of an hour or more; he saw a great number of men there, and spoke to several of them. When he was asked the name of the person he saw or spoke to, he stated he did not know either of them, and never gave the name of one person he saw or spoke to there. He also stated that he did not go to the house of the "Golden Lion," I believe, with the other men in the tally, as I believe, but that he joined them in Barclay Street, at the bottom of John Street.

28,117. The story in regard to the number of persons is this: "I do not remember the names; it was very hot, from what I can recollect, and there were a great number of people about, as there would be on an election morning." How are you to assign perjury upon that?—All I know is that which I stated before, and I suppose you had it before you, that when Mr. Powell came to comment on that man's evidence, the Chairman of the Committee said, "You can pass that over, we take no notice of that man's evidence," evidently conveying the idea———

28,118. Did he say, "Pass it over"?—"Pass it

Mr. J. W. Sully.

23 Sept. 1869.

over," or "We will not trouble you to comment upon that." You will find something to that effect; and he did not.

28,119. (Mr. Price.) We do not have the counsel's speeches reported, so we cannot tell that?—There were a number of persons in the committee-room who heard it.

28,120. (Mr. Anstey.) There may be many reasons why it was passed over; one because it was unimportant or irrelevant, but another, that it was not believed.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Or not admissible, perhaps.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps, on reflection, they found that they had omitted it erroneously?—It was apparent, from the manner he answered the question. The committee had to interpose several times.

28,121. Did the chairman, Mr. Baxter, say anything of that kind?—He did not say why; oh dear no. I do not recollect that.

28,122. I think you told us last time that you were of opinion that perjury and bribery were offences; it was a crime to commit them?—I am.

28,123. It is of more consequence to show us that this was not a solitary case, and that you had acted in your congregation in terrorem upon other persons besides this one who happened to be a supporter of your opponent, and had been giving evidence in favor of your opponent and against you. Can you show that?—No. All I can say is, that we were not at all influenced as to the man's vote, and if we had another instance he would have been dealt with in the same way.

28,124. Have not you numberless instances which had taken place since you have been connected with that church?—No; I never knew of a similar instance.

28,125. Not of bribery and perjury?—No.

28,126. Do you mean to say that you had never heard there had been any case of bribery, any provable case of bribery, in any member of your congregation, in the enjoyment of what you call the ordinances; a member of the church as distinct from the congregation?—Certainly not.

28,127. That you swear?—That I swear most solemnly.

28,118. Take the case of that other riot in which you appear to have been engaged. Was there nothing there which would have moved a member of the congregation to visit the part described to have been taken with the same penalty?—I do not know that there was one who was guilty. I was not a member at that time.

28,130. And you say that deliberately, with a knowledge of all the names?

(Mr. Price.) There are not 200 pure people in the borough; that is the universal opinion on your side and on the other side.

(Mr. Anstey.) You say deliberately that your knowledge was that this one offence consisted, in whatever way you may have presented it, in his giving his evidence against you, and, on the whole, as it appears to me, not untruthfully?—Not in giving his evidence against me.

28,131. Against your party?—But his giving his evidence falsely.

28,132. (Mr. Price.) You prejudged him; he had never been indicted and tried?—That was the conviction of the pastor.

28,133. (Mr. Anstey.) And it proved entirely erroneous; yet you do not retract the charge?—I do most readily retract it, and I have a memorandum here.

28,134. But you still say he was guilty of false swearing?—Will you look at my memorandum?

28,135. I will do nothing of the sort.

28,136. (Mr. Price.) What was it that you believe that the man did commit perjury in?—I stated last time that the man went to the "Golden Lion." It was proved that he went there, and he stated that he did not go there. I was in error there.

28,137. Is that the only perjury he was supposed to have committed?—No.

28,138. What was the other?—The fact of the man's first stating that his son was with him, and afterwards retracting that, and saying it was the son of Bealy Smith; the fact of his being there a quarter of an hour, seeing men and speaking to them, and going with them from the "Golden Lion," and stating that he did not remember or did not know one of them, or could not give the name of one.

28,139. That may be?—That was in the morning, and it was not believed.

28,140. Who did not believe it?—I did not; the committee did not believe it.

28,141. Are you to constitute yourself the judge of whether a man has spoken the truth or not, when there have been no judicial proceedings?—Oh dear no! I do not mean it; but you ask me the question, and I give you my answer. The committee did not believe it.

28,142. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you carried down from London to Bridgwater your impressions of the fact you have just stated, and did you communicate those impressions to the pastor, Mr. McMichael?—No. The pastor was the late Mr. Perkins. No, it was quite otherwise. I did not return from London for several days, and when I arrived home the matter was notorious about the town how falsely this man had sworn. Several persons came to me, also my brother deacon, Mr. Whitby, to know whether we were not going to take action upon it, not to allow that man to remain longer as a member of the church.

28,143. (Mr. Price.) Did you call him up, and hear him?—Yes; we met at Mr. Perkins' house, and, as I said before, I had the copy of the evidence read to him, and he contradicted it, and said he gave no such evidence, and the committee were so perfectly satisfied with his evidence that they did not ask him a question.

28,144. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard the Rev. pastor, who nominally took the leading part on the occasion of putting him out of the church, complain afterwards that you had compelled him to take that course?—Certainly not; he never could have said it; he was too truthful a man.

28,145. Was Coles before that time respected and beloved in the church of which you and he were members?—Well, I really cannot say; I never knew much of the man.

28,146. You, yourself, said just now you were not a member of that church at the time of the riot in 1832. Were you then a member of another communion or church meeting in Zion Chapel?—Yes.

28,147. Were you expelled from that communion?—Certainly not.

28,148. Did you leave it of your own accord?—Of my own accord, many years after, when I joined the other.

28,149. What communion?—The Baptist; I left it of my own accord when I joined the Baptists.

28,150. What communion was that at Zion Chapel?—Congregational; Independent.

28,151. Had your leaving anything to do with your conduct at the riot?—Certainly not.

28,152. Or any other election?—I became convinced of the truth of baptism, and therefore I left them to join the Baptists.

28,153. After you joined the Baptist denomination, had you a sharp discussion with the Rev. Mr. Macmichael, the then pastor of the chapel which you attended?—There was a difference.

28,154. Do you remember the question at issue between you and him was whether your statement was true, and his telling you that he would not believe you on your oath?—There was some statement of that kind made by him.

28,155. What had that statement reference to? Had it reference to Coles's case?—Oh dear no. Coles's affair had not happened then, I think.

28,156. At the farewell sermon which he, as pastor, preached on leaving his pulpit, did he inform the congregation that you and the other deacons had deprived him of his rule?—No.

28,157. You never heard that?—I heard the sermon, but I never heard that he ever said it.

28,158. Now, in reference to that same riot, it is in evidence before us that it was a very serious riot, brickbats were thrown about, that a respectable gentleman of the town, a literary gentleman, a person who did honour to Bridgwater, let his opinions be what they may, was very dangerously struck over the eyes with a bludgeon, that he fell, and for some days was in a critical state; that one of your own party was indignant at their having struck down a man, and committed this cowardly assault; will you still adhere to that statement that it was only a lark, that there was no riot, and that no riot to your belief took place?—I do not think I said in my former evidence that it was only a lark. I said with reference to the riot it was a farce. I still believe there was no riot.

28,159. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say it was a farce when the mayor thought it necessary to read the Riot Act?—As stated to me, what took place——

28,160. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you were there?—I was not there.

28,161. Not at the house?—No.

28,162. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you saw the people in the house smoking their pipes in the kitchen?—Nothing of the kind.

28,163. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us about sending for your sou'-wester?—Yes; if you will read my evidence, I understand the disturbance took place at Mr. Bowen's about 10 o'clock.

28,164. When were you there?—Between 12 and 1.

28,165. There was a row going on then when you were there?—No; we were not at Mr. Bowen's at all in Friern Street.

28,166. (Mr. Price.) Where was your disguise pulled off your face?—Just opposite the Congregational Chapel.

28,167. (Mr. Anstey.) How far from Mr. Bowen's?—There is the street, and then you go into the gateway.

28,168. Still it would be a few yards?—A considerable distance.

28.169. (Mr. Price.) Close by the place leading up to it?—Yes; it was opposite.

28,170. (Mr. Anstey.) You told us that the person who took off your hat was so struck that he said to you, "Captain Sully, I thought you were a respectable man," and you said, "So I am"?—Not the person who did that. Mr. Watson took off my sou'-wester. It was Mr. Ruscombe Poole, the father of Mr. Gabriel Poole, who said that.

28,171. And you went there on one of your party saying, "Mr. Bowen's house is on fire"?—No; I was with two other men.

28,172. You told me he said so, and I asked you at once, "Were those words words of signal"?—If you will refer to my evidence you will find it was not one of my party.

28,173. I asked you, and you said, "the other two"?—The men I was with were two Liberals, out for the night.

28,174. When you stated you heard the man call out, "By God, Bowen's house is on fire," showing pretty well what he expected to be the case, I asked you whether that man was one of your party, a Liberal, and your answer was, "Yes, and so were the other two." And then I asked you, naturally, "were those words a signal"? And you said, "I was not in the secret, or not aware that was the case."—I think you will find that a mistake; if you refer to the notes of evidence you will find this to be the case. I said, "While near the bridge with Headford and "Manning, who were out with me for the night, it "was after 12 o'clock, we were standing by the corner "of the bridge when a man passed on in an excited "manner, and said, 'By God, Bowen's house is on fire,' and I immediately said, 'Well, if it is the greatest enemy I had I would go and help to put it out,'" and we went there. It has been proved in evidence."

28,175. (Mr. Price.) It has been proved in evidence that the men who were the leaders of it were men disguised as yourself. You disguise yourself, and I should have thought that a good Christian would have gone unmistakeably as Captain Sully, that all the world could see?—So he did. At that time seamen, captains of vessels, more frequently wore their sou'-westers than now.

28,176. You went to get it; you were in another dress at the time, and if you had been a good Samaritan going to put out a neighbour's fire you would have gone as Captain Sully, hoping that your influence would put it down; but you went to your cabin, and put on these garments, so as not to be known, and you would not have been known if your hat had not been pulled off?—I beg your pardon. The front brim of my sou'-wester is no broader than an ordinary hat, but I had not the flaps down, as I stated.

28,177. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had flaps to it?—I had flaps to it, but they were inside.

28,178. ((Mr. Anstey.) Did the justices hear the explanation which you have now been giving?—No; there was no evidence given for my defence.

28,172. Did the justices who committed the case for trial here in Bridgwater hear your explanation of the case?—I am glad you ask me that question.

28,180. Did you tell the justices?—My mouth was closed.

28,181. Did you give the explanation which you give to-day?—They would not hear me.

28,182. Did you give the explanation?—I commenced doing so, but they stopped me. I was about also to cross-examine Thomas Watson before the magistrates, and they would not allow me.

28,183. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you tried at Wells or at Taunton?—At Wells.

28,184. Had you witnesses to call, if, in the discretion of your counsel, they thought fit to call them?—I had ten witnesses there.

28,185. Who was your counsel?—Mr. Serjeant Kinglake. He was not serjeant then.

28,186. And he, in his discretion, thought it best not to call them?—I was going to observe, that there was no need of it, if you will allow me to say it. The witnesses for the prosecution, each one, swore that they saw me between 12 and 1 o'clock in the morning in Fryern Street, that they had not seen me on Mr. Bowen's premises before the riot, at the time of the riot, or after the riot, upon the counsel for the defence cross-examining them.

28,187. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you the newspaper account of the trial?—No, unfortunately, I have not. I have searched but cannot find one.

28,188. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it reported in the newspapers that your name had so appeared?—Yes.

28,189. Was the "Alfred" one of those papers, for I have searched through the Alfred, and can find nothing?—I should think it was not to be found there.

28,190. Why not?—Because that was the Conservative side, and anything favourable they would hardly publish.

28,191. But they have published everything favourable to almost all the accused?—If you will kindly allow me to say, with reference to that trial, I knew before the jury retired from the box that I was acquitted.

28,192. No doubt you knew it the night before; very likely you slept in the same room with one of them?—Hardly, after the evidence I gave the last time on my solemn oath; hardly, I think.

28,193. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not know, possibly, that, unless you had tampered with them?—You have not heard me out.

28,194. (Mr. Price.) You told us that you knew nothing?—Allow me to finish my sentence. I said, "I knew I was aquitted before the jury left the jury box, and for this reason, the chairman, in charging the jury, and recapitulating the evidence against the individuals, called their attention to the fact that, among the accused, or among the defendants, there were men who had not been there at the time of the riot, had not seen the riot, and therefore, of course, would return a verdict immediately."

28,195. You swear that?—On my oath. I remember I am on my oath.

28,196. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I will read in extenso a report of what the chairman is said to have said in summing up to the jury. I read that not only to one of the opposite party, who was present merely as one of the audience, but to one of your fellow-accused, Mr. Carter Reeves, and asked him, "Is that what the chairman said"? To which he said "Yes." Now, it is there stated that the only two persons as to whom the Right Hon. Henry Hobhouse thought the jury might be inclined to make some distinction on account of youth, or other circumstances, were the two Vearnecombes, but added, "that will be for you, gentlemen, to say." And the only other distinction that he took between one class of prisoner and the other was, that at the end when he said, "You will remember, gentlemen, as to 20 of the 37 there can be no doubt at all; they have not called any evidence." Now, do you still persist in stating that the chairman on that occasion said, "that a great number were proved to be not there at all"?—Certainly; most decidedly.

28,197. Did you see the chairman throw himself back and express astonishment as name after name of the acquitted was read over?—He was surprised, because I expected John Cooze and the others who got into the house would be punished, as deservedly they ought to have been.

28,198. You were out on bail?—I was out on bail.

28,199. Some were in prison?—I do not know.

28,200. Where you present the night before as one of those in any room where the jury were drinking?—No.

28,201. Did you the next night after the verdict meet them?—No; I got my witnesses together, and went home as soon as I could.

28,202. You challenged the accuracy of my statement of what you swore on a former occasion. It devolves on me to point out that the inaccuracy lies with you, and not with me. You were asked by the Chief Commissioner about your disguise, and so on, and then you go on to state this: "I met with Man-
" ning and Captain Headford, and told them what I
" had heard, and resolved that we would not go near
" Mr. Bowen's house, because we thought it was a joke,
" with the view of throwing our men off their guard,
" therefore we would watch in other parts of the town."
You see this was before twelve?—No; after 12.

28,203. You say you heard of the riot, as we call it, and as it certainly was, before you went up there?—Oh yes.

28,204. Then you went about watching in other parts of the town?—Yes, sure.

28,205. And I suppose one part, where you yourself were watching, was the part you have spoken of close to the Congregational Chapel?—No; we went up there in consequence of the report of the house on fire.

28,206. "Therefore, we would watch in other " parts of the town. We did so, and at 12 o'clock,—I " think it was past 12,—and we were in the 'Castle
" Inn' at the corner of the bridge, a man passed on,
" and said, with an oath, to Headford, 'By God,
" Headford, Bowen's house is on fire.' Well, I said,
" if it is the greatest enemy I have I will go and help
" to put it out, and though we have not been up, let
" us go and see." Here, I see, the shorthand writer erroneously attributes the next question to the Chief Commissioner, but I put it, "Was that man one of your party?" And your answer was, "Yes, both of them"?—Just so.

28,207. Then I went on to say, "Was that a signal?" And you answer by asking a question, "What?" And I ask again, "Those words, 'By God, Headford, Mr. Bowen's house is on fire'?" And you answer is, "I believed it was a truthful statement on the part of the man, and that induced me to go up there"?—I abide by that.

28,208. Then I have correctly stated the effect to you?—Quite, and the two persons I refer to there of our party were Manning and Headford.

28,209. How could that be? You said, a man passed, and said the house was on fire; and I asked, "Was that man one of your party?"—Then I mistook the question.

28,210. (Mr. Anstey.) You might just as well have thought it was Mr. Gladstone, whose name has been taken so much in vain by you and others.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Am I to understand you to say now that you were not present at all at the riots, for which you were all indicted?—Certainly not.

28,211. Then how long after the riot, for which you were all indicted, were you on the scene of action at all?—Rather over two hours, I should think.

28,212. (Mr. Price.) What were the mob doing when you got there?—They were doing nothing. There were there constables and other men; the row was over when we got there.

28,213. Then why did they take off your sou'-wester, and say, "I thought you were a respectable man"?—I cannot answer. We were going on, and we never stopped.

28,214. How is it that the leaders of the party wore sou'-westers, and you happened at that unlucky moment to put on the same dress?—Which I sent for in the morning, intending to be out at night, and which I always wore at night.

28,215. (Mr. Coleridge.) In the morning?—In the morning.

28,216. I understood you sent for it afterwards?—No; I had it home.

28,217. (Mr. Price.) But you had been out up to 12 o'clock without your sou'-wester?—No; I put it on at seven o'clock.

28,218. Had you it on when Manning and Headford were there?—Yes; when I joined Headford and Manning it was about seven in the evening. I wore it for the night, and I had witnesses at Wells to prove that they had seen me frequently to wear it, both on board and on shore.

28,219. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you witnesses to prove that you were not at the scene of the riot?—I had witnesses, those two and another; but those two were with me from between seven and eight in the evening until six the next morning.

28,220. (Mr. Anstey.) And they were prepared to swear, were they, that there was no riot, only an amusement or practical joke, at which you were not present?

(Mr. Price.) The question was put to you, "You
" are quite sure you were not present. First of all,
" were you any participant in that riot?—There was no
" riot. In that amusement, or whatever you like to " call it." Then I say, "Practical joke?—I was not " present. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present?—No.
" Do you mean to say you have not been reported in the " town to have been?—Very likely." Now, let me draw your attention to what you say here, and I will ask any man who hears this whether he could draw any other conclusion than that you prepared your sou'-wester to go up to Mr. Bowen's. "It was a very " common thing on the night preceding the election for
" men to remain up all night, and walk about the town,
" and some of them disguised. At that time I went to " sea. I was spending the evening with the late Mr.
" Helyar in Eastover, and about nine o'clock a message
" was sent to me that the Tories where bribing at
" Mr. Bowen's. I resolved then to sit up for the night,
" and I sent for one of my men and requested him to
" go aboard and bring my sea clothes." You afterwards hear that there is a row at Mr. Bowen's, and the men were there in sea clothes; and I ask whether any man would come to any other conclusion than that you prepared yourself?—I am thankful, Sir, to say that you are in error.

28,221. There is your evidence?—I heard of the riot about ten.

28,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you hear of the bribery? Was it nine in the morning or in the evening?—Early in the evening; nine in the evening.

28,223. Then it was not until after that that you sent for your sea clothes?—That is a mistake; my clothes were sent for in the morning, and were at my house.

28,224. (Mr. Price.) Now listen. "I then about "nine o'clock heard that the Tories were bribing "at Mr. Bowen's. I resolved then to sit up for the "night, and I sent one of my men and requested "him to go aboard and bring my sea clothes."

(Mr. Coleridge.) Now you say you sent in the morning for them.

(Mr. Price.) And the men at the riot were in sou'-westers and pea jackets, and the moment you hear of the row you go like a good Samaritan to put it out?—No; I did not go for more than two hours after that, and then I went, and there was evidence given before the trial—it was circulated generally throughout the town—many witnesses gave evidence to the same effect, that that report was circulated that the house was on fire.

28,225. (Mr. Anstey.) Since you were examined here we have heard about the bribing the jury. Did you subscribe any money, either during the trial or after the trial, or give any one anything whatever, for the purpose of corrupting the jury, or recouping those who had corrupted them?—Such a thing never entered my thoughts.

28,226. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did the defence cost you altogether?—I paid Mr. Benjamin Lovibond 10*l.*, which he supposed to be my share towards the legal expenses.

28,227. What was the whole expense of the defence?—The expense of my witnesses cost me about 6*l.* or 7*l.*

28,228. (Mr. Anstey.) How much more did you pay after that?—Nothing more.

28,229. Not to Mr. Lovibond?—Nor to anyone else, sir.

28,230. (Mr. Coleridge.) There were 37 persons; all paid the same?—No; some were in a humble position.

28,231. What did the whole cost of that defence come to?—I never heard. There was a question asked one of the witnesses as to my position at that time. I should be pleased to tell you. At that time I held a quarter of a little trading vessel, I was master of a quarter of another vessel, and had an interest in a couple of houses, together with my furniture. I was possessed of about 500*l.* or 600*l.* at that time.

28,232. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear of any person in the borough of more property than yourself contributing towards expenses either at the trial or the acquittal?—I did not.

28,233. You did not hear that as much as 400*l.* or 500*l.* were given to buy the jury?—Well, I heard some report of the sort, and told you the other day. I heard all sorts of reports, but never believed it.

28,234. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were there any Bridgwater men on the jury?—No; they were yeomen; and they were very particular in selecting the jury.

28,235. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say, having been so deeply interested in this matter, you were not perfectly aware,—I am not asking about all kinds of rumours, but were you not perfectly aware,—that the jury had been got at?—Certainly not. I was surprised that the jury should have returned such a verdict as to those men proved to be in the house.

28,236. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any doubt that they were corrupted?—I had not any idea at all. I cannot say. How should I?

28,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the trial at Taunton for the conspiracy?—It was before.

28,238. Were they acquitted?—They were acquitted. There was the late Mr. Spiller, Mr. Jessy, Mr. Hodge, and I think Mr. Bussell, the man you had before you.

28,239. (Mr. Price.) You called it a practical joke, or rather adopted and said it was not a riot. Do you mean to say now, considering that Mr. Bowen was nearly beaten to death, that you call that amusement or practical joke?—Certainly not; it was a most abominable attack.

28,240. You told us the other day, before we heard the history of the transaction, that it was a practical joke, that he had been at a randying meeting, and it was a sort of thing that might happen at any election, one of those hustlings, and that was the impression you left on my mind. Now we find that the man was nearly beaten to death?—I kept back nothing. I did not know until I heard the evidence of Mr. Poole.

28,241. You had no business to keep back anything?—I did not. I considered it a gross assault, and the man ought to be punished who did it.

28,242. (Mr. Anstey.) But you saw Mr. Bowen in that dreadful state for days afterwards?—Certainly not. I never saw him afterwards until at Wells giving his evidence.

28,243. Now do not confound two things. I am not talking of Wells; but almost immediately after this base and cowardly attempt to murder him that it appears to have been you saw him before the justices who committed the case for trial?—No.

28,244. But he was examined before them?—Very likely. I was not here. My vessel was loading a general cargo, and had to go away two days after this happened, and I took the precaution, having been summoned, to go to the late John Hoare, the harbour master, and tell him that inasmuch as my vessel had a valuable cargo in it, and I had to deliver it, I could not by possibility attend this summons before the magistrates, and I asked him, as a favor, kindly to attend the court, and explain the fact to them, and state to them that on my return I should be happy to appear before them.

28,245. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would be obliged to; it was not a matter of happiness?—He did so; and they issued immediately the warrant for my apprehension.

28,246. (Mr. Anstey.) In other words, you took on yourself to disobey a summons, and they, as they were bound to, issued a warrant?—I thought they would hardly examine the whole of the witnesses before I returned. I was only a few days away; not a week.

28,247. Were you apprehended?—I was bailed.

28,248. Were you apprehended under that warrant, and brought before the justices?—No; I will tell you. I came up in the vessel on Saturday afternoon. My late brother heard that I was going up, and went and saw the mayor at the time, and he said, "Let your "brother remain out; the constables shall not put him "in prison until Monday, on the faith of your promise "that he shall appear," and the constables did not give me the warrant until I was here on the Monday morning.

28,249. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Mr. Bowen in court?—No; it was in the grand jury room.

28,250. Did you in the grand jury room or in the petty jury room see Mr. Bowen?—He was not there.

28,251. Did you see him on your return that day?—No.

28,252. You swear that, do you?—I do.

28,253. And you had not heard the man had nearly lost the sight of his eye?—Not until I heard the evidence of Mr. Poole.

28,254. (Mr. Price.) Was not that evidence given at the trial?—I heard there was fighting.

28,255. Was not that evidence given at the trial?—I heard that he was assaulted, but not that he was struck in the eye.

28,256. (Mr. Anstey.) I read it myself not two days ago?—I do not rember it.

28,257. Do you mean to say 37 years ago you never heard of the blow across his eye, until Mr. Poole stated it the other day?—I heard he was struck.

28,258. But about the eye?—No; I do not remember that.

28,259. (Mr. Price.) Let me read this question and answer of yours, and then I will ask you whether you think it an ingenuous answer. Remember we were in the dark to a great extent about this riot and the part you took in it; therefore you had us entirely at your mercy. "Do you mean to say that on that night "during the row the person who came to you did "not immediately come to you and take off some-"thing which you had on your face or body which "covered you or disguised you, and so revealed your "identity to all the people around." I paused there. We now know that you had a sou'-wester and pea jacket on?—Yes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,260. And we now know that the man who came up took your sou'-wester off, revealed you, proclaimed your identity, and said, "I thought you were a respectable man," and this is your answer, "I was not secreted, therefore I know nothing of it." Is that an ingenuous answer?—No; I said I was not disguised.

28,261. I have it here. "I knew nothing of it." You knew nothing of the man coming up and taking your hat off?—No.

28,262. Let me read the question. "Do you mean "to say that day or that night during the row, the "person who came to you did not immediately come "to you, and take off something which you had on "your face or body which covered you or disguised "you, and so revealed your identity to all the people "around." I suppose the sou'-wester was on your head, and that is the way you answer, "I know nothing of it"?—I know nothing of the riot; of the fact that the man took my hat off.

28,263. "'Disguised,' I said.—"Nor disguised."—Then tell us what happened. You go on to tell us, and never mentioned one word about this man coming up, and saying, 'Captain Sully, I thought you were a respectable man'"?—Have not I said that Mr. Watson took my sou'-wester off.

28,264. (Mr. Anstey.) No, not until afterwards, and under a degree of pressing?—My dear sir, I have no need of pressing.

28,265. Which a deacon of a chapel ought not to require?—I had nothing to conceal, and did not intend to. There was no reason to conceal anything.

28,266. I see I was right, that you did call it a lark. Here are your own words. You said just now that you did not, in answering the Chief Commissioner; but Mr. Coleridge interposed a question to explain, and got the name of the doctor, and you say, "Oh, Doctor Toogood," and he said, "Well, he said, 'Mr. Sully, I am going home with you,' and as we went home,"—This was after 12 o'clock?—Yes, sure.

28,267. "I heard from him what had taken place "during the evening at this place. There was no "riot there, and not a pane of glass was broken; but "it seems that while some low fellows were randying "at some low public houses, Mr. Bowen being absent, "presiding at a meeting, they thought they would "have a lark, and get into his house, and sit down in "the kitchen, and some smoked a pipe there; but "there was no riot that I could hear of. At all "events, I was among 36 others," which made it necessary for me to say, "You do not mean to say "that was with Mr. Bowen's consent. Certainly not; "they took advantage of Mr. Bowen's absence. "Therefore, the men must have forced their way. "Certainly, no doubt." You see that is near the end of your examination, and you did not say a word about Mr. Watson and Mr. Ruscombe Poole, until, I said a few minutes, but I believe it was half an hour afterwards, when you most reluctantly allowed us to extort it from you, having previously told us that you knew nothing about it?—I am sorry you should have such an impression. I did not intend to. All I can say is, that I gave my evidence at a time I was suffering great pain. I ought not to have been here. I came earlier than I otherwise should, lest you should be subjected to any inconvenience, but I had no idea more than now of concealing anything.

28,268. You do not call it a lark now?—Certainly not; I cannot after the evidence which has been given.

28,269. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the object of ever saying it was a lark I cannot see. 37 years ago, if you had said it was a regular riot, and you were young, one could understand it?—I had no recollection of the nature of it.

28,270. (Mr. Anstey.) You admit that Mr. Toogood, the old doctor, told you it would be an act of kindness to take you home?—No; I agreed to take him home, which I did.

28,271. Then I do not know whether the mistake is with you or with the shorthand writer. "Well," Mr. Toogood said to me, "Well, Mr. Sully, what do you do there? It would be an act of kindness to take you home?"—No, I said, "I will go home with you, and I will take you home."

28,272. My impression agrees with what is here?—Then if I stated that, it is another proof of the state I was in when I gave my evidence.

28,273. Because Mr. Coleridge says, "Was that the old doctor?—Old Dr. Toogood." And then you give the conversation. "'Well,' he said, 'Mr. Sully, I am going home with you,'" et cetera, which I said just now. Did he say it would be an act of kindness?—No.

28,274. You see what position you put yourself in by this mode of paltering with the truth. Now about the man, James Luckes, did you tell Bussell to telegraph to him to Cardiff, the man who had a vote for the first time the last election?—I had no recollection of it. Bussell came to me about elections, when I have been home, to inquire of me where our vessels were, to send to the men, and he may possibly have done so on this occasion. I do not remember.

28,275. Do you remember your telling him that James Luckes and Meaker were both at Cardiff?—No; I did not know this man Luckes, and I did not know he had a vote, therefore I could not have told him that, it is not possible.

28,276. Did you tell James Luckes to look after Meaker?—No.

28,277. Did you send a telegram in these words, "Mind Meaker"?—No, certainly not, because I did not know the man.

28,278. Then Bussell says he did not know which way the men were going to vote, except that they were in your employ, and that you being a Liberal these men would probably vote for the Liberal candidate; is that so?—I do not at all know; all I know is that I did not interfere with the men.

28,279. Did you give Bussell general instructions to get up all persons in your employment?—No.

28,280. All captains?—No; he asked me where they were.

28,281. (Mr. Price.) Why did you say Luckes was at Cardiff?—I did not; I did not know the man.

28,282. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you contradict him?—There must be a mistake. I do not think Bussell would tell an untruth knowingly, but I never knew the man until I saw him in the box.

28,283. Can you explain to me this fact, for it is a fact, that James Luckes, being at Cardiff, and not here, never having voted before, and thereby furnished any evidence of what his politics were, was telegraphed to by Mr. Bussell, not only to himself, but to bring another captain in your employment, that is, to "Mind Meaker." Can you explain that in any way?—Not at all; I do not know what Bussell's movements were.

28,284. The point I draw your attention to is this, you say you did not canvass?—No.

28,285. Bussell says he did not?—I canvassed down Eastover, but not my men.

28,286. Did you canvass Luckes?—No, I did not know the man; I canvassed generally.

28,287. You say you did not canvass these two men. Bussell says that he did not canvass these two men, or at least not James Luckes. You say you gave Bussell no instructions to telegraph to either. Bussell says he did telegraph to one, and told him to mind the other. Being asked what means he had of knowing that James Luckes was on the other side, his answer is only that they were in Mr. Wood Sully's employment. Being asked then, "Do all Mr. Wood Sully's men vote as he votes?" He said on that nearly all were Liberals, but a few were not. Then I asked him, "How did you know that James Luckes was not one of the Conservatives instead of being one of the Liberals; and then his answer is, "You had better ask Mr. Wood Sully; he can explain that." How can you explain it?—Certainly not, because I did not know the man.

28,288. Have you the smallest doubt that there is not a single man in your employment who dares to vote contrary to your wishes?—Certainly.

28,289. (Mr. Price.) Have you one?—I do not know; I do not know how the men voted.

28,290. Did you never mention Luckes name to Bussell?—Certainly not. I could not have done so, because I did not know the man.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

23 Sept. 1869

H. C. Bussell recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

28,291. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what I understood you to say about this?—I think I will refresh Mr. Sully's memory, perhaps, and perhaps he will recollect it. The fact is there was a good deal of excitement at the time, and he might have forgotten it. I met Mr. Sully on the morning of the nomination, and Mr. Sully says there was one of his captains over at Cardiff, which was Luckes. I suggested to Mr. Sully they should telegraph themselves, and Mr. Sully said his son could do it, only he was home, and we had better not lose any time, I had better do it, and then Mr. Sully said to me, "Telegraph over to Luckes." You might recollect that circumstance now.

Mr. James Wood Sully recalled.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

(The witness.) Yes; that is Captain Luckes; not the Luckes of the "Carry Winch." I thought you were referring to the man on the "Carry Winch."

28,292. (Mr. Anstey.) I asked you James Luckes over and over again?—I beg your pardon; that is a mistake.

28,293. No one can doubt that your answers are perfectly false?—I regret you should think so.

28,294. (Mr. Price.) It was said over and over again one of your captains at Cardiff?—I regret that you should put such a construction.

H. C. Bussell recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

(The witness.) I should like to finish. As far as Meaker is concerned, Mr. Sully never said a word to me, but with regard to all his people you will find on the list there is a certain number of his people voted Conservative.

Mr. J. W. Sully recalled.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

28,295. (Mr. Price.) Then it does turn out; I put it so distinctly that a child might have understood it; I said, "Now let there be no mistake about, did you mention the name of Luckes in any way whatever to Bussell?" And you said, "Certainly not"; and the only Luckes who had been spoken of was one of your captains. How could anybody believe you could be under any misapprehension as to identity?—I had no recollection of it, and can hardly call it to mind now, though I do not at all doubt Bussell's word.

28,296. Why say, "Certainly not," to carry conviction to our mind that the whole thing is perfectly impossible? "Certainly not," you said, in a most deliberate tone. Why not say, "I cannot remember"?—Because my mind was reverting to the man Luckes, the mate of the "Carry Winch."

28,297. (Mr. Anstey.) You could not have thought anything of the sort?—Very good.

28,298. You knew well James Luckes had been examined here since your last examination, and that Bussell had been examined with reference to his evidence?—I have two Luckes in my employ, but I do not know which is James Luckes, or which vessel he is in.

28,299. You know that two persons were examined on this very point since your examination on this question about Meaker?—Well, I do not remember reading it.

28,300. Had you any conversation with Bussell about it?—No.

28,301. Have not you seen it in the papers?—It has been read to me, but I do not recollect it.

28,302. It is a most important point, and very strange, that in a question whether or not your house or yourself exercised what to me is a worse form of corrupt practice than bribery, that is undue influence over men who live by their daily bread, that you should have thought the point was so unimportant that you could afford to forget it.

(Mr. Price.) We had it in evidence beyond all question that the employers' influence here is of such a kind, or their supposed influence, that it interferes practically with the independent exercise of the franchise, and I have not the slightest doubt in my mind, as was said by Mr. Trevor yesterday, if the tables could be turned, and all the employers were to become Tories, it would be as much Tory as it is now Liberal.

(Mr. Anstey.) And he went further, and said, that though he was opposed to the ballot himself, if they had it here now, most of the great Liberal houses, yourself amongst others, would vote Conservative?—I can only repeat what I said before, that I never influenced men in my life.

28,303. (Mr. Price.) Coles is going to be called. I do not know whether you will care to hear what his evidence is?—Yes; but allow me to refer to his statement in reference to Mr. Justice Byles' remarks upon his evidence at the trial at Taunton. I should say that no witness for the defence was called; had they done so his evidence and the other witnesses for the prosecution's evidence would have been contradicted on very material points.

28,304. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are aware that counsel in their discretion did their best?—Sir John Coleridge, now the Solicitor General, argued that, and his lordship thought it was a privilege, and he depended on it, therefore he did not call any witnesses.

28,305. (Mr. Anstey.) How could that be Serjeant Coleridge?—He was Queen's counsel, and counsel for the defence.

28,306. You mean the trial at Taunton?—The trial at Taunton.

28,307. (Mr. Price.) You mean in the matter of Coles?—Yes; we are referring to Coles and the judge ruled otherwise, and the jury had only the evidence for the prosecution to guide them.

28,308. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose Sir John Kars-lake was for the plaintiffs?—I forget who was for the prosecution.

28,309. (Mr. Price.) We can understand that perfectly well, and no doubt the present Solicitor General exercised a very wise discretion in not calling witnesses?—May I refer one moment to the evidence of Mr. Salmon in connection with the man Luckes, whom I was referring to just now.

28,310. Which?—Luckes, the mate in the "Carey Winch."

28,311. William Luckes?—I forget. I see Luckes is in court. He was asked, "Do you recollect who "were the magistrates on the bench when the second "summons was tried, and the captain was fined?" I said before I never saw so strong a muster of Tory magistrates as on that occasion. He stated to you that there was Mr. Ritson, Conservative, the Mayor, Liberal, Mr. Hammill, and Mr. Axford, and himself, and then it was stated by one of the gentlemen of the court, two Liberals and three Conservatives, and he said, "Yes."

28,312. (Mr. Anstey.) You are mistaken altogether. He said these gentlemen you named, including, I suppose, your relation the mayor, were present on the bench when the first summons came on. I recollect afterwards I had forgotten to ask him, and so had my brother Commissioners, whether the same justices were on the bench the following Monday when the second penalty came on. What he said was with regard to the first occasion?—I am glad I stated it, because it gives an opportunity of being corrected; but I was at Sydney when the first trial took place, but I was at home on the second, and I believe it will be found, in addition to those names, Mr. Joseph Richard was present.

28,313. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you live here or at Sydney?—I am a good deal at Sydney. The details of business here I am not aware of, but I am acquainted with the larger business at Sydney. For many years I have left it here to my cashier and clerk Bounceall, and the last two years to my third son, and therefore I only know the names of some of my captains.

28,314. (Mr. Price.) You see you are the most unfortunate man who ever got into a witness box, because you leave such an impression on the minds of those who hear what you say that it afterwards has to be removed with great trouble. I understood you to say: when Luckes was brought up there was such a muster of Conservative magistrates as was never seen, but it turns out what you meant to say was, that when Luckes was first brought up there was no muster, no whip of the Conservative magistrates at all, there were three to two; but on another occasion, some days afterwards, when the question of the penalties was taken up, there was a large muster?—I could not have intended to say that, because, as I have said before, and as I have stated in evidence, I was at Sydney.

28,315. Then you should not have left us under that impression. We were inquiring about the first accusation; that was the material one?—I regret I should have given my evidence in the state of health I was in, and if I did that was another reason.

(Mr. Price.) It requires some excuse, and we are willing to accept that.

28,316. (Mr. Anstey.) I will give you another opportunity of correcting another inaccuracy which appears in your evidence to-day. You volunteered information which we did not want you to give us, calling attention to what took place that the defendants or prisoners at Taunton in the riot were acquitted?—The conspirators.

28,317. Yes?—Yes, sure.

28,318. That is literally true, but as it implies an inaccuracy which others will probably be deceived by, I will ask you, do you mean to say they were acquitted of the riot?—The riot was not tried; it was the conspiracy; they were tried afterwards at Wells.

28,319. Therefore, nobody was acquitted by a jury of the county of the riot at the Taunton assizes?—Oh dear no; it was not tried.

28,320. And you were probably present at the trial?—Yes.

21,321. You probably heard Mr. Serjeant Coleridge, afterwards one of the judges of Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, who defended the alleged conspirators on that occasion, tell the court and the jury both, for it went to the jury after all, that the evidence in his opinion, if true, made out the riot and assault, but was insufficient to make out the conspiracy?—Very probably he did say so.

21,322. And that the judge put it so to the jury, and told them they were not to consider whether a riot or assault had been committed, or no, but whether there had been a conspiracy to commit a riot, and whether the prisoners at the bar were guilty of that conspiracy?—That was the only thing tried at Taunton; it was before the trial at Wells.

(Mr. Price.) Now you may stand down, and we will hear Mr. Coles.

ROBERT COLES sworn.

R. Coles.

28,323. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A sawyer.

28,324. Who do you work for?—Mr. James Harwood.

28,325. Were you a voter at the last election?—I was.

28,326. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

28,327. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

28,328. Or any promise?—Never a promise.

28,329. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or any expenses whatever?—No expenses.

28,330. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the election of Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866?—The election before? Yes, I did.

28,331. How did you vote then?—For Patton.

28,332. Did you get anything then?—Yes, I did.

28,333. How much?—10*l.*

28,334. Who from?—Frederick Jarman.

28,335. Did you vote at the other election of Mr. Patton, the other in the earlier part of the same year?—I did.

28,336. You voted for Patton then?—I did.

28,337. Did you get anything?—Yes.

28,338. What?—10*l.*

28,339. Who from?—From a hand. I did not see the owner of the hand.

28,340. At the "Bull and Butcher"?—No.

28,341. Where?—At the "Golden Lion."

28,342. Did you vote at the election of 1865?—Is that Westropp's election?

28,343. Yes?—I did.

28,344. How did you vote then?—For Mr. Westropp.

28,345. How much did you get?—10*l.*

28,346. From whom?—I do not know the party I had it from.

28,347. A stranger to you?—Yes, a stranger to me.

28,348. Do you mean quite a stranger to you?—I saw his back. I did not see his face.

28,349. Where did you get it?—At the "Golden Lion."

28,350. You only saw his back?—I only saw his back.

28,351. Was it in a room, or how?—In a room.

28,352. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he a tall or a short man?—He was a tall man. He was looking out of the window, with the blind down.

28,353. (Mr. Price.) Tell us how you saw his back?—As if this was the window (describing), he was looking at the window, and I walked out behind him, and I believe he said, "The name."

28,354. Your name ?—I believe he said "name," or something, and I said, "Coles." He put his hand behind, there was a table opposite, and put down two pieces of paper.

28,355. He was looking out the window all the time ?—Looking out the window. I did not see his face at all.

28,356. (Mr. Anstey.) Could you recognise his face ?—I did not.

28,357. (Mr. Price.) Was his head out of the window ?—No ; it was very gloomy ; the blind was down.

28,358. Was his face hidden ?—I did not see it. I did not stop for a moment. He put this down on the table, and I took it off the table ; he put his hand back. I did not see his face.

28,359. Did you go to London on the petition ?—I did.

28,360. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you take any money from the other side at that election ?—No.

28,361. Was any offered you ?—Before the election I was offered if I would vote that side they would get me some.

28,362. How much was offered you ?—I was to name what I wanted, and they would get it for me.

28,363. Who ?—Chapman Bussell.

28,364. Was that after Mr. Westropp had got your promise to vote for him ?—It was after Mr. Westropp called at my house.

28,365. Did Bussell know you had promised Mr. Westropp ?—He did, because I told him so.

28,366. I may as well ask you at either of the subsequent elections,—you have described the two elections of 1866, and the last election,—did the Liberals offer you any money ?—Since Westropp's election ?

28,367. Since the election of 1865 ; there have been three ?—No ; never been near me to ask me to vote for them.

28,368. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many elections were you paid by both sides ?—I was never paid on the Liberal side in my life.

28,369. You never got any money from the Liberals at all ?—Never in my life. I was never tampered with, but that once, when Bussell tampered with me after he saw me talking to Mr. Westropp.

28,370. (Mr. Price.) Did you go to London on the petition in 1866 ?—I did.

28,371. And you were examined there ?—I was.

28,372. And was what you stated there as to your own movements at the "Golden Lion" true ?—It was, as far as lay in my power to answer them.

28,373. What was the mistake you made ?—Well, as regards the names that were there, I could not give an answer then, and if I had been asked a day or two after the time I might, but after so many months I could not distinctly, if I had I would have sworn false.

28,374. With the exception of the names of the persons, is there anything else you swore false in ?—Not to my knowledge.

28,375. (Mr. Coleridge.) What names did you mention ?—My son's name.

28,376. (Mr. Price.) You did not give any names. I see it was your son ?—If the counsel in cross-examining me had given me time I should have explained respecting my younger son, who was a lad at Backwell's, but before there was time to explain it he said, "Was that the son with you at the 'Golden "Lion ?'" I said it was not. Then again he said, "What son was it ?" And I said, "The one at "Smith's."

28,377. Now tell us what took place ; you were at that time a member of the Baptist Church ?—I was.

28,378. Not merely one of the congregation, but a member ?—I was a member.

28,379. How soon after the petition were you called up and examined about this matter by the pastor and deacons of your church ?—I believe a week after I came home from London. I went to church the following Sunday, and the Wednesday after Mr. James Sully came where I was at work, and I considered then he came, instead of coming as a Christian as he ought, more like a snake in the grass, I should say, because he came, and called me from my work to the other part of the establishment, and said "Mr. Coles, "I want to speak to you," and I went out, and spoke to him. He said, "Would you be kind enough to meet "a few of us at Mr. Perkins',"—he was the minister,— "to night ; we are to have a meeting ?" I said, "I "will be there." It was to be a private meeting.

28,380. (Mr. Coleridge.) A sort of social meeting, or a trial ?—He never said what it was for.

28,381. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he name about you ?—No, never a breath ; he never named it.

28,382. (Mr. Price.) Who is Mr. Perkins ?—The minister.

28,383. You were to meet at Mr. Perkins' ?—At Mr. Perkins' house.

28,384. (Mr. Coleridge.) What denomination was his ?—The Baptists. I agreed to go, and we appointed the time at half past six o'clock.

28,385. (Mr. Price.) Are you in the habit in the church of having prayer meetings, or anything of that kind ?—At the chapel.

28,386. Not at the minister's house ?—Not at the minister's house.

28,387. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear that your conduct was in question ?—Not in the least ; not a breath of it.

28,388. (Mr. Price.) Did you ask why this hospitality was to be shown to you by the pastor ; why you were invited to be present at this species of tea party ?—I did not. I promised to meet him at half past six o'clock. I found I could not go at that time ; and I sent a boy to Mr. Whitby's, to say I could not be there at the time. I managed to be up there about seven, and I saw Mr. Whitby. He said, "You are "too late ; Mr. Sully has made an appointment, and "if you will fix the time I will write him a note, "and tell him what time you will meet at Mr. Perkins' "house." I said, "I am at liberty now ; I can go at "any time." "Very well," he says ; "say nine "o'clock." "Very well," I says, "at nine o'clock I "will be there." I went away. I suppose he wrote the note to Mr. Sully, but when I went out in the street I saw the woman who looked after the chapel. Her name was Press. I said, "What meeting is this "that is going to take place at the minister's house this "night ?" She says, "Nothing that I am aware of." That was the woman that looked after the cleaning of the chapel. She said, "Nothing that I am aware of." I says, "Mr. Sully has sent down to me to say there "is to be a meeting at the minister's house, but I do "not know anything about it." "Well," she says, "I know nothing of it." I went up to the meeting at nine o'clock, and as I got up to the door, Mr. Whitby and Mr. Sully came up, and they waited till I came up Fryern Place, and they said, "Mr. Coles "is coming." I remember they said that, and we got up to the door, and we went into the house together. Mrs. Perkins came to the door, and we were asked to go into the drawing doom. Mr. Perkins was there, and he had been very ill, and Mrs. Perkins left the room, and Mr. Perkins, I believe, said, "How are you," and shook hands.

28,389. Did he ask you to sit down ?—He did. He said, "I believe you have never been in my house "before." I think those were the words he used. I says, "No, I have not ;" and he says, "I hope this will "not be the last time, but it is a painful circumstance "which you have come here upon now." Well, it startled me ; and I says, "What is the matter ?" "Just sit down," says Mr. Perkins. I sat down, and Mr. Sully began to blare out to me sharp enough. He said, "You have been to London, have not you ?" I says, "I have ;" and he says, "You have been up "there and committed perjury." I says, "Not that I am aware of." "Yes, you have," he says, "I can give you an instance of it." I says, "I have not." Then he began to tell me, "You have been up there, and "swore that the son that was at Mr. Backwell's was "the one who was with you at the 'Golden Lion,' "and you repeated it again and again." He said,

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

R. Coles.

23 Sept. 1869.

" that that was the sin. I said, "It is no such thing." And he says, " You can see it in the papers ; " and there was a gentleman who had a conversation " with us to-day, that heard another gentleman say, " that he had been in company with another gentle- " man that was in the court, that he could see by the " colour of your face that you were swearing " false."

28,390. Let us hear that again. Let us have Mr. Sully's idea of the law of evidence ?—Mr. Sully said, there had been a gentleman who had had a conversation with them that day, who said that he had been informed by a gentleman that another gentleman was in the court in London who could see by the colour of my face that I was swearing false.

28,391. That is proof positive, no doubt ?—I said, " I very often have got a red face."

(Mr. Anstey.) You were accused upon the evidence of an expert, supported by three-fold hearsay.

28,392. (Mr. Coleridge.) At that time you were a Baptist ?—I was.

28,393. What are you now ?—I am a Wesleyan now.

28,394. (Mr. Price.) It would be very difficult for you to contradict that ?—Well, I did.

28,395. I do not see how you could ?—I said, " I hope you will not be too harsh." I said, " Wait ; " the blue book will be up ; do not listen to what one " will say, and what another will say, there are so " many lying reports about, without waiting till the " blue books come up. I said that, because these lying " newspapers you cannot place any dependence on, " but wait till you see the books."

28,396. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you seen the blue book ?—Yes.

28,397. You had seen it ?—Yes, I have seen it. I have seen one at home.

28,398. But before that ?—No. I was told the shorthand writer's notes of everything that was said would be published.

28,399. (Mr. Price.) What was said to your appeal to justice ?—Then Mr. Sully went on to say, that it had been continually remarked about the town. I said, "I have not heard a breath of it about the " town ; nobody has named that any such thing was " the matter." He says, " Oh yes it has. It has been " proved in the House of Commons that you have " sworn false." I said, " They did not say anything to " me when I was there, and I expect if I had sworn " false that I should have been put in prison." He said, " When the chairman summed up the evidence, he said 'Throw that evidence out ; it is all false.'"

28,400. Did the chairman say that ?—Not a word.

28,401. Did he say it in your presence ?—He did not say it in my presence.

28,403. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was no summing-up ?—Every person was turned out when there was a summing-up. I will tell you what the chairman said after I had given my evidence respecting Bussell. He said, " The evidence is quite sufficient ; and now you have got to prove agency." That is what he said to the counsel.

28,403. (Mr. Price.) He said, when you had given your evidence, that it was quite sufficient for that purpose, " and now you have to prove agency " ?—Yes, that it was quite sufficient, " and now you have to prove agency."

28,404. Did you tell Mr. Sully that ?—I told him so.

28,405. What did he say ?—I said, " You talk about " my character having been flying about the town. " I have as good a character as you have or ever had, " and I never had a stain on it in my life, and now " you want to stain it for me," just like that ; and I said, " It would be better that neither of us mixed up " in electioneering affairs as we do, because," I said, " you are accounted as being one of the biggest bullies " on the hustings." I told Mr. Sully so to his face. I said, " You will go up from the prayer meeting, and " go to an electioneering party as much as any person." Then after that they told me that I was not to attend on the Sunday. There was a communion in the afternoon. It was a Sacrament Sunday. I consented. I abstained from going there the Sunday, because I was too polluted, I suppose, to mix up with them, as they were so very pure. I said I would stop away.

28,406. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you a wife and children ?—I have.

28,407. Have they turned them out ? I suppose they did not turn them out ?—How do you think ?

28,408. I want to know how far they went ?—No. I have a wife and son who used to attend with me.

28,409. And they both left ?—They both left, and they have not been in the chapel since. Well, I begged them to let it stop over, and they said they would. After that, when I left, I left with the impression that it was going to remain, that nothing was going to be done until the blue book was out, and I wished them " Good night." Well, there was to be a church meeting the Thursday night, which is always a monthly meeting before the ordinance, where they carry on business. My son was going to that church meeting, but I never named it to my son that I had been up before the minister and the deacons.

28,410. Before this star-chamber ?—I did not like to upset his mind about it. Well, he went to the church meeting, and while at the church meeting, the first thing that was brought up, I believe, was respecting me.

28,411. In your absence ?—In my absence. I was not there. Mr. Sully was there, and said, " I am sorry " to see Coles's son here ; I would much rather not " have seen his son here." But what did the Judge say at Taunton ? Why, he said, " If Mr. Coles's son " was there, and be slandered him, what would he " have done if Mr. Coles's son had not been there."

28,412. Quite right. What was done after that ?—Then my son gave his evidence. I cannot say any further than that. I saw Mr. Sully in the market-place the Saturday night after that ; that was before the Sunday, and I begged and entreated—no, I beg your pardon, it was the next morning after the church meeting,—it was decided in the night I was not to be turned out, because one of the members came to my house, and told my missus, " Mr. Coles is not turned " out of the chapel," but the next morning a letter was sent to me.

28,413. Let us look at it ?—If you like to see it, I will hand it to you (a copy of the letter was handed to the Chief Commissioner). The letter was sent to me the very next morning after the church meeting, and I have heard Mr. Sully, when I was here present, stating a falsehood. He said he had a copy of the shorthand writer's notes.

28,414. I will just read this letter, so that it may get upon the notes. This is a letter, dated " Bridgwater, 3rd May 1866." Signed, " Joseph Perkins, Pastor. J. W. Sully, and John Whitby, Deacons." This is a copy ?—Yes.

28,415. Did you make it from the original, or who made it ?—It was copied in Mr. Boyle's office, but Mr. Bealy Smith had the original, I believe, or Mr. Veysey had got the original.

28,416. (Mr. Price.) Have you the original, Mr. Veysey ?

(Mr. Veysey.) I have.

(Mr. Price.) Then give it me.

[The original letter was then handed to the Chief Commissioner.]

" Dear sir,—Since our interview with you last night, when you denied the charges brought against you, we have obtained a certified copy of the evidence given by you, taken down by the shorthand writer employed. We grieve to find that the case, as stated to you, is most fully confirmed. The deacons have likewise had an interview with the gentleman who was present during the whole time of your examination. He also confirms the report of the shorthand writer, and also states his own feeling, that your evidence was of the worst description. It was to him. A gentleman standing near him said, he could see from your manner that you were stating what you knew to be untrue. Under these painful circumstances, we felt that we could do no other than bring the matter before the church, who have, this evening, passed a resolution for your expulsion. As we reminded you last night, this step taken by them has nothing to do with your voting one way or the other. It is solely taken on the ground of the character of the evidence given by you before the Committee, which is already the topic of general remark in this town, to the injury of the cause of Christ with which you and we are connected. We most earnestly assure you, that we have taken this step in no spirit of unkindness, but solely as a duty we owe to Christ; and our earnest prayer is, and will be, that God will give you repentance to life eternal, and that you may find peace and pardon again through the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin."

That is signed by "Joseph Perkins, Pastor, J. W. Sully, and John Whitby, Deacons."

(The witness.)—Now it has occurred to my mind, that at that meeting, when I was at the minister's house, I told Mr. Sully, "If I had gone up to London "on your side, and swore white was black, you would "have been the very man who would have said, 'Well "done, Coles, I believe you have done right.'"

28,416*a*. What did he say to that?—He says, "You must not think that, because we have nothing to do with electioneering in this;" but I proved that it had been so.

28,417. (Mr. Anstey.) I see that they state in that letter, first, that you swore falsely; that you have disposed of. Then the other statement is, that you gave bad evidence?

(Mr. Price.) "Of the worst description?"

(Mr. Anstey.) "Of the worst description." The evidence you appear to have given, which they so characterised, was evidence that went to convict Bussell, and through Bussell, the Liberals, of having offered you a bribe. Did they say anything to you the night that you were with them, or the next day, about that part of your evidence?—No; they never said anything at all about Bussell.

28,418. Or about your having said that Bussell had offered you a bribe?—No, nothing at all. It was all about my son.

28,419. Then they all confined their remarks to that part of your evidence, where you said that you had several sons, that one went to the grocer's, and the one who went to the "Golden Lion" was in the lawyer's office?—That is the charge against me.

(Mr. Price.) That is the most immaterial charge that can possibly be conceived.

28,420. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you heard the passage I read from your evidence to-day to Mr. Sully, and there was nothing that you said before the Committee, more or less, than what I read to Mr. Sully to-day, was there?—Nothing more. I did not know that I was going.

28,421. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there any appeal from such a judgment as that which was passed upon you by this precious conclave?—At Taunton?

28,422. (Mr. Price.) No. Is there any appeal to any higher body?

(Mr. Coleridge.) You were dismissed from the religion to which you belonged?—I was.

28,423. As far as I understand it, you were dismissed from the community?—I was.

28,424. Is there no appeal to any other tribunal than the Mr. Sullys, and those who sat in judgment upon you?—No.

28,425. Is there no appeal to the deacons?—No.

28,426. Is there no appeal to the general congregation of the church?—There is, to all the members of the church. If a person should do a thing that is wrong, the rule of our church was, to call a special church meeting, and then, all the members are directed to attend at that church meeting, and not for any other member of any other church to be there.

28,427. That is only a local meeting?—Yes.

28,428. Is there nothing in the sense of a metropolitan meeting to review that decision?—No.

28,429. (Mr. Anstey.) If there were, you would be Presbyterians, and not Congregationalists. The peculiarity of your religion is, that each congregation is independent of the other?—Yes,

28,430. If there was an appeal to any higher body, you would be Presbyterians, and you would cease to be independent?—There is no other body.

28,431. Is it not that which distinguishes you from the Presbyterian body, that the Presbyterians have an appeal from the local body to a higher body, and you have none?—No. There is no appeal except to the members.

28,432. The Presbyterians have an appeal to a higher body, and you have not?—No, we have not.

28,433. But that is the only point of difference between you and them?—We have no appeal.

28,434. I am talking of the difference between the two bodies, the Congregationalists and the Presbyterians?—The Congregationalists have nothing to do with the Baptists.

28,435. The Baptists are Congregationalists?—They do not call the Baptists Congregationalists.

28,436. They do, I think?—They do not here.

21,437. (Mr. Price.) You are now a Wesleyan?—I am. I have not joined them. I go there. I attend.

28,438. If you joined a Wesleyan body, and you did anything for which you were reprimanded by the local body in the town here, you would have a power of appeal to the conference, would not you?—I do not understand anything about that. I have not joined them. I do not know how that is.

28,439. (Mr. Coleridge.) What I want to know is this. When you were dismissed from the congregation to which you belonged, being of the Baptist denomination, did you consider that final, or was there any superior tribunal to which you might have appealed as against Mr. Sully and his lot?—No, I could not by the Baptist law.

28,440. By the Baptist law, it is local?—Yes.

28,441. The local rules govern the church?—That is all.

28,442. (Mr. Price.) Do we understand you to say this, that according to the rules of the society, before you were expelled, you ought to have been heard before the whole meeting of the church?—Before the whole church.

28,443. (Mr. Anstey.) And witnesses called?—And witnesses called.

28,444. (Mr. Price.) And the thing inquired into properly?—Yes.

28,445. You also told us, as I understand, that you were not expelled at the church meeting held before the communion; is that so?—It was one of the members came to my house, and my son did the same, and said I was not expelled that night, because there was one poor old woman who was hard of hearing, who held up her hand against me; and she was asked afterwards what she held up her hand for, and she did not know.

28,446. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were there any deacons present?—There were the two deacons and the minister.

28,447. And one female?—There were eight or nine females there. If the whole church had been there there would be 50 or 60 there.

28,448. (Mr. Price.) If they had been summoned in the ordinary way, and the case inquired into, there would have been a large party there?—Yes; the room would have been nearly full. I have seen it so before now.

28,449. Instead of that, this was merely the ordinary church meeting before the communion?—Just so.

28,450. At which you discussed business?—At which we discussed business.

28,451. And at this meeting before the communion, without any notice being given that there was any special business to be transacted, your expulsion was moved?—Yes.

28,452. And seconded and carried?—Yes.

28,453. (Mr. Coleridge.) And your son was there accidentally, or else you would not have known anything about it?—Yes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

R. Coles.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,454. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said about bribery at this meeting over-night?—Over-night?

28,455. When you went to the house of Mr. Perkins, did they charge you with being a corrupt person?—I believe almost the first words Mr. Sully said to me were, "You have been to London with dirty hands, as to bribery and perjury."

28,456. Was the accusation made against you specifically?—That was all he said about it.

28,457. Because I find nobody asked you a question in London; of course not in your examination-in-chief; but nobody asked you a question in the cross-examination, as to whether you had been bribed on behalf of Mr. Westropp?—They did not. I was never asked the question.

28,458. Therefore, it is clear that the evidence you gave in London did not refer to your bribery?—Mr. Sully accused me of bribery.

28,459. Did Mr. Sully tell you, or say anything to you, or did anybody there say anything to you, in what way or with respect to what you had gone to London with "dirty hands;" did he, or anybody else, say what he meant by it?—Mr. Sully said so,

28,460. Did he explain to you what he meant by it?—Not till afterwards. He said, "You have been "to London with dirty hands, with bribery and per-"jury."

28,461. Did he tell you what he had been to London about, with "dirty hands"?—No, he did not.

28,462. Was that ever discussed at all?—No, he did not.

28,463. Now listen to me. At the time they made this accusation against you, of having gone to London with "dirty hands," was Henry Chapman Bussell a member of the same congregation with you?—No. I never saw him in the chapel in my life.

28,464. Of what chapel is he a member?—I believe he goes to this new chapel, the congregational; I believe he does. I never saw him.

28,465. Did he then?—I never saw him go.

28,466. In 1865 and 1866, was he then a member of any congregation?—I do not know. I never saw him in a church or chapel in my life; not that I am aware of.

28,467. Do you know of any person who was then a member of your congregation, who was guilty of taking bribes, or giving bribes?—Not that I am aware of. I never heard of one, because that was the first time I was ever mixed up with it.

28,468. Can you tell me the name of any person who was guilty of giving or taking bribes, who was a member of your congregation at that time?—No, I cannot.

28,469. Can you tell me whether any proceedings were ever taken, to your knowledge, against any member either of that congregation or of any other congregation of the same kind in Bridgwater, for the expulsion from church membership of any person guilty or supposed to be guilty of bribery, that is, of giving or taking bribes?—No, I cannot.

28,470. Can you tell me, under those circumstances, therefore, whether or not the charge of bribery against you, and of going to London with "dirty hands," on which you were excluded without trial, was then, in your belief, a trick and a pretext to cover an act of violence and injustice against you, for no better reason than that you had voted for the opposite party, and had given evidence on oath in London against their party?—It rested on my mind that that was the cause of it.

28,471. (Mr. Price.) You were going to tell us, when you produced that letter, that Mr. Sully had stated something which was not correct?—When he stood here just now, if I did not mistake, he said, that when I met him at the house, that they had a copy of the shorthand writer's notes present, but I believe in that letter he said they got it after they had had the interview wtth me.

28,472. I want to know how they could have got a copy of the shorthand note in a few hours. What time at the meeting did they have you up?—At 9 o'clock, and I was there till nearly 11.

28,473. What time was the church meeting held?—About 9 o'clock in the night.

28,474. (Mr. Price.) Then they had a copy of the shorthand note the next day?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Are there any records kept of these proceedings amongst the Baptists? Would what has occurred to you be written down in any book, and kept?—There is a book which the deacons send to the pastor.

28,475. Do you know, or have you heard, of any proceedings that were taken against Mr. Sully at the time that the riot took place?—No; I was not in the town.

28,476. (Mr. Price.) He was a member of a more lenient body in those days?

(Mr. Anstey.) With reference to the remark which Mr. Sully says the chairman of the committee made, I have been going through the case against Mr. Kinglake, in support of which you gave evidence, and I find that Mr. Kinglake was declared a sitting member, it having been sworn positively, both by Mr. Kinglake himself and Henry Lovibond, that Henry Chapman Bussell, who offered you the bribe, was not his agent. It broke down, therefore, on the case of agency, and on Mr. Kinglake's oath. I also find, that in your evidence of Bussell's being an agent, was that of an attorney called Veysey, and that the other witness who was called to prove agency, Temblett, brother-in-law of Bussell, failed to do so, saying that he had only seen him once with the sitting members in Chilton Street. Do you recollect whether or not that was so, that the chairman thought that the agency of Bussell had not been made out?—I never heard that; but after I finished my evidence, I believe the chairman said, "The evidence is sufficient;" and he said to the counsel, "Now you have got to prove agency;" and upon that I left the Court.

28,477. (Mr. Price.) And Mr. Lovibond, upon that, comes and deposes that he was no agent?—I asked Mr. Sully again and again who it was that injured my character. I saw him in the market-house, and I said, "Mr. Sully, will you be candid, and tell me who was the gentleman who tried to scandalize my character?" And he said, "I shall have nothing more to do with it, I shall do no more in it," and he went on, and treated me like a dog, and he would not bring up the names of those who scandalized my character. If you have not seen the remarks of the judge at Taunton, I should like you to do so.

28,478. We know what they were. You have got a verdict?—Mr. Coleridge, their own counsel down at Taunton, said, when he was addressing the judge, "We did think it so of Mr. Coles at first that he had committed perjury, but we do not think so now." That is the very thing he said to him in their presence; he had no grounds to work upon.

28,479. Did you ever apply to go back to the communion?—I have never applied to go back since. Mr. Perkins, the minister, came to our house just before the trial, and he asked my missus why we did not come back again, and she asked him how he could think we could go back again until my character was cleared up; and she begged him to get some of the members to come and ask him to make it up, for it was not her wish for me to go to law with them; and he said he wished we would come back, because, he said, he would not have had it happen for a thousand pounds if he could have helped it. Those are the very words he used. But he seemed to say in my house it was not in his hands, it was in the deacons' hands. That is what she told me.

28,480. The charge of perjury they made against you was simply with respect to your mistake as to which of your sons it was that went with you to the "Golden Lion"?—Yes. It was on that simple statement which they said I swore falsely about, and which I should have explained if I had been allowed to do so.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

R. Coles.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,481. (Mr. Anstey.) And you say you made no mistake about that?—I did not. I should have explained it if I had been allowed. One of my sons was in the band at the time playing the kettle drum, and I should have explained that; and before I had time to explain that the counsel said, "Was that the son who was in the 'Golden Lion'?" and I said "he was not."

28,482. (Mr. Price.) That will do, Mr. Coles. I think myself that you a very ill used man.

(Mr. Anstey.) The passage is this, and I do not see how they could found a charge of perjury against you even on that:—"There were a good many of the "foundry people at the 'Golden Lion,' but whether "they were electors or non-electors I could not say. "I cannot recollect the names of any of the persons "except my son. My son went with me. What is "your son? Well, he is at the grocery now. What "grocery? Mr. Backwell's; one of my sons—— "Which is the son that went to the 'Golden Lion' "with you? Not that son. Which is the son that "you took into the 'Golden Lion'? The one at "Mr. Smith's. What Smith's? Mr. Smith, the "lawyer's. I was out for a walk, and I met him. "Mr. Bealy Smith? Yes. How long has your son "been at Mr. Bealy Smith's? He has been with "him three or four years. What is his age? Nearly "20." In point of fact the counsel cut you up short by putting a question to you before you had answered his first question?—Yes.

28,483. And then you told him it was not that son?—It was not that son, as quick as I could.

28,483. And your answer that you had a son in the grocery was in answer to the question "What is your son?" Then the counsel asked you, "Which is the "son that went to the 'Golden Lion' with you?" and you said "Not that son."—I did.

28,485. And what you said was perfectly true?—It was.

28,486. (Mr. Price.) As there is a species of spiritual terrorism which has been brought to bear upon you, I want to know whether, in addition to the spiritual privileges of which you have been deprived by being excluded from such a community as this to which you have belonged, any temporal loss or disgrace has been entailed upon you?—I often hear of it now.

28,487. In your way of business? I do not know what you are. Do the members of the congregation to which you formerly belonged decline to deal with you, and purchase at your shop, and so forth, and turn their backs upon you in the world?—I do not keep any shop, but I am not treated as I was before, and my children have got it thrown out to them very often.

28,488. And it has thrown indignity upon you, and humiliation upon your family in the town?—It has.

(Mr. Price.) It is a most atrocious proceeding, that is all I can say.

28,489. (Mr. Anstey.) Did it create great terror at the time amongst the rest of your communion?—It did; and they have not said anything at all to me since.

28,490 (Mr. Anstey.) Well, I must say that I have but one opinion about it, and I formed it in the first instance, and that is, that a more atrocious case I have never heard of.

(The witness.) I hope you will be kind enough to give me some protection, because since last Wednesday, when I was up here, and Mr. Sully said I was the cause of hurrying on the death of the minister, there was a gentleman who came in on passing by while I was at work, and he said, "I am sorry to hear that you "have been the cause of hurrying on the death of the "minister." It was a most improper thing for Mr. Sully to say that.

28,491. (Mr. Price.) Did he say that?—Yes, he did; it is a scandalous thing to say.

28,492. (Mr. Coleridge.) In that case you can bring an action at law. We cannot help you?—I will bring an action.

28,493. (Mr. Price.) We cannot help you about that; you will have our certificate as a witness, and I may say that I thoroughly believe your story?—He said I hurried on the minister's death. It was proved before he came here that he was almost dead, and I stood up and opposed his coming here. His labours were almost done. He could hardly stand, and he used to take a great deal of cod-liver oil.

(Mr. Price.) I hope what has passed in this court will do you good. It will show that those who have come here to discuss this matter with unbiassed minds think that you have been very illused indeed.

Mr. Gabriel Stone Poole recalled.

Mr G. S. Poole.

28,494. (Mr. Price.) With reference to this petition which Mr. Bate handed in, will you just look at it, and give us the history of it (the petition of 1852 was handed to the witness)?—Well, I have not a very strong recollection of what took place, but the date of this petition, I believe, is ——.

28,495. There is no date?—It was after, I believe; the election when Mr. Kinglake and Lord Henley stood.

28,496. That would be 1852?—1852, I believe.

28,497. (Mr. Anstey.) Just to identify it. That was the petition which was shown or read to Mr. Trevor in his evidence yesterday, as to which he said, he thought it was got up by some friends of Mr. Kinglake, you being a friend of Mr. Kinglake, and a connection, I think he said, of Mr. Kinglake?—I am no connection of Mr. Kinglake's; there is no relationship between his family and ours.

28,498. A friend?—Oh yes, they have been friends of ours. That is my handwriting. I signed the petition, and I was desirous at the time of getting an inquiry instituted, the very inquiry which is now going on. The reason why this petition was not gone on with was, because we understood that the House of Commons would not entertain the petition for the inquiry into corrupt practices unless there was a petition against the sitting members. I do not know whether I am right upon that.

28,499. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is a provision in the Act to that effect?—That is the reason why that petition was abandoned. We wanted to have just such an inquiry instituted in the town as the present, in order that the place might be disfranchised, or something might be done to put a stop to the prevalence of these corrupt practices.

28,500. (Mr. Anstey.) That is your signature to it?—That is my signature.

28,501. Do you know those other signatures to it?—Yes. Carey Bailey Mogg, Henry Lovibond, John Lovell Sealy, James De la Hook. I do not know Mr. Sewell's well. I believe they are all the signatures of the persons they purport to be the signatures of.

28,502. (Mr. Price.) Of course you were not prepared to go to the expense of the petition?—Oh dear no; besides, it was a petition praying for an inquiry into the existence of corrupt practices in the borough. It was not a petition against the actual return of the members at that time. It begins in this way, "It is "notorious that bribery and corrupt practices have "been much resorted to in every election of members "to serve in Parliament for this borough, within the "memory of the oldest inhabitant."

28,503. The prayer is for a commission of enquiry?—The prayer is, "That your petitioners are prepared "to prove the above allegations, therefore they pray "that your honourable House will be pleased to cause "an inquiry to be made into the existence of corrupt "practices in the election of members to serve in "Parliament for the said borough of Bridgwater; "and to pray Her Majesty to cause an inquiry to be "made under the powers of the Act passed in the

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. G. S. Poole.

23 Sept. 1869.

"16th year of Her said Majesty's reign, intituled 'An "'Act to provide for more effectual inquiry into the "'existence of corrupt practices at elections of mem-"'bers to serve in Parliament, by appointing com-"'missioners for the purpose of making such in-"'quiry.'"

28,504. The first paragraph in that petition which you have just read, about the "oldest inhabitant," is nothing more than what you have stated already. There is also a paragraph about the election of 1847, the facts of which you have stated already?—There is one passage in that I should like to call attention to, relating to the compact that was entered into. This is the paragraph: "That at the general election of 1847 "the leading men of both parties in the borough "entered into a coalition, to effect the return of a "member of each political party, for the avowed pur-"pose of preventing such corrupt practices; but a "third candidate having arrived in the borough on "the morning of the election, it was then found, that, "in spite of this coalition, the election could not be "carried without again resorting to bribery." I have always heard that was the fact.

28,505. It is the last passage I refer you to. Did that mean that Mr Serjent Goselee, the third candidate, had recourse to it, or that Colonel Tynte had recourse to it?—It meant that Colonel Tynte had recourse to it. It was endeavoured to carry out the coalition that was agreed upon, between, I believe, Mr. Bowen and Mr. Lovibond, but although the coalition was agreed upon, it could not be carried out when a third candidate came into the borough to resort to bribery.

23,506. Was it bribery on the Conservative side?—I believe not.

28,507. How was that?—Because it was the Liberal party who were bringing the third man in.

28,508. (Mr. Anstey.) By-the-by, there was only one Conservative?—There was only one Conservative; it was the Liberal party who were bringing the third man.

28,509. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you can tell us?—I want to say a few words. I do not think the reports are exactly correct. It appears in one of the reports I read, that I stated that at one time I was the professional agent for the borough, and ceased to act at some time or other. I say I never acted as professional agent for the candidates in the borough, and I gave as a reason that I never had done so, that at the very first election I was at, before I was of age, and when I was a clerk in my father's office, there occured that scene which I described, when Sir John Shelley was a candidate, when 33 men came up and perjured themselves, by taking the bribery oath, when it was notorious that they had been bought; and it was after that that I said I would not have anything to do with the conduct of an election in Bridgwater, either directly or indirectly, to bring about such a result as that.

23,510. There was one question which was put to you, and which I should like to have your answer to; no doubt you have considered the point. Has it struck you that there has not been, during the period of these corrupt practices, which appears to be a long period, anything like a public opinion sufficiently weighty among the respectable and enlightened inhabitants within the borough to keep down these practices, without the necessity of having recourse to penalties to punish them?—The public opinion of the leading gentlemen on both sides in this borough, has always been against such practices; but so long as the feeling in the House of Commons is what it is the public opinion in the borough will never be above that. The general feeling in the borough is that the House of Commons is not in earnest; that it is idle their taking two or three small boroughs, and making an example of them, in order, by degrading them, to sacrifice to public opinion, when there are cases of large boroughs where corruption extensively prevails. Take the case at Bristol, for instance; in Sir Morton Peto's balance sheet 15,000*l.* is put down as the cost of his election for that borough. Will the House of Commons dare to probe into that? Again, there is a feeling in the borough, that, while this thing is being probed to the very bottom, we ought to have it probed upwards also.

28,511. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you mean "probed upwards?"—You have it in evidence, that when the gentlemen on the Liberal side went in search of a candidate to contest this borough in the old way, with corrupt practices, they went to a gentleman in London, who was known as the whipper-in of the Liberal party, and he recommended them to Mr. Brogden, perfectly well knowing what Mr. Brogden's antecedents were.

28,512. (Mr. Price.) Not the whipper-in. The legal agent, Sir something Drake?—I believe it is that gentleman, who, it is said, has received the honour of knighthood for his services to the Liberal party; now we think that gentleman ought to be examined.

(Mr. Price.) Undoubtedly he will be called.

(The witness.) What I meant is, that it shows that the Liberal party in the House of Commons do look upon this offence of bribery as a thing to be connived at; and until there is a different feeling in the House of Commons, it is quite in vain to hope for a difference in the public opinion in the boroughs.

28,513. (Mr. Anstey.) Let us hope, now that the House of Commons have a very tangible case with regard to Mr. Brogden, that they will deal with it sharply and severely?—It is all very well to deal with two or three little boroughs. Why do not they deal with a case like that of Bristol? Why is Bridgwater selected?

H. Osborne.

HENRY OSBORNE sworn.

28,514. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A whipthong maker.

28,515. For whom do you work?—For myself.

28,516. Are you a voter?—Yes.

28,517a. There is no imputation against you, as we understand. In what election was it that Mr. Veysey came to you?—In 1865, on the 9th day of July, Sunday evening, he came to my house with my two daughters. My daughter Emma came to me, and said, "Father, Mr. Veysey wants to speak to you." I says, "What for?" She says, "He wants to see you about your vote; he is going to offer you 20*l.* for your vote." I said, "I shall not see him." She said, "It is very unkind "of you not to see him. Do speak to him, even if you "do not take his money." I said, "Very well; take him into the parlour, and get a light." She got a light, or one of them did, and when she had got a light, and shown him into the parlour, she comes, and says, "Mr. Veysey is in the parlour." I says, "Very well, I will go and see him." When I went into the parlour, I said, "Well, Mr. Veysey, what is your pleasure?" He says, "Mr. Osborne, I am come to ask if you are not going to vote for Mr. Westropp," and I candidly told him, "No;" and I thought that was a decided answer. He said, "Will you take 5*l.*?" "No," I said. "Will you take 10*l.*?" "No," I said. "Will you take 15*l.*?" "No," I said again. He was sitting down with one leg across the other, and he clapped his hand upon his knee, "I will tell you what I will do; I will give you four smackers, 20*l.*" I said, "I will not take the money." He said, "You are a very foolish man for not taking it." I said, "I will not take the money." He said 20*l.* would be very useful in a family. "Yes," I said, "I know the value of 20*l.* as much as any man, but I will not take the money."

28,518. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you say anything about 2,000*l.*?—Yes. I will tell you about that. In the midst of my conversation with him, my daughter Anne came into the room. I was sitting in the room, and she came, and sat at the side of me, and he turned his face to her, and said, "I have almost succeeded," or something to that effect. She said, "Father, don't take the money." I said, "I shall have nothing to do with the money." She left the room directly, and Mr. Veysey then said, "Now, Mr. Osborne, why is it you are such a strong Liberal?" I said, "I tell you what, I have promised my vote, and I am not going from my word." He said, "There are a great many on your "side who have done that, but who will not vote on "your side." "That is for them; that has nothing to do with me." He said, "You are a very foolish man." I may say, I had nothing to do then. I said, "Offer me 2,000*l.* and I will not take it." "He said, I should be afraid to offer you 2,000*l.*, because I should fear you would take it." I said, "If I had 1,000*l.* I would wager that one that I would not take the two." I began to get rather tired of it. Then he began to talk about religion. He said his religion was church rates religion. We followed on in a little conversation like that until I got tired of it, and I wanted to get him out of the room, and I picked up the candle to go out of the room, and he followed, and my two daughters were in the paasage. I then bade Mr. Veysey "Good night." From the first to the last, he pressed me to take money for my vote; and he said at the very last, when he got to the door, "Mr. Osborne, you are a very foolish man not to take 20*l.*; it is very useful in a family;" and my daughter Anne said, "20*l.* What is 20*l.* I could spend that upon a dress;" and that concluded the conversation.

28,519. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any business bring him to your house that night to talk about?—No, nothing at all.

28,520. Was he an intimate friend of your family?—Not at all. I never saw the man to speak to before.

28,521. That was the sole business on which he came?—It was the sole business.

28,522. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had he been courting your daughters?—Courting them! No.

28,523. That is the excuse he made of having gone to you?—No. He kept outside of my house, so far as that was concerned. He did not come within my reach to court my daughters.

28,524. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that, to use his own expression before the House of Commons, he was a "gallant" man, and courted your daughters, and was in the habit of escorting them home?—I knew nothing in the world about it. He never did so; not to my knowledge. And you may remember, when I was asked in the House of Commons whether he had ever been there before, I said "No." "Has he ever been there since?" "No;" and the thought came over me, that he might have been there while I was away from home, and I said, "No, not my knowledge."

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes, that is true.

28,525. Had you ever heard that he had been to your house after your daughters?—Not at all.

28,526. (Mr. Anstey.) It is an imputation you resent?—Yes. I know nothing at all of the man. I never saw the man in my house before.

28,527. (Mr. Price.) Are your daughters here?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Let them stand up.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Mr. G. S. Poole.

23 Sept. 1869.

Mrs. Anne Cull sworn.

Mrs. A. Cull.

28,528. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are a daughter of the last witness?—I am.

28,529. You are a married woman, and are Mrs. Cull now?—Yes.

28,530. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember this occasion when Mr. Veysey came to your father's house?—Yes.

28,531. Were you at home at the time?—Yes. He came home with us. We met him on the Salmon Parade, and he came home with us.

28,532. Had he been in the habit of walking with you and your other sister on other occasions?—No; mere friendship; we had known him.

28,533. Was there anything like the intimacy between you that he has represented?—Oh no, not at all.

28,534. (Mr. Anstey.) He had met you by accident?—He had met us by accident, coming home.

28,535. On a Sunday evening?—Yes, Sunday evening.

28,536. (Mr. Price.) You had not met by appointment?—No.

28,537. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time was that?—In the evening.

28,538. Was it dark?—Yes.

28,539. (Mr. Anstey.) What month was it? July 1865, was it not?—Yes.

28,540. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what passed between you about your father's vote?—We walked down Salmon Parade, and he asked us, which side our father was going to vote, and I said, "Father is going to vote on the Liberal side." He said, "Do not you think he will vote for us?" I said, "No." He said, "I am going to ask him." I said, "It is no use for you to go and ask him, because he is going to vote on the Liberal side, and his mind is entirely made up." He said, "Do you think he would not vote if I gave him 20*l.*?" I said, "No; I know he will not." He said, "I will try him." I said, "You may try him, but I know it is all of no use;" and he kept on like that all the way home. He came home with us to the house, and I went in, and told my father he was come. My sister went in first, and went into the parlour. I then went out and got a light, and showed Mr. Veysey into the parlour. Father came into the room, and directly he came in and spoke to Mr. Veysey I left him.

28,541. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you remember anything of what occurred in the passage, and your speaking about the dress?—Yes.

28,542. What is that?—I went into the room again, while they were there, and Mr. Veysey said to me, "He had almost succeeded in persuading him to take the money." I said to my father, "Do not take the money," and then I went out of the room into the back kitchen, and when I heard them moving, I went out in the passage to bid them "Good night," with my sister, and he said, "You had better take the 20*l.*, Mr. Osborne, it will be of use to you. "I said in a jocular way, "What is 20*l.*? I could spend that on a dress."

28,543. (Mr. Coleridge.) I hope you do not spend 20*l.* on a dress?—No; but I dare say I could if I tried.

Emma Osborn sworn.

Emma Osborne.

28,544. (Mr. Coleridge.) What have you to tell us about this?—On the 9th July, me and my sister were returning home; I should think it was about half-past nine; when we met Mr. John Williams Veysey on the Salmon Parade. He said, "Are you going home?" I said, "We were." He asked us if he might accompany us; "I said, "He might if he liked."

28,545. Had you known him before?—Well, merely to speak to him. He asked us if he might accompany us home; I said, "He could do so if he liked." He asked how my father was going to vote. I said, "On the Liberal side." He said, "Oh nonsense; I am going to offer him 20*l.*; don't you think he will vote?" I said, "I am sure he will not." He said, "I shall go and try him." I said, "You may, if you like, but I am sure he will not take it"; and he went home with us, and saw my father; and he asked him to vote, and offered him the 20*l.*, but he declined it. I did not hear him say so. When he was leaving I went out to wish him "Good night," and I heard Mr. Veysey say, "You had better take the 20*l.*, it will be useful for your family," and my father said he would not do so; and I heard my sister say, "What is 20*l.*? I could spend 20*l.* on a dress."

(Mr. Price.) We have called the Osbornes before us, for the purpose really of giving them an opportunity of explaining the part they took in this transaction. It was in justice to them that we have done so, so that it might not be supposed that Mr. Veysey's story was implicitly believed here or elsewhere.

Mr G. S. Poole.

Mr. Gabriel Stone Poole recalled.

(The witness.) I wish to make a correction of what I said. I understand that I was in error in the gentlemen who recommended Mr. Brogden as a proper person.

28,546. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Travers Smith?—Yes, I thought it was. He is not the gentleman to whom I allude. I believe he used to be an agent of the Liberal party, but he was not the person who recommended Mr. Brogden. And now I would beg you to ask Mr. Allan, as the question was mentioned, whether the ballot would prevent bribery in a place like this? I should like you to ask Mr. Allan what his opinion would be of that.

(Mr. Price.) That is rather beyond the limits of our jurisdiction.

F.C. Temblett.

Frederick Charles Temblett recalled.

(Mr. Price.) Now then, Mr. Temblett.

(The witness.) Before I commence my evidence, I should like to put the learned Commissioners straight with respect to my connection with Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell. They are under the impression, I think, that we are brothers-in-law. We are not brothers-in-law,—no relation whatever,—no more than that Bussell's brother married my sister.

28,547. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he is a quasi brother-in-law?

(Mr. Anstey.) I took it from the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence before the House of Commons. It is said you were a brother-in-law of Mr. Bussell.

(Mr. Price.) I think the last thing you told us about was the election which cost 1,900*l.* That would be, therefore —— ?—The first of Patton's.

28,548. The first of Patton's. Now I will just read to you the last part of your evidence. "When "the man-in-the-moon brought down the 700*l.* or "800*l.*, just previous to Vanderbyl's election, he "brought it to my house, and gave me what I wanted "for my men. I do not remember how much. Was "it 500*l.*?—Oh no; it might have been about 200*l.* "I dealt with more men at Patton's election than at "Westropp's. On the Conservative side the same "price is paid all round. Never more, I believe, "than 10*l.*" That was where you broke off. Now we will go on?—I said never more, I believe, than 10*l.* There is one man I know I spoke to, Wills; but there is another, that is, Benjamin Stoodley; he got hold of 15*l.* That was by a mistake. He said he would go the next time. I asked him to give the money back again, and he said he should not give back any money; but he said, "There is another "election coming off soon, and I will go for 5*l.* less "than what the price is." But when the election came I found he wanted just as much as the others, and he would not go for less.

28,549. (Mr. Anstey.) You heard what the Chief Commissioner said yesterday about the determination of the Commission to spare no expense to find out "the man-in-the-moon." Have you, since you were examined before, found out the name of that person?—No, I have not the slightest knowledge.

28,550. (Mr. Price.) We rely very much upon men like yourself, who come here making a clean breast of it, and not only telling us what they know, but also trying to find out every person who you think may know, and telling us to the the best of their knowledge. The best thing is letting us know who the men are at once?—If I could give you the names I would; but my impression is that there is no man in Bridgwater ——

28,551. That we are inclined to believe; but still you know, carrying the thing back, this "man-in-the-moon" has a locus, he has a place, he has a habitation, and he has a name, and he must be known to somebody, and somebody must have sent him here; and I should think his whereabouts and his name must be known by somebody in Bridgwater?—I think the only person he communicated with at the time he was here, except ourselves, was Bealy Smith. He certainly communicated with Bealy Smith; he told me so.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, Bealy Smith is unfortunately in Australia.

28,552. (Mr. Anstey.) If the ratepayers in this borough are willing to undergo such a heavy addition to their expenses merely for the sake of a mere stranger—— ?—I do not think anybody would wish to suppress the name if he knew it. Harden since that has told me that he saw him in London.

28,553. Do you know who sent the man down? Did Spofforth send him down?—I do not know.

(Frederick Harden.) I think he was connected with that same office.

(Mr. Price.) What is your name?

(Witness.) That is Mr. Harden.

(Mr. Price.) Then we will have him afterwards.

28,554. The last thing you said was about the subscription that I asked you about. You said you could get 30 men, and the money was whipped up in the town by way of subscription?—Yes.

28,555. Can you give us the names of the subscribers?—I can give you some names. Mr. Tant of the "Bristol Arms" was one; Mr. Gent was another; then Hodges; Mr. Moore, draper; Mr. Harden's father, George Harden, was another. There may be others, but I do not remember the others.

28,556. Then I think you told us that the money was paid back through Mr. J. R. Smith?—Yes; by a young lady, an assistant of his at that time, and she is now assistant at the pledge counter; at that time he carried on the pawnbroking.

28,557. Did you succeed Mr. Smith?—I did.

28,558. Then she can come?—She can come.

28,559. Now we come to Patton and Vanderbyl's, if that concludes all you have to tell us about this election?—I believe it does.

28,560. You said, I think, that the Liberals at that time, to try some more votes, offered as far as 50*l.*; but it was too late, and you won by seven votes?—That is right. I wish to state that Charles Haste said that he could get but 5*l.* That is quite true; he did get but 5*l.* I spoke to Bealy Smith about it when I wanted to get the money of "the man-in-the-moon," and he said, "No; Mr. Smith has told me "that Charles Haste is not to get any more, for he "had his share of putting up the hustings; he had a "pull out of that." But Haste was not satisfied, and I think that was the reason why he left us, and voted for Vanderbyl. I was never so much abused by any man in my life as I was on that occasion. He thought I had nailed his money.

28,561. What did he get out of putting up the hustings?—I do not know. There was very little labour attached to it. There were a few barrels and two rails, and so on; and there are two persons named on each side if there are two candidates on each side.

28,562. What do they charge?—I think they get 8*l.* or 10*l.*; but Mr. Carslake can tell you.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It costs them about one, I suppose?

28,563. (Mr. Price.) Now at Patton and Vanderbyl's election, did Mr. Smith send for you, and tell you that Mr. Patton was about to stand?—Yes; he told me. He sent for me, and asked me if I would manage the thing, and I told him no, I would not. I gave him my reason for not doing so; and the reason was, I said, "Two of them that worked with "us in 1866 (Robert Bussell was one, and I think "Boys was the other,) were very dissatisfied because "they had nothing to do with Patton's first election "of 1866." I said, "We only won by a majority of "seven; we cannot afford to lose a single vote; "therefore, if I were to undertake a thing of this "kind they would be worse. I know they are "jealous of me now."

28,564. What was the cause of their dissatisfaction?—Boys's name was certainly left out, and because I remarked he never ought to have been let in. He was a clerk in Mr. Smith's office at the time.

28,565. Left out! in what way?—As a man who ought to have nothing to do with spending money; paying of it out. I said, "We cannot afford to lose "a single vote now, and the best thing is to get the "same men again."

28,566. Did you also say anything about promises being paid up?—Yes.

28,567. What did you say?—I told him that the promises must be paid up, or else it would be no use to go and offer the men, or say anything to them, because we should not stand the slightest chance.

28,568. There were men outstanding whose promises were not paid?—Yes. He asked me if I would get out a list of the names of parties, as far as I could, those that were unpaid, and send to him, as he was going to London. I did so. I got out a list, and sent to him; and a short time afterwards this man came down, and brought down the list which I had sent up, and the money.

28,569. Brought down the list with him?—He brought down the list and the money.

28,570. And those promises were all liquidated?—Yes, as far as I know.

28,571. And those that had had 5*l.*?—It was made up to 10*l.*

28,572. With a few exceptions, such as Haste, who you thought had his share?—Yes.

28,573. How much was brought down at that time, that you knew of?—Well, I do not know what was brought down. Mr. Jarman had a portion of it, and I think Mr. Batten had a portion of it, and I had some. Harden had none. He was in Devonshire at the time; but I should think that that election would cost nearly about the same as Mr. Westropp's, 1,900*l.*

28,574. You do not think it at all probable that at that second election of Mr. Patton anything like ——?—I mean the first election? Are you gone to the second election?

28,575. Yes; we are now at the second; we have left Mr. Bagehot's. Mr. Smith sent for you, and told you that Mr. Patton was about to stand for re-election?—I thought you were speaking then of the promises.

28,576. Wait a moment. Then you told him that unless all the promises were paid up it was all over. Then you put down the promises that had to be paid up, which brought it up to 1,900*l.*?—Yes; and everything was paid up, as far as I know, before we commenced the other.

28,577. Now, about the beginning of the other election, how long before the election do you think it was that that man came down and paid up the outstanding promises?—About two days.

28,578. Two days before?—Yes.

28,579. Then you started upon the next election?—I think we were paying some of the promises on the nomination morning. At all events, I paid several on the evening before, I know.

28,580. What I want to know is, can you give us an idea of how much in the gross was spent with respect to promises made at the former election; whether those promises were paid at the second election, or paid at the same time?—The second time, I think, we had the money at the "Albion" (Grabham's); the third time that he came,—Patton's second election,—the third election at which the man was down here,—he stayed at Grabham's, "Albion."

28,581. Did you hear then that the voters were holding back until they could have 20*l.*?—I did.

28,582. Did you tell him so?—Yes; I believe I heard it almost before Vanderbyl came into the town.

28,583. Did you tell him so?—Yes.

28,584. What did he say to you?—I told him they were holding back, and wanted 20*l.* a man, and we must have more than 10*l.* a man to win it. I said, "I do not think our men will vote for us for less "money than for the Liberals; but having voted a "month previously for us, they would not like to "turn their coat so quick." I mentioned it to the "man-in-the-moon." He said he would see about it. He told me afterwards that he could not make any hand with Mr. Smith. He said, "You go, and "see him yourself; you can do more with him than "I can." I saw Mr. Smith. I saw him three times on the matter. He told me the first time that he would consider, and think of it. He said he would consider the matter.

28,585. He declined it at first?—He declined it at first.

28,586. Now we come to the morning of the election. Did you tell him again that it was no use to fight the election at 10*l.* a head?—I did; at seven o'clock in the morning, outside this hall.

28,587. And did you say that he had better spend more, or not spend the money at all?—I asked him to let us have 200*l.* more, to go over the whole lot again, and those who would not go for less than 15*l.* to give it rather than lose their votes.

28,588. Did you say if he did not spend more it would have been better not to spend the money at all?—Yes. I said, "If you don't, we shall go and throw away all this money."

28,589. How much money had you then?—I do not know how much I had; it was not very much. I must tell you that, at my request chiefly, there were some strange men got here,—two or three strange men,—sub-men under the other man,—who he got here for the purpose of paying out the money. Those are what you have heard of when witnesses have spoken about the hand. Those men paid the money. We paid very little money ourselves.

28,590. Where were those men got from?—I cannot say. He got them down. He told me one of them was his brother-in-law.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. C. Temblett.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,591. At 9 o'clock you were 50 a-head?—At 9 o'clock we were 50 a-head.

28,592. Did you find out then that the price was raised after that?—About that time I saw Mr. Bealy Smith; and he said, "If we had taken your advice we should have thrown money away"; and he said, "Now be very cautious, and do not deal with an unsafe man." I said, "Don't you be too sure about "throwing money away, for I have just been told "that there was a man who has just gone up and "polled for the Liberals who I knew had been offered "10*l.* from our side, and he would not have left us, "I believe, unless he had been offered more." I told him so. He said, "Oh, nonsense, we are 50 a-head, and we shall be sure to win." I said, "Well, I do not "think so. From what I know of what took place, "I think it is very likely that they will soon be "alongside of us." Sure enough, about 10 o'clock they were just level with us.

28,593. Did you find out there were men at the "Clarence" who were asking at that time 20*l.* a-head?—Yes; some 20*l.* and some 15*l.*

28,594. Did you tell that to Mr. Smith?—Yes.

28,595. Did he say he had no more money?—He said he had not; that there was not a shilling in the town. I asked him whether he could not get it. As he got money at the previous election, I thought whether he could now; and he said "No, I am informed that 10*l.* is plenty of money." What I think he meant by that was what I heard from Mr. Harden after the election was over. Mr. Harden told me that about a day or two before the election took place he sent for him to go to his house. He went up, and he asked him the question whether he thought more money was wanted than 10*l.* a man; and he said, "I "do not think so. I think if you get 10*l.* a man, and "get the money paid down, and no promises, we can "go in and win like smoke." Harden evidently did not know so much about what had taken place in the town as I did, because he had just come back from Bampton in Devonshire, and he had not heard what was going on, otherwise he would not have given that answer.

28,596. When he said he had no more money, did you find that three or four of your men did go away?—They did.

28,597. Did you tell them that?—I did. I left Mr. Smith, and told them that I could not get any more than 10*l.* for them, and they voted on the other side.

28,598. How much had you in hand when you found that you were beaten?—When we found that we were beaten I had got 40*l.* or 50*l.* I met the man-in-the-moon (that was the first time I had ever seen him out in the day when the election was on). I met him just here by Rowe's, the grocer's. He seemed very much frightened at the state of the poll; and I said, "Well, its all up, you know; there's no chance for you to win." I said, "I have got 40*l.* or 50*l.* here, which you had better take with you." I said, "If you meet with any one, don't you let them "have the money, because you may meet somebody "who will tell you they can do wonders if they can "get hold of some money, but there is no chance for "them;" and he promised me he would not part with it. I found afterwards that within five minutes he met Robert Newton, and let him have 40*l.* or 50*l.*

28,599. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he seen Newton before?—Yes; I was present when he saw him in the morning at Grabham's. Harden and me were together, and there was going to be a fight there.

28,600. (Mr. Price.) Newton is in America, I am afraid, now?—He is.

28,601. Is all that took place at the election that you know of?—That is all that I know of.

28,602. Now, I must put the question to you again, what sum of money do you believe, from what you have heard, and from what you know yourself, was spent on behalf of Mr. Patton at that election up to that time?—In bribery?

28,603. Yes.—Under 2,000*l.*; very close to that amount.

28,604. (Mr. Anstey.) How much above 1,500*l.*?—Nearer 2,000*l.* than 1,500*l.* Very close to 2,000*l.* About 1,900*l.*; nearly the same each time.

28,605. Were you at the "Clarence" much that day?—Yes.

28,606. Can you tell us anything about the bottling of voters there?—I knew there were several men there,—perhaps 30 or 40 at one time,—waiting to get money. Some of them had been paid 10*l.*, and wanted more; a good many of them had.

28,607. By "bottling" I understand the shutting them up in a room?—They were in a room by themselves.

28,608. And the door was fastened, I suppose?—They could have got out if they chose. There was a man at the door, not so much to keep them in as to keep others out.

28,609. Nobody could get in to them?—No, they could not. I know one man who tried to get in, and he had a smack in the head.

28,610. What room was it; the ball-room?—The assembly room, or ball room as they call it.

28,611. Who was the man that stood at the door, and would not allow the people to get in?—I do not know who it was. There was a couple of working men; good stout fellows.

28,612. Were any of them drunk?—Oh, no; they were all right enough.

28,613. But the men inside the room?—I did not see any man drunk at all.

28,614. What time was that?—About 11 o'clock in the morning, up to 12.

28,615. We have heard that when they were found useless, to use the language of one of the witnesses, they were bundled out into the street?—No; they were not bundled out; they were told they could not have any more money.

28,616. What time was that?—About one o'clock.

28,617. How many of these went out and voted afterwards for Vanderbyl?—Not a great many.

28,618. How many went out and voted for Patton?—Well; I should think the greater part of them voted for Patton.

28,619. Without money?—Some of them did. Some of them had been paid before.

28,620. Why were those who had been paid before bottled up with those who were not paid?—Because they all wanted money.

28,621. Those who had been paid wanted more?—Yes; they wanted more.

28,622. (Mr. Price.) Well, that is all about that election. Well now, some time after the election, was there any further money brought down here?—I am not aware of it. Some time after the election?

28,623. Was there any sum of money, after the election, paid by Mr. Lilly?—Oh, before you come to that, I can tell you that some time after the election, directly after the election, there were bills out to say that Harden and myself had nailed 800*l.* I went to Mr. Bealy Smith, and carried one of the bills in my hand, and showed it to him; and I said it was a very unpleasant thing for me to have this report circulated about. I said, "You know very well it is "untrue; but I cannot bring any one here to you "for you to satisfy them that it is not true; because "if I was to, you would say, 'What did you bring "'the man here to me for? I know nothing at all "'about the money matters,' and you would be annoyed." He said, "Very right, Temblett, I should." I said, "I will tell you what you must do. If you "want me ever to assist you at an election again, "you must bring down a man, and let him go round "and ascertain the truth of it, and find out who is "right and who is wrong." I said, "I think there "has money been nailed by somebody, but I am not " one of them. And if you will bring him down, " I will tell you what I will do," (I had given him one list,) " I will not only give a list, but I will " furnish him with another list, with the residences " of the people to whom I paid the money ; and I " will send some one with him to show the party ; " and if any one denies having the money," I said, " let him bring them to me." Well, he did so; he brought a man down.

28,624. Where did he stay the second time he was down ?—When he came down afterwards ?

28,625. Yes ?—He went into the " Clarence Hotel." I do not think Mr. Leaker knew who he had got there; but I knew, because I saw him there.

28,626. How long did he stay ?—He came one day and back the next.

28,627. He stayed at the " Clarence " ?—Yes.

28,628. Well?—Before that, I had heard that Master Newton was not exactly right.

28,629. I suppose the man who came was a man who had no name on his luggage ?—No, he had no luggage.

28,630. No luggage ?—Not he ; because he was not here very long. He used to carry a little black bag with him.

28,631. The same sort of luggage that Mr. Brogden carried, a black bag full of sovereigns.

28,632. (Mr. Coleridge.) The first time he came down he stayed with a widow woman somewhere ?—Yes. He was accompained each time by his wife, or she passed as his wife ; and I should think it was his wife, or he would not have let her into the secret.

28,633. What was the widow woman's name?—Harden.

28,634. Where of?—Ball's Lane ; King Street. Ball's Lane ; it is generally known as King Street.

28,635. (Mr. Anstey.) Was she a relation of Frederick Harden ?—None whatever, I think.

Mr. Anstey (to Frederick Harden). Do you know her ?

(Frederick Harden.) I do not know her address.

(Superintendent Lear.) This woman has been married since, and is now living at Canton near Cardiff.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is a part of Cardiff; it is a suburb of Cardiff.

(Superintendent Lear.) I forget the address.

28,636. (Mr. Anstey.) When she was here she lived in King Street ?—In King Street.

28,637. Do you know her Christian name ?—I do not.

28,638. (Mr. Price.) You have made a statement about a sum of money ; you say it was paid by Mr. Lilly, a magistrate here. You said, " We had all 20*l.* for our trouble." Just let us understand what that is ?—We had more than 20*l.*

28,639. Tell us what that is ?—Some months after the election, I heard that Mr. Lilly had got a sum of money. I do not know where he got it from ; I never heard. But he had got a sum of money, and there was something for us, and I got 5*l.*, and Harden 5*l.*, and Jarman 5*l.* What he paid otherwise I do not know.

28,640. That would be 5*l.* apiece?—Five pounds apiece he paid us.

28,641. Was that paid for your services at Westropp's election ?—No ; that was paid for our services at Patton's election. We had been paid previously for Westropp's. When " the man-in-the-moon " came down to fight Patton's election, twelve months after, or near upon it, eleven months after, he paid us 20*l.* apiece ; me 20*l.*, Harden 20*l.*, and Jarman 20*l.*

28,642. Twenty pounds for your trouble in Westropp's election, 5*l.* apiece for Westropp's election, and 20*l.* for the two elections of Patton ?—That 20*l.* of Patton was not paid until some time after the election. That was paid by Chapman, a clerk at Smith and Boyle's.

28,643. What did you expect to have, instead of 20*l.*, for the two elections of Patton ?—We expected to have 20*l.* for each.

28,644. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it a bargain ?—Not much of a bargain. He told us we were to have it.

28,645. (Mr. Price.) You never made any disguise of it, that you intended to be paid for your trouble ?—Certainly not.

28,646. The money that was paid by Lilly, do you know how that was expended ?—No ; I do not know who he paid any other sums to. I know he paid us 5*l.* each, or I know he paid me 5*l.*, and I heard the others say they had 5*l.*

28,647. Did he pay anything for treating or expenses ?—I do not know that he did.

28,648. Is that all you can tell us of the election of Patton and Vanderbyl ?—Yes ; I cannot say anything more. Oh, I will tell you who was paid at Patton's election; a man of the name of George Webber, who I paid 10*l.* to on the morning of the election. Two days before that he went down to the station to meet Mr. Patton. We went down to meet him in procession. That is what Mr. Trevor was speaking about yesterday. This man was one of them. He was covered all over with blue nearly, a sash round him, and goodness knows what. On the morning of the poll he came, and had 10*l.* of me, and it has come out in the evidence since this Commission has been on that he immediately afterwards had 30*l.* from Gold, his landlord.

28,649. (Mr. Coleridge.) On the other side ?—On the other side, and he voted for Vanderbyl.

28,650. (Mr. Price.) Did he go and vote in that blue costume ?—I do not know ; he left me. I did not know any other but what he would vote for us, or I should have sent somebody to look after him.

28,651. (Mr. Coleridge.) He paid back the 10*l.* ?—Yes; I was not there. He gave it to my father. I told Mr. Smith of it, that this 10*l.* was brought back. He said " Very well then, your father can keep that " out of his account. When he is paid he can take " the 10*l.* out ;" and when Mr. Chapman paid him the account that 10*l.* was kept out.

28,652. What was the account ?—For beer and spirits. We keep an inn.

28,653. What inn do you keep ?—The " Bull and Butcher."

28,654. (Mr. Price.) In 1868 were you present at the " Lamb," before the election, when Mr. J. R. Smith addressed the people ?—Yes, I was, and I will explain to you how I came there. When Mr. Purcell asked me the other day about that, he asked me what meeting I attended. I said, " No meeting at all," and if you had asked me the question here I should have given you the same answer, and believed I was giving you a truthful one. He then asked me something about this M. D., and the thought struck me at once, and it took my attention. Up to that time I had taken no part whatever in the election ; I had attended no meeting, and had had nothing to do with it. I was standing at my door one night, and I saw some people at the " Lamb " door opposite. I said to some one, " What's up there ? " They said it was a meeting. I thought it was a political meeting, and a Conservative meeting. My supper was not quite ready, and I ran across the road. I got into the room, and I heard Mr. Smith saying something about a bill which he had, and something about 100*l.* reward, and he said, " Mind and not have any promises, but have what the Americans recommend ; M. D. You know what that means, money down." Those remarks of his were received with shouts of approbation, clapping of hands, and stamping of feet. I knew it to be an old building, and I thought, " The sooner I get out of this the better," and out I cut. That is all I know about it.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. C. Temblett.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,655. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear him say anything about sugar ?—Not a word. I did hear him say something about "M. D., money down,"

28,656. How many were there, do you think ?—I should think the room was full ; from two to three hundred people.

28,657. Chiefly voters ?—Chiefly voters.

28,658. Chiefly new voters ?—Chiefly new voters. I think it was the Working Men's Association.

28,659. Then it would be chiefly new voters ?—Yes.

28,660. Was there any dissent from this ?—No ; it was received with shouts of approbation from all.

28,661. And the demonstration was so noisy that you thought the whole building was coming down ?—Yes ; I thought the whole building was coming down. The next day I remember seeing Mr. Batten, and I told Mr. Batten that I thought it was very indiscreet talking about "M. D." and "money down." Mr. Batten said, "Oh, you mistake altogether the meaning of that;" and then he explained to me that it referred to a handbill that had been issued, saying that there would be 100*l.* reward, and Mr. Smith, in speaking of this handbill, said that if they were going to desert their party he should advise them to have the money down, and not promises.

28,662. (Mr. Price.) He did not mean that they were to take care to have "M. D." from your side, but from the other side ?—Yes ; from the other side. I remember speaking to Mr. Moore about it, and he gave me the same explanation.

28,663. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you understand that these two persons, Mr. Batten and Mr. Moore, thought that the sting of the offence of bribery consisted of taking money from the other side, or from their own side ?—No ; I understood them to say that it referred in this way, that if they were going to desert the party they should take care to have the money, and not trust to promises.

28,664. Therefore there was less harm in that than in taking money from their own side ?—No ; I did not hear anything about taking money from their own side.

28,665. I do not understand what the nice distinction is ?

(Mr. Price.) He thought the other side were not to be trusted ; their word was not to be trusted ?—Their word was not to be trusted.

28,666. Therefore they were to have the money down ?—They were to have the money down, or if not to stick to their party.

28,667. It was, that where promises were given they would not be observed ?—Oh, I do not know about promises. He will give you his construction of it.

28,668. (Mr. Anstey.) Or the general expectations would be sooner or later realized ?—I cannot say. He will give you the real explanation, I have no doubt.

28,669. (Mr. Price.) Were you at all consulted at the last election about how the thing was to be conducted ? Were you a Conservative agent ?—No ; I had nothing at all to do with it, up to the polling day.

28,670. Well, was it the general opinion of the town that Mr. Gray was brought down as a rich man to be put in the scale against Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I think it was. That was the opinion I formed of it, and I thought there would be more money spent on the last election than any other election I had known.

28,671. In consequence of Mr. Gray ?—In consequence of Mr. Gray.

28,672. They have said on the other side, what is quite consistent with your idea, that Gray meant money ?—I do not know that the name Gray meant money. My reason for coming to that conclusion was this——

28,673. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were going on to say the renson why you expected that more money would be spent.—Yes ; I will tell you. Mr. Vanderbyl came down at the previous election, and brought out Mr. Patton, and spent a larger sum of money than had been spent in the town for a great many years ; and knowing that to be the case, I quite thought they had brought down a man who was a match for him—a man of large property.

28,674. (Mr. Anstey.) And you were told, when he was brought down, that he was a match for him ?—No ; I was never told so, but that was the inference I drew.

28,675. (Mr. Price.) Had you given any cause of dissatisfaction to them that they would not consult you ?—I was so annoyed at the result of Vanderbyl's election ; I thought the election was quite thrown away, because we had not got two or three hundred pounds more in the morning, or we should have won in a canter, and I was so annoyed at that that I thought, "I will not have anything more to do with an election, if that is the game." I did not like the idea of being defeated.

28,676. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were not corrupt enough to please you ?—That was about it.

28,677. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you first hear on your side that there was not going to be more money spent on your side than had been before ?—At the last election ?

28,678. Yes ?—I heard on the night before the election that there would be no money.

28,679. Then down to the night before the election you were under the impression that there would be ?—I was.

28,680. Was that the general impression amongst the voters ?—I think so.

28,681. How late on the night before was it that you were disabused of that impression ?—About seven o'clock in the evening. Mr. Batten was the first that told me of it.

28,682. The next day, the polling day, did you meet with any electors who required still to be disabused of that ; who still were under the impression that money was like to be going ?—Well, I got up early that morning ; and about six o'clock I walked down towards the "Golden Lion," and I thought I would just see what was going on.

28,683. What did you find was the impression then ?—I saw a lot of men standing about the street ; I remember meeting a man of the name of Barrow as I came back, on the Cornhill. He said, "Look here, this is a damned pretty game. This is the worst thing out." I said, "What's up ?" He said, "Why, there's not a penny, and here I have got a lot of chaps waiting for money, and there's not a penny."

28,684. What did you say to him ?—I do not know hardly what remark I did make.

28,685–6. Well, did you say, "There may be by and by ?"—No, nothing of that. I was not going to deceive him.

28,687. (Mr. Price.) Did you go from him to the meeting at the "Clarence" at 8 o'clock that morning ?—No.

28,688–9. Did you go to the "Clarence" that morning ?—I did, some part of the day. I was in and out there. I was there in the morning some time. In the morning I saw Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp at the door. I said, "If I was in your place, and there "was no money to spend, I would not stand about "here. I will tell you what I would do. I would not "stand about like this ; I would take and get out into "the streets, and up to the polling booths." I addressed myself more particularly to Mr. Westropp. I said, "You being a very popular man, the very "sight of you would do a good deal towards carrying "the election," and it did. They went out, and they had a throng of people about them, just like a lot of harlequins would. Perhaps there were about 150 people following him where he went.

28,690. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you recognize amongst those people any who had benefited by his generosity during the period from 1859 up to that time?—No; I did not. They were men, women, and children.

28,691. It is precisely the women and children that I speak of. It was stated in evidence yesterday that he had been spending about 300*l.* a year in distributing money amongst voters on both sides, and especially to their women and their children. Did you recognize amongst the men, women, or children any who during that period of nine years had been receiving his bounty?—No, I did not. I do not listen to what you have heard about giving the women and children money. I know he spent a good deal of money in the borough; but as to saying he gave money to the women and children, it is all humbug. I will tell you what I have known him to do. If an old man met him in the street he would give him half-a-crown, perhaps, or if anybody was hard-up he would send him, perhaps, two, or three, or five pounds sometimes.

28,692–3. But it is in evidence at the trial that some person who was asked his reason for giving his vote said, "I did so because he had been so good to our children for so many years"?—It might be so; I never heard of it.

28,694. You say he was very popular, and so popular amongst the people here that he could not go from the door but they followed him in the manner you have described. Had not that popularity been purchased by the charities, if you like to profane the term, which he had committed during the last nine years?—In a certain sense, perhaps it had. I will tell you. He was this sort of a man. If he met a poor man or a poor woman, it is no odds whether their hands were as hard as nails, he would shake hands, which the gentry would not do. He made himself like one of themselves. That made him very popular amongst poor people.

28,695. (Mr. Price.) And the kissing of the children also?—I do not know about that.

28,696. That used to be an old-fashioned way of canvassing?—So I have heard. I have heard that when Mr. Kinglake was here, and Mr. Vanderbyl, one woman kissed him. I do not know exactly what it was.

28,697–8. Perhaps he paid very dearly for that kiss in the end. At that time did the men who voted on the Conservative side go and poll pretty briskly up to 10 o'clock?—They did poll briskly; much more briskly than the Liberals, because about half-past 1 I should think they were 250 ahead.

28,699. Do you think that they expected, from their polling, that they would be paid after the election, as that had been the usual practice?—No; I know that the usual practice was to pay them before, with the exception of the time when Patton came here.

28,700. (Mr. Anstey.) I believe you say it was the practice, if the money had not been paid before, but only promised or expected, for it always to be paid, if possible, before the next election?—I believe so.

28,701–2. Well, is there anything that should take the last election out of that rule? Do you know any fact that would make the last election an exception to that rule?—No; but I never heard that money was paid without it was promised. I never heard that if a man went to poll without a promise he was ever paid.

28,703. We have it in evidence from other witnesses that if bribable men voted early, and then money was going or was about, as the expression is, later in the day, it was the practice to come upon the bribery agents, and say, "I have voted early, and I am entitled to my money"?—That would be the case when the persons were in the habit of receiving bribes; but you see that many of these men were men who had not been bribed.

28,704. We have it in evidence that many of those who voted early were those who never voted without a bribe, or the expectation of it?—Yes; many of them. I was surprised to see some of them going to poll so early.

28,705. On that account?—No; that they had previously never polled without money.

28,706–7. (Mr. Price.) Do you know of no case where there was any direct promise held out, or do you suppose that they went upon the belief that they might have some?—I know one case, about two or it may be nearly three o'clock, I was in the "Clarence" Hotel, and I was passing by the foot of the staircase going up into the assembly room. Mr. James Leaker called me. I went towards him, and he said, "Look here, Fred, here's Jem and his father." He referred to James Trapnell and his father named Isaac. He said, "I have promised to give them three." He never said whether it was three shillings, or three pounds, or three half crowns. He said, "I have promised to give them three if they will poll for our side, but they want five." At that time I was under the impression that our party were spending money or promising money. I don't know whether I made any remark to him, but I certainly did wink to him, or something of that kind. He understood, I suppose, what I meant by the wink, that I did not think it was worth while to split about 2*l.*, and he went and joined them, and immediately took them to the poll.

28,708. Who was that?—James Leaker.

28,709. At the "Clarence"?—Yes.

28,710. What time?—Nearly three, I should think. That was the only transaction of the kind, I think, that took place at that election that I have ever heard of.

28,711. (Mr. Anstey.) To whom did he make the offer? You say Jem and his father?—It was James Trapnell.

28,712. (Mr. Price.) Now can you tell us as to treating at all these elections that you have spoken of? I do not know whether that is all you have to tell us about the election of 1868?—I do not know that there is anything more.

28,713. With regard to treating at all these elections, what was the plan upon the Conservative side?—Well, I think the plan was they would go on and draw the beer and supply the refreshments, as they call it, without any order for it whatever, on the strength of believing that they would be paid afterwards.

28,714. And were they paid afterwards?—Yes.

28,715. (Mr. Anstey.) How did the drinkers know the people who were going to drink? how did they show which side they were on? had they badges or anything of that kind?—No; we know them pretty well.

28,716. Yes, you would; but the bar maids and the bar men, and others?—Oh, I dare say that very often the other party would get hold of some.

28,717. Therefore, when we hear that a man, being a Liberal, went into the Clarence, and then came out again after drinking a glass of beer, it may be that he went in to get drink, under pretence of being a Conservative, and so vice versâ?—Yes. I do not think there was anything of that ever carried on at the "Clarence;" that the "Clarence" was ever opened in that way.

28,718. We have had it in evidence that it was?—Well, I know nothing about that.

28,719. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything about a man by the name of Bottomley?—Yes.

28,720–1. What do you know about him?—In 1865, Mr. Westropp's election, I heard Mr. Joseph Richard Smith say that Bottomley went to his house one night. He was a tenant of Mr. Smith's. I think he went up to pay his rent. He was accompanied by his wife, and after some time he said, "Now, then, Mr. Smith, we will go to business." Mr. Smith was rather surprised at what business he meant, because, as far as he was concerned, he thought that all the business he had to do with him was over; and he then got on speaking of the election and of bribing, and said that he was disgusted with bribery, and all that kind of thing.

28,722. (Mr. Price.) Did he say he abhorred bribery?—He abhorred bribery.

28,723. But he wanted a present?—Yes; he wanted a present. He did not think it any harm for a man to take a present, and, out of curiosity, Mr. Smith asked him what present he wanted, and before he left he said that he wanted the moderate sum of 200*l.*

28,724. Is that the same man who has been spoken about by Dyke?—Yes, I believe so.

28,725–6. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Bottomley alive?—I believe so.

28,727. Where does he live?—I do not know.

(Andrew Allan.) I think he keeps a drapery establishment in Dudley.

28,728–9. (Mr. Price.) Did he get his 200*l.*?—No. I think he voted the other side.

28,730. (Mr. Anstey.) May we take it that all those who received bribes, or were willing to receive bribes, on the Tory side, did so without protestation, and that all those who bribed, or received bribes, or were ready to do so, on the purity of election side, did so with protestation of their abhorrence of bribery?—Oh no, I do not believe they all protested. There were very few of them that did.

28,731. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you say that you think Mr. Patton's two elections cost somewhere about 2,000*l.*, do you mean merely for bribery, or do you include all the payments for treating and so on?—No; bribery only.

28,732. Then where did the money come from to pay for the treating?—I think Mr. Bealy Smith paid it.

28,733. Do you know what that came to?—I think that at both Patton's elections it would not come to more than 200 or 300*l.*

28,734. Then, taking his legitimate expenses, and also the bribery and treating, what do you put down the cost of his two elections at?—Exclusive of that?

28,735. No. Inclusive of everything, bribing, treating, and legitimate expenses. What do you put the cost of his two elections at?—I cannot tell what the lawyers would get.

28,736. Independently of that?—Independently of the lawyers, I should think about 4,500*l.*

28,737. Well, putting them at 500*l.*, it would be about 5,000*l.*?—Yes.

28,738. (Mr. Price.) So far as you know of the last election, and from what you have learned since, with the exception of what you have told us, was there or was there not any money paid at the last election on the Conservative side?—I do not know of any.

28,739. I am only asking you as to your own knowledge. You did not take a very active part, but so far as you know (and you are a person who would be likely to get at the knowledge of it afterwards) was any money paid at the last election on the Conservative side in the shape of bribery?—At the last election I do not thing there was.

28,740. After the election?—I believe there has been a little paid.

28,741. How much?—I believe Mr. Leaker has paid a portion of the money promised.

28,742. How much has Mr. Leaker paid?—I cannot say, but I believe he has paid a portion. He asked my advice, and I advised him not to pay it.

28,743. Which of them?—The son. I advised him not to.

28,744. How long after the election was that?—Some time after.

28,745. Before the petition was tried?—No; I think since. He spoke to me about it, and I said I would take and send them about their business.

28,746. Was that since we have been down here?—No.

28,747. Was it after the address went up to the Queen, praying that a commission might issue?—I really do not know. I should think it would be before that.

28,748. After Her Majesty granted it?—I should think it would be before that.

28,749. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Justice Blackburn was down here in February?—It was after Mr. Justice Blackburn was here.

28,750. He was down here in February, and the Commission was actually voted in May.

(Mr. Anstey.) It was voted in April, but it was not assented to till June.

28,751. (Mr. Price.) Was it after Mr. Justice Blackburn was here, and before the month of June?—I should say so. I should think so.

28,752. With the exception of that, I will ask you again have you heard since, or have you any reason whatever to believe, that any amount of money, whether a large sum or a small sum, or any amount of money besides that, was paid after the election on the part of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray?—No, I do not believe there was.

28,753. Have you heard whether there are men in the town, though now of course through this Commission of inquiry it may not have been so, but were there any men in the town after the election and before the inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn, any men on the Conservative side, who claimed money, and grumbled because they had not got it, and expressed their expectation to get?—I believe there were a few.

28,754. (Mr. Anstey.) How many, do you think?—I have heard there were a few, but I never heard those men say that they were promised money, but they thought they should have some.

28,755. They expected it?—During the day of the election, about three in the afternoon, when I found that the Liberals were pulling up fast, I said to Mr. William Brice, "The Liberals seem to me to be polling up pretty sharp; they are spending money like a flash; why not go in and win? There is plenty of chances." I think we were nearly abreast, and he said, "No, Temblett, not a shilling will we spend on our side. If a shilling would win we would not spend it. And not only that, but who for goodness sake would do it if we would spend?" I said, "Never mind that. If you will get the money to expend I will pay it like a bird."

28,756. Who was that?—Mr. William Brice. And he said, "Not a shilling we won't spend."

28,757. How long was this before the close of the election?—Some time; an hour; two hours; an hour and a half before the close, or something like that.

28,758. (Mr. Price.) When the Liberals were creeping up very fast?—Yes.

28,759. Do you believe at that time, if you had had money, you would have carried the election?—I do. I believe we could for 100*l.* The only thing I am surprised at was, that the Liberals should be paying 10*l.* a man when no body was competing with them, and they could have got them for 10*s.* as well as 10*l.*

28,760. You think that rather than not have any money they would have taken 10*s.*?—Yes.

28,761. (Mr. Anstey.) You think if the price of the vote was to be reduced from pounds to shillings, as it appears it has been reduced from hundreds of guineas to 10*l.*, or even less, if it was reduced still further, to shillings, to so many shillings a head, do you think the same people who now vote for pounds would vote for the shillings?—Yes; I believe some of them, a great many of them, would now. I believe on the old list a great many of them that had money then would not, but now there are so many poor men brought in they would.

28,762. (Mr. Price.) You think if they could compound for it now this inquiry is sitting, and thought they could get off without disfranchisement by saying, "No, we won't ask for 10*l.*, but we will vote for 10*s.*," do you think they would like that to be the result?—Oh yes, they would take that.

28,763. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were the other persons employed actively in the election like yourself. Was Murlis ?—Murlis was in 1859.

28,764. Has he not appeared at the late elections ? —No.

28,765. (Mr. Price.) There are Harden and yourself and Robert Bussell ?—Robert Bussell had a little to do with it; not much with paying money.

28,766. With what ?—With paying money out to voters.

28,767. (Mr. Anstey.) Not at any election ?—At only one, I think. That was Mr. Patton's, but not very much then; Patton's first election.

28,768. At the previous election he did ?—I do not remember.

28,769. For instance, Westropp's election in 1865. Do you remember that Robert Bussell was one of the persons named through whose acts Mr. Westropp was unseated ? Was not that so ?—A lot of people were named in the brief, but there was nothing whatever against him.

28,770. No, no ; but named in the shorthand writer's notes ? — I never heard that Robert Bussell was charged with having paid money to voters.

28,771. With having promised ?—That may be.

28,772. With reference to that election of 1865 (I did not catch whether you stated it or not, but let me ask you),—you have heard what has been stated about the proceedings of Sir John Shelley's side,—now, do you remember a promise, or a hint which was equivalent to a promise, given to you by Mr. Paul Reed, in the presence of Sir John Shelley, that———?—I remember perfectly well———.

(Mr. Price.) No ; wait and hear.

28,773. (Mr. Anstey.) That you should receive remuneration if you would only give your promise to vote for Sir John Shelley ?—It was not exactly like that. The evidence which I gave in the House of Commons is every word of it true.

28,774. (Mr. Price.) Tell us about it.

(Mr. Anstey.) You can now recollect ? He came up to the door.

28,775. Who did ?—Mr. Paul Reed, Robert Fletcher, Mr. Kinglake, and Sir John Shelley. I think that was the four. And I said, "Well, you do not expect me to vote for you ?" or some words to that effect. I said, "I suppose you mean to pay me a compliment by canvassing me." That might not have been the precise words, but they were to that effect. I addressed myself more particularly to Sir John Shelley, and said, "As for you, sir, your programme won't do for me." He said, "Programme, what do you mean." I said, "You vote for the ballot, and a large extension of the suffrage, and I don't agree with it." "Ah, my fine fellow," he said, "I have advocated the ballot for years before you were born," or "years before, when you were a child," or something of that kind. And then Paul Reed came up, and said, "Well, Mr. "Temblett, if you don't like the programme of the "vote by ballot and extension of the suffrage, what "do you say to a little sugar ?" and walked off with the same,—the whole lot. He took me by surprise. I did not say a word to him then. In fact he was gone out of sight, and I had no chance. During the day I thought over the matter, and I did not exactly relish it. At that time Kinglake and Shelley's committee-rooms were two doors from my house, an house between. I thought to myself, "I suppose Mr. Reed will be up to attend the committee by and by, to state the result of the canvass at the committee meeting." So I waited at my door to see if he came up. Just before he came to the door, Mr. Robert Bussell came across from the lane, and spoke to him. They were in consultation for a short time. I do not know what about ; it may have been about business. And as Robert Bussell drew off from him I went towards him, and I then said, "Mr. Reed, I want to say a word to you about what passed between you and me this morning." Mr. Bussell was there. He had not gone a yard or so, and he immediately came back, and joined us, and heard all that took place. So I repeated what he had said to me, and I said, "I should like to know what you mean by it." I said, "Did I ever give you any cause whatever to say such a thing to me ? I look upon it as a great insult." He said directly, "I "assure you, Mr. Temblett, I never meant it as such. "I have known you and your father for years, and I "should be very sorry to say a word to insult you "or annoy you in any way, and I must beg to apolo-"gize, if you take it in that way." The reason why Mr. Robert Bussell was not called to support that evidence in London I do not know. He never was called by Mr. Smith for that, and I think the reason he gave was, that Mr. Bussell had been called so many times into the witness box that he did not like to call him again. I think he had been in the box several times. That was the chief reason; but I stand by every word that I said there. Every word of it was true, although it was contradicted by Sir John Shelley and Mr. Paul Reed.

28,776. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes; you are quite right. You were not examined until after Robert Bussell had been examined for the last time. He was not called again ?—He was not called.

28,777. (Mr. Price.) Well, now, is there anything else you have got to tell us, because we rely upon your giving us the fullest information ?—I will tell you what I wish to say in passing. I heard the evidence of Thomas Jefferies yesterday. He wished to impress upon you that he was a man that took but little part in elections. Now there are very few men in the town that take much more part, both in municipal elections and others. I do not mean to say in paying money, but in getting voters up to the poll.

28,778. (Mr. Price.) He is a bribed man, and the particular thing we called him about is this particular promise of money. You have never known him ?—Never known him promise any. I will tell you what I have known him do at municipal elections.

28,779. He does not deny that he was an active partisan ; but you have never known him as a person dealing with money ?—Oh no, I never did. I suspected as much, but find out now———.

28,780. We have got that. Did he take any part in elections ? He said he did not ?—Oh yes, he takes a very active part. It is well known to every one in the town that he did.

28,781. Has it ever been supposed that he uses the influence of the position he holds in Browne and Company's employ ?—No doubt of it whatever. I will tell you what I have known him do at municipal elections. I have known him bring up the whole of the men in the yard, like a flock of sheep, to the poll, and immediately after they had been and recorded their votes, I know at one time particularly there was a compromise, an arrangement entered into between the Liberal party in the town and the Conservative party to put so many men into the corporation, so many Liberals and so many Conservatives; at that time there were several men that were annoyed at the arrangement, and thought they should like to have a fight, so that there were other names put up ; other persons were nominated, and when the day of election came on there was a fight for those men ; and then Mr. Brown and his partner and others had to stand by this arrangement, and the whole of those men were brought up to vote. Some would vote by the list, as they call it. Three men would be on the list for each ward, and they would come up and vote for those men, and not one out of ten, I believe, knew who they were voting for.

28,782. They were brought up by Jefferies ?—Yes.

28,783. Have you known such cases as this, that men have had lists shoved under their doors with half crowns, lists with the names of candidates, and next morning they have gone and voted for quite different people ?—I know they did, at the last election.

28,784. And the presiding alderman refused to take their votes in consequence ?—I never heard about the

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. C. Temblett.

23 Sept. 1869.

presiding alderman refusing to take their votes; but I did hear that money was put under the doors at the last election.

28,785. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear of this man asking for the vote of one of the people in his master's employment under his control at the Parliamentary election?—No; they did not want to ask them at all; they knew pretty well.

28,786. You never heard of it?—No, but they did not want to do that.

28,787. Why not?—Because they pretty well understood what they were to do, or else they would make it too hot for them.

28,788. But we have had it in evidence that on either side of the question it was believed that they were at the last election hanging back, these particular men of whom you speak, Browne's men, that they were hanging back because they wanted payment for their votes?—Yes; if they could have had payment from the Conservatives they would have voted for them.

28,789. I am drawing your attention to the facts. I wish you were not quite so quick in your answers. You have said that these persons did not want to be asked; they must go in droves as they were sent up by Browne's foreman, and this man in particular whom you named. I want you to tell me how you reconcile that with what we have in evidence, that they were holding back, and declined to go up at the last election upon the inducement which had been offered to them; that they wanted something more; wanted money?—I spoke of the municipal elections.

28,790. I am asking about the parliamentary elections. I ask you, did you ever know of their being canvassed or asked for their votes by the man Dudderidge?—No.

28,791. Then you say they did not want to be asked. I ask you how do you reconcile that with the fact that at one or two o'clock at last election they were hanging back because they wanted money, and the undue influence to which you refer was not a sufficient inducement to vote?—I suppose if money was offered for their vote they would have it, but at the same time if they could have got a good lump sum from the Conservatives ——

28,792. I said they were holding back; they could not be under undue influence if they were holding back?—Oh yes, they were just the same for all that, because they would have voted before the day was out without money if they could not have got money, —they would have voted.

28,793. Voted under that influence?—Yes.

28,794. Do you suppose that if Messrs. Browne and Co. were to sell their business, go away, and sell off to a firm as jealous on the Conservative side as they are said to be on the Liberal side, the voters would all go as a matter of course over to the Conservative side?—Yes, every one of them, I believe, would go over to a man.

28,795. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever know an instance of Messrs. Browne and Company discharging men for voting against them?—No.

28,796. Very few ever did, as far as we can make out?—I will tell you. It is like this: they make it hot for them in this way, that, supposing a man should go and vote according as he thought proper, they would say nothing to him at the time, perhaps several weeks would go on, and then, although he may be a very good man, and do his work very well, the foreman would begin to find fault with him, and if the man had got any "go" in him at all he would not stand it, he could not put up with it. He would get at loggerheads with his foreman, and then he would go for cheeking him.

28,797. Like Luckes?—Like the man Luckes; he would be told "you have been loafing on shore."

28,798. Who is the Browne and Company on the Conservative side who does exactly the same thing?—I do not think there is anything of the kind.

28,799. Who is the Browne and Company?—Hennett and Spink.

28,800. I suppose they do exactly the same thing?—No, I do not think they do, because there were 30 at the last election voted for the Liberals.

28,801. Out of how may?—Out of 120 or more.

28,802. (Mr. Price.) 30 out of 120 voters, or 120 workmen?—30 out of 120 voters; I should think there is about 120.

28,803. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean to say you believe there is a particle of distinction between the way in which intimidation is practised on the one side and on the other?—Not very much distinction.

28,804. (Mr. Anstey.) But you see, Mr. Temblett, Mr. Cook has been called here, and he says, after reading over what he himself prepared, the instructions to counsel for Mr. Vanderbyl at the trial of the last election petition, he says that there is only one or two at the most three establishments at Bridgwater in which labour is employed which are Conservative, and that at those three places there is an influence which prevents either the employers or the persons who have control over the workmen from influencing the voters, and therefore he concludes that the advantage is on his (Mr. Cook's) side, Mr. Vanderbyl's side, in all the other places, because there the voters go according to the politics of their employers?—I believe the advantage is on the Liberal side.

28,805. Therefore there is not a pin to choose between the two. This is what he says: I will draw your attention to the last answer: "The whole of the "manufacturers are Liberals, with the exception of "Mr. Charles Major, who does not influence a single "voter in the employ of the firm, but, on the con-"trary, the employées usually vote Liberal." That is Mr. Cook's admission as to Mr. Major's establishment. Well then he says that Messrs. Hennett and Spink, the iron founders, until the last election, used their influence largely for Conservatives, but through their connection, through their large engagements with Mr. Vanderbyl in commerce, which enable him to give the principal orders, that influence has been to a great extent neutralized too?—That is about it.

28,806. Then there is another establishment called the Carriage Sheds, used for the manufacture and repair of the carriages of the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company; that would be a place where voters are likely to be influenced by the Conservative side, but for the fact that the manager is Captain Henry Bridges, who, although a Conservative, is favorable to Mr. Vanderbyl, and bound himself by a promise to that gentleman, that although he would not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, because he had a vote for the candidate, and intended voting for the Conservatives there, yet he would afford every facility to forward his election. Do you know that to be so?—I think there is a good deal of truth about that, and I will tell you what I think the cause of it. Mr. Bridges was annoyed when there was a batch of magistrates made at one time, and thought he ought to have been one, and was not. I think he ought to have been one, for he rendered more service to the party, and if they ought to be made for political services no man had rendered better services than he had.

28,807. That is why he withdrew his influence on the Conservative side?—I believe so; I do not believe he withdraw his influence altogether.

28,808. Is it true, as stated here, that there were as many as 200, or nearly 200, persons at that establishment who were under his immediate command as Captain of the Rifle Corps, all paid by the company?—I believe so.

28,809. And you say you think it is true, as Mr. Cook states, that he promised to afford every facility to forward Mr. Vanderbyl's election; and now are you aware that that was done in open disobedience of a printed notice which we had in evidence which had been issued by the company just before the election under the name of the secretary, to persons employed, that they would be expected to vote as they pleased, and that no influence would be allowed to be exercised over them?—I do not think he intended any, if he could.

28,810. I am speaking of the pledge which is said to have been given to Mr. Vanderbyl that he would afford every facility he could to forward his election. You said just now that was about it. Now are you aware if he gave any such pledge as that it must have been in open violation of the notice put forth by the company?—Certainly it was.

28,811. Therefore now you are of opinion that it came to a question, not of bribery, but of influence exercised by the employers of labour over the employed, there is a very great distinction between the facilities and that kind of thing enjoyed by the Conservative party and those enjoyed by the Liberal party?—I do not understand you exactly.

28,812. If it come to a question of undue influence, and facilities of exercising undue influence over employed persons in the borough, by employers of labour, there is a very great distinction between the amount of facilities of that kind enjoyed by the Liberal party and those enjoyed by the Conservative party?—Certainly.

28,813. I only wanted to explain your answer, which seemd to me very rapidly given just now, that there was not a pin to choose between them, which appeared to me to be quite in contradiction to what Mr. Cook himself had stated. Now it appears that you agree with Mr. Cook.

28,814. (Mr. Price.) Now, is there anything else you have to state to us?—I do not know that there is.

28,815. Bearing in mind what I have told you of the discovery, if possible, of this stranger, for the present we dismiss you?—I have told you all I recollect. There is one thing I may mention. Richard Hurley gave his evidence here yesterday, and I think he said the cause of his failure in 1865 was through the Conservatives withholding their support. Now I have heard from Mr. White, whom I spoke of in my evidence before,—Mr. White of Darleigh, a farmer whom Hurley served his apprenticeship with, states,—that for years he has been under water with him, owing him money, and that the man never was in a solvent state from the time he got into business. I have heard Mr. William White say so.

28,816. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean that he is still in difficulties?—I do not know; not up to that time.

28,817. What time?—The time he failed, and paid so much in the pound.

28,818. You mean to say that you have heard that his embarrasments were not owing to exclusive dealing?—Yes.

28,819. That is what he stated, that there were bills out for exclusive dealing on the Conservative side, and that he suffered from that dealing in consequence he having voted in 1865 for the Liberals, and that by the election of 1865 he was obliged to call his creditors together?—I do not believe it to be true, for I heard Mr. White state the contrary.

28,820. Is it the fact that there were bills out?—It is a fact that there was an article published in the Conservative paper at the time.

28,821. Advocating that?—Advocating that or something approaching it, but I never heard that fact until he stated it.

28,822. In such an article as he alluded to, was that system of exclusive dealing acted on in the borough?—No, I do not think it was.

28,823. Not at all?—Well, not to the extent he would impress on your mind.

28,824. To some extent?—To some extent, no doubt it was.

28,825. On both sides?—Well, on both sides

28,826. (Mr. Anstey.) Has that system been acted on to this day, or has it been discontinued on either side or on both sides?—On both sides.

28,827. Discontinued?—No; continued now at the present time.

28,828. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that people on the Conservative side do not go into Mr. Nicholl's shop, for instance?—A great many of them do not, and merely because the man is a Liberal; and the Liberals do the same with the Conservatives.

28,829. (Mr. Anstey.) Do people go and discount bills, that by getting bills discounted for their own personal relief from claims at the Conservative bankers, they being themselves Liberals, or is it only the Conservative persons who get money advanced?—No; I think chiefly Conservatives go to Conservative bankers, and Liberals go to Liberal bankers.

28,830. (Mr. Price.) Let me ask you this? You deal in money matters in your own business; do you believe all this bribery money which has been spent in this town, as represented to us as being notorious to that fabulous individual the oldest inhabitant; do you believe the town to be a bit benefited by all this expenditure?—I should think it impossible for 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* to be brought into the town without benefiting it.

28,831. (Mr. Anstey.) A general election every three or four years, not speaking of a bye election?—Yes.

28,832. (Mr. Price.) Is it looked forward to as part of the commercial prosperity of the place?—I do not know.

28,833. (Mr. Coleridge.) As a part of the income of the borough?—Yes, I think it does some of the men a great deal of harm; they get 10*l.*, and perhaps never saw so much before, and get on the spree, and lose their work.

28,834. (Mr. Price.) That is why I asked whether you thought people were materially benefited, or it added to the material prosperity of the town, and of course the town is made up of individuals, to have this continued large expenditure?—I should think it did.

28,835. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any reason to believe that this lucrative system has had the effect which indiscriminate charity in some towns, such as Bedford, for instance, had of tempting persons to come into the town and become occupants of small tenements, in order thereby that they themselves in course of time should become the regular recipients of the money going?—No, I never heard such a thing.

28,836. But it is a fact, is not it, that small 10*l.* tenements, and now we may say smaller still, have very much multiplied of late years, that is, since the Reform Act of 1832, as compared with the increase in the number of tenements before the Reform Act?—They sprung up as a matter of necessity as the trade increased.

28,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) And as the population increased?—And as the population increased.

28,838. (Mr. Anstey.) You attributted it entirely to that?—I do.

28,839. Not to the share which the great extension of the suffrage in 1832 gave to the practice of bribery?—No, I think a great many more men might have had votes a great many, in the system of compounding. who lived in the lower part of the town, where the rates were compounded for, and consequently they did not get any vote, but thay might if they chose.

28,840. I forgot to ask you about one man in particular, an influential person, that is the person who has been examined to-day, Mr. James Wood Sully. Do you know whether it is the general impression amongst people in his employment, like that you have spoken to as being the impression with regard to those in Brown and Company's employment, that whether canvassed by him or not canvassed by him, if they do not vote according to his colour of politics, they will, be it sooner or be it later, lose their berth?—I believe they are under that impression, whatever Mr. Sully says.

28,841. Do you recollect the instance of Thomas Symes at the canvass of Westropp in 1865, spoken to by Robert Bussell before the committee of the House of Commons in 1866?—I do not remember that case.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. C. Temblet.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,842. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said just now, in answer to the Chief Commissioner, that people deal almost exclusively according to their politics here, which I believe is a custom all over the world pretty nearly. Is not it the custom here also that they deal according to their religions?—Yes.

28,843. The dissenting people go to the dissenting shops, and church people to the church shops?—That is about it.

28,854. And that is quite as marked, if not a more marked distinction, than the political one?—That is about it.

FREDERICK HARDEN sworn.

F. Harden.

28,845. (Mr. Price.) Are you landlord of the "Golden Ball"?—Yes.

28,846. We begin with 1859; is that the first election you have any practical knowlege of?—Yes.

28,847. Were you engaged then with Mr. John Murlis to get up two voters?—Well, not exactly to get up two voters.

28,848. Tell us what you were employed in?—I merely kept the book for him; I had nothing to do with money matters, and went to one or two places where he asked me to go, just to see a voter or two, to ask them whether they would vote for our side if they got 10*l.*, or something like that. That is all I know about the 1859 election. I did not pay any money or anything of that sort. I never had the handling of any money either for myself or any one else.

28,849. Did you have the handling of any money at that election?—Not at all.

28,850. Did you understand from Murlis how it was that Padwick and Westropp lost that election?—I was told afterwards that 53 he had paid had turned over the other side, and got money from the other side.

28,851. How much did he pay them?—10*l.* each.

28,852. 53?—Yes.

28,853. Had some returned the money, did he say?—Yes.

28,854. How many?—I do not know; I think Frederick Waters was one, a man of the name of Williams, out of the Hope, was another, and I cannot recollect anybody else.

28,855. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you hear what those who had returned the money had received from the other side?—I understand they had received 15*l.*

28,856. It was a sort of honour among thieves?—Yes.

28,857. (Mr. Price.) Some few had returned it; not all?—No.

28,858. Now go to 1865. Tell us what you know about the election of 1865?—I think the first I had to do with 1865 was in this hall. There was a meeting called of the Conservatives, and Mr. Westropp was to address them on the platform. At that time the heads of the Liberals came and filled up the platform. They got about two or three to one, and filled up the platform here, and Mr. Westropp was about to address the people assembled here, and Mr. Cook, the lawyer, by the side of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, pulled out a yellow handkerchief, and shook it over or close to Mr. Westropp's head, which was a signal for a row in the body of the hall. People began to hoot, and kick up a tremendous row. I came from the other end of the hall, followed by Temblett, and they tried to keep me off, or shove me off the place. John White, the old gentleman, gave me one shove, I recollect, but however we managed to get up and clear them off.

28,859. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean there was a regular fight?—Yes; a regular row.

28,860. (Mr. Price.) Who were on the platform on the Liberal side?—Mr. Henry Nicholls.

28,861. That is the draper?—Yes. Dr. Sewell, Mr. Robinson, the brewer, who was named the other day. Mr. Searle, I think. I cannot remember them all; however, old Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was here.

28,862. A few of the celebrities?—Yes.

28,863. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was the ringleader?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, assisted by Mr. James Cook; those were the two ringleaders.

28,864. Was that meeting called for the purpose of meeting to hear Mr. Westropp explain his principles?—Yes; after the Liberals had had theirs.

28,865. And they thought it right to come and get you out?—We wanted fair play, that was all. Mr. Richard Smith was with our party, with Mr. Westropp and others, and I, in getting up here on the stage was knocked off three times, I think, down here, and was assisted up once or twice by old Mr. Smith, and then he got knocked off once or twice, and I helped him up, and a mutual friendship sprang up from that time between us, and that is how I came to be engaged in these matters.

28866. Was there any regular assaulting?—I was summoned for an assault by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, but acquitted. I was not near him within two yards.

28,867. (Mr. Price.) What was the end of the assault? There was a whip up of the Liberal magistrates?—Yes; all the Liberal magistrates, but they acquitted me.

28,868. (Mr. Anstey.) And of the Conservatives too?—No; not one; they purposely kept away.

28,869. How was that?—I do not know, because they left them to do what they liked.

28,870. Probably at this time the Liberal magistrates were in a majority, anyhow?—We could have got one or two Conservative magistrates, but I understood that they purposely kept away to see what they would do with me.

28,871. Was there at that time a majority of Liberals in the commission of the peace?—I do not know.

28,872. If there was a majority of Conservatives, I cannot understand how they could serve you by keeping away?—I will tell you, then. This summons was taken out by the Liberal party, and they determined to let the Liberal party do what they liked with it.

28,873. (Mr. Coleridge.) On whose information was it?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's.

28,874. (Mr. Price.) Tell us the history of it; what became of the assault case?—I said I was acquitted. We had a shorthand writer here, to go further if I had been committed. Mr. Smith engaged a Mr. Trenchard, of Taunton, and got a shorthand writer to take down the whole evidence, so as to take it to a higher court, if I had been committed.

28,875. (Mr. Coleridge.) With a view to an action for malicious prosecution?—Yes.

28,876. (Mr. Price.) What was done?—I was acquitted, and never heard any more of it. I did not pay anything.

28,877. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you not pay your own lawyer?—Not a penny.

28,878. Who defended you?—Mr. Frederick Trenchard of Taunton.

28,879. (Mr. Price.) Now give us the history of this; that brought you into connection with Mr. Richard Smith?—Yes. I forget the day the 1865 election was on. Can you tell me the day of the week the 1865 election came on? It was Westropp, Shelley, and Kinglake's. However, on the Sunday following this, Mr. Tom. Boys came to me, and told me a gentleman would wait upon me at my house in the evening on the Sunday. He came; and, I think, the same night Temblett, Jarman, and William Heal, and Boys were all there.

28,880. (Mr. Price.) Describe this man as nearly as you can?—I should think he was about 5 feet 6; round features, rather good looking, and full at the chest.

28,881. Dark? — Darkish, not very dark; dark whiskers and moustache. He seemed to be a Parliamentary agent, or something of that I should think he was, by his conversation with me at different times. He seemed to say he knew all about different places where he had been engaged.

28,882. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is what we want to know. Where did he say he had been?—I cannot name the places, but a lot of places. He said he had been all over England.

28,883. Cannot you recollect any?—I cannot tell you one single place.

28,884. Not one?—No.

28,885. (Mr. Price.) Did he lisp at all in his talk?—Not the slightest.

28,886. (Mr. Anstey.) Were the places which he had been to Parliamentary boroughs?—Yes.

28,887. Where there had been elections?—Parliamentary boroughs; he had been engaged in that sort of work, he said.

28,888. All over England, north, south, east, and west?—Yes.

28,889. Or only in the west of England, or the south, from what you recollect of the names; for instance, if he told you Newcastle, you would have known it was in the north of England?—I do not think he mentioned that one.

28,890. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he mention Totnes?—No; I think he mentioned Liskeard as one of the places.

28,891. And Helston?

(Mr. Anstey.) Lancashire, Yarmouth?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Or Windsor?

(Mr. Anstey.) Any place in the west country?—I cannot remember. He mentioned a list of places.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Gloucester?

28,892. (Mr. Anstey.) Though you do not remember the names of the places, perhaps you can remember whether those which he did mention were all places which appeared to you to be in what you call down here the west country?—I do not remember. They were all places where bribery was carried on; I know that.

28,893. (Mr. Price.) Barnstaple? — Yes, such places.

28,894. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say he was at Barnstaple?—I cannot say.

28,895. (Mr. Price.) Tiverton?

(Mr. Anstey.)

—I do not know.

28,896. (Mr. Coleridge.) Dartmouth, Ashburton?—He said that was his business. He went all over. He said, "I am engaged in this constantly."

28,897. (Mr. Anstey.) Launceston, Falmouth?—I cannot remember.

28,898. (Mr. Coleridge.) When he said he was engaged in this constantly, engaged in what?—Going about with such men as ourselves, getting up lists, and paying money; because he complimented us, I remember. I was a teetotaller at the time, and we kept up nearly all night, working these lists, till very late, and he said he never had a better lot of men to work in his life.

28,899. (Mr. Coleridge.) He brought his wife with him?—He did the second time.

28,900. (Mr. Price.) Had he any luggage?—I do not know; he never lodged at our house; he stayed at our house during the day of the election.

28,901. Was there any mark or initial on his linen?—He had some on his cigar case, but I cannot remember what.

28,902. "W?"—I think one letter was "G."

28,903. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was his name Grant?"—That I cannot tell. I addressed my letters to Humphries, Mapleson, and Matthews, Moorgate Street, London.

28,904. What number in Moorgate Street?—The Post Office.

28,905. Did you ever address him in Parliament Street?—No.

28,906. (Mr. Anstey.) Those names were not the names of the firm; three different names he went by at three different elections.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And addressed to different post offices?—Yes.

28,907. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said Moorgate Street?—Yes.

28,908. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where else?—St. John's Wood, I think.

28,909. Post Office?—Yes, always the Post Office.

28,910. (Mr. Price.) Would you know him again?—Yes, among a thousand. I met him in the dark at the Marble Arch,—I will tell you by and bye,—in the night.

28,911. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he any hair on his face?—Yes, as much as yours. He had a full round face, with hair nearly the same colour as your own, but not of full growth, it was cut off just under the chin. He had a sort of moustache.

28,912. (Mr. Coleridge.) An imperial rather than a beard?—Cut off from below; but he had a moustache, dark.

28,913. (Mr. Anstey.) Allowed to grow under the chin?—Yes.

28,914. And above the lips?—Yes.

28,915. But not between the lip and the chin?—No.

28,916. Cut off between the under lip and the chin?—Yes.

28,917. (Mr. Price.) When you saw this gentleman for the first time, what did you do with him?—Went into the lists, worked up the lists; and I did not know exactly for what purpose we were working up those lists, but I very soon found out what it was for, by meeting Mr. Richard Smith at the day of the nomination, that is, the old gentleman, and he said, "Now what do you think of it? I should like to "take your advice about this. Do you think we had "better lay out a lot of money on this or no." I said, "I would not; if I were in your place I would not lay out money." I was rather nervous at that time. I had not been engaged in it.

28,918. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then how came he to ask you if you had not been engaged in it?—I had not been a briber. I suppose he consulted with some others. However, at the night of the nomination this agent came again, and distributed some money to those who were there. I think Heal and Jarman went away down King Street to his lodgings to receive theirs. However, I received a parcel of money that night for myself to expend on the lists I had, because it was 10*l.* each they were to be paid.

28,919. (Mr. Anstey.) And you spoke to him, of course, repeatedly?—Oh yes.

28,920. Could you judge from his voice whether he was an English, a Scotch, or an Irishman?—English, most decidedly.

28,921. Did he appear to have a west country dialect?—He seemed more like a Londoner.

28,922. Did you observe whether he used his H's right?—Yes, I think so; there was no Cockney about him.

28,923. What made you think him a Londoner?—Because he spoke very nicely. He spoke not as the east end Cockneys.

28,924. (Mr. Price.) No peculiar dialect you could discover?—No; not the least.

28,925. (Mr. Anstey.) Why you say so is, you mean you did not discover any provincial dialect or cockneyism?—No, not the slightest.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. Harden.

23 Sept. 1869.

28,926. But you are quite sure he was English, and not Scotch or Irish?—Quite sure he was English. On the morning of the poll in 1865, I think, John Truman came to our house, and we were supposed to work together, but he kept it back, I think, while I paid the men. I continued paying.

28,927. (Mr. Price.) How much did you pay away?—I really cannot tell. I never counted the money he gave me. I only received one lot. I said to him,—he was up stairs at our house at the time,—"I have paid away all this; there are more men waiting," and he said, "It is useless letting you have more money," or something like that, "because the election is won." I remember the two Hodges came late in the day, Frederick and John Hodge, and I said, "It "is too late; we have paid away all the money, you "cannot have any."

28,928. Can you give the names of those you did pay?—I remember Abraham Frost was the first in the morning, and another, John Pole, and another, Mr. Stacey, up in Fryern Street. I cannot mention all these names. I am almost afraid to, because there are three elections in one year, and not all the same.

28,929. You must get it to the best of your belief, because we can call them, and find out which election it was. They were probably paid at two or three of them?—Supposing they should come up, and contradict me, I should be in an awkward fix.

28,930. Give it to the best of your belief; we are not asking you to swear positively; but give a list of the names to our secretary, and we must judge?—There was a man named Isaac Smith, in the first election, 1865.

28,931. Try and furnish a list of names to our secretary, and we will have them summoned, and if they say they did not get money, and if you cannot identify them when they come, there will be no blame attaching to you, if you do it to the best of your recollection?—I will prepare it.

28,932. You cannot say how much you spent at that election?—No.

28,933. After the election, did you meet the same man again by appointment at Devizes?—I did.

28,934. How long after the election was that?—I can scarcely tell; perhaps a month afterwards; something like that, because I had to collect the bills in and around the town.

28,935. Innkeepers' bill?—Innkeepers' bills and others.

28,936. Did he give you any money to pay them?—When I met him at Devizes, I was to meet him at the hotel.

28,937. When did he tell you?—He wrote to me.

28,938. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any of his letters?—Not one; I have not got any at all.

28,939. How did he sign it?—"Humphries," or one of the other names.

28,940. Did he never in any shape or way tell you where he came from or anything about himself?—No; but I think he came from somewhere about Knightsbridge; from the communication I had with Mr. Bealy Smith at one time I considered his residence was somewhere about Knightsbridge.

28,941. Do you know whether it was somewhere about Parliament Street or Victoria Street?—No.

28,942. (Mr. Anstey.) What communication did you have from Mr. Smith?—I was going to take lodgings for the witnesses for the petition, and I said I should not go unless I had the money to pay my expenses, and he said, "Well, if you are short of money," or something of that sort, "you could go to such a place, and get the money there."

28,943. What was the place?—Somewhere at Knightsbridge. I cannot recollect. I wish I could. I should like to get it out very well.

28,944. (Mr. Price.) Was it Alfred Place?—No; that was not the place.

28,945. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Smith say to you, that you were to go to Mr. Satterthwaite at Knightsbridge?—No; he did not mention that name.

28,946. (Mr. Price.) Some number of some street at Knightsbridge?—Yes.

28,947. Montpellier?—No.

28,948. (Mr. Anstey.) Brompton Road?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Earl's Court?—No.

28,949. You cannot tell?—I cannot tell. I could if I heard it, I think.

28,950. (Mr. Price.) Drayton Terrace?—No.

28,951. (Mr. Coleridge.) Montpellier Square?—No, I know that; it was not that.

28,952. (Mr. Anstey.) Anything like Redcliffe?—Redcliffe.

28,953. Or Holland Square or Redcliffe Gardens?

28,954. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or Hill Street?—That is more like it.

28,955. Just by the side of Montpellier Square?—That is like it.

28,956. (Mr Price.) Did you go there ever?—No; I did not go to take the lodgings. He got some one else to do it.

28,957. You met him at Devizes?—Yes; I went round, and collected all the bills, and took them round to him, and we sat up all night at the hotel.

28,958. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was this?—About a month or six weeks after the election of 1865; Westropp's election.

28,959. (Mr. Anstey.) You took them where?—To Devizes.

28,960. (Mr. Price.) Did he pay you there?—Yes.

28,961. How much?—He paid me sufficient to pay those bills which he considered were right; those bills which he thought were too high he said he should send some one down to pay; he should not pay the full amount.

28,962. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he give you anything for yourself then?—I had my expenses paid up there.

28,963. Nothing else?—No.

28,964. And liberal expenses, I suppose?—Yes, I received 3*l.*; but I had to pay all my own expenses.

28,965. (Mr. Price.) Did he give you 50*l.* to pay these bills?—I think it was 50*l.*

28,966. Did you pay it all away?—I paid it all away.

28,967. Were you employed in getting up evidence for the defence in the petition?—Yes.

28,968. And for the petition against Mr. Kinglake?—For the petition against Mr. Kinglake, mostly.

28,969. When you went to London about that, were you told by Bealy Smith to be at the Marble Arch at a certain hour?—Yes.

28,970. Did you go there, and meet this same stranger again?—Yes, I did, about 8 o'clock at night.

28,971. Did you adjourn from there to a public house in Oxford Street?—Yes.

28,972. And discuss the characters of some of your townsmen?—Yes.

28,973. Was he of opinion that there was some traitor in your camp?—Yes.

28,974. Or else the other side would not have got to know so much?—Yes; that is quite right.

28,975. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he point at all to who the traitor was?—He did mention several names.

28,976. Mr. Price.) There is one man who cannot be painted much blacker than he has been by himself; did he mention William Heal as one of the gentlemen?—He did.

28,977. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you mention any one to him you thought was a traitor?—No; I could not tell him at all; he knew a lot more than I knew.

28,978. Where did he learn it?—He must have learnt it from Mr. Smith.

28,979. (Mr. Anstey.) How long did you stay with this man at the public house after you left the Marble Arch?—It might have been 20 minutes or half-an-hour. We had just a glass or two; we stood in a little jug department, by ourselves.

28,980. Where did he go after he left you?—I do not know; he took a cab from the Marble Arch, and I walked across the park.

28,981. Did you hear him give any directions to the cabman ?—No.

28,982. Did he say where he was going?—No.

28,983. Did he say when he was going to see Mr. Smith again or any body else ?—No ; he told me that most likely I should see him in and out of the House of Commons during the petition, but I was not to know him.

28,984. (Mr. Price.) Did you see him ?—No, I did not. I dare say I might have seem him, but I was sent off a day or two after or the next day down here again.

28,985. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you what he was going to do down at the House of Commons ?—No.

28,986. He did not tell you he was on a Committee or anything of that kind ?—No.

28,987. Did you hear from what he said that he was a member of the House of Commons ?—No ; he was not a member of the House of Commons.

28,988. Or a parliamentary agent ?—A parliamentary agent, I should think.

28,989. Did you infer from what he said he was employed in that very affair of the petition ?—No ; he did not say. I thought he must have been, else he would not want to know this.

28,990. Did you infer from what he said that when he was about the House of Commons, if you happened to see him about the House of Commons, he would be then occupied in the matter of this petition as one of the agents or persons employed in the support of the petition ?—Well, I thought he must have something to do with it, or else he would not have said this about his going in and out.

28,991. That is what he said, "Going in and out ?" —He said, "If you see me going in and out of the House of Commons you must not know me."

28,992. He did not tell you that he was going to be a witness ?—No.

28,923. Or a mere spectator, or anything of that kind ?—No.

28,994. His expression was, "In and out" ?—Yes.

28,995. From which you inferred employment ?—Yes. He wanted to know when he met me there how I thought these people were going to give their evidence, and whether they were all right, or whether they were traitors, or something of that sort.

28,996. He did ask you those questions ?—Yes ; that is what he wanted to see me for.

28,997. Had he a list of witnesses ?—I do not know at all.

28,998. Had he the names of the witnesses ?—He seemed to have it hand pat, and did not want a book.

28,999. Did he know all about it ?—He seemed to know more than I did.

29,000. He did not ask you, for instance, who was this, and who was that ?—No.

29,001. What did he want you to tell him about giving their evidence right ? Merely that they were "traitors" ?—Yes.

29,002. He did not want you to inform him of any information which they were to swear to ?—No.

29,003. That he knew already ?—That he knew already.

29,004. It is pretty clear then, is it not, that he was some one or other connected with the parliamentary agents ?—I should think so.

29,005. The agents, I find, were Baxter, Rose, and Norton ?—That is where we went.

29,006. Who ?—I and Mr. Boys, when we went on Sunday morning, and saw Mr. Spofforth.

29,007. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did the same mysterious stranger ever go with you to Baxter, Rose, and Morton's ?—No ; the only place I ever saw him in London was at the Marble Arch.

29,008. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever mention, in talking to this man, that you had either been or were going to be at Baxter, Rose, and Norton's about business ?—No.

29,009. Did he mention them at all ?—He never brought up their names at all.

29,010. Did he know that the briefs had not been delivered ?—I cannot say.

29,011. Or had they been delivered ?—There was nothing said about it.

29,012. The only other agents mentioned in that blue book are the local attornies here, who for the purpose of the petition are described as agents, Smith and Son and Mr. John Ruddock ; the only London agents are Baxter, Rose, and Norton. Did you, putting everything you heard him say and that which you knew besides together, then suppose that he was connected with or a member of the firm of Baxter, Rose, and Norton, or in their employment ?—I did not know what to think about it. I could not think at all ; he was quite a stranger to me ; I answered what questions he asked me about these people at Bridgwater ; and that is all he seemed to want to know from me.

29,013. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you can tell us about that matter ?—About this mysterious stranger ?

29,014. At that time ?—At that time.

29,015. (Mr. Anstey.) Except this : I want to know, did Spofforth, or the person you saw at Baxter, Rose, and Norton's, ever allude to this man ?—No.

29,016. Did anybody ever allude to him besides Mr. Bealy Smith ?—Not while in London.

29,017. Not while you were in London ?—He told me at the hotel by the Victoria Station, where we were staying, to go and meet some one ; some one wanted to meet me at the Marble Arch, and I went.

29,018. After that, did you tell Smith that you had seen him ?—No doubt.

29,019. Anybody else ?—No ; I was not to tell anybody else.

29,020. You were not to tell anybody else ?—Not to tell anybody else.

29,021. (Mr. Price.) That being so, the petition took place, and Westropp was unseated ?—Yes.

29,022. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the last time, after this election of 1865, that you saw this mysterious stranger again ?—When he came down at Patton's first election.

29,023. Had you seen him between ?—No.

29,024. (Mr. Price.) Then when Mr. Patton came down here, a short time before he came down, did you see this man again ?—Yes.

29,025. He came down again ?—Yes.

29,026. A little time before Mr. Patton came ?—Yes.

29,027. Tell us what communication you had with him ?—He paid me 20*l.*, and, I think, the rest 20*l.* ; we were promised 25*l.* to work for the election of 1865. He paid us, I think, 20*l.* each all round, and he said, "I want you again for this election." I want "you," he said to me, "Temblett and Jarman," and he says, "I want Robert Bussell." And I think he said he was going to stay at Robert Bussell's house ; but, however, he said, "I do not want William Heal, Boys, or Truman, to know I am in the town, and you must not tell them I am here."

29,028. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does Robert Bussell keep an inn ?—No ; a private house.

29,029. (Mr. Price.) Where did he stay then ?—He stayed at Robert Bussell's.

29,030. How long was he there ?—I cannot tell ; two or three days, I should think.

29,031. Did he go away before the election ?—No.

29,032. He stayed over the election ?—Yes.

29,033. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had a communication with him since this Commission has been sitting ?—No ; I have not heard from him since 1866.

29,034. Do you know whether anybody has heard from him since this Commissisn ?—No ; I have never heard a word about him.

29,035. (Mr. Price.) Did you make out a list, and get 5*l.* a head for the men named in it ?—Yes.

29,036. Now, in the course of the day you found that you were behind hand ; and there was a want of 300*l.*, you have heard Temblett say ?—Yes.

29,037. Did you have the disbursement of part of that 300*l.* ?—Yes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. Harden.

23 Sept. 1869.

29,038. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us who you gave the money to?

(Mr. Price.) You must make out a list of all the names you can remember, and, as near as you can, the year you paid them, and if incorrectly as to the year the men must come and correct that. We will not take you through it now, but be prepared to hand it in. Now did you pay them after the election the 10*l.* each?—The latter part of the day there were about 30 wanted or hanging about, and this 300*l.* was laid out on 30 men at 10*l.* each, that was sufficient for the election. That was borrowed in the town.

29,039. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you contribute towards it?—No.

29,040. (Mr. Price.) Did you have anything for your services at that election?—Not until after the election.

29,041. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know how that money was repaid?—No; I heard my father subscribed a part of it.

29,042. Shortly after that, did you have a note from Temblett, telling you about Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, when I was down at Dulverton fair. I was staying at a friend's in that neighbourhood for a week; and he sent a letter to say that the great gun of Yarmouth notoriety had come down, determined to win the election; all hands would be wanted. I must come home immediately.

29,043. Did you go home?—Yes.

29,044. Did you find this unknown man, the stranger, again there?—Yes.

29,045. At the "Albion"?—Not that night; that was too late; the next day.

29,046. Where was he staying?—At the "Albion."

29,047. How did you know that this stranger was at the "Albion"?—There is no doubt that Temblett or one of them told me word for word; I cannot tell you. It was all electioneering just at that time.

29,048. (Mr. Price.) Who is the landlord at the "Albion"?—Grabham.

29,049. Is he alive?—Yes.

22,050. How long was the stranger there then?—I do not know; perhaps a couple or three days.

29,051. Did you go through the same matter, making up the lists as before?—Yes.

29,052. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he tell you at that time? We want to know something about him. What did he tell you he had come down for?—We pretty well knew that.

29,053. He said something to you, I suppose?—He wanted us to go through the lists, or something of the sort; I do not know exactly the words he used.

29,054. Did he tell you where he had come from, or anything about himself?—No.

29,055. What he was going to do?—We pretty well understood.

29,056. Did he tell you?—I daresay he did.

29,057. Then what did he say?—I cannot tell you; to look at the list and to get the money.

29,058. Did he tell you how much he had got?—I never knew and never heard.

29,059. Did he tell you what the price was to be?—Oh, 10*l.*

29,060. How much did you have from him?—At Vanderbyl's election? I cannot say; from 80*l.* to 100*l.* I think; not more. He brought down a stranger at each district to pay the money, and we were to introduce the voters to this stranger, who paid the money instead of our paying them.

29,061. Therefore you had not the control so much as at the election before?—No; I had not the control of money.

29,062. (Mr. Coleridge). Where was he to pay the money?—At Newton's, the "Three Crowns," for my district. There were men engaged by this agent to go to the public house in each district, and pay away money.

29,063. Another man besides the mysterious stranger?—Yes.

29,064. How many houses were engaged?—Three.

29,065. Who were the men engaged?—Temblett, Jarman, and myself.

29,066. There was no other stranger in the town but one?—Yes; each place.

29,067. Where did they come from?—I do not know; they were brought down by this man, no doubt; he always had one or two with him.

29,068. They were to be a kind of check, or what, to pay away as well as you?—To pay away; we were to introduce the men.

29,069. Did you go down to the "Three Crowns"?—Yes.

29,070. Who did you find there?—I saw Newton. He said he did not want my assistance, he could manage it himself. I saw Boys and one or two others there.

29,071. Buttle?—I saw Buttle later in the day.

29,072. And Haste?—That was the last thing.

29,073. Did you see a man named Buttle there?—I saw him later in the day.

29,074. Is it one of those who were before us?—The elder.

29,075. Did you offer him anything?—10*l.*

29,076. What did he say?—He and Haste were together, and I offered them 10*l.* They said they would not go for less than 15*l.* I told them I had not got the money; they must go, and they went the other side. That is all the money I had left, 20*l.*

29,077. Did you hear anything afterward from this stranger about the way the election had been lost?—Yes.

29,078. What was it?—He went down to Newton's, and he came to my house, and got my list, and went through the list, and he said, "Well, there is 20*l.*" I said, "I have got that." He said, "I shall want that, for I have several bills to pay in the town;" and I gave him the 20*l.*, and I have not seen him since.

29,079. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you get paid yourself?—A long time afterwards, after writing to Mr. Patton, and one thing and another. I had a great deal of fuss to get paid at all.

29,080. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you write to Mr. Patton yourself?—I did.

29,081. Telling him what you wanted?—Yes.

29,082. What did you tell him?—That we were engaged for 20*l.* each to act as captains; we were called to lay out the money in bribery.

29,083. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell him you were engaged in laying out the money in bribery?—Yes; that I was engaged to lay out the money in bribery.

29,084. (Mr. Austey.) That is not all you told him?—I told him we were engaged by an agent and by Mr. Smith to bribe voters, and that we were to have 20*l.* apiece for our services.

29,085. What else did you tell him; that you had not had the money?—That I had not the money.

29,086. (Mr. Coleridge.) What answer did he make to that, if any?—I received an answer through Mr. Pitman, saying, he knew nothing about it, and referring me to Mr. Smith.

29,087. (Mr. Anstey.) He said he knew nothing about it himself?—Mr. Pitman said he knew nothing about it.

29,088. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you Mr. Pitman's letter?—I have one.

29,089. Did you get a letter from Mr. Patton?—No.

29,090. How do you mean, he referred you to Mr. Patton?—I said Mr. Pitman answered the letter.

29,091. And referred you to Mr. Smith?—Yes.

29,092. (Mr Price.) Was Mr. Pitman down here on both occasions?—I do not know both, but he was the first.

29,093. Therefore you knew him as a friend of Mr. Patton's?—Yes.

29,094. This is a letter dated 3rd April 1867, signed Frederick Pitman, addressed to Mr. F. Harden, High Street, Bridgwater; "48, Castle Street, Edinburgh, Sir, The Lord Justice Clerk has requested me to say that he forwarded your first letter to Mr. Smith. His Lorship knows nothing of the matters to which you refer. Your obedient servant, Frederick Pitman." Did you in consequence of that see Mr. Smith. Yes.

29,095. Did you get your money from him?—He offered me 15*l.* for the 40*l.* I would not have it. We were engaged at 20*l.* for each election; we had worked two elections, and he offered me 15*l.* for the lot. I told him I would not have it, and then I wrote to Mr. Patton again, and this is the letter I received.

29,096. (Mr. Anstey.) The letter just read was the answer to your second letter?—Yes; the next was one like it, but I cannot find it.

29,097. (Mr. Price.) What did you do after getting that second letter?—I saw Mr. Smith again two or three times about it, and could not bring him to any terms at all. We had a row at his office, and I told him if ever he wanted any one else to work at elections he had better get some one like Mr. Heal, for if we took all the trouble, and the risk of being imprisoned, and one thing and another, and he did not pay what he had agreed to pay, I would not work another election as long as I lived, and we parted very bad friends, and I do not think I saw him afterwards.

29,098. (Mr. Price.) Was it believed in the town that Mr. Smith had a great deal of the money himself?—I never heard so.

29,099. Did you hear anybody who had stuck to any of the money?—William Heal and Newton.

29,100. (Mr. Anstey.)—Newton, on your side?—Yes; that is Vanderbyl's election. We considered he lost the election.

29,101. 200*l.* was got by Heal at this very election?—Yes.

29,102. Had Newton always been on your side?—No; he turned over in 1865.

29,103. Did you ever get paid this money?—I think I got 20*l.* or 25*l.* altogether.

29,104. From whom?—15*l.* or 20*l.* from Mr. Chapman, at Smith and Boyle's office.

29,105. Since when did you get that?—A long time after this.

29,106. A long time after you had a row with Mr. Smith?—Yes; after he went away, I think.

29,107. Was it after the election of 1868?—No.

29,108. But Mr. Smith did not go away until after 1868?—Yes, he did; I think so.

29,109. Was it just before the election of 1868 that you got this money from Chapman?—No some time before a twelvemonth, I should think.

29,110. In 1867, perhaps?—Yes.

29,111. How long was it?—Some time after this letter.

29,112. How long after you had seen Mr. Smith, and had the row with him that you got payment from Mr. Chapman?—It may have been a month or two. I cannot tell the date. I kept no account of it.

29,113. (Mr. Price.) Did you get your 20*l.* at last?—Yes. I got about 10*s.* in the pound. We were promised 40*l.*

29,114. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Smith give any reason to you besides the want of money for not paying the full demand?—None whatever. He said he was short of money.

29,115. He did not deny your statement to be true, that you had been employed in that way?—No.

29,116. And for this purpose?—And for that purpose.

29,117. (Mr. Price.) How much was it said that Newton stuck to?—I cannot tell. According to the list, he had several names put down who never had money, and he made a draw in the middle of the day. I have heard he came up in the middle of the day, and said he wanted some more, and put it in his pocket, and stuck to it.

29,118. (Mr. Anstey.) Did this stranger appear to be a man who mixed in society on the same footing as a gentleman?—Yes.

29,119. Did he visit any of the respectable families in the town on that footing?—I never heard that he visited anybody.

29,120. Did anybody ask him to dine with them?—I never heard so. He used to keep himself close.

29,121. Then how do you know he was a man that of that estate?—I knew him by his manner.

29,122. By his appearance?—By his manner.

29,123. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did he dress?—Very nicely.

29,124. A frock coat or a short one?—A sort of round coat, neither a frock coat nor a cut-away coat; he was very fashionably dressed.

29,125. (Mr. Price.) Was that the last time you had any communication with this stranger?—I think I have heard from him since.

29,126. Have you seen him since?—I considered I saw him on the Paddington platform about two months ago.

29,127. Did you know him?—I did know him, and lifted my hat to him; and he turned his face the other way, and walked on.

29,128. You did not go up and speak to him?—No; I did not run after him.

29,129. (Mr. Anstey.) He did not return your salutation?—No; he walked on, and turned away.

29,130. (Mr Price.) Did he look the same with regard to his moustache?—Just the same.

29,131. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you doing?—Just seeing a friend off to Taunton. I had come from the Wimbledon meeting.

29,132. Did he appear just to have arrived?—He seemed to be waiting for a train.

29,133. (Mr. Coleridge.) The trains do not come in the same side as they go off?—No. He was on one side and I on the other, about eight feet between us.

29,134. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he go off by a train whilst you were there?—No.

29,135. Did you see him go anywhere?—He walked off on the other platform towards London way.

29,136. He disappeared, did he?—Yes; he walked on.

29,137. You watched him till he disappeared?—I did not watch him; he passed on.

29,138. Did he pass out of your sight?—No; he was not on my platform.

29,139. He did not pass out of your sight?—No.

29,140. He was walking towards the entrance, I suppose you mean, by which you come in from London?—Yes; towards Paddington way; Hyde Park.

29,141. You did not see him quit the platform?—No, I did not. I saw he did not care to notice me, and I did not run after him to catch him by the coat.

29,142. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you know the lady who was with him?—No.

29,143. (Mr. Price.) Had you anything to do at the last election?—Nothing whatever.

29,144. Did you after the election attend a meeting at Mr. Trevor's where it was decided to petition?—Yes.

29,145. After that did you hear something was going on among the lawyers which you did not like?—Yes.

29,146. About this petition?—Yes.

29,147. With a view to a compromise?—Yes.

29,148. Did you then, with a man named Lewis, who had been a clerk to Mr. Bates, write out the heading of a petition yourself?—Yes.

29,149. Did you get that signed by about 300 people?—Over 300.

29,150. And were you deputed to go to London with it?—Yes.

29,151. What was the petition for?—To present the petition.

29,152. In case the other was got rid of?—Yes. This was not a petition to be presented to Parliament. It was just a heading to Mr. Westropp, showing the wishes of the Bridgwater people, that the petition should be presented.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

F. Harden.

23 Sept. 1869.

29,153. (Mr. Anstey.) It could not be to Parliament?—No.

29,154. (Mr. Price.) Then you went to Mr. Westropp's?—Yes.

29,155. Did you see him?—We called him out of bed in the morning.

29,156. Did he pledge himself he would go on with the petition?—Yes, he did.

29,157. Was there afterwards a meeting at Mr. Gray's office?—Yes.

29,158. Mr. Gray, the candidate?—Yes.

29,159. In London?—Yes.

29,160. Were Mr. Brice and Mr. Trevor there, Mr. J. R. Smith, and Mr. Patton?—They came some little time after we were there.

29,161. And yourself?—Yes.

29,162. What passed at that meeting?—They talked about a compromise.

29,163. Who talked about a compromise?—The lawyers, and Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Trevor, Mr. Brice, and the rest of them. Mr. Gray had seen the lawyers that morning, and he thought the offer was very fair, that Mr. Vanderbyl should resign in July, I think it was, and Mr. Westropp was to have a walk over, and all the Liberal lawyers, and all the heads of the Liberal party in Bridgwater, bar one, were to agree to it.

29,164. Who was the one?—Mr. J. W. Sully, the man who was up here this morning.

29,165. He was against it?—He was the only one in the town who was against it.

29,166. Did you also express your dislike to it?—I said I had only come up with this list, and people seemed very much bent on the petition, and I did not think it would be quite safe for us to enter on a compromise; our heads or homes would not be very safe.

29,167. What was the cause of the great desire to have the petition gone on with; merely to unseat Vanderbyl and Kinglake, or what?—Merely because there were members of the Conservative Working Men's who had been educated to politics some little time before the election, and they seemed to take the greatest interest I ever saw taken in a parliamentary contest for Bridgwater.

29,168. Were they men who had been paid?—No; they were members of the Working Men's Association.

29,169. Still they might be bribed. Were they men who took bribes at elections?—I do not know at all.

29,170. Then what was their feeling about it?—That the petition should be presented, because there was no bribery on our side, and they considered the seats were obtained entirely by bribery.

29,171. (Mr. Anstey.) That is, when you say no bribery on your side, no money actually paid?—I never heard of any treating, bribery, or promises. I think I should have known if it had come off.

29,172. There is such a thing as an expectation, and we know what that means?—I do not.

29,173. (Mr. Price.) Did you go away with Mr. Westropp?—Yes; they wanted to take Mr. Westropp down to the Tavistock.

29,174. (Mr. Coleridge.) In London?—Yes, where the Liberal lawyers, I understood, and Mr. Sealy, and some others, were waiting to see whether they could come to terms. Before we left Mr. Gray's, they offered that Mr. Vanderbyl should resign in July, I think, and Mr. Westropp was to have a walk over; but if Mr. Vanderbyl did not keep his word, then Mr. Kinglake was to resign instead, and Mr. Westropp take it. Those were the terms of compromise there, I think.

29,175. (Mr. Price.) Supposing it couid be done, and the proper thing to do, why would not that satisfy the men with whom they were acting?—Because Mr. Westropp read us a letter he had received from his brother, or a member of Parliament, stating that any compromise made was illegal.

29,176. But I say, assuming it could have been carried out, why would not that compromise have satisfied the 300 who signed with you this petition; because, assuming it to have been carried out, Mr. Westropp would have had the seat; would that have satisfied them?—I should think it would, if they could have felt themselves safe.

29,177. (Mr. Anstey.) When you talk about the enthusiasm of these Conservative working men, and their association, is not it a fact that of that association 28 members who had promised to vote for Westropp and Gray voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl? They would not have done so if they had not been bribed.

29,178. I am not asking you that; but answer my question. Do not you know the fact, that of this enthusiastic Conservative Workingmen's Association, 28 who had further pledged themselves to vote for Westropp and Gray, nevertheless ended by voting for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I said, if so, they were bribed.

29,179. Is not it a fact that they did?—No doubt. I am not aware of it. I am not aware that there were 28 at all; I heard there were some.

29,180. I am not here to discuss the matter with you, but only ask you the fact?—I am not aware of it.

29,181. (Mr. Price.) You do not know it?—No.

29,182. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know there were some?—Yes, I know there were some.

29,183. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not know that 41 of these enthusiastic new voters, including the 28, after promising Westropp and Gray, voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I did not know it.

29,184. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us about this matter?—Yes.

29,185. You will make out a list of the men?—I will try.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past ten o'clock.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Friday, 24th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

FREDERICK JARMAN sworn.

29,189. (Mr. Price.) You are a baker here?—I am.

29,190. At St. John Street?—Yes.

29,191. We begin from the earliest election, and so work down to the last. What was the first election in which you took any part as a briber, or any part at all?—In Padwick and Westropp's.

29,192. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first vote?—I really cannot say. I voted for Mansell and Follett. I think that was my first vote.

29,193. Did you get anything for your vote then?—No.

29,194. Anything subsequently?—I never had anything for my vote then or since.

29,195. Were you a briber previously to the election of 1859?—I was not.

29,196. In 1859, who was it who employed you to pay voters?—Mr. John Murlis.

29,197. Were you also to send voters to his house?—Yes.

29,198. How many men did you pay?—I remember paying four. I do not remember more.

29,199. What are their names?—John Allen, Mr. Foxwell——

29,200. William Foxwell?—William Foxwell, John Squires, and John Whiteaway.

29,201. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were these men in your employment? How came they to be singled out for you to pay?—Mr. Murlis told me the names at that time.

29,202. (Mr. Price.) How much money did he give you to pay them?—I cannot tell what he gave me.

29,203. Oh yes, you can?—I can remember what I returned afterwards; I returned 30*l.* to him after the election.

29,204. How much did you pay?—I paid 40*l.* and returned him 30*l.*

29,205. Did you get anything yourself?—No.

29,206. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing for your own trouble?—Oh, he gave me 15*l.* after the election.

29,207. (Mr. Price.) You did not stop it out of the money?—No.

29,208. (Mr. Coleridge.) You voted for the Conservatives?—Yes.

29,209. And you got 15*l.* after the election?—I voted for the Conservatives, and got 15*l.* afterwards when I returned the money to Murlis.

29,210. You got 15*l.*?—Yes.

29,211. Then you were as much bribed as any of the persons to whom you gave money. You were bribed as much as though you were actually paid for your vote at the time?—No doubt.

29,212. (Mr. Price.) Murlis gave you the 15*l.* on the squaring up of the accounts?—Yes.

29,213. Was that all the part you took in the election of 1859?—That was all the part I took.

29,214. In 1865 did you see this man who was the "stranger"?—I did.

29,215. Where did you see him?—I saw him at Harden's first; at least that is a story, he came to me here from Mr. Boys.

29,216. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you?—A baker.

29,217. (Mr. Price.) He came to your house with Mr. Boys?—Not with Mr. Boys; he told me that Mr. Boys had recommended him to me.

29,218. He told you so?—Yes.

29,219. Can you give me any description of this stranger?—He was a very good-looking man, and as nice pleasant a man as ever I was in company with in my life.

29,220. Should you know him again?—I think I should.

29,221. You saw him at your house first?—I did. He asked me if I would assist him in that part of the town in electioneering. I said, "I have no objection." Then he went away, and said he would send for me when he wanted me, and he sent for me to Hodges. I suppose I went to Hodges when I saw him.

29,222. How much did you get from him?—300*l.*

29,223. Did Heal get his money at the same time?—Yes, we went together. He saw us about the middle of the nomination night, and we followed him down to a lane called Balls Lane, which turns down into King Street; and then I saw the man go into a house to a widow there, I think named Mrs. Harding, and told us to wait a few minutes, and we did so; and he came out in a few minutes and gave me 300*l.* and gave Heal 200*l.* He said if we would poll as many as we could with that it should be all right. We went a little towards the bridge.

29,224. (Mr. Price.) You went with Heal. You say that Heal got 200*l.* and you got 300*l.*?—Quite right.

29,225. Then as you subsequently went along did Heal say anything to you?—Yes; he said, "Now we will go down to Eastover," and we walked down towards the bridge, and then he altered his mind, and said, "We will not go down there, people will think we have got something;" and we walked back, and we walked down towards his house. He said, "You have "got 300*l.*, and I have only 200*l.*, you may as well "turn over to me 50*l.* of it."

29,226. To him?—Yes; and I said, "Let us walk "down towards the 'Golden Lion,' and ask if we "can have a room to-morrow morning," and he said, "All right." We then went to Pym's, and I asked him if we could have a room, and he said we could. I then left him, and told him I would meet him at 6 o'clock in the morning at Pym's.

29,227. Did you go to Pym's at 6 o'clock in the morning?—Yes.

29,228. Did you keep the door while he distributed the money inside?—I did.

29,230. What did you do then?—Heal paid five men, and then he sent out to me to say, "I want your money." I went in and said, "My dear man, you have only paid five men." He said, "I have paid others before I left my house." I said, "Then it "was a very wrong thing for you to do. You were "not to pay a man in that district, and it was contrary "to orders."

29,231. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not believe that he had paid the men, I suppose?—I did not believe it.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

F. Jarman.

24 Sept. 1869.

29,232. Then he got some more money from you?—He got the 250*l.*

29,233. And he pretended to distribute all that?—And he pretended to distribute all that.

29,234. Did you get any more money that day?—Yes, 100*l.*

29,235. From the same stranger?—Yes.

29,236. Where was he?—At Mr. Harden's.

29,237. At the same place?—Yes.

29,238. Did you give that to Heal also?—I did not; there were certain persons that I had promised. I said, "I have promised certain persons to give them "money, and it will not look well if I do not give the "money to them."

29,239. Did you distribute that money?—I did.

29,240. How many men did you give the money to?—Ten men; one had 15*l.* and the other had 5*l.*

29,241. If you paid 15*l.* to one man and 5*l.* to the others, that was only 65*l.*?—Ten men I said.

29,242. You said one had 15*l.* and the others got 5*l.*?—Only one man had 5*l.* and the other had 15*l.*, the rest had 10*l.* each.

29,243. Can you give us the names of those men?—Yes. Vincent Case, William Matthews, John Henry Carter, James Gilchrist, James Abbott, George Attwell, Robert Preece, Samuel Lee, Henry Harris, and Edward Jarman.

29,244. (Mr. Price.) Was that all the money you had to distribute at that election?—That was every farthing I had.

29,245. Did you get anything for yourself then?—Yes, nearly a twelvemonth after.

29,246. How much?—20*l.*

29,247. About a twelvemonth after?—Yes, just before Mr. Patton's first election.

29,248. Now we come to Mr. Patton's first election. Did you see this stranger again shortly before that? Yes, I did. He sent to my house, or at least somebody came to say that he wanted to see me at Harden's.

29,249. Where was he living the second time?—He stopped at Robert Bussell's.

29,250. Did you see him there?—Yes; that is where we made out our lists.

29,251. You made out your lists again?—Yes.

29,252. What did you do?—He wanted us to promise all our men without having a shilling in hand, but I said I would not do it. Then he told me to go home, and he would send Robert Bussell in the morning. Robert Bussell came, and brought me 250*l.*

29,253. On the polling morning?—On the polling morning.

29,254. Did you get any men to go on promises?—Yes, I had a great many myself. All of them went on promises, because I do not believe I paid more than two or three that morning.

29,255. Did you pay them afterwards?—I did.

29,256. How much per head?—10*l.*

29,257. How much money did you pay away in respect of that election; you had got 250*l.*?—Yes.

29,258. How many men did you pay?—44; 46 it ought to be altogether. I let one man, Mr. Wadden, have 30*l.* out of that.

29,259. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was that?—Because he said he wanted to pay two other men.

29,260. Did he stick to it, or pay them?—I do not know.

29,261. Did the other two men complain at any time that they had not had it?—No, not a word.

29,262. (Mr. Price.) You must give us the names?—John James Quick, George Attwell, Robert Preece.

29,263. (Mr. Coleridge.) All ten-pounders?—All ten-pounders. John Sharman, James Aldridge, Henry Cooksly, Isaac Smith, Robert Coles, William Rees, William Criddle, George Kerle, Samuel Lee, Henry Sandell. I paid the son for his father. William Luxton, William Baker, Henry Harris, George Finner, Vincent Case, Edward Jarman, John Jobson, Robert Stacey, James Roberts, Edward Parsons, John Squires, Francis Dyment, James Abbott, John Irish, James Southwood, William Smart, James Gilchrist, Henry John Carter, Henry Maidment, Robert Whitfield, Richard Casely, Benjamin Stokes, William Poole. I paid the son for the father. William Poole, the younger, Abraham Hawkins, James Murlis, Stephen Price, George Dowden, John Dyer, Charles Hobbs, paid by Robert Bussell. John Baker. I lent Robert Bussell the ready money. I let Mr. Wadden have 30*l.* for two men.

29,264. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any notion where the money came from?—I have not.

29,265. I mean, were you under the impression at the time that it was Mr. Patton's own money?—No.

29,266. Or that it was found by somebody for him?—I have no idea where the money came from. I had nothing to do with him except just meeting him.

29,267. We have had a great deal of evidence about nobody being recommended for Bridgwater unless he was a rich man. I suppose it was pretty well known that Mr. Patton was not a rich man?—I do not know.

29,268. He was a Scotch lawyer, and was not very likely to be a rich man. You had no idea where that money came from?—No, I had not.

29,269. Had you any conversation with Mr. Smith in your life about it?—Never. I never spoke to him in my life. All that Mr. Smith spoke to me was after Mr. Westropp's election, and that was to send up to me for the names of some men that voted, for the evidence.

29,270. I mean was the general impression that Mr. Patton was spending his own money, or that it was found by some one?—Really I cannot say.

29,271. (Mr. Anstey.) You heard Mr. Trevor's evidence about that yesterday?—Mr. Trevor may know better than I do about it. I do not know where the money came from.

29,272. Will you listen to my question. You heard yesterday that Mr. Trevor said that Mr. Patton neither had the ability nor the inclination to raise money for bribery purposes, and he, Mr. Trevor, thought it must have been some friends of Mr. Patton who raised the money?—Yesterday?

29,273. Yes; the day before yesterday?—No, I do not.

29,274. We are not taking issue upon the day. You heard that?—Yes, I heard that.

29,275. Did you concur in that opinion or not?—I think it must have come from the gentleman himself. I should say so. I do not think a man would pay money for another man.

29,276. I do not see why there should be all this delicacy; you do not hesitate to give up the names of every man who was bribed?—I give them as far as I recollect.

(Mr. Anstey.) I cannot see why there should be more delicacy in giving up the names of those who came into the borough and brought the money, than there should be in giving up the names of those who were bribed with it.

29,277. (Mr. Price.) You have no idea in the least whose money it was?—I have not.

29,278. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it not the common report that it was not Mr. Patton's own money, but that it was sent down by the party?—I never heard any such words.

29,279. Do not the people on the Conservative side in Bridgwater inquire, as they always did on the Liberal side, who the man was that was coming down, and whether he was a rich man?—I do not know.

29,280. Can you tell us how Mr. Patton was first introduced here?—I cannot tell; Mr. Westropp came down here with him; he introduced him, I should say.

29,281. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell whether Mr. Westropp contributed anything towards Mr. Patton's election?—I do not know.

29,282. Do you know whether it was part of the arrangement that Mr. Patton at the next general election was to make way for Mr. Westropp?—No, I do not.

29,283. (Mr. Price.) He was to come here as a kind of warming pan?—What! Mr. Westropp?

29,284. No, Mr. Patton; to keep the place warm for Mr. Westropp?—It may be so; I cannot say.

29,285. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Westropp could not stand again that Parliament?—No.

29,286. He had been unseated for bribery?—Yes.

29,287. Did you ever hear that Mr. Patton would make way for Mr. Westropp as soon as there was a new Parliament?—I never heard so.

29,288. Did Mr. Westropp stay here with Mr. Patton all the time?—He did.

29,289. And went away with him?—Yes.

29,290. And was very active for him?—Yes, no doubt.

29,291. Did he canvass for him?—Yes.

29,292. Speak for him?—Yes.

29,293. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Westropp was not much of a speaker?—Not very much of a speaker; Mr. Patton was very much better.

29,294. (Mr. Price.) Were there any men at that election whom you promised, but had no money to pay them with?—There were a great many I promised.

29,295. Did you get any money afterwards, and pay them before the next election?—Certainly.

29,296. How many did you pay?—I think I have 22 on this list.

29,297. Twenty-two on the list you have handed in?—Yes.

29,298. They were paid the night before the election?—The night before the election; and they would not have been paid by this time if another election had not come on.

29,299. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you have personally felt bound to pay them, having promised them?—No, I should not like to have paid them. I had to pay them, and, as it was, I was grumbled at for having kept them so long out of their money.

29,300. Between the time that you promised them and the time that they were paid, had they been bothering you?—Yes, they had.

29,301. Can you tell us in what sort of way they did it?—They wanted to know how it was that they had not had the money, and some of them said I had had it.

29,302. Some of them accused you of having stuck to it?—Yes.

29,303. (Mr. Price.) They believed you had had the money?—Yes.

29,304. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they go to higher quarters to know if you had had the money?—No; I do not see how they could go to higher quarters.

29,305. They might have gone to Mr. Patten or Mr. Westropp?—No; I always thought it came from the "man in the moon."

29,306. One man, as we have heard, went to Mr. Harden. How much in all did you pay to those men in the list you have handed in?—470*l.* That is on the list, I think.

29,307. That would be 44*l.* altogether?—44*l.*

29,308. One man having got, you say, 30*l.*?—One man having had 30*l.* to pay to two voters.

29,309. Which he had to account for?—Yes.

29,310. What did you get for yourself at that time?—I never got anything for it.

29,311. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not at the time, but afterwards; altogether?—We got nothing at all till afterwards.

29,312. What did you get for your trouble?—I say we never got anything till a long time after the last election was over.

29,313. You got it before Vanderbyl's last election?—After the last election.

29,314. What did you get then?—I have always believed, that is my impression, that I got 15*l.* from Smith's clerk, and 5*l.* from Mr. Lilly.

29,315. That is your impression?—That is my impression; my impression is, it was 20*l.* altogether; I know I had 5*l.* from Lilly.

29,316. And 15*l.* from Smith?—That is my impression, 20*l.*

29,317. They say you had 25*l.*?—Mr. Smith's clerk said he paid me 20*l.*, but I recollect but 5*l.*

29,318. Now we come to the election of Mr. Patton. Did you see the "stranger" then again?—Yes.

29,319. Where at?—At the "Albion."

29,320. How much did you get then?—I did not get so much then.

29,321. How much did you get; just tell us?—He would not undertake to do so many, and therefore he sent the stranger down to the "Golden Lion" to pay some.

29,322. He would not undertake to pay so many men?—No.

29,323. How much did he pay you?—240*l.*

29,324. Amongst how many men was that distributed?—25. It is here (referring to a list.) They had 10*l.* apiece.

29,325. If they had 10*l.* apiece there is 10*l.* short?—Yes, I will explain that.

29,326. Give us the names of those men?—John James Quick, George Attwell, Robert Preece, John Sharman, Henry Cooksley, Isaac Smith, William Luxton, William Baker, Vincent Case, John Irish, James Southwood, James Gilchrist, Henry John Carter, William Matthews, Stephen Price, William Evans, paid by Mr. Pole; John Pole, James Abbott, George Finner, Robert Richards, William Poole, paid the son; William Poole the younger, and Robert Whitefield.

29,327. (Mr. Price.) That is all, is it?—That is all.

29,328. Was there one man who got 10*l.* from you and afterwards voted for Mr. Vanderbyl?—There was.

29,329. Who was that?—William Matthews.

29,330. Do you know whether he got money for Mr. Vanderbyl as well?—He came to the "Clarence" hotel and said he had got 25*l.* I said, "You had "better go and poll for us, Matthews, and come and "take the money." He came a second time, and whether he got the money from me the second time or not I do not know.

29,331. Did he give the 10*l.* up to you that he had got from you?—No, he did not.

29,332. Was there any man who voted for you in the first election of 1866 that voted for you in the second election?—There was. I could tell from my list. I think it was about seven or eight. I can tell you the names. I have got them marked down. (The witness handed a paper to the shorthand writer.)

29,333. (Mr. Price.) What is it you handed in to the shorthand writer?—The list of the men at Mr. Patton's first election.

29,334. The first 44 men?—Yes.

29,335. It is out of this list that you can pick the men that voted for Mr. Vanderbyl a second time?—Yes.

29,336. Tell us about how many there were; give us their names?—I do not know what their names are. I think there were about seven or eight; I think so. I could tell you if I had the list.

29,337. Was it after that election that you got this 25*l.*, as it is said, but which you suppose to be 20*l.*?—It was.

29,338. But before the last election?—Oh yes, it was; eight men.

29,339. Give their names?—Charles Haste, George Crane, Henry Harris, John Jobson, James Roberts, John Squires, John Dyer, and John Baker.

29,340. Is that all you can tell us about the two elections of 1866?—No. I have not explained the 10*l.* After I paid this list I went to the "Golden Lion," and saw the "stranger," not the "man in the moon," but one of those who paid.

29,341. An underling?—Yes.

29,342. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many underlings had he?—I think he had three. I will not be certain.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

F. Jarman.

24 Sept. 1869.

29,343. (Mr. Price.) One at the "Albion"?—Yes; one at the "Three Crowns," and one at the "Bull and Butcher." I went down and saw this man. I says, "I wish you would go up and see your master, for I cannot get the men to poll." "For why?" he says.

29,344. Did these men seem to be the clerks for the "man in the moon"?—No, they did not.

29,345. What did they seem like?—They seemed to be got for the purpose of doing the work; they did not seem much like clerks.

29,346. (Mr. Coleridge.) As assistants rather?—As assistants.

29,347. (Mr. Price.) Did you know any of their names?—No, I did not hear the names.

29,348. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were not Bridgwater people, I suppose?—No.

29,349. (Mr. Price.) Somersetshire people?—I do not know about Somersetshire; they seemed to me up-country people. I went up and saw him at the "Albion." He said, "How are you going on?" I says, "I cannot get the men to poll." "For why?" says he. "Why," I says, "they can get 20*l.* or 25*l.* "on Mr. Vanderbyl's side, and we cannot get them to "go for 10*l.*; we can for 15*l.*, if you will let me do "that." He says, "I cannot, for I have not the cash in hand; let me look at your book;" and he had my book, and he says, "Some you have not paid." I says, "I do not know about that; I have 10*l.*" He said, "It is very lucky; there are two men in the large room down underneath." I says, "Tell me their names." He says, "Vincent Case." I said, "He has had 10*l.*" "Well," he says, "he will not go under 5*l.* more, and William Webb." I said, "He does not belong to me, he is not in my district." He says, "Never mind that."

29,350. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was not one of your parishioners?—Not one on my list; so I went down under and distributed the two 5*l.*, 10*l.* altogether, one to Case and the other to Webb.

29,351. (Mr. Price.) You gave that 5*l.* to this other man?—I did give 5*l.* to Case, who had the 10*l.* before, and 5*l.* to Webb. I do not know whether he had his money before.

29,352. That accounts for your 10*l.*, because you paid 25 men?—23 I paid.

29,353. That is the other two?—Yes.

29,354. Is that all you have to tell us about those two elections of 1866?—Well, I do not remember anything else at all.

29,355. At the last election, were you employed at all?—I was not.

29,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not told us yet how it was that you first got led into this bribery business?—I have.

29,357. How?—Mr. John Murlis asked me.

29,358. Is there any reason why he should have thought you a fit person to do it?—No; he knew me very well, living in that part of the town.

29,359. Had he, on a former occasion bribed you himself?—Never in his life.

29,360. Then there is no reason you can give why he should hit on you as being a likely person to put yourself in all this peril for the sake of 20*l.*?—Not as I can give any reason.

29,361. (Mr. Price.) You were a master baker at this time?—I was.

29,362. And in a respectable position in the town?—For what I know, and am now at the present time too, but for this bribery work.

29,363. Did not it strike you as being a very revolting thing to do?—No, it did not.

29,364. That you, a respectable man, should be employed to do all this dirty work?—No, I did not think of it at the time.

29,365. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you done anything at municipal elections in the way of bribery?—Never in my life. I gave away a little drink myself once, when I was elected, 29,366. How much?—I think, for clerks and everything, it cost me about 5*l.* or 6*l.*

29,367. That was when you were elected?—When I was elected myself.

29,368. Which began to be employed first, you, on the Tory side, or Henry Jarman, on the Liberal side?—I cannot say.

29,369. Is he any relation of yours?—Yes, third cousin, I think.

29,370. You know that he has been about as active on the Liberal as you have been active on the Conservative side?—Yes.

29,371. Which began first, you or he; which set the example?—I cannot answer you that question, because I do not know when he began.

29,372. Did you follow his example?—I did not.

29,373. You knew, I suppose, that he was at that work?—I did not.

29,374. Never?—Never.

29,375. Never, until you entered this hall?—I heard, of course, that he was very busy, but not in the bribing, because I never heard he bribed people.

29,376. You know there was a question about him at the last election?—Yes, I heard that at the hall.

29,377. Before we came here you had heard that?—No, not until the last election.

29,378. Had you never heard that he was engaged in bribing practices at the election of Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866?—I was never aware he was a briber.

29,379. Did you never hear of it?—There may be such things talked about.

29,380. You said just now you did not?—I never heard it until in this hall.

29,381. (Mr. Price.) At the last election you say you had nothing to do?—Nothing at all.

29,382. Did men come and ask you whether there was any money going?—There were several.

29,383. What did you tell them?—That I had not heard anything about it, and I had not got anything to do with it.

29,384. Who had told you there was going to be no money spent at the last election?—I never heard no more than what the men, when they came from the "Clarence" hotel that morning, said.

29,385. Were you present at the meeting?—No.

29,386. What did the men say?—They said no money was going, and I said, "You had better go to "the poll like men." I never went out of my house till 11 o'clock that day to go to poll.

29,387. Is that all you have to tell us about the last election?—Yes.

29,388. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to have nothing to do with the last election?—The fact is I was very ill. I had the bronchitis, and could not go out.

29,389. Had they asked you to have something to do with it?—No, no one ever came to me at all.

29,390. (Mr. Price.) Can you give any clue as to who this man is in London?—I cannot. I wish I could. I would do it in a moment if I could. I was never with him no more than just the night before the election, and had my money from him. Harden and Temblett were mostly with him.

29,391. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, at any of the elections you have been speaking about, used influence over his tenants and people in his employment?—I do not.

29,392. You make me put the question two or three times by answering it quickly. Did you hear at any of the elections whether Mr. Joseph Richard Smith used any influence over his tenants or workmen to induce them to vote for the Conservatives?—Not until I was in this hall.

29,393. You never heard of the case of a man called John Pitman, in 1866, who was threatened with notice to quit if he did not vote for Mr. Patton, and whose rent he actually raised 7*l.* by the way of keeping him in control?—Pitman the butcher over here, I imagine. I never did.

29,394. Have you heard any case of undue influence at that time, perhaps they may be considered lawful influences down here, but influences which I call undue influences, on your side of the question at any election?—No.

29,395. A screw put on debtors by creditors, tenants by landlords, and on persons in employ by their employers?—No.

29,396. Have you heard of any cases of persons being dismissed from their employment and ejected from their tenancies, or made to pay up debts after the election by reason of their having voted on the other side?—Since I have been in the hall. That is all I have heard. The fact of the matter is that when I had done the list I had done with electioneering.

29,397. (Mr. Price.) And it would have been a very good thing for you if you had never done that?—Yes it would.

29,398. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all you have to tell us?—I do not know anything. If I do know of anything I shall be happy to tell you.

(Mr. Price.) Then you will give in your lists.

JOHN TRUMAN sworn.

J. Truman.

29,399. (Mr. Price.) You are a fishmonger?—Yes.

29,400. Carrying on business in this street?—Yes.

29,401. Are you a Conservative?—Yes.

29,402. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

29,403. Perhaps you had better begin with the earliest election; what was the first election you voted at?—Westropp's, in 1865.

29,404. That was the first time you voted?—Yes.

29,405. How was it you did not vote here before?—I did not apply to be on the register for years.

29,406. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you formerly been on the register?—No.

29,407. (Mr. Price.) Were you keeping the same shop as now?—No; I lived in Fryern Street for 14 years.

29,408. Was yours a house which would give you qualification?—Yes.

29,409. But you did not care about it?—I had it before I left.

29,410. How long have you been resident in Bridgwater in a house which would give you a vote?—I have been in Bridgwater 32 years.

29,411. Have you had a qualification all that time?—No; I suppose about 15 or 16 years.

29,412. In 1865 you were qualified?—Yes.

29,413. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was your reason for not getting on the register before?—I was from home on one occasion, and was not here to claim my vote.

29,414. Had you never claimed your vote before the revising barrister?—Oh yes.

29,415. Then why had not you got it?—I was out of town once, and previous to that the house I was living in was not sufficient to give me the vote until I laid out some money, and I pulled it down and rebuilt a portion.

29,416. It was not 10*l.* a year?—No.

29,417. (Mr. Price.) Did you put yourself on the register as soon as you could?—Not as soon as I could by one year, because I was out of town.

29,418. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your present house of course is above 10*l.*?—Yes.

29,419. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 you were qualified?—Yes.

29,420. Tell us what part you took in the election of 1865; did you vote?—Yes.

29,421. Who for?—Westropp.

29,422. Did you get anything for it?—No.

29,423. Were you promised anything?—No.

29,424. Did you receive anything in the shape of services or expenses?—I did after the election.

29,425. Tell us what you got for your services?—I was along with Mr. Harden all through the election, assisting him in bribing.

29,426. Did you have money entrusted to you by Harden or anybody, or simply go with Harden?—I had money given me by the "stranger."

29,427. How much did he entrust you with?—He supplied me with 200*l.* in packages.

29,428. Do you supply him with fish?—No.

29,429. Have you any idea who he is?—Not any more than I have given you. I have seen him five or six times altogether, and should know him if I saw him.

29,430. He gave you 200*l.*?—200*l.* at first.

29,431. Did you pay that all away?—I paid that all away at Harden's house.

29,432. When you say "Harden's," do you mean the man who has been examined here?—Yes; there were six of us.

29,433. The "stranger" was lodging at another Harden's house, I believe, a widow?—Yes, in Balls Lane, now called King Street.

29,434. How many men did you pay with that 200*l.*?—Twenty.

29,435. 10*l.* each?—10*l.* each.

29,436. Give the names?—Parminter, I forget his christian name; Lawrence Dare, stonemason; Charles Mogridge, John Mogridge—that is father and son; Captain Brooks——

29,437. (Mr. Coleridge.) A sea captain?—Yes. Abraham Frost; William Jarman; Joseph Southard, he lives in George Street; Galter, Fryern Street; William Harwood. Now there is 50*l.* I gave to Robert Newton, who is now in America. I can give the names of those he had the money to pay.

29,438. (Mr. Price.) It is supposed that he stuck to it, is it not?—No, I think not the whole of it; some of the men are living now. William Stone, Back Street; John Richards, butcher, Back Street; Charles Lear, senior, hairdresser; Charles Lear, junior, hairdresser—the father is dead I believe; and William Crocker, I believe he is dead. That is the five.

29,439. That would exhaust the 50*l.*?—Yes.

29,440. Do you know from these men that they have had it?—Those alive I should think so. I think Richards and Stone will say that they had it, and Lear, what are now living; the others I cannot of course say. Then I paid Jarman 40*l.* for four voters.

29,441. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you believe they got it?—I do not know. I will give the names; Charles Haste, Silver Street——

29,442. (Mr. Price.) The man who has been mentioned over and over again?—Yes. Stacy, I do not know what street he lived in; and Haste, Albert Street; Oliver, Fryern Street. That is the 20*l.*

29,443. How much does that make altogether that you had?—200*l.*

29,444. That exhausts the 200*l.*?—Yes.

29,445. Had you any more?—Yes.

29,446. How much?—I cannot say how much more was given me; there were several other parties came in after Heal stuck to that money, and I think some money would have been given to Edward Phillips; he was not up soon enough, and parties came up from the lower part of the town and I gave it to them. I can give some of the names, but not the whole.

29,447. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were out of your own district?—Yes. Heal had a few to look to up at this part of the town, and Edwin Phillips had his, I think, but he was not up in time. There were two Poles in Eastover; I do not know their names; one keeping the "Exeter Inn," and the other a tailor, if I recollect right. Irish, working for Mr. Sealy at that time, and Hayward the hairdresser; I think he had money from two parties. That is all at present I can recollect.

29,448. When did you first know that Heal had stuck to the money?—About half-past 9 in the morning.

29,449. You knew it the same day?—Some of the parties on his list came to Harden's.

29,450. Was nothing done by the party to try and make him disgorge?—No, I think not.

29,451. They were afraid of his turning round on them?—I expect that was it.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

J. Truman.

24 Sept. 1869.

29,452. (Mr. Price.) You cannot tell us how much money you had?—Not the second time. Harden went to the "stranger" upstairs.

29,453. Did you pay away all you received?—Every penny.

29,454. You are quite sure of that?—Yes.

29,455. What became of your book?—Harden had the book, and of course his was there, and he asked me when the election was over to take charge of all the books. I looked over his sometimes, and he over mine.

29,456. He would have the account there?—Yes.

29,457. Which you rendered?—He would have the 20 names, and I saw Harden's book.

29,458. Was that all the money you had at that election?—Yes.

29,459. What did you get yourself for your services?—Before Patton's election this stranger came again and gave me 10*l.*

29,460. Before Patton's first election?—Yes. I should have stated that he said when all was done he should make each of the individuals a present, but he did not say the amount.

29,461. Did you go up to London about the petition at all?—No; I was not subpœnaed upon the petition.

29,462. Then Mr. Patton came down?—Yes.

29,463. Were you employed again at that election?—No.

29,464. Not at all?—No.

29,465. In no way?—In no way at all.

29,466. How was that?—I do not know; I have no idea.

29,467. Had there been any quarrel between you and the "man in the moon"?—No; Harden seemed to be rather dissatisfied. Some parties were going to split on him, and because I would not go up to London and back him. I told him I would not go unless I was subpœnaed, and I told Mr. Bealy Smith the same. I was in London on the Somerset and Dorset Railway Bill, who were getting a new branch, and Mr. Bealy Smith wanted me to stop there.

29,468. What did he want you to say?—I did not know. I said if I was subpœnaed I would tell the truth.

29,469. You said something about backing up?—Yes, there was Harden and someone I forget now. He said, "You can clear me." I said, "I do not know."

29,470. How were you to back up Harden?—Supposing this party were to split on him, I understood from the men at Mr. Smith's office that I had not seen the man, which of course I could not have done.

29,471. You were to say he was not the man?—That is what they wanted me to back up.

29,472. That is, to perjure yourself?—Yes.

29,473. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said someone from Mr. Smith's office?—I saw Mr. Bealy Smith. When I came up to the office I was sent for.

29,474. Who came for you?—I do not know; I do not know the party.

29,475. (Mr. Price.) Do you know which clerk it was?—I do not know the name; but when I came up there was part of the evidence drawn out.

29,476. (Mr. Coleridge.) Must it have been one of the two or three clerks there?—Yes.

29,477. Are they all there now?—No, one or two have left since that election.

29,478. Can you find out?—I cannot tell; I may.

29,479. (Mr. Price.) That is as grave an offence as there could possibly be, because it is subornation of perjury?—I could not understand why I was subpœnaed.

29,480. Do you mean to say they really proposed to you, Mr. Bealy Smith or some of the clerks?—Not the clerks did not propose.

29,481. To forswear yourself?—Not the clerks.

29,482. Bealy Smith himself?—There was a man spoken of by Harden; he had been to Mr. Bealy Smith.

29,483. What part did the clerks take in it?—No part; only to come and fetch me.

29,484. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who?—I cannot recollect.

29,485. Did the clerk who came tell you what for?—No; I was to come up and see his master.

29,486. (Mr. Price.) Then it was with his master that this passed?—Yes.

29,487. That you were to go up and forswear yourself?—There was a paper drawn up—some voter in West Street. I told Mr. Bealy Smith I should not go and speak for him, because if the man was seen there of course I should not deny it; and I was asked again while in London.

29,488. You have no hesitation—because this is a matter which we shall take care to report upon—you have no hesitation in saying you were sent for to Mr. Bealy Smith's, and your understanding was that you were to be asked to go to London and back Harden up if he said such and such a man had not received a bribe?—Yes, that was it.

29,489. You knew he had received it?—Yes; I was asked while in London; I think while the petition was pending.

29,490. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Bealy Smith a solicitor?—Yes.

29,491. And still on the rolls?—I do not know.

29,492. (Mr. Anstey.) Was old Mr. Smith present when you had the conversation with Mr. Bealy Smith?—No, he was ill.

29,493. Had you any conversation with old Mr. Smith at all?—No.

29,494. Just after the election at all?—Just after the election he asked me whether it was correct about Heal; taking the money he meant of course, and I said, "Yes, it is too true."

29,495. Was anything said by him about your evidence?—No.

29,496. Had you anything to do with the next election?—No.

29,497. Have you had nothing then?—Nothing at all.

29,498. They have never employed you since?—No.

29,499. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you offend them; what was the reason you had nothing further to do?—I do not know, I was not subpœnaed, but all the others were, whether they thought anything wrong. I was not subpœnaed at all.

29,500. You at all events said you would not go without a subpœna, and if you did you would speak the truth?—I said I would not go.

29,501. And since that you have not been employed?—No.

29,502. I should think you were glad of it?—If I had been subpœnaed I should have spoken the truth.

29,503. Did you vote at the second election of Mr. Patton?—Yes.

29,504. At both elections?—Yes.

29,505. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you never ask anyone, Mr. Bealy Smith or anyone, why you were not employed at the second election?—No; I knew I had done the thing which offended them.

29,506. We heard from Mr. Harden yesterday that the "stranger" said you were one of those not to be used again?—Yes.

29,507. Did you ever hear that he had made use of your name as one of those who in connexion with Heal were traitors in the camp?—No, never; that I can defy them.

29,508. But he might have said so?—No, never.

29,509. At the last election did you do anything?—No.

20,510. Did you vote?—Yes.

29,511. For Westropp and Gray?—Yes.

29,512. Did you have anything to do with promising a man or treating?—No.

29,513. In any way whatever?—I took several men to the poll.

29,514. Have you men in your employment?—Only one.

29,515. (Mr. Anstey.) If money had been spent at the last election would you have been employed?—I do not know.

29,516. Now recollect was anything said to you on the subject of the money some time before the election?—This last election?

29,517. Yes?—No.

29,518. Did anybody tell you that there was money in the town on your side?—No.

29,519. Did you ever tell anybody that money was in the town on your side?—No.

29,520. Will you swear that?—I will give you the names of the persons.

29,521. Do you know a lawyer's clerk of the name of Boys?—Yes.

29,522. Did you tell him just before the last election that the money, that is the Conservative money, was in the town?—Not that I am aware of.

(Mr. Price.) You must be aware of it.

29,523. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you mean by qualifying your answer in that way? Did you tell him or not anything to that effect?—Not that I am aware of.

29,524. What do you mean?—Not that I am aware I ever said such a thing.

29,525. You mean that you are not aware of it?—No.

29,526. Will you swear that you did not say so?—I do not know if speaking jocularly in the shape of chaff I said anything about the money or not, but I thought there was money.

29,527. You thought there was money?—I did so.

29,528. When?—Before they came down.

29,529. What?—Before they came down that there would be money brought with them.

29,530. That is before the 10th of October?—Yes. When I heard the two were coming, Westropp and Gray, I thought money would be spent.

29,531. Their address was issued on the 6th of October?—Yes.

29,532. And they came down on the 10th?—Yes.

29,533. Were you present at a meeting held on that day?—Yes.

29,534. Held here?—Yes.

29,535. Were you present at any other meeting that day elsewhere?—I think we had a meeting; there were several meetings about that time at different houses, but not called on purpose; friends of the Conservatives meeting together.

29,536. Do you remember that there was a good deal of feeling, or some feeling, against Mr. Westropp on that day, at first on account of his having come down to the borough, although he had previously stated he was not coming down; do you remember that there was some discussion about that among the electors?—I do not recollect.

29,537. Do you remember that at one of the meetings, I think the one held here, that there was a good deal of uproar on the question whether he should be accepted as the Conservative candidate?—That was at his meeting in 1865, on the Monday night, the previous election.

29,538. Not the last election?—Not the last election, in 1865.

29,539. Are you sure of that?—Not that I am aware of.

29,540. It may have been in 1865 too. I will draw your attention to it. Do you recollect after he was unseated in 1866 he published an address, or suffered it to go forth in his name, that he should never come here again?—Yes, I recollect that well.

29,541. And he did come again in October 1868; and I ask you again whether there was not some public discussion on that subject invited by an elector who reproached him with his inconsistency?—I do not recollect it.

29,542. Was the subject mentioned at the meeting of which I have been speaking, any meeting on the 10th of October?—No.

29,543. The day of his arrival?—No, not that I heard.

29,544. Will you still say that there was no opposition which you heard to the usual resolution proposed that he and Mr. Gray should be accepted as candidates?—Not that I am aware of.

29,545. I do not understand you Bridgwater people qualifying your answer by not that you are aware of. Cannot you say yes or no?

29,546. (Mr. Price.) You did not hear it?—I did not hear it, that is what I meant to say.

29,547. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember a good deal of uproar at either of those meetings; noise?—At one of the meetings in 1865?

29,548. No, I am speaking of the last election?—No, I do not remember much noise.

29,549. Do you remember some discord then?—A little with the Liberal party; a few in the hall, the back part.

29,550. Then why do not you say so? There were some who expressed dissent, and you think they were of the opposite party?—Yes.

29,551. After that meeting, I am endeavouring to fix the date in your mind, more than a fortnight, about 16 days after that the canvass first began?—I believe so.

29,552. First of all take that period between the meeting of the 10th of October and the beginning of the canvass; were you of opinion during that time that there was money in the town?—I was.

29,553. Had you heard anything on the subject?—My impression was that there was money in the town from those two.

29,554. Who gave you the facts from which you formed that impression?—No one, but from the account of it up at Joseph Smith's one night; and there were a number of books sent out for each party to take lists, and I thought by those names coming out there would be money given, as at the previous election.

29,555. What did you do at Mr. Smith's?—I was at Mr. Smith's at a meeting, and there were a number of books handed round to different parties to take the names, and I understood, and many other parties supposed, it was to put down money to pay them.

29,556. Did you look into any of the books?—At the time, do you mean?

29,557. To see what names were put down?—Yes.

29,558. Were the names put down, names of persons you recognized as being bribeable persons?—Several.

29,559. In each book?—In the book that I had.

29,560. How many books did you see?—I might have seen eight or ten.

29,561. Did you observe the same with regard to each of the books you saw?—No; I only looked at my own.

29,562. You did not look into any other?—No.

29,563. Did Mr. Smith or anybody say anything to you?—No, not Mr. Joseph Smith.

29,564. Did Mr. Smith or anybody say anything to you as to what you were to do with the book?—No, not then.

29,565. Do you mean that he gave you the book, and said nothing more?—We understood, of course, we were to look after those men to go to poll.

29,566. Did he say that?—No.

29,567. What made you understand it, then?—From the work at the previous election.

29,568. That was the usual course?—That was the usual course.

29,569. Did Smith or anybody say anything about money on that occasion?—No.

29,570. Or on any other occasion?—No.

29,571. Nothing was said?—No.

29,572. (Mr. Price.) You judged from the lists, I suppose?—Yes.

29,573. I understand that you had had lists when you first acted as a briber?—Yes.

29,574. And having had lists, and being sent for on this occasion, and having a book given you in which were the names of men you had looked after before, you took it for granted that it was preparatory to the same sort of business?—Yes.

29,575. (Mr. Anstey.) The canvass began on the 26th of October, we have it in evidence on both sides?—Yes.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

J. Truman.

24 Sept. 1869.

29,576. Now turn your attention to the second period, which begins with the canvassing and ends with the polling day. How long did you continue to think that there was money in the town for Westropp and Gray?—Up to 12 of the nomination night; then we heard there was none to be spent.

29,577. Who told you at 12 o'clock on the nomination day there was no money to be spent?—I really forget for a moment; some parties in at the "Clarence."

29,578. Perhaps you will remember presently. Did you continue to hear during that second period, from the 26th of October down to the nomination day, anything which confirmed you in the impression you had already formed, that there would be money in the town, or was money in the town for Westropp and Gray?—I thought so.

29,579. You continued to hear——

29,580. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear anything?—No, I did not hear, not more than that was imagination, and many others who had not to do with the election before.

29,581. (Mr. Anstey.) That was the common talk?—Yes.

29,582. And people did expect money would be paid?—They did.

29,583. As you were the agent who would be trusted, supposing there was any money, did you understand those who expected the money expected it to be paid before voting, or expected it to be paid in a certain time after the election?—Yes.

29,584. You think that they expected that?—Yes.

29,585. You think that they would not be satisfied if told to let the election go, and then we shall see what we shall see?—Not one out of a hundred, I should think.

29,586. Then at 12 at night on the nomination day someone satisfied you that there would be no money?—Yes.

29,587. Who was that?—A party; I do not know whether it was Cooper; I almost think it was Cooper, in the "Clarence;" he would not be certain there would be no money.

29,588. What is his christian name?—I do not know; he keeps a ready-made clothes shop in St. Mary's Street. He was in the "Clarence," and came out and told me; he said he had it from Mr. Lilly.

29,589. Had what?—This information, from Mr. Lilly.

29,590. What were the words?—He went over to know if there would be any money, and we had some doubts whether it was coming. I was along with Cooper and two or three other people, and we had our doubts whether we should get any money, and he said he would go to the "Clarence" and see some parties.

29,591. Who expressed their doubts besides you?—Cooper was one; I cannot recollect the others.

29,592. Where were you when you discussed these doubts of yours?—Opposite to Cooper's house.

29,593. In the roadway?—Yes, in the street, not talking very loud.

29,594. Then it was arranged that Cooper should go and state those doubts of yours?—Yes.

29,595. To whom?—Go to the "Clarence," to see whether he could see the agent of the party.

29,596. Who did they look to as agent when you went in; who did Cooper expect to find as the agent of the party?—He considered Mr. Lilly as one, I suppose.

29,597. And who else?—The lawyers, if there, I suppose.

29,598. No one else?—No one else.

29,599. Then he did see Mr. Lilly, and came out to report to you what he had said?—Yes.

29,600. What did he say were the words used by Mr. Lilly?—There would not be a penny spent.

29,601. Then or afterwards?—Not for this election.

29,602. But he did not say what would be done afterwards?—He said there would not be a penny spent.

29,603. That is all?—That is all.

29,604. (Mr. Price.) Did he say there would not be a penny spent on the election, or at the election; which?—At the election.

29,605. (Mr. Anstey.) Then as soon as this statement was made, and you were satisfied there would be no money spent, what did you and the others say to it?—I think we went home, to go to bed.

29,606. Did you think the election was lost?—I offered to make a bet in the morning there would not be 600 polled on both sides.

29,607. As soon as you heard this did you think the election would be lost?—I did.

29,608. You went to bed, and offered in the morning to bet there would not be 600 polled on both sides?—On both sides, unless money was spent.

29,609. What o'clock in the morning did you offer?—It might be about 7 o'clock.

29,610. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did you offer it to?—Speaking to some of the Conservative party.

29,611. Who were they?—I cannot recollect.

29,612. Did you after offering that bet, some time after, go to a meeting at the "Clarence" at 8 o'clock?—Half-past 7 at the "Clarence."

29,613. Where were you when you made this bet; at the "Clarence"?—No, somewhere in the street.

29,614. Then the meeting lasted till about 8 o'clock, did not it?—Nearly 8.

29,615. Mr. Westropp we have heard was present?—I did not see him.

29,616. You did not see Mr. Westropp?—I did not see Mr. Westropp.

29,617. Were you there the whole time?—I was there the whole time till 8 o'clock, and came out with some of the voters.

29,618. Perhaps we are speaking of different voters?—No.

29,619. I am speaking of the meeting at the "Clarence"?—So am I.

29,620. What room was it held in?—The large ball room.

29,621. It may have been a meeting of a more select or less select kind at the hotel at which Mr. Westropp was present?—I do not know that was the room; I was in the large room.

29,622. Can you explain how it is that so many witnesses have spoken to the fact of seeing Mr. Westropp there, and heard what he said?—I never saw him that morning, not at that meeting.

29,623. Did you see him at the "Clarence" that morning; I am keeping you to the time you went there?—Not from half-past 7 till the time I left.

29,624. When did you leave?—Just before 8, the time the polling commenced.

29,625. Was the meeting broken up then?—Yes.

29,626. And all that time you had not seen Mr. Westropp?—All that time I had not seen Mr. Westropp.

29,627. When next did you see him?—I think about 9 o'clock.

29,628. Where?—In the hall of the "Clarence."

29,629. Was there another meeting then?—No.

29,630. Do you happen to know whether the meeting at half-past 7 was succeeded by a meeting at 8 o'clock?—Not that I am aware of.

29,631. Do you know that two meetings were held that morning at any hour?—I never heard of but that one.

29,632. Persons have stated that Mr. Westropp said, "There will be no money spent; go and vote like men?"—I never saw him. I certainly should have seen him if he had been at the meeting.

29,633. I am reminded that what he is stated to have said is not that there would be no money, but "Go and vote like men"?—I heard Hodges make use of that expression.

29,634. I daresay; but Mr. Westropp is stated by some witnesses to have used those words, because immediately afterwards each witness was asked, "Did you hear him say something more?" and words were suggested, and the answer was no. Nobody asked about Hodges, or talked about Hodges?—Hodges took the chair, and was the only one I heard speak there on that morning; he was speaking about 20 minutes.

29,635. Has Hodges any likeness to him in the face?—No, he is quite a shadow of Mr. Westropp in size.

29,636. You must be either mistaken, or there were two distinct meetings, or else many of the witnesses are mistaken?—They must be. I never saw Mr. Westropp, and if he had been at the meeting I certainly should have seen him.

29,637. Is it possible that you went in and out of the room?—I went in when it commenced and stopped till it was over.

29,638. You did not go out till it was over?—I did not go out till it was over.

29,639. When you saw Mr. Westropp at 9 in the morning had you any conversation with him?—I think not; I might have wished him good morning. I do not think I had any conversation.

29,640. Did you hear him say anything at all?—No.

29,641. What is the use of saying no before you know what you are going to say no to. Did you hear Mr. Westropp say anything that day on the subject of the expenses of the election?—Not about the expenses of the election.

29,642. What did you hear him say during the day on the subject of the course the election was taking, or was to take?—I saw him about 1 to 2 o'clock in St. Mary's Street with Mr. Gray speaking to the parties and thanking them for their support. He said, "What do you think of the election?" I said, "The others will win in a canter; there is plenty of money; they will win in a canter." He said "Do you think so?" I said, "Yes, they will be sure to spend money on that side and you will be beaten."

29,643. What did he say to that?—I forget what reply he made to it now.

29,644. Did he seem to be surprised?—Yes, he did seem surprised.

29,645. And not to have expected that there was that danger?—He thought he was safe or nearly safe.

29,646. Did he go anywhere after you told him that?—No, he left me and walked up the street. I do not know where he went afterwards.

29,647. You do not know whether he went to look after his agent?—No.

29,648. And after 4 o'clock, or between 4 and 5, he had left the town I think?—Not that I am aware of.

29,649. Mr. Westropp?—Had he? I do not know, as I saw him so long ago I do not recollect about his leaving the town; he may have done.

29,650. Did he leave the town after the poll was over?—He may have done so, but I do not know it.

29,651. And Mr. Gray too?—They may have done so.

29,652. Did you see him that day again after that conversation?—No.

29,653. He was not present when the poll was declared?—I cannot say. I was on the hustings. I cannot say whether he was there or not.

29,654. Had he shown himself much that day?—Yes, a great deal; walking about the streets more than I ever saw him.

29,655. Were you ever present in court when Mr. Barham and Mr. Cook's evidence, and the evidence of some other witnesses were given, as to the mode in which Messrs. Kinglake and Vanderbyl shut themselves up each in his own hotel during the day?—Yes.

29,656. Did Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray shut himself up?—They were walking about nearly the whole of the polling time.

29,657. (Mr. Price.) I think someone recommended them to do that, as they determined to spend no money?—I do not know that.

29,658. Mr. Trevor said there was no money going to be spent, and "You are so popular you had better go and show yourself about the town"?—Yes, I never saw him so much about.

29,659. Was he followed by women and children and others about the town?—Yes. At many places there were many following him.

29,660. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you personally, between the year 1859 when he first came, and 1868 when he went away from the borough, ever dispense any of the charities, as they are called?—No.

29,661. Amongst the people?—No.

29,662. (Mr. Price.) You never applied to him on behalf of anybody for money?—No.

29,663. (Mr. Anstey.) It appears by Mr. Trevor's evidence that he gave as much as 300*l.* a year or thereabouts in indiscriminate charities to persons of both sexes and all ages?—I heard he was very charitable.

29,664. And thereby obtained a large popularity, did not he?—I do not know whether he obtained his popularity by it.

29,665. He was not known until he came?—He was not known until he came with Mr. Padwick.

29,666. But Mr. Padwick was not much of a recommendation. Was he a man like Mr. Padwick?—I should think not.

29,667. Therefore have you any doubt that his present popularity was an article which was purchased and paid for by those charities and other gifts?—I daresay that was the chief cause.

29,668. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know what brought Mr. Padwick down here in the first instance?—I do not.

29,669. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say that though you do not remember it you will not on your oath say you did not tell this Mr. Tom Boys that the money was in the town?—No, I would not say whether I told him so or not. I was going to tell you that there are two names I saw in Mr. Harden's book, and checked off by him as paid, which I was surprised to see, and that is Messrs. Gibbs and Best, pawnbrokers, in the High Street. They had not been in the town long—long enough to obtain a vote. I saw it in Harden's list, and checked off and paid in 1865.

29,670. (Mr. Price.) They had not been in the town long enough to vote then?—Yes; but not more than 12 months, or not so much.

29,671. What was your surprise?—At there being two respectable men in the list.

FREDERICK HARDEN recalled.

F. Harden.

(The witness.) I want to contradict a statement made by Mr. Truman about Mr. Bealy Smith and me, and this man Pole, in West Street. I knew he was prepared to go to London to swear that I gave him the 10*l.*, and I was prepared to acknowledge it. Mr. Smith on the contrary. What Truman has said about my wanting him to swear false or back me up, said, "You can go and prove it if you like, they can prove no agency against you." I never asked him to swear false, or a word of it.

29,672. (Mr. Price.) What I understood as what passed between him and Mr. Bealy Smith was that he asked if he would go up and back you if you denied you paid a certain sum of money. You cannot answer for Mr. Bealy Smith, and I should advise you not to.—I do not want to; but such a proposal was never named to me, and I never intended to swear false.

29,673. You say that it was, that they might say what they liked, but they could not prove agency?—Yes, that is right.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

F. Jarvis.

24 Sept. 1869.

FRANCIS JARVIS sworn.

29,674. (Mr. Price.) Are you a clerk at Hennet and Spink's?—I am.

29,675. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

29,676. How long have you been a voter?—Since 1852.

29,677. Whom did you vote for then?—At the first election of 1852 I voted for Follett and Mansell.

29,678. Were you employed in any way on the part of the Conservatives at that election?—Not at all.

29,679. In no way at all?—In no way at all.

29,680. Did you get anything for your vote in 1852?—I did not.

29,681. Were you promised anything?—Nothing.

29,682. Any bribe?—Nothing of the kind.

29,683. Were you in the employ of Hennet and Spink?—I was in the employ of Mr. George Hennet.

29,684. The same Mr. Hennet?—No, the father of Mr. Hennet.

29,685. At that time do you know whether Mr. Hennet's men who worked for him were compelled or influenced in any way to go up and vote for the Conservative party?—No, not at all.

29,686. Were you in a position to know if any such influence had been used?—I was.

29,687. Were you a clerk then, or the manager?—I was the chief clerk.

29,688. Directly or indirectly you know of no influence; whether they went up from any fear of being discharged you cannot say?—Nothing of the kind.

29,689. Did you never hear it said of Hennet's men that any were influenced for their votes?—No.

29,690. How many had he in his employ at that time?—Between 200 and 300 I think; I cannot speak exactly.

29,691. There were not many of them voters then?—A very few; not more than 10 or a dozen.

29,692. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you canvassed them?—I did not.

29,693. (Mr. Price.) How many voters have you now?—71. We had 71 at the last election of 1868.

29,694. Did you hear anything of money going in 1852 at your works?—Not at all. I never heard there was any going in 1852.

29,695. In 1857 did you vote?—I did.

29,696. Had you anything to do with the management of that election in any way?—Not anything.

29,697. In the way of bribing or treating?—Nothing of the kind.

29,698. Now come to the election of 1859. Did you hear then that there was money going?—After the election.

29,699. Where did you hear that, in your works?—In the works, some short time after the election.

29,700. From some of your men?—Some of our men complained that money had been going in the town, and they thought the party in the yard ought to look after their interest.

29,701. Were they men who had voted on the Conservative side?—They were men who had voted for Westropp and Padwick.

29,702. And they complained that there was no one in the yard to look after their interests?—That is it.

29,703. Did you understand that there were men in other yards who looked after the interest of the men there?—I understood so from our men that it was done so at Browne & Co.'s.

29,704. That there was someone to take care and see that they were paid?—Yes.

29,705. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was that?—I never heard the name. It was merely a general thing that Browne & Co.'s men were looked after by their employers, clerks, and foremen, and that they thought the same thing ought to be done by them.

29,706. You did not seem to see it in that light?—No.

29,707. You did in 1865?—I did in 1865.

29,708. You thought it right to do it?—I did.

29,709. Were you present in 1865 with Temblett and the others when a stranger came to your house?—I was not. There was no one but the stranger came to my house.

29,710. Did he come?—He did.

29,711. How did he introduce himself, or had you any intimation of his coming?—Yes, I had an intimation from Mr. Bealy Smith that very likely I should see a party, a stranger, who would make a proposition to me.

29,712. Before that had you communicated to the heads of the party what your men had complained of?—I did to Mr. Bealy Smith; no one else.

29,713. Before 1865?—Before 1865, when I was checking the registrations in 1864; that was the time.

29,714. That being so, that would be a reason for Mr. Bealy Smith sending for you?—It was.

29,715. And he told you that someone would very likely call?—He did.

29,716. With money?—Yes, I understood with money.

29,717. After that did a stranger come to your house?—He did. He came first in the middle of the day. I was from home; I was out at the time, and my nephew came in very shortly afterwards, and the servant told him there was a gentleman waiting to see me. Although he had expressed a wish not to send for me but let it remain until I came back, she thought it better to ask him to go and find me, and he found me, and I went home.

29,718. How did he introduce himself?—He introduced himself by saying his name was Matthews. He daresay I had heard of Mr. Matthews through Mr. Bealy Smith; he asked me if I had not. I said I had not heard any name, but I expected to see a gentleman.

29,719. What sort of a man was he; was he like a parliamentary agent?—No; I should have taken him for a well-to-do yeoman; he was a jolly, full-faced man, a good-tempered looking fellow.

29,720. Not like a London clerk, or anything like that?—No; I should not have taken him for a London clerk.

29,721. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he seem up to his work?—Very well indeed; I was not just at that time.

29,722. Did he talk to you about what he had done at other places?—Oh, no.

29,723. (Mr. Price.) Now tell us what passed?—After introducing himself in that manner, he said, "Do you go to bed very early?" I said, "Generally about 11." He said, "Well, do not close your doors to-night, as I will be here some time after 12."

29,724. Where did you live?—In Monmouth Street, near the Eastover turnpike-gate.

29,725. (Mr. Coleridge.) How far from your works?—Not half a mile, rather more than a quarter; and he came to my house.

29,726. He told you not to go to bed early?—He did; but I felt very tired and went to bed about 11, and I heard a slight knock at the front door between 1 and 2 o'clock.

29,727. You were restless?—I was restless. I expected someone. I was not undressed. I came downstairs; he would not come inside, but was under a tree just outside the door; he was with another party, and he introduced this other as his man, and I think he called him Stevens, but I am not quite certain now; a tall man, evidently of a different standing from himself; he did not look so much a gentleman.

29,728. An inferior man?—Yes. He then gave me a list of men, and said, "Now you are dealing in this "sort of thing be careful not to deal with other "parties."

29,729. Did you have him in the house?—Yes, of course he came into the front parlor; no one knew he was in the house but myself; there was no other party in the house but two servant girls who had gone to bed, and they slept together. He said, "Here is the "list; be careful not to have anything shoved on to

" you more than is in the list, or you will be out of " pocket." I said, " I will do my best;" and he gave me the amounts, which I am prepared to put in; he gave me the list and the money. I am not prepared to swear exactly the amount. I think I got rather over the amount; I think 5*l.* more. I think it was 100*l.* I received then.

29,731. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were these all men in your employ?—With the exception of Thomas Paterson; and then he was living at Chippenham, and I was going to observe that that man did put me into a difficulty. I gave him 10*l.*; he was not on my list, but I gave it to him for this reason, that he would not come down and the other party had got hold of him, so I thought it better to secure him, and I was obliged to make the others 5*l.* each to make that good.

29,732. How did you get hold of him if he was at Chippenham?—I do not know. I did not write to him, but he knew me from being the clerk of the works before.

29,733. How came he to come to you, he being a resident at Chippenham?—I do not know. I had not sent for him. I was surprised to find him here.

29,734. When did you pay these men?—On the morning of the polling day.

29,735. Did this man from Chippenham without your having sent for him come to you on the polling day?—He came to me the evening previous.

29,736. Did he tell you how he knew you were the person?—He did not.

29,737. This was your first time?—This was the first time.

29,738. How did he know you were the person to deal with?—Because some of the other men had told him I had money.

29,739. (Mr. Price.) Had you told these other men before the polling day that it was all right?—I had told them that I should get something for them.

29,740. He had worked with some of these other men?—Yes; he was a smith, and had worked with many of these men before.

29,741. (Mr. Coleridge.) I understand it was the day before the polling that this stranger came to you?—The day before the polling, about the middle of the day.

29,742. How did you know you were going to have money?—I saw the stranger the day before the polling, on the nomination day, the same evening.

29,743. Then you mean some of the men had let this man know you?—Yes.

29,744. (Mr. Price.) That is the list you make out?—Yes.

29,745. Is that all the money you got at that time?—That is all the money I got.

29,746. Did you get anything for yourself?—No, never.

29,747. Never anything?—Never anything.

29,748. Would you know that man again if you were to see him?—I should if he had his whiskers on. I do not know whether his whiskers were natural or not.

29,749. Now go to 1866, Mr. Patton's election; did you see the same man again?—I saw the same man again.

29,750. Did he bring you money again?—He brought money to my house.

29,751. How much?—I cannot tell how much he brought then.

29,752. How did you get over the difficulty with the man who you say you were obliged to give 5*l.* to in consequence of having paid this man at Chippenham?—They were never paid any more.

29,753. Did they complain?—They did; one especially, James Sully, complained very much of it.

29,754. Did you recoup him?—I did not.

29,755. Never?—Never.

29,756. You cannot tell how much you had then?—I can tell; they were paid twice. In the first instance there was only 5*l.*, and about, I think very shortly before the following election, I cannot tell exactly the day, I think it is in evidence though, the other 5*l.* were brought to me so as to make it 10*l.* to each man; and I paid down 10*l.* to every man in this list, except Thomas Broadwood; and I think it is in evidence, or it will be, that another of our party paid that other 5*l.*

29,757. Did you pay so many as 15 men, do you think?—I did.

29,758. 5*l.* down?—5*l.* down, and 5*l.* promised.

29,759. If you paid them 10*l.* apiece it would be 150*l.*?—Yes, it was 145*l.* I made good before the following election in July.

29,760. You have a list of the names there?—Yes.

29,762. Was that all you had to do at the first election of Mr. Patton's?—That was all I had to do with that.

29,763. You say that some of them were dissatisfied before; were any of them dissatisfied at that time?—They all had 10*l.* each from one of the other agents.

29,764. And they got all they expected?—They got all they expected.

29,765. Did you get anything in respect of your services then?—I did not.

29,766. Now, on the morning of the polling day of Mr. Patton's second election, did you get any money from the same man again?—I did at Mr. Patton's election.

29,767. How much?—150*l.*

29,768. What time in the morning?—I think about half-past 5.

29,769. Of the polling day?—Yes.

29,770. Did you pay that away?—I did.

29,771. In tens?—In tens.

29,772. To 15 men?—To 15 men.

29,773. Give us their names?—John Bennett, Eliab Cann, Thomas Brawley, Henry Frapnell Cook, Isaac Drake, Henry Dunn, Thomas Gardiner, John Haste, George Holland, Henry Jones, Robert Prole, James Roberts, Robert Saunders, William Sellar, and James Sully. That is all.

29,774. That you paid all away, did you?—I did.

29,775. Was there a man of the name of Roberts, who is the father-in-law of Hook, of whom we have heard and seen something; did he take money from you, and vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—He did.

29,776. How much?—10*l.*

29,777. Did you ask him to return it?—I did.

29,778. Did he refuse?—He did. He said he was in difficulties, and that he was in the hands of Messrs. Reed and Cook, and that they had then got him in court, as I understood, the very same day.

29,779. They had got him in court?—Yes.

29,780. That is in the county court?—That is what I understood.

29,781. Do you know whether he paid off Messrs. Reed and Cook's debt?—I do not.

29,782. You understood that Messrs. Reed and Cook put him in court for a debt?—They had him in court. That is what I understood.

29,783. Probably Messrs. Reed and Cook got their debt paid by Mr. Westropp's money?—Very likely.

29,784. Is James Roberts here in this place?—He lodges in Bridgwater. I do not know whether he is in court or not.

29,785. I mean is he still alive?—Oh yes.

29,786. Did you see whether this stranger had the same assistants at that time?—I did at the last election, the second election.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

F. Jarvis.

24 Sept. 1869.

29,787. Was that all you received at the second election of Patton?—That was all I received.

29,788. Did you get anything yourself then?—I did not.

29,789. In any way whatever?—Never.

29,790. Have you benefited in any way whatever, directly or indirectly, by advance of salary, or anything of that kind, for the part you have taken in these matters?—No, nothing of the kind.

29,791. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you been injuriously affected by the part you have taken in them?—No.

29,792. (Mr. Price.) You are still in Mr. Hennet's employ?—Yes.

29,793. (Mr. Coleridge.) And they do not think any the worse of you?—No. I am in the same situation.

29,794. (Mr. Price.) In 1868, had you anything to do with the bribery then?—I had not.

29,795. Were you employed in any way, and were you spoken to; were you in communication with the heads of the party?—No. I was the secretary then of the Bridgwater Working Men's Association, and I led the men to understand that it would be too dangerous a game to attempt any more on account of the new law, and the better way would be to try and form an association, for we wanted to carry our own man, and I endeavoured to do it by——

29,796. Did you take an active part in promoting and attending the Working Men's Association?—I did; I was secretary.

29,797. (Mr. Anstey.) That association was only formed about the same time that Messrs. Westropp and Gray's address was issued?—The first meeting was on the 11th of June. I have the minutes here.

29,798. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that a mutual aid association? Were you to pay one another money?—No. I had nothing to do with it.

29,799. What was the meaning of a "Working Men's Association?"—I think the meaning will be explained to you, if you will kindly look at these books (referring to some minute books).

29,800. (Mr. Price.) Just give us the history of the formation. Give us the history and objects of it, as well as you can, in your own language?—The object of it was to endeavour to educate the working men, especially the new voters, in Conservative ideas.

29,801. (Mr. Anstey.) That was in June?—That was in June.

29,802. With the certain knowledge that there was to be an election before the end of the year?—It was expected.

(Mr. Anstey.) There was not much time for education, unless you mean in a particular sense.

29,803. (Mr. Coleridge.) The first thing I find in this book is exactly what I expected, and is no explanation at all: "The chairman having explained the "objects of the meeting, and read some of the rules "of the Bristol Working Men's Conservative Asso- "ciation." He explained the objects, but the objects are not given?—I do not know what was done. I was not there.

29,804. (Mr. Price.) What did you understand to be the object of the association? You say the working men were to be educated; how were they to be educated?—By meetings to which delegates from other parts should be invited; and also by reading the papers, and the men talking to each other, and general discussion.

29,805. The motion is, "It was proposed by Mr. "T. Claxton, and seconded by Mr. William Luxton, "that those present form themselves into an asso- "ciation to be called the 'Bridgwater Working "Men's Conservative Association,' the object of "such association being to promote the diffusion and "maintenance of Conservative principles; and to use "all legitimate means to return, as representatives to "Parliament such men as will support those prin- "ciples."—That was our object.

29,806. That was the object?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Of course, it being a packed meeting, it was carried unanimously.

29,807. (Mr. Anstey.) How many were present at that meeting?—I should think about 120.

29,808. And were they all working men, or were some of them amateurs?—They were chiefly working men.

29,809. Were they amateurs, those who put on fustian or serge, and acted the part of working men for that time?—I cannot say who were present.

29,810. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did anybody explain to them what "Conservative" and "Liberal" meant?—Oh yes.

29,811. There is no mention of it here. I suppose, as a rule in Bridgwater, they do not know a bit the difference between the one and the other?—Our object was to tell them the difference.

29,812. Was the Irish Church question talked about?—Yes, it was.

29,813. Which side did you take?—I opposed Mr. Gladstone's motion.

29,814. (Mr. Anstey.) Was purity of election talked about; I suppose not?—I think not.

29,815. (Mr. Price.) Why was that?—I do not know.

29,816. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or "vote by ballot;" was that talked about?—No.

29,817. What politics were talked about; were any politics talked about?—Yes; chiefly the questions of the day; the Reform question.

29,818. (Mr. Price.) The Reform question had passed you know?—The Reform question had passed previously, the whole question.

29,819. (Mr. Anstey.) But was not the whole attention of the people present directed to one object, namely, the approaching election for Bridgwater?—Well, that was very often mooted.

29,820. Now, was not that the real object of founding at a late hour (you mentioned June 1868) an association intended to work great things in the general election of 1868? Was not that the real object of the association, the purposes of that election and no other?—Not for the purpose of that election and no other. It was intended to be a permanent association.

29,821. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose nobody alluded to the probable wealth of the candidates?—No.

29,822. That was never mentioned?—I never heard it.

29,823. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you not in effect told me as much? In answer to a question I asked you, or a question which was asked you by one of us, as to the course you took and the advice you gave, you say you told them that this recent law against bribery made bribery so painful that it would be better for you, instead of going in for bribery, to form yourself (that is what you say you told them) into a Conservative Working Men's Association. Well, then, you have told us, in effect, that the Conservative Working Men's Association was intended to accomplish the union, and the gathering together of those whom it was no longer safe to bribe?—Yes, certainly.

29,824. In what way was that union to supply the want of open and avowed bribery; how was it to supply that defect?—Well, the men were anxious to get their own representatives, and there was no other means of getting themselves represented unless they did collect themselves together; that was our opinion.

29,825. Was not one of the objects this: that it was not safe, not that it was immoral, wicked, and unlawful, but that it was not safe to bribe; was it not your idea, or one of your ideas, that it would be better that the thing should be transacted within the four walls of a private association of that kind, where men could be got together without exciting suspicion, and where their interests could be represented by a secretary, a president, a treasurer, or a clerk?—I do not think it was contemplated, or anything of the kind.

29,826. I only want you to explain your answer. You say, it being no longer to bribe, you then formed yourself into an association called "The Conservative Working Men's Association"?—Yes.

29,827. Is it not the fact, that that association, when formed, contained a great number of very corrupt electors indeed, namely, those who would sell their vote to any person who would pay them high enough?—Yes, it is.

29,828. Is it not the fact that of those "enthusiastic" Conservative working men, as Mr. H——— called them, 28 who had promised to vote for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray sold themselves like sheep to Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake, and voted for those two bribe masters?—The number of our members were 570.

29,829. And were there not 28 of them who did that?—There were 34.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then I am under the mark.

29,830. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will you explain this to me; this, out of one of the reports of your meetings on the 29th September 1868: "In consequence of a "letter received by the secretary to the effect that it "was the wish of some of the members of the Con- "servative party in Bridgwater that the Conservative "candidates should come to the town on Friday the "9th instant and address a meeting of their friends "and supporters at the town hall the same evening, "it was contrary to the wishes of the Working Men's "Conservative Association." What is the meaning of that?—They wished them to come on the following day, the Saturday, so that they might have an opportunity of meeting the members at the station and accompanying them to the platform.

29,831. Then I see at the end of the discussion which took place as to the propriety of dissolving the association until after the election, it was agreed to be postponed until a future meeting. What is the meaning of that? Why was the association to be dissolved?—Well, there were some members who considered that it would be unadvisable to have this association in existence at the time of the election, and it was thought it was better not to keep it open.

29,832. Why?—I do not know the reason. I was never a party to it.

29,833. (Mr. Price.) Was that carried?—It was not.

29,834. It was not carried?—The association has never been broken up.

29,835. How many were your members altogether?—570.

29,836. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do they subscribe anything?—Some do.

29,837. Not everybody?—Not everybody. It is a voluntary thing.

29,838. What are the expenses of it? What is there to pay besides? What is expended on this book?—Printing.

29,839. (Mr. Price.) And hire of rooms I suppose?—Hire of one room. That is the only expense.

29,840. (Mr. Coleridge.) A secretary?—No, I am not paid. We have paid for banners.

29,841. (Mr. Price.) Is there any drink paid for at any of the meetings?—Not any.

29,842. Is drinking going on while the meetings are being held?—Yes, after some of the meetings there was drink.

29,843. I mean while the resolutions are being passed, are there men sitting there drinking?—No, not that I am aware of.

29,844. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is the drink afterwards charged to the candidates?—It is not.

29,845. (Mr. Anstey.) By whom is it paid for?—By the parties.

29,846. Which parties, the imbibing parties or the candidates?—The imbibing parties.

29,847. Are the 570 members all voters?—No.

29,848. How many of them are voters?—There are about 450. I cannot tell you exactly the number of voters. There were a few who did not poll, but there were 408 voted Conservative and 34 Liberal out of the 470, and the remainder did not vote at all.

29,849. How many virtuous men were there who did not vote at all on either side to be added to the 34, do you know?—Perhaps four or five.

29,850. (Mr. Coleridge.) Take it with a liberal margin, and tell me how many out of that 500 odd members of that society knew the difference between a Conservative and a Liberal. Did half a dozen, do you suppose?—Oh yes.

29,851. Well, how many would you put it at?—Well, I think we had so many meetings that they were pretty well inoculated in the principles of Conservatism. I should think there were 300, if not more.

29,852. The "principles of Conservatism"?—Yes.

29,853. What section of Conservatism; there are so many variesties now-a-days. Do you really mean that these were old Tories, these men?—No.

29,854. What do you mean by "Conservatism"?—A great number of them were Church and State men.

29,855. Therefore you mean to say they were opposed to the Irish Church Bill?—Yes.

29,856. Was that the only question? Was the ballot not one of the questions?—The ballot was not one of the questions.

29,857. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, who lectured them, or "inoculated" them, I think is your phrase——

(Mr. Price.) No, "indoctrinated" them.

(Mr. Anstey.) "Indoctrinated" them into the principles of Conservatism?—He was after he ceased to be mayor.

29,858. No matter about that. I am speaking of the value of the lessons he taught. Was it at one of those meetings when he was "indoctrinating" them that he told them, "If you are going to be bribed, my advice to you is, M. D.—money down"?—I do not know; I was not present.

29,859. You were not?—I was not.

29,860–2. May I ask, would that be considered one of the attempts made to "indoctrinate them into the principles of Conservatism"?—Certainly not.

29,863. Was your association formed before the Liberal Working Men's Association, or after?—Before.

29,864. And they followed your example?—Yes. I rather think they branched off from the Reform League, I mean in their associations.

29,865. Whatever the result has been, probably there will be no great result from it now; but whatever the result was at that time, did you, as far as you were concerned, and several others to your knowledge, join it with an earnest desire to put down bribery?—I did. That I swear distinctly.

29,866. It is a very difficult thing to get rid of bribery out of a place like this; but did several others join it also with the same purpose to your knowledge?—I think so.

29,867. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had been employed as a bribery agent?—I had; and I determined to have no more to do with it.

29,868. From a sort of repentance?—No, not so much of that. I certainly did repent of it, but I felt this, that if I attempted anything of the kind now it would be a very dangerous thing.

29,869. Less safe?—Less safe.

29,870. But not more wicked?—But not more wicked.

29,871. Is it not the fact, that in addition to the 34 who showed by their noble acts at the election that they were prepared to sell themselves soul and body to the opposite side, and the four or five who held back so long and so consistently, that, unfortunately for them, they did not vote at all at the last election; or, perhaps fortunately, is it not the fact, that in addition to those a great many of the enthusiastic persons who voted for Mr. Westropp

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

F. Jarvis.

24 Sept. 1869.

would, if Mr. Westropp, or Mr. Gray, or their agents had offered them the usual 10*l.* ahead, have taken it? —I believe they would.

29,872. Then, how in the name of goodness, Mr. Jarvis, can the formation of a Conservative association or a Liberal association, composed of men of that stamp, produce any other effect than this: to make it more easy to bribe them, by obtaining a sort of responsible officer or medium of communication, such as yourself for instance, a known bribery agent, or somebody equally notorious? What other effect could it have had?—I believe that there were many who received money before, who did not expect any at the last election.

29,873. That has nothing to do with it. You see, the Chief Commissioner asked you, if you were determined to put down bribery, and you, forgetting all your antecedents, fastened upon that, and said at once, with a generous enthusiasm, "I was"?—Yes.

29,874. Now the very men you were marshalling in that way were not bribed by Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, because Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray had no money to bribe them with; but you say if they had offered them money they would have taken it. How can bribery be put down by means of that association? —(No answer.)

29,875. (Mr. Price.) Was the question of there being no money discussed, or rather, was the determination to spend no money on the part of the Conservatives thoroughly well known by the members of this Conservative association before the last election?—On the morning of the nomination day, I think there were many who did expect that money was going to be spent.

29,876. You think so?—I think so. That is, from my experience of them.

29,877. Is it your experience, seeing the working of the last election, so far as it went, that any attempt made by Liberal associations or Conservative associations to put down bribery would fail, if only there came down a candidate with money. If you could always be sure of a Vanderbyl, or a Westropp, on the one side or on the other, do you believe that all the efforts you could make by means of this association for getting rid of bribery would be in vain?—I should be sorry that it should be so. We all did our best.

29,878. You had some experience of it last time?—I believe there were some of them who would have gone for money, but I believe there were a great majority who would have gone without money.

29,879. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were the horrors of bribery discussed at the meetings of this association of Conservative working men?—No, I never heard it.

29,880. (Mr. Anstey.) You have already told me that if Westropp and Gray had offered these members of your association money they would have taken it. You have already told me that?—I did not catch the meaning of your question then.

29,881. Have you not told me twice over, in answer to my question, that if Westropp and Gray had offered money to the members of the Conservative association that they would have accepted the bribe? —I do not remember making that reply.

(Mr. Anstey.) You distinctly said so in answer to my question. I will not be trifled with in this way by you, and I must request the shorthand writer to refer to your answer. (The shorthand writer referred to the answer, which was, "I believe they would.")

29,882. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not mean to say surely that the formation of this society was for the purpose of purifying the borough of Bridgwater?—I do.

29,883. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now that you believed they would accept a bribe if it were offered to them. I ask you, have you the smallest doubt that every Conservative working man who is a member of your association, excepting always the amateurs, the men of wealth, who are honorary members of it, would have accepted a bribe if it had been offered him by their own favourite candidate?—I do doubt it. I believe there were a great many Conservative working men who did not care for it.

29,884. Never mind about not caring for it. If they had been told after the election, "Mr. Westropp's "compliments," or the "agent's compliments to you, "there is a present of 10*l.* for you as a mark of his "gratitude," do you believe that the vast majority would not have accepted it? (A pause.) What do you think?—I believe there are a great many that would accept it.

29,885. The majority of them?—I would not say the majority.

29,886. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have been told over and over again, that if we take 250 out of the whole constituency of 1,600, as representing those who would not bribe or be bribed, that we get the whole extent of the pure electors in Bridgwater? — I do not believe it.

29,887. Do you believe there are 250 out of the 570 members of your Conservative association who would neither bribe nor accept a bribe?—Yes, under the present state of things.

29,888. (Mr. Price.) Has that been brought about by the terrors of the law, or by disgust at bribery; which?—By both.

29,889. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your own determination was only brought about by the terrors of the law?— It was.

29,890. Do you attribute the change that has been brought about in these men, who are certainly not so blameable as those who bribe them, to the fact that they are really afraid of the law as it now stands, or to the fact that there is a better feeling in the place? —I think there is a better feeling in the place.

29,891. In some of them, or all?—Not all.

29,892. Which do you think has played the principal part in producing this change, the terrors of the law, or the absence of money; which is it? (No answer.) Has this feeling been brought about by the fact of the election inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and the issuing of this Commission, and the chances of disfranchisement? Has it been brought about by that?—It may.

29,893. (Mr. Anstey.) I presume from the whole tenor of your answers to the questions put to you that you are strongly of opinion that this is a virtuous borough, and sufficiently virtuous not to be disfranchised, are you not?—For myself, I should be pleased for it to be disfranchised.

29,894. Mr. Trevor has prepared a brief, which we have had before us, from which it appears there were others besides members of this Conservative Working Men's Association who, being Conservative, and having promised to vote for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray both, kept their promise by voting for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl both, and almost all of them having done so after the time at which the Liberals began to bribe, and that their number was 41 altogether. Do you agree in that statement?—I agree that there were 34.

29,895. No, 41?—Not belonging to the members.

29,896. Well, 41, including those who were members of the Conservative Working Men's Association? —Oh, it is very likely. Yes, I should think it was.

29,897. (Mr. Price.) Not 41 in addition?—No, not 41 in addition.

29,898. Forty-one altogether? — Forty-one altogether.

29,899. (Mr. Anstey.) Including the 34?—Including the 34.

29,900. Then there were members who abstained from voting altogether. Of course you know what that means in a borough of this kind. How many abstained on your side, including the association men? —Well, perhaps 20.

29,901. (Mr. Price.) I think you said in 1868 you had nothing to do with bribery yourself?—Nothing at all.

29,902. Nor with holding out any promise?— Nothing at all.

29,903. Did you take means in your yard of showing your men that they were at liberty to vote how they liked ?—I did.

29,904. What means did you adopt ?—I spoke to Mr. Hennet about the bill which had been put up in the first place, when Mr. Hennet was absent.

29,905. What was that bill ?—A bill put up in the first place, putting Mr. Vanderbyl's name in great prominence before the men.

29,906. In what respect ?—It was a bill got up by Mr. Spink under Mr. Vanderbyl's instructions, calling upon the men to vote for Vanderbyl and Westropp, and I spoke to Mr. Hennet about the matter as soon as he returned; he was absent at the time; and he was very indignant about it, and he got up another bill, calling upon the men to vote as they pleased, to vote independently, and not be biassed by the foreman or any other party in the yard, but to vote exactly as they pleased.

29,907. Was that bill issued ?—It was posted about the yard.

29,908. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that on the polling day ?—No, before the polling day.

29,909. (Mr. Price.) How long before ?—Three or four days.

29,910. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it before Mr. Spink and Mr. Hennet had interviews with Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No, after.

29,911. Mr. Vanderbyl's last interview with them was on the Saturday, which was only two days before the nomination ?—Well, yes; Mr. Hennet had seen Mr. Vanderbyl before then.

29,912. How often ?—Twice or thrice, at the works.

29,913. I believe it has been stated that Mr. Hennet was a Conservative ?—Yes, Liberal-Conservative.

29,914. Did you know that Mr. Hennet had promised Mr. Vanderbyl that if he could he would promote his election, or his success at that election ?—I did not know it at that time.

29,915. But you know it now ?—Yes.

29,916. From Mr. Hennet himself ?—I know it from the evidence, not from Mr. Hennet.

29,917. Did Mr. Hennet ever object to Mr. Vanderbyl's coming there to see the people in his employment, and using Mr. Hennet's name, or Mr. Spinks's name ?—I do not know what Mr. Hennet said to Mr. Vanderbyl at all. I know Mr. Vanderbyl came there, and went into the yard with his agents, Mr. Lovibond and another; I am not quite sure about Mr. Lovibond.

29,918. You know this much, that when Mr. Hennet expressed himself angry about what had been done he told you that he was angry about it, and prepared that bill to be put up, "Vote as you please." Do you know whether he then told you anything which was inconsistent with that ?—He did not.

29,919. (Mr. Price.) I understood you to say that the bill was put up at your suggestion ?—Mr. Hennet as soon as he saw the bill (I brought it under his notice) was very angry about its being put up in that way, and he said, "I will put up another bill telling "the men to act independently; to vote as they "pleased," and that he would be very angry if any other bill was put by any other man in the yard in his employ.

29,920. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not that bill put up to make it more accessible to the Liberal party for canvassing than it would have been without it had been put up; because Hennett and Spink are not Liberal, they are Liberal-Conservative ?—They were not more accessible than they were at any other time, because the candidates had always gone down to the men in the yard, down to 1865.

29,921. Was not Mr. Hennet, when that bill was put up, personally anxious that Mr. Vanderbyl should be returned ?—I do not think he was. I think that was about the time that the Lundy Island Granite Company had been spoken of, and I think Mr. Hennet had altered his views about Mr. Vanderbyl.

29,922. I thought you said it was three or four days before the election ?—It was.

29,923. (Mr. Price.) When was the Lundy Island Granite Company brought before the notice of the electors here ?—The Thursday or Friday before the election.

29,924. (Mr. Anstey.) We have had it in evidence that Mr. Hennet, after the Lundy Granite Company had been made the subject of great discussion here, agreed to do all that he could with Mr. Vanderbyl to promote a coalition between him and Mr. Westropp, for the purpose of effecting Mr. Vanderbyl's return, and that as late as Saturday or Sunday ?—My impression was that Mr. Hennet formed different views.

29,925. You have Mr. Hennet's own evidence on the point ?—I have.

29,926. Well, now, after hearing that you do not think so, I suppose ?—I do not think Mr. Hennet wished to form a coalition on the Sunday night at all.

29,927. Then you do not believe Mr. Hennet's evidence ?—I do not believe Mr. Hennet intended to form a coalition on the Sunday evening. I believe Mr. Hennet was taken by surprise by Mr. Vanderbyl's proposing it.

29,928. You say that the men were as accessible to the Liberal party without that placard as with it ?—I do.

29,929. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you have to tell us about that last election, or any other election, beyond what you have stated ?—Nothing whatever that I am aware of. I think I have told you everything about all the elections I have had to do with.

29,930. Do you know anything about the show of hands at Patton and Bagehot's election ?—I was present.

29,931. Was the show of hands in favour of Mr. Patton ?—I think it was.

29,932. Do you know how that was obtained ?—I believe justly; I considered that we had the majority.

29,933. Were your men employed to go and hold up their hands ?—Our men were there; the works were closed.

29,934. Were they paid for it ?—I believe a bill was sent in for it.

29,935. (Mr. Coleridge.) Fifteen pounds for holding up hands ?—I believe a bill was sent in; I do not know whether it was to their solicitors. Mr. Hennet will tell you about that.

29,936. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at the meeting at the "Clarence" at 8 o'clock in the morning of the polling day ?—I was not; I intended to go up. I heard there was a meeting, and I went up the town at the end of the meeting, and I saw Mr. Sharman, and he said, "The meeting is over, you had better go up to poll," and I went up to poll with him. That was about 8 or a quarter-past 8 in the morning.

29,937. You cannot tell me anything about that ?—I cannot.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS VEYSEY recalled.

Mr. J. W. Veysey.

29,938. (Mr. Price.) Yesterday, when you were not in court, Mr. Osborne and his two daughters were called before us, and examined as witnesses, and with reference to the evidence they gave, and with reference to the evidence given by Gilbert also, we think it right to state to you, that we believe the evidence given by the Osbornes and Gilbert in preference to the evidence given by you ?—I am very sorry to hear it.

29,939. (Mr. Price.) That is so. Neither your manner nor matter has impressed us with the idea of your truthfulness; and, with regard to the Osbornes, your evidence before us is a reiteration of what we do not hesitate to say was very much like false swearing before the committee of the House of Commons ?—I assure you I told the truth.

29,940. (Mr. Price.) You could not both be telling the truth, and that is the judgment we have formed ?—I think the two young ladies would intend to speak what is true, but they are mistaken.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Veysey.

24 Sept. 1869.

29,941. (Mr. Price.) We do not wish to discuss the matter further. A different complexion has been put upon the story by Mr. Osborne than that which you attempted to convey to us. If your evidence had been direct there would have been no question about your having committed perjury; but it was more the complexion you attempted to put upon the matter than what you actually swore. You tried to convey to us a false impression; therefore I say it is not so direct a perjury as it otherwise would have been, and as it has been in the case of other witnesses who have been before us. But you have attempted to deceive the committee of the House of Commons, and you have also attempted to deceive us?—Not in the least. I have neither attempted to deceive the one nor the other, neither them nor you.

29,942. (Mr. Price.) That is our impression. With regard to Gilbert, that extenuating remark of mine, if it be one, does not apply. That is all I have to say to you.—There is one thing I was going to remark upon, and that is about my having received 20*l.* and 25*l.* The money was paid to me, not direct, for my vote. I never asked for one single farthing. It was before Mr. Vanderbyl's first election I was paid the 20*l.*, and I was not paid the other amount until the February or March afterwards; it was some time in the March following, just before the trial of Coles v. Perkins.

29,943. (Mr. Coleridge.) You expected to get paid at some time or other; you did not expect to work for nothing?—The last time I almost thought I should have to do so.

HENRY WARE sworn.

H. Ware.

29,944. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Groom and coachman.

29,945. Were you formerly groom and coachman to Mr. Spink?—I was.

29,946. Well, now, I understand what you wish to say is something about what Andrew Allan says he paid you. He says he paid you 10*l.* at the election in 1868?—That is it.

29,947. Is that true?—I never received a penny.

29,948. Were you a voter?—I was not.

29,949. It does not follow that you did not receive money on that account, only you mean positively to deny that you were paid anything?—I was not paid anything at all from anyone.

29,950. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get?—Nothing at all, of any sort or kind.

29,951. Have you got a wife?—I have.

29,952. Did she get anything?—No.

29,953. (Mr. Price.) You are not a voter?—No.

29,954. Have you ever been a voter?—No.

29,955. Did you ever represent yourself as a voter?—No.

29,956. Were you returned on any list as a voter?—No. I paid a rate, but I did not claim my vote.

29,957. You were not on the register?—No.

29,958. Are you quite sure of that?—Certain.

(Andrew Allan.) He was returned to me. I have no individual recollection or knowledge of him.

(Mr. Price.) Who returned him?

(Andrew Allan.) I think Culliford, more than any others, kept a list.

(Mr. Price.) You do not know anything about him personally?

(Andrew Allan.) No.

(Mr. Price to witness.) Allan does not represent that he paid you personally, but that your name was sent in by some other person to him.

(Andrew Allan.) His name was given as one who was paid.

29,959. (Mr. Coleridge to witness.) Do you mean you got no present of any sort or kind?—I had not.

29,960. Are you quite sure your wife did not?—Certain; quite sure.

(Mr. Coleridge to Allan.) You say "Culliford more than anybody else." Everybody must know whom they paid.

(Andrew Allan.) No, I paid them all; Culliford and Stacey and Webber. Bridges kept the checks at the door.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But who do you say returned him?

(Andrew Allan.) Culliford, more than any others.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect his going upstairs?

(Andrew Allan.) No, I do not.

29,961. (Mr. Coleridge to witness.) Did you go upstairs on that day?—I did not. I do not know where the stairs are at all.

(Mr. Price.) There are two Wares on the list, Allan. It appears there may be, possibly, some mistake. There is a James Ware and a Thomas Ware; and I see that both those men, James and Thomas, voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl. There seems to have been some mistake with this man. I think this cannot be the man. Where is Culliford?

EDWARD CULLIFORD recalled.

E. Culliford.

29,962. (Mr. Price.) Did you pay that man, Henry Ware; is that the man you paid 10*l.* to?—I never paid anyone.

29,963. Did you show that man upstairs?—I saw this man in the passage. I won't swear that he went upstairs. I imagine that he went upstairs.

HENRY WARE recalled.

H. Ware.

29,964. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you in the passage?—I was in the passage. I was in the "New Inn" passage, not near the staircase.

29,965. What were you doing there?—I was there, the same as the rest of the people.

29,966. Looking out for money?—Not looking out for money. I had no vote.

29,967. (Mr. Price.) Well, one of the Buttles had no vote. Do you mean to say you did not go there because you heard money was going?—I went there to help assist in the election, to pick up some people.

29,968. Were you driving any conveyance?—No, I was not.

29,969. How were you to help; you said you were there to help?—I just merely went along with the rest of the people who I know.

29,970. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are a connexion of the Buttles, are you not; a relation?—Not at all.

29,971. What have you got to do with the Buttles?—I have nothing to do with the Buttles.

29,972. Are not you a witness?—I am a witness this afternoon, stating as I seen Mr. Allan speaking to Mr. Buttle, to Alfred Buttle; nothing more than that.

29,973. A witness for the prisoner?—For the prisoner.

29,974. Well, now did not you go there just the same as that young Buttle who was not a voter and got 10*l.*; to see what you could pick up?—No, I do not know that I did.

29,975. What did you go there for?—I merely went there just the same as the rest of the people did.

(Mr. Price.) Well, they went for that purpose.

29,976. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you in politics?—I am a Liberal.

29,977. Then having gone there, did you not go to see what could be got in the scrimmage ?—No, I did not, because I knew I had no vote.

29,978. What are you ?—A groom and coachman.

29,979. Well, had you any employment at all ?—No, I had not ; not that day.

29,980. So you went to this inn simply to see what was to be done ?—Merely to see what was going on.

29,981. You are quite sure you were not passed up by mistake ?—Certain of it.

29,982. To get 10*l.* ?—As far as that goes I wish I was as sure of 1,000*l.* as I am sure that I was passed by no one.

29,983. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are better without the 10*l.* now ?—I never received anything from anyone.

29,984. Were you offered anything ?—No, I was not ; nor promised.

29,985. How comes Culliford to say that he passed you up ?—He said he saw me in the passage ; the passage going into the house.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

23,986. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan, how did the man's name appear at all ?—I went to the man who kept the check at the door to get a list of the names of the men who were paid.

29,987. Who kept the names ?—George Stacey.

AMBROSE DYER recalled.

A. Dyer.

(The witness.) I wanted just to correct one statement that I made the other day.

29,988. (Mr. Price.) What do you want to say ?—I returned giving a man of the name of Vickery two 10*l.*, but I found since it is only one, and that the other 10*l.* I gave 5*l.* to a person of the name of Cooze, and 5*l.* to a person of the name of Kerle.

29,989. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is it a Mrs. Cooze ?—Yes.

29,990. Is she in court now, can you tell us ?—Not that I know of.

29,991. (Mr. Anstey.) Dyer, as you are here I want to ask you about the houses ; I won't call them committee rooms ; I will say the houses that were taken at the election of 1865 and used. I do not know how you want me to put it, but they were used as places of resort of Mr. Kinglake's and Sir John Shelley's supporters. You know you were examined about them before the committee of the House of Commons. I want to know first of all whether they had committees at or committee rooms at some of the public-houses in Bridgwater ?—Not to my knowledge.

29,992. But secondly, is it a fact that public-houses were open for the convenience of their supporters drinking during the election and before the election ?—Not to my knowledge they were not. I never was in one if they were.

29,993. You were an active supporter of those two candidates ?—I was.

29,994. And you canvassed with them and for them ?—No, never.

29,995. Which ?—Neither, before nor after.

29,996. Did you canvass ?—I beg your pardon. I recollect one.

29,997. Now did you canvass voters in company with those two candidates ?—I did, I believe ; they went to my house in North Street and asked me where different voters lived in that street.

29,998. Did you canvass voters in their behalf when the candidates were not present ?—No, I did not.

29,999. There is, I know, a meaning given to the word "canvass" in this borough ; an extraordinary meaning ; and I will ask you, therefore, in another form : did you request persons to vote for those candidates ?—I might have asked any voter that I knew ; I might have said I should like for them to vote in the Liberal interest.

30,000. You might have asked them to vote for Westropp ?—No, I did not.

30,001. No, but I say you might have done it ; therefore you did not answer my question positively. Did you ask persons to vote for the Liberal candidates ?—I think it is very likely I did.

30,002. Now, on those occasions, or any of them, were the candidates present ?—No, I believe not ; not more than what I have told you before. I went in two or three houses in North Street with the candidates and the agents to find out different parties that they did not know anything about.

30,003. Well, now, let me refresh your memory. Were not their colours orange and blue ?—Yes, I believe.

30,004. Did not you see those colours hanging from the windows and rooms at some of the public-houses in the borough ?—I believe I did.

30,005. Have you any doubt that the houses from which these colours were hanging were houses open for the convenience of the candidates or their agents, or the voters, or all of them ?—I never went into one of them, so that I cannot say anything at all about them.

30,006. Have you the slightest doubt that they were open in that sense ?—I cannot answer that question at all, for I was not in them.

30,007. As a man of common sense and an active supporter of the orange and blue, can you have any doubt of that fact, that the houses from which orange and blue colours were waiving were houses opened for or taken on account of the Liberal interest ?—If I answered that question I should be just as likely to speak wrong as right ; because that is a thing that I do not know to my knowledge. I never had a sixpenny worth of liquor in any public-house at election times in my life ; no more than what I paid for.

30,008. I am not asking you a syllable about that. It is very important that we should know the fact that public-houses had the orange and blue colours hanging out ?—I believe there were, just the same as there were the blue houses ; in the lower part of the town particularly.

30,009. Do you mean to swear that you cannot say what public-house, or cannot give me the name of a single public-house, to which the Liberal candidates or their committees or their agents resorted for the purposes of the election ?—No, I cannot, for I never went into one of them.

30,010. That has nothing to do with it ?—There is one thing more that I wanted to mention ; that was, Mr. Alway stated the other day that he had 10*l.* from me at one of the elections. That was sent up by Mr. Allan, and I think it was Mr. Bagehot's election instead of Mr. Vanderbyl's that I gave it to him.

30,011. (Mr. Price.) You gave it to whom ?—Mr. Alway.

30,012. Oh ; and Alway has put it at some other election, has he ?—He says I made a mistake in the election ; which it was I would not be positive. Mr. Allan kept account.

30,013. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had it at some time or other ?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Is Mr. Jarvis here ?

(Mr. Jarvis.) Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then let that man Roberts stand up in the witness box.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

F. Jarvis.

24 Sept. 1869.

FRANCIS JARVIS recalled.

(Mr. Price.) The shorthand writer will read that part of your evidence as to Roberts. (The following extract was read from the previous examination of the witness): "Was there a man of the name of "Roberts, who is the father-in-law of Hook, of whom "we have heard and seen something? Did he take "money from you and vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—He "did. How much?—10*l.* Did you ask him to "return it?—I did. Did he refuse?—He did. He "said he was in difficulties, and that he was in the "hands of Messrs. Reed & Cook, and that they had then "got him in court, as I understood, the very same "day. They had got him in court?—Yes. That is "the county court?—That is what I understood."

30,014. (Mr. Price.) That you acknowledge, Mr. Jarvis?—That I acknowledge to be my statement.

30,015. That was at Vanderbyl's election?—That was at Vanderbyl's election.

J. Roberts.

JAMES ROBERTS recalled.

30,016. (Mr. Price.) You said you voted for Westropp last time, and that you always promised yourself whenever that gentleman came forward again to vote for him. You said, "I made up my mind "whenever he came forward again—whenever the "chance occurred—I would vote him." Then you are asked "Why?" "Because I considered he had been used ill." Then you are asked, "Have you ever had "any money from him?—Never in my life. Why did "you think he had been used ill?—Because I con-"sidered the Liberals had been as guilty of bribery as "the Conservatives had been. Then why did you "vote for Mr. Vanderbyl instead of Mr. Patton at "the election before?" you say, "There is an old say, necessity is the mother of invention." Then it is put to you: "I hope you don't mean to act upon it to-day." Then you say, "That very morning as I was "going to vote for Mr. Patton, I met Mr. William "Symmons?"—I beg your pardon.

(Mr. Price.) Now listen, sir. (The remainder of the witness's evidence with regard to that election was then read by the learned Chief Commissioner.)

30,017. (Mr. Price.) Now, then, sir, do you mean to say that you did not get 10*l.* to vote for Mr. Patton, and because Reed and Cook had put a pressure upon you, you went and voted for the other side, and got money from them?—I am not aware, sir, but what I omitted that I received 10*l.*

30,018. (Mr. Price.) Not aware! You were asked over and over again what you got for your vote, and you kept carefully concealing from us that you ever received the 10*l.*?—I beg your pardon; I said I was going to vote for Patton in the morning.

(Mr. Price.) You never told us that you got 10*l.* for it.

(Witness.) I intended to do so.

(Mr. Price.) "Intended to do so!"

30,019. (Mr. Coleridge.) I asked you myself whether you got money from both sides for voting?—I do not remember a breath about it. I have no desire to conceal anything at all from you, not the slightest.

(Mr. Price.) Don't talk about "a breath about it;" it seems nobody cares one breath in Bridgwater; don't say you did not want to conceal. You were examined for a considerable length of time, and you were re-called, and you deliberately concealed from us the rascality of your conduct, viz., that you had got 10*l.* from Mr. Patton's party, and that you refused to return it, having got money from the other side. You were asked, and you told us you did not; you con-cealed it.

30,020. Did you refuse to return the 10*l.*?—No-body ever asked me for it.

30,021. Do you mean to swear that?—I do. That I swear positively.

30,022. I ask you—there is one man in the other court now upon his trial for perjury—do you mean to say that Mr. Jarvis did not ask you for that 10*l.* back?—Never in his life.

30,023. And that you did not refuse, on the ground that Reed & Cook had put a pressure upon you at the time?—Never.

30,024. Never?—No.

30,025. Nothing of the kind?—No.

30,026. Not a word?—Not a word.

30,027. Were you under pressure from Reed & Cook?—I was not, any more than they were my attorneys carrying me through the bankruptcy court.

30,028. Did you owe them any money?—No.

30,029. Not a farthing?—Not a farthing.

30,030. What became of the 10*l.* that you got from Jarvis?—That went to pay my solicitors.

30,031. Reed & Cook?—Yes.

30,032. Now, then, you say you did not refuse to give up the 10*l.* You were never asked?—I never was asked.

F. Jarvis.

FRANCIS JARVIS recalled.

(Mr. Price to James Roberts.) Stay where you are.

30,033. Now, Mr. Jarvis, do you affirm in his pre-sence that you paid him the 10*l.*?—I paid him the 10*l.*

30,034. And that you asked him to return it?—I went to his house afterwards, and asked him to return the 10*l.*

30,035. Have you any means of corroborating that, because if so we will send him before the magistrates at once?—No, there was no other party present; only him and I.

(Mr. Price.) That is an unfortunate thing. Of course it is a very wholesome regulation of the law that it should not be merely oath against oath.

(The witness.) My object in going to ask him——

30,036. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Jarvis, will you attend to me. Has Roberts ever since admitted that he had the money?—Oh, he could not deny it. I had no conversation with him since that same day.

30,037. Has he admitted to anybody else that he had the money?—I cannot tell.

30,038. Cannot you tell us any person who will corroborate your statement?—He does not deny receiving the money.

(James Roberts.) I worked at Mr. Hennet's foundry at the time.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He denies that he refused to give it back.

(Witness.) He does deny it. I swear most positively that I asked him, and that he refused to give it back.

30,039. Was his wife present?—She was not; she was in the back part of the house.

J. Roberts.

JAMES ROBERTS recalled.

(Witness to Francis Jarvis.) I remember you coming to my house, and we had a conversation together.

30,040. (Mr. Price.) We don't want you to talk. It is a very unlucky thing indeed that according to the law of the land—it is a very wholesome thing, and I do not at all quarrel with it—that mere oath against oath will not sustain an indictment for perjury; but it is quite clear that you kept back from us the fact of the 10*l.* altogether?—I never had it in my heart I declare solemnly. I do not recollect anything on the subject any more than I said I was going to vote that morning.

30,041. (Mr. Coleridge.) You must have known perfectly well that you had taken money on both sides ?—I was perfectly aware of it.

30,042. Why did not you tell us ?—I did not know but what I admitted it.

30,043. You were asked over and over again, and you denied it ?—I am very sorry I should cause anything of this, but I did not recollect that I had not admitted it.

30,044. (Mr. Price.) We do not believe you are a bit sorry. The only thing is I should like very much to know—and I think we ought to know—whether Reed & Cook knew where that 10*l.* came from. When did you pay them that 10*l.* for their services ?—After I had passed the bankruptcy court.

30,045. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long after the election ?—I think about three or four days after.

30,046. (Mr. Anstey.) Which of them did you see ?—Mr. Cook.

30,047. Did you tell him that the money had been given you by Jarvis ?—No, I did not.

30,048. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who kept the money between the time you received it, and the time you paid it to Mr. Cook ?—Myself or my wife.

30,049. Was it your wife ?—She generally keeps it.

30,050. What is your wife's name ?—Mary Ann.

(Mr. Price.) You were recalled, and what lends additional conviction to our minds, if conviction were wanted, that you were keeping the truth back from us is the fact that you are the father-in-law of the man Hook, who took money on both sides, and to whom you said, when he came back from Bristol, that there was plenty of money going on the Liberal side. A grosser case has not been presented to us than that of you and your father-in-law combining together to get money on two different occasions from both sides.

30,051. (Mr. Anstey.) You will understand that it is just possible that somebody may recollect something which will supply what is wanted as corroborative evidence to support Mr. Jarvis's statement, in which case you must not suppose that you will escape from being sent before a magistrate yet ?—I sent for Mr. Jarvis at my house a day or two after the election, by his own servant; he came over, and I stated to him how I was situated, and how I had voted; but as for his asking me to return the 10*l.*, he never did in his life.

(Mr. Price.) Very well; he says he did. We do not want to hear your denial, because we do not believe it. You may go down.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Do not leave the court.

George Stacey recalled.

G. Stacey.

30,052. (Mr. Price.) With regard to this matter of this man Henry Ware, now look again. What do you know about that man being passed up, whether as a voter or not, into the room ?—I cannot recollect him at all.

30,053. Did you see him there at all ?—No, I cannot remember it.

30,054. Did you return him to Allan as one of the men whom you were liable for or had undertaken for ?—I cannot swear that I did.

30,055. Culliford saw him there, but you were at the door, were not you ?—Yes.

30,056. You were to be a check ?—I put down all the names of those that were paid.

30,057. Do you remember putting down Henry Ware ?—I do not remember.

30,058. Did you put down any man of the name of Ware, for there are three Wares on the list, George, James, and Thomas ? Do you remember putting down any Ware ?—I do not.

30,059. You do not remember passing that man in ?—No, I do not.

30,060. Do you know him now ?—I know him by sight.

30,061. Did you know him at that time ?—I had seen him before.

30,062. Would you have known him then as a voter or non-voter ?—Well, no, I should not; but I should have known him by sight if he had come into the room.

(Mr. Price.) I think there must be some mistake somehow or other.

(Andrew Allan.) I think there is. I have no recollection of him.

Edward Culliford recalled.

E. Culliford.

30,063. (Mr. Coleridge.) Culliford, supposing you did not pay this man, you have got 10*l.* unaccounted for, have not you ?—No; I did not pay this man.

30,064. You only showed him upstairs ?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Where is the original list of the men who went into the room to be paid ?

(Andrew Allan.) After I came back from America all the original lists were destroyed, and we had to refer to the printed lists to get the names. I believe there is some error.

30,065. (Mr. Coleridge to witness.) You cannot speak beyond seeing him in the passage ?—Perhaps I might state, sir, that some two hours before Mr. Allan got any money to bribe the voters with, me and Mr. Henry Jarman and some others of the Liberal party were engaged in bottling men at the "New Inn," and amongst the lot that I saw there bottled was this man Ware; and I had lent my pocket-book to a man of the name of Oliver Bridges.

30,066. You thought he was a voter ?—I did. I did not know till he told me two days ago that he was not.

30,067. You said just now that you could not speak farther than to his being in the passage; but if he was bottled was not he bottled somewhere upstairs ?—I am speaking of before the money came there. I had lent my pocket-book.

30,068. Was he one of those who you knew wanted money ?—He was.

30,069. Did he say anything to you ?—He did not; but I will tell you the circumstance if you will allow me. Some time before, an hour and a half or two hours before, any money was got, or we knew there was any money, our impression was that we would bottle the men and keep them from going over to the enemy's camp, the Conservatives; and I lent my pocket-book to a man of the name of Oliver Bridges to take down the names of the men who wanted money.

30,070. Where is he ?—Oh, he is at work, I have no doubt. And when he returned the pocket-book to me I found the name of Henry Ware on the pocket-book as a man that required money. I saw him there and spoke to him, and from that I concluded that he was a man who received 10*l.*

30,071. Therefore you do not speak more certainly than a sort of general idea that he must have received 10*l.* ?—Well, he was there bustling about along with the rest who expected to get money, and I thought he required money; his name was on my book that he required money.

30,072. Who had given you that book ?—It wa own pocket-book.

30,073. Who had written down his name ?—A man of the name of Oliver Bridges.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then we must have Oliver Bridges here.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. Ware.

24 Sept. 1869.

HENRY WARE recalled.

(Mr. Price.) You volunteered yourself as a witness, and therefore you really stand in a different position from many who have been here, because you were under no compulsion to come, or anything of the kind; but you asked to be examined about this matter.

(Witness.) I did.

30,074. (Mr. Price.) Listen to me. You have asked to be examined about this, and it now becomes a much more serious question than it was before. It is quite clear that you were at that place in the passage, and you do not deny it?—Yes, I was at the place.

30,075. Were you one of those who were bottled up at the "New Inn"?—No, I was not bottled up at all.

30,076. Were you at the "New Inn"?—I was.

30,077. Were you upstairs with the other voters?—I was not.

30,078. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you in any room at all?—I was not.

(Edward Culliford.) It was in the club room.

(Witness.) I was in the bowling alley, where lots were. There was a great many men there.

30,079. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you were in a room?—No, it is no room at all; it is an open place, a bowling alley with stables alongside of it.

H. W. Batten.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN sworn.

30,080. (Mr. Price.) Are you clerk in the carriage department of the Bristol and Exeter Railway?—Yes.

30,081. Have you got a statement there you are prepared to make, or am I to ask you? In 1857 were you a poll clerk?—At the time of Follett's election, when he was defeated, in 1857, I was a poll clerk in the south ward; the mayor and returning officer at that time being Mr. Ruddock. The only thing I can remember in connexion with the election was the Liberal committee conceiving that I was so strong in politics that they put some part of their committee to watch me every two hours in the booth, afraid that I should not do my duty as a poll clerk; and I remember some little umbrage that I had with Mr. Carter Reeves there, who I had to request the town clerk to take away from the place. I was under the idea that the election was carried out purely, and free from bribery, and I think that if there had been bribery I believe I was sufficiently connected with the party at that time to have known something about it.

30,082. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have heard there was bribery at that election?—I have no knowledge of it on the part of Mr. Follett, nor do I believe there was.

30,083. Not on the other side?—I cannot tell. I should think so from the way they beat us.

30,084. (Mr. Price.) We will go to 1859. Did you have money in 1859 from John Murlis?—I did.

30,085. Was it John Murlis employed you?—I was living very near John Murlis.

30,086. Were you then a clerk?—I was not.

30,087. What were you?—A bookseller and stationer in the town at that time, living very near John Murlis, and had taken knowingly a very active part in politics in this town before. I may say I was not solicited, but through frequenting Mr. Murlis's house, which was then the "Albion," frequently I suppose that that may have led me more into it, and I being a member of the committee on the Conservative side, and working at different times.

30,088. I suppose at that time there was a feeling, whenever there was a contest, that if there was money going all of you must do the best thing you could for the cause, and use the money?—Yes, I believe so. My opinion is this, that if a young man goes into politics he soon gets into such a way, if he makes up his mind to go into politics, that he must go the whole hog.

30,089. In Bridgwater?—In Bridgwater.

30,090. He cannot do it without mixing himself up more or less in money matters?—I believe not.

30,091. How much money did you have from John Murlis then?—I had no amount from him. I remember if anyone would come in there, and I be in there, Mr. Murlis would say to me——

30,092. That was at the "Albion"?—At the "Albion." He would say, "Go into the parlour, and let so-and-so have this." And the only man that I can remember is a man of the name of John Ekers, and why I remember him is because he was at that time connected with my family, inasmuch as he married a servant of my mother, and I remember taking him there and giving him 10*l.*; and what makes me still more remember is that afterwards we were paying the voters within a fortnight before the election, and I was chaffed a great deal about losing this man, and I remember getting into the man's house through the window.

30,093. You are sure about the man?—Oh, certainly.

30,094. You cannot give us the names of any other men, or the amount?—I cannot; I don't know them.

30,095. Can you give us as nearly as possible the amount you disbursed?—I should not think there were more than three or four that I paid.

30,096. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get the money from, from Murlis?—From Murlis.

30,097. (Mr. Price.) There was no "stranger" then employed?—No "stranger" at that election.

30,098. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the old man then alive?—It was the present John Murlis.

30,099. The old man was not alive?—I never knew him.

30,100. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything for your services then?—No; I lost a lot of money at that election.

30,101. Out of your own pocket?—Yes.

30,102. Were you ever recouped for anything you spent?—No, never; not in any shape or form.

30,103. Did you at any time afterwards ever make a claim?—For other elections?

30,104. Yes?—I sent in a bill of expenses. I determined at that election that I would never at any other election, if I could help it, spend any more money out of my own pocket.

30,105. Did you ever at any other election send in a bill of expenses, including what you thought you were out of pocket for what you had spent in 1859?—No, never a farthing.

30,106. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you are still out of pocket?—I am considerably.

30,107. How much?—I should think that election cost me 20*l.* or 30*l.* I had plenty of money in my pocket at that time, and I consider I lost in pocket and trade——

30,108. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you not make a claim?—Because I knew it would be no use. As a bookseller and stationer I supplied the committee rooms of the Conservative party with newspapers and writing paper, and did some printing as a printer, and my account, as far as I can remember, was between 6*l.* and 7*l.*; and I considered that, being the hardest working man of the party, and a printer and stationer, they ought to have given me more work; but I know that my account was the lowest of all the booksellers and stationers in the town, and when I presented my account and wanted the money to go to London, they then grumbled that I was in a hurry at the time for the money. That 6*l.* or 7*l.* was paid by John Murlis, the legitimate account which I presented.

30,109. (Mr. Price.) How long after the election?—I should think about a week, as far as I can remember now. I was solicited by the committee;

we had a committee room at the next house to this, which was then occupied by Mr. Boulting; we had a committee meeting there on the night before the nomination, and after having had my windows smashed by the Liberals beforehand, they said, "It is better "that you should go out of town during the nomina- "tion," and I did go out of town, down to Watchet, and they said, "We will pay your expenses;" but I never had my expenses; I never received a farthing for all the expenses I was out of pocket during that election.

30,110. (Mr. Price.) Was there any reason ever given to you that you had not accounted for all the money you had had?—Oh no.

30,111. (Mr. Coleridge.) You made a bad business of electioneering?—Well, I was determined afterwards that I would not pay any more money out of my own pocket.

30,112. Till you got paid yourself?—Oh no, but that I would keep a proper account, and I would not do anything unless; I made up my mind not to spend money out of my own pocket at the next election, because I could not afford it.

30,113. But you would pay money if they gave you money to spend?—Certainly; and besides that, I would do so on trust if I knew who gave me the proper order and I could depend upon the person to pay it.

30,114. (Mr. Price.) Now then, in 1865. Did you see the stranger on each occasion of his coming?—That is the election of Westropp and Shelley?

30,115. Yes, when first Westropp came?—My impression is that I did see the man whom we may call Matthews at that election.

30,116. Can you give us any clue to this man at all?—Well, my opinion is this: it has been, and I told your secretary so some days ago, that I considered and believed he was in some way connected with Mr. Spofforth.

30,117. What led you to that conclusion?—His knowledge of electioneering generally, throughout other towns. I cannot say at which election, or at what time, but at one of the times he particularly said that if he had such a staff of men to work under him at other places, he should never have lost an election, or something to that effect.

30,118. (Mr. Coleridge.) If he had had—— ?—If he had had such a staff to work under him——

30,119. (Mr. Price.) As he found here?—Yes.

30,120. (Mr. Coleridge.) He complimented the bribery organization of Bridgwater?—He complimented us.

(Mr. Price.) You were such accomplished hands in Bridgwater!

30,121. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to say that from what he said on this subject you inferred he was connected with Mr. Spofforth. Why?—Simply because, as I have ascertained since, and being in London at the petition when Mr. Westropp was turned out in 1866, I had an interview with Mr. Spofforth respecting my account. The Liberals subpœnaed me.

30,122. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now tell us everything here, because this is very important. Tell us everything you can think of here?—I was subpœnaed by the Liberals and Mr. Henry Cornelius White, who has been before you, he came to me during the time I was at the "Grosvenor Hotel," and went to the place and received a letter from Mr. Paul Reed, saying that my services would be no longer wanted; and I went that morning, and Henry Cornelius White came to me and said, "Oh, here is your bill; will you sign it?" and I looked at the bill and found that they had put me down at the amount of 10*s.* a day, in fact, the bill was not above 3*l.* or 4*l.* I said, "Most certainly "not." The remark I remember making was, "If you "had treated me as a man I would sign it properly, but "now, as you are inclined to serve me as badly as you "can, I will go in for every penny I can legally obtain." I went and spoke to Mr. Bealy Smith, and I said, "I wish you would give me an interview with Mr. "Spofforth, because I believe I can claim higher fees." So after, on the same day we were at the committee room, the committee room Mr. Westropp was engaged in, the very last of the corridor, going through the room, and then, at the end of that place, where the committee went in, there is another little room at the right.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Turning to the left as you get in at the corridor, and then the last room to the right?

(Mr. Price.) A little consulting room?

(The witness.) Yes, there is, at the very end, and I was shown in, and Mr. Spofforth said to me, "Are you "Mr. Batten?" I said, "Yes, sir;" and he said, "Come with me," and I went into the room, and he said, "They are trying to"—something—I cannot give you the exact words, but I will give you the sum and substance of it. "They are trying to do you out "of some of your just fees." I said, "I consider they "are, I consider they are treating me very badly;" and he said, "Well, what is it"? So I told him what they had offered me, and I said, "I believe that as I "am at present I can claim professional fees." He said, "How so?" I said, "Simply through being paid "an annual stipend from the Church of England as an "organist, giving public concerts and training people "in singing and giving music lessons," and he said, "Well," he said, "yes, you can;" and he put me down two guineas a day and first-class expenses. I remember instead of the account being 4*l.* odd it came to about 18*l.*, and Mr. George Sully, who is at present mayor, I went up to him and he paid me the money in the room. I believe it was about 18*l.*, I am not certain as to the amount.

33,123. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Sully paid you the money?—Mr. Sully paid me the money in the committee room, the present mayor. I am not certain exactly about the amount, but I believe it was about that. I am not certain whether there was not a day afterwards withdrawn from that amount through someone taking out his watch and saying, "Oh, if you like "you can get back to Bridgwater by such a train, "and therefore we shall not pay you that extra day." I am not certain, it being so long ago, whether it was so or no, but I have given you this as far as I can remember it.

30,124. (Mr. Price.) This was to lead up to a more important thing, not merely the question of your expenses, but something which would throw light on the identity of this man in the moon?—Well, I had understood from that petition that Mr. Spofforth was our agent in every respect, and from the way I saw him with Mr. Bealy Smith, I concluded, and I have said so to Mr. Purcell and others, that I believe neither of our candidates, I will say Mr. Westropp and Mr. Patton, because I was as intimate with them nearly as with anybody, I do not believe they had any idea of him. And why I believe that is, that Mr. Patton at one election came and said, "Let us walk down "through the town, I want to go, and Mr. Bealy "Smith will go too." I had first of all told him I was going down, and he wanted me to take his arm, and I said, "Oh no, certainly not, I shall not walk "down in the town at all." That convinced me that Mr. Patton never thought there was any bribery going on at his election.

30,125. Is it your impression, therefore, that Mr. Patton did not know of the existence of this man or of his presence in the town?—Well, I won't go so far as that, but I will go so far as this, that I do not believe in my own mind that Mr. Patton or Mr. Westropp had the slightest idea of the man being sent, who he was, or where he came from.

30,126. Now won't you qualify that by saying that you don't believe that Mr. Patton was aware, but that Mr. Westropp was?—I do not believe Mr. Westropp was. I believe Mr. Bealy Smith was the man. That is my impression. Of course, I cannot say why I believe it, but my firm——

30,127. You are aware that Mr. Westropp paid the expenses? You are aware that Mr. Westropp paid the bill for 1865?—I am not aware of it.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. W. Batten.

24 Sept. 1869.

30,128. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Batten, do I understand you to say that the partner in the firm of Baxter, Rose, and Norton, as it is now called, and whom you had a conversation with about your expenses was precisely Mr. Spofforth himself whom you have already—— ?—Yes, Mr. Spofforth.

30,129. Did you ever converse with any other member of the firm ?—No.

30,130. Or with any of their clerks ?—Yes, I did.

30,131. As this is very dirty work it is possible that it may have been done by a clerk, that is, through a clerk. Which of their clerks did you see ?—I will tell you, sir. I forgot to tell you just now. After I had seen Mr. Spofforth he said to me, "Here," he said, "I will call someone, I will call one of my clerks, and "you shall go down to the Speaker—to the Speaker's "counsel."

30,132. (Mr. Price.) To Mr. Rickards ?—I think it was to Mr. Rickards, that is the name ; and I went down with one of his clerks, and he and I had, I should think, half an hour's talk together ; I believe it was to estreat the recognizances because they would not pay me my just demand at first when I made the demand ; and they found out afterwards, the Liberal party, the process about this, and I believe that is very likely the reason that they paid it.

30,133. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of that clerk ?—I assure you that my interview with that clerk would not help in the slightest shape or form.

30,134. (Mr. Price.) What was the name ?—I do not know. He was a gentlemanly young fellow.

30,135. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there any other clerk with whom you conversed ?—No.

30,136. Therefore the person with whom you conversed on the business of the petition, except only the person who was appointed to show you down to Mr. Rickards's room at the Speaker's house at Westminster, was Mr. Spofforth, the only person with whom you conferred ?—No other.

30,137. (Mr. Coleridge.) You saw nothing of Mr. Baxter ?—No, I do not know Mr. Baxter.

30,138. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you think it possible that Mr. Bealy Smith, who has found it convenient to go to Australia, may have found this agent himself, or whatever you call him, without the help of anybody in London ?—I do not think there is a doubt about it.

30,139. I ask you, is it possible that Mr. Bealy Smith got this man appointed without anybody's help in London ?—I should not like to say that.

30,140. Do you think, from what you recollect of that stranger's conversation, that he must have been selected by somebody who was not in Bridgwater ?—Oh, certainly.

30,141. I do not know whether you take the trouble to understand the questions that I take the trouble to put ?—I will endeavour to do so.

30,142. You say "No doubt" one moment, and "Certainly" the other. What I want you to distinguish is between Mr. Bealy Smith and Mr. Spofforth. Do you recollect sufficient of your conversations with this man, this stranger, to satisfy you that the person who chose or selected him and sent for him to come down here was somebody in London, and not Bealy Smith or anybody in Bridgwater ?—I do not think that Bealy Smith picked that man out. I believe that that man was picked out by somebody who knew a great deal more about it than Bealy Smith or anyone else in Bridgwater.

30,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is it your impression that he was employed by Mr. Spofforth ?—I do think so.

30,144. I have no doubt you are equally anxious with us to find out who this stranger is ?—I am sir, and I should know him again anywhere.

30,145. Do you believe that the best channel to find him out is Mr. Spofforth himself—That is my firm conviction.

30,146. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell me the name, I do not say of the managing clerk of that firm, but of the clerk who was chiefly employed under Mr. Spofforth in the matter of that election and this petition ?—I have already told you that I know nothing of anybody else connected with Mr. Spofforth. My remark respecting that is an entire matter of assumption on my own part that this man was connected in some way with Mr. Spofforth, merely because Mr. Spofforth as I have known since was our agent, and I believe from what I know of Mr. Bealy Smith that it was some man appointed from that office ; and another reason why I believe it is because the same man came at three elections and for two different candidates, knowing at the same time that Mr. Spofforth acted as our agent at that time.

(Mr. Price.) Now we will go on with the election of 1865. You have told us this very candidly.

(Mr. Anstey.) Have you any further clue to this man, or a clue to a clue ?

30,147. (Mr. Price.) Can you give us anything else which will lead to it ?—I assure you I have not. If I have any possibility of doing it, I will take any trouble to do it. I spoke to Mr. Purcell the day before yesterday when the court adjourned for lunch. I said, "There was a gentleman in this court this "morning as much like Matthews as ever I saw a "man in my life," and Mr. Purcell said, "If he "comes into the court again this afternoon will you "point him out, that I may show him to Mr. Coleridge, "who thinks he knows him?" and I came here that afternoon for the purpose and waited the whole afternoon to point him out if he came. I was so much surprised to see him that I said to two or three around me, "By God! There's Matthews."

30,149. (Mr. Price.) Have you seen him here to day ?—He is not here.

(Mr. Waddon.) He went away by the two o'clock train that day.

(Mr. Price.) Have you seen him since ?

(Witness.) I have not.

30,150. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he a stranger to the place ?—Yes. I think Mr. Hodges the draper knows him, and it is very remarkable that not only I noticed him, but Temblett who was here was looking at him for a long time saying "Is it he ? Is it he ?" and I said, "Well, upon my word I do not know whether it "is not. I think very likely it is."

30,151. (Mr. Price.) He is a stranger to Bridgwater and you have not seen him since ?—This was the day before yesterday.

30,152. That man was a stranger to you and you and you have not seen him since ?—I have not seen him.

30,153. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure that your first impression is not the correct one, that he was the man ?—I do not think I could say.

(Frederick Charles Temblett.) He looked exactly the same man, and if I had been called into the box at the time I could not have sworn that he was or was not. I never saw two pins more alike.

30,154. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the likeness that of brother to brother ?—Yes, I never saw two brothers more alike in my life.

(Mr. Anstey.) It may be a brother of the man.

(The witness.) I have told you that to show you that I am anxious to give you every information.

30,155. (Mr. Price.) Quite right, you have shown every disposition. Well, now, Mr. Batten, we must go on with the 1865 election. Did you get any money at that election of 1865 ?—Yes.

30,156. From Thomas Boys did you get 150*l.* ?—I did not know the amount until now. I know I had an amount from Boys. I was too late at the meeting and Boys brought me the amount. I have got a list of the men. I prepared a list of the ones that I considered I had bribed. I will tell you the number.

30,157. (Mr. Coleridge.) Read out the names that the shorthand writer may take them ?—I am not certain about them, but I want to say before I give the statement that there is one man whom I had bribed, and if I had had to account for the names a fortnight ago I should not have been able to do so. A Mr. Bryant, a baker in this town, came to me and said, "Do you "remember giving 10*l.* to Luckes?" and I said, "No, "I do not remember," but after some little time I did remember that there was some stranger that when they were short of money came to me and said, "Have you got any money?" and I said "Yes, I have "10*l.*," and I gave it to this Luckes, who, it appears from what Bryant has told me, went to Sellar who had already been bribed. If that had not been so I could not have given his name, but Mr. Bryant said I gave him 10*l.*, and therefore I have put his name down. I remember bribing a man afterwards named Sellar. I will give you the names now. There is David Brock, Charles Cavill, Andrew Haste, John Hawkes the younger, Thomas Herbert, (the next name I am not certain about,) Isaac Hooper, James Innalls, Charles Jones, Thomas Lee, James Murphy, John Spencer, John Stone, William Tremlett, Robert Webber, Thomas Williams, Andrew Wright, William Luckes.

30,158. What did you give them all?—All 10*l.*, I believe, that election. You will find that according to the money that would be more than I had, I think, in 1865.

30,159. (Mr. Price.) What Luckes is it?—I cannot say.

30,160. (Mr. Anstey.) William or James?—I cannot tell. I did not know the man at all at the time.

30,161. Was he a mariner?—He was a mariner, and was brought to me by Edwin Bryant the baker.

30,162. Did you give any account in of that money?—I always did. After every election I always made up a balance sheet on a sheet of foolscap paper with the creditor on one side and the debtor on the other, and gave it in at Mr. Richard Smith's office. Mr. Richard Smith, I think, at that election, and Mr. Bealy Smith afterwards.

OLIVER BRIDGES sworn.

O. Bridges.

30,163. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A printer.

30,164. Do you know this man, Henry Ware?—Yes.

30,165. Where is he?—Here (pointing).

30,166. That is the man, is it? Tell us what you know about his being present at the "New Inn" that day and getting any money?—I cannot recollect his being there at all. I recollect writing down a list of the names at the "New Inn," about two o'clock. Whether his name was there or was not I cannot say. If I saw the list of the names now I could recognize my own writing.

30,167. How did you make out the list of names? I went into the "New Inn" and found the house so crowded with voters and non-voters that there was no telling who had been to poll and who had not been. Mr. Culliford, the cabinet maker, came to me and said, "I can't write so quickly as you, you take down the "names of those that have not been to poll." I went into the club room and took down 17 or 18 names, and immediately after I had finished the list I handed it to Mr. Culliford, and I have not seen it but once since, and that was two days after the election.

30,168. That pocket book contained a list of the men who had given in their names as voters and had not polled?—Yes, that was at about two o'clock.

30,169. That was the only list you made out that day?—That was the only list. It has been stated that I was a check down at the bottom of the stairs. I was no check at all. I merely saw the voters passed up, and if Mr. Allan or anyone else depended upon me for giving the names of the persons who were bribed I could not have done so.

30,170. Now we understand that you took down the names of men who had not polled. Did you ask for their names?—I was in the club room and sat at the end of the table, and the men that had not polled were asked to come to me and have their names taken down.

30,171. Who asked them to come?—That I cannot tell.

30,172. Did you hear them asked to come?—I think I went round the club room myself, and said, "Those who have not polled had better give me their names." I think I went round the club room.

30,173. You went round, and as each man said he had not voted, you took his name down?—Yes. I took eight or nine names like that, and then afterwards the list was increased to the number of 18 by men who came up and asked me to take their names down.

30,174. Who sent those men?—I cannot tell. That list I gave to Mr. Culliford, within half an hour afterwards, and I have not seen it since, but once, and that was two days after the election.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

30,175. (Mr. Price.) Now then, Allan, do we understand from you that you had that pocket book of Mr. Bridges in your hand?—No, I had not.

30,176. Did you ever see it; the last that he made out?—I have no recollection of seeing Mr. Bridges' list.

30,177. Who gave you the list of the men?—Stacey.

OLIVER BRIDGES recalled.

O. Bridges.

30,178. (Mr. Price.) Whom did you give the book to, Mr. Bridges?—If I may be allowed to state, it was some hour and a half after I took down the first list of names before Mr. Allan came into the house at all, and then the list was handed to Mr. Culliford at the "New Inn."

30,179. You gave your pocket book up to Mr. Culliford?—It was Mr. Culliford's own pocket book.

30,180. Oh, it was his own pocket book?—Yes, he handed it to me. He had his private memorandums in it at the same time.

EDWARD CULLIFORD recalled.

E. Culliford.

30,181. (Mr. Price.) Where is that pocket book of yours in which the names were put down by Mr. Bridges?—I tore it out.

30,182. What did you with them?—Well, I threw it in the fire.

30,183. (Mr. Coleridge.) On purpose?—Well, I did that at the time, you know; just afterwards.

30,184. (Mr. Price.) Then, you see, you have no means of assuring us that Henry Ware's name was there, except your own recollection?—It was not me that wrote it, sir; it was Bridges.

30,185. I know; but it is only your own recollection. Here is a man who has had a list made out at the time. You see, you go and destroy this list made out at the time. Ware swears positively and distinctly that he was never shown up and never got the 10*l.*?—I do not know about the 10*l.* I will swear his name was in the book, Henry Ware.

30,186. But it is only your recollection?—I know it was there.

30,187. But then, if you are to be cross-examined about it, what makes you swear Henry Ware's name was there?—I will swear it was.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

E. Culliford.

24 Sept. 1869.

30,188. (Mr. Anstey.) What makes you recollect?—Because I saw him there and spoke to him on the occasion.

30,189. You do not recollect seeing him upstairs?—No, but I saw him in the club room and in the bowling alley behind.

30,190. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give us any account of what this club room was?—It is rather a combination in my mind; some of them call it a club room and others a bowling alley?—It was over the bowling alley.

30,191. Upstairs?—There is a sort of ladder to get up to it.

30,192. When you got up was it weather-tight?—Oh yes! of course it was. It was the place where we had them bottled up.

30,193. It was a room?—It was undoubtedly a room to all intents and purposes.

H. Ware.

HENRY WARE recalled.

(Mr. Price.) You know you volunteered yourself as a witness about this matter. I do not know that anything further can be done about it, but certainly the preponderance of testimony is against the truth of your statement here to-day, whether a jury would think so or not. One does not want to multiply needlessly prosecutions for perjury at the expense of the borough, but the preponderance of the testimony, as far as my judgment goes, is against your statement.

(Mr. Anstey.) I quite agree.

(Mr. Price.) Still there are loopholes and links which are wanted in the matter, and perhaps, under all the circumstances, I do not think we should be warranted as a matter of example in ordering you to be prosecuted; but I have no hesitation in saying that from the fact of your being there the preponderance of testimony would convince my mind that you did get the 10*l.*

(Mr. Anstey.) And that your name was on the list.

(The witness.) I never received a farthing.

O. Bridges.

OLIVER BRIDGES recalled.

(The witness.) May I say this, that the list that I made out was made out an hour and a half before there was any money in the place, and that there were many men on that list that went away to poll immediately after their names were written, without any money whatever.

(Mr. Price.) That is another matter.

H. W. Batten.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN recalled.

30,194. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Batten, we will go on?—I should like to make a remark before you go any further. Very likely an impression may go through the hall as to one of the names that I mentioned, the name of John Stone, that that may be a tradesman in this town. That John Stone is not tradesman, but he was a blacksmith. He is not living in the town at all. He was a working man and labourer at the time.

30,195. He was at that time a voter?—Yes, but there is another John Stone in the town.

30,196. It is right that you should state that, that it is not the John Stone who is now living in the town?—No, it is not. I recollect at that first election of 1865, when Sir John Shelley was here, that we were very much impressed with the idea that money was going to be spent on the Liberal side at that election. I remember coming from church on one Sunday morning, and hearing that a meeting had been held at Mr. Henry Lovibond's at which there was some division.

30,197. (Mr. Price.) You all go to church here?—A great many go to chapel.

30,198. (Mr. Price.) Or to chapel. I mean you all go to a place of worship?—I go, because I am paid to go. I do not mean to say I should not go otherwise.

(Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence, Henry Chapman Bussell told us, that in the interval between the planning and doing of some gigantic scehme of bribery he went to chapel.

30,199. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on?—I remember hearing a report that there had been a division in the Liberal party on one Sunday morning at Mr. Henry Lovibond's. This is merely the report that I heard, of course I give it to you as I heard it, that they would not agree for Sir John Shelley to pay any money unless Mr. Kinglake would go his half, and that he was not going to carry Mr. Kinglake in on his back, and I think I can substantiate the remark, that not only we thought money was going to be spent by the Liberal party, and the men that usually do what the Commissioner just now called the "dirty work" on their behalf at elections, but that it was believed until the night of the nomination by those who generally bribe on the Liberal side that money was going to be spent on their side; and I know as a fact that I have heard from two or three of the principal men who usually bribe that they did not know until the night of the nomination but what they were going to have money to spend to fight against us at that election.

30,200. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not that the case on both sides? One side bribes and justifies it on the ground that he has heard the other side is going to bribe, and the other side at another election bribes because someone has heard that the opposite party is going to bribe?—All I can say is, that I do not wish to justify it at all. I bribed with the idea of getting in my candidate, not caring whether the others were bribing or not. That is not at all an idea of mine.

30,201. (Mr. Price.) What were the expenses you returned at that election of 1865?—I think it must have been 8*l.* or 9*l.*

30,202. What expenses were they?—As near as I can. All I remember is that I never would give an order. They were continually asking to stand a glass of beer, and I would say, "I cannot stand, certainly not;" and they would say, "They will give it if you give an order," and I never would. When I did stand I used to pay for it, and I remember, I think it was that election, I paid several little amounts, and one of the heaviest items was for a man named Male. I sent off to Dartmoor Prison, he was a warder there. He had been before that a drill instructor of the Fifth Rifle Corps of Bridgwater.

30,203. How could he vote?—He voted Conservative.

30,204. How could he vote? I suppose he was not struck off?—No.

30,205. (Mr. Coleridge.) It would have been a bad vote on a scrutiny?—Yes, it would have been a bad vote on a scrutiny, no doubt. However, he was on the register, and I sent for him.

30,206. (Mr Price.) And paid the expenses?—And paid the young fellow the expenses of going. He got 3*l.*, I think. I cannot tell, but he could.

30,207. That is the heaviest item?—That is the heaviest item of the lump sum.

30,208. Was there a balance left to you besides that?—There was a balance owing to me.

30,209. Was that paid afterwards to you by a person coming to your house?—I believe that is the election. I was paid by Mr. Smith and once from the stranger, but I cannot remember which election it was.

30,210. It was not the man we have been speaking of?

(Mr. Anstey.) No, a shorter man, who never came before or since. I remember seeing him afterwards on the market day buying some fish, that is all I can remember.

30,211. Had you anything to do with the petition in London?—I was there. I was subpœnaed by the lawyers.

30,212. Now in 1866 Patton came down. What part did you take then?—That was Patton and Bagehot. The first thing I can remember is engaging the band to play, and I know what I paid them. I think it was about 25*l.* some time afterwards for their services.

30,213. Did you see the stranger again that time at Robert Bussell's?—Yes, I remember now the time he was at Robert Bussell's, at the first election of Patton's. I happened to sleep a little bit longer than I made up my mind to, and Robert Bussell came up to my house and told me afterwards, "I never knew anyone sleep as you did." However he did not see me. He left word that I was to come to his house as soon as possible, and I went down and then Matthews ——

30,214. On what day?—On the morning of the election Matthews gave me some money. I know he told me to pay the men in 5*l.* I know I used to give a list in beforehand of what men I would do, and after the election gave in a counter list showing what men I had done to account for the money I had received, and I gave the men 5*l.* and promised them another 5*l.*, and they went to poll, and I remember after we had expended our money there going to the "Clarence" and seeing Mr. Bealy Smith, and having some conversation with him about it, he said "Now "we are going to lose this election, in fact we have "lost it," and I told him a conversatson I had overheard with Mr. Reed and Mr. Bagehot. At the same time I do not know whether you wish me to tell the conversation; it was merely complimentary to Mr. Bagehot on his being returned.

30,215. We do not care for it?—I said "I do not "think it is so bad as that. I believe if we had now "some money I could go in and win." He said, "Do you think so?" I said, "Yes, I have no doubt "of it in my mind," and it appears others had not from the evidence given. He said, "Wait a bit." While waiting I remember his sitting down and going into some calculation; going into the committee room and drawing out a list of unpolled men. Then he came to me and said, "Now you at once go off to "Bussell's;" and I remember Frederick Harden accompanying me to Bussell's, where we had another interview with Mr. Matthews, and his saying, "Well, "now do you think there is any chance of winning?" I said "Yes, I think we can win now." And I remember he says, "Now you go on down to "Newton's," and Harden and myself went on to Newton's, and went upstairs into a large room, and there found a lot of voters waiting in the long room ready to go to the poll, but would not go; they were determined not to go unless they had money. They said they would not, and they were waiting for it. You go up over the staircase, and on the left as you go up over is a large room. On the right is a little bedroom, and we sent the men into this bedroom and they came out with money, and I took some of them to the poll, and who paid them I cannot tell. I have an impression it was Robert Bussell, because he brought the money, and I did not see him in the large room, but I know he came up over, and I believe he paid the money. He was in the room with Harden, or they both paid it between them. Then we won that election, and by a majority of seven.

30,216. How much did you pay away altogether at that time? It is only to get the names?—The list, as near as I could make out, is Henry Billinger, David Brock, John Brown, William Burridge, Charles Cavill, Andrew Haste, Isaac Hooper, James Junalls, Charles Jones, William Marels, John Spencer, William Stocker, William Tremlett, George Tremlett, Thomas Wills. Those men were paid 5*l.* at the time, and promised another 5*l.*, and I gave in my list after that election to Mr. Smith, with the amount of money I had received on the debtor side, with the list of names that I had promised to also on the debtor side and for my expenses, and on the other side was the money I had actually paid the men, 5*l.* each. I remember saying "Mr. Bealy," we used to call him, those who were more intimate with him, than anything else,[5] I said, "Oh, Mr. Bealy, I have not filled in the item of my own expenses." He says, "No, do not do that. I think if you leave that to me to fill in afterwards I shall be doing you more justice." And I say, "Very well, I will leave it to you," and I remember very well the time Matthews came down, three or four days before the second election of Mr. Patton, when Mr. Vanderbyl was elected, and I met him at Frederick Harden's, I do not think Harden was there himself, but I am certain Frederick Temblett was in the room with me at the time, and he brought up this list, my own sheet of foolscap I always used to give in, and he says, "Here you are, just take this money and sign it;" so I looked at it, and then as to my own expenses no figure had been put against it, and I says "Oh no, I do not see that "at all. I left it to Mr. Bealy because he thought "he might do me more justice, and it is just vice "versâ," or something of that sort, "nothing at all. "I have had to pay money out of my own pocket in "treating, and it is not fair." He says, "I have no "more to give. I cannot give you a farthing. You "have sent in your statement, and this is what Mr. "Bealy has credited you with put together." I said, "I do not see that it is fair," but however, I remember Temblett saying, "Do not be a fool; take that "money, or you will not get it at all; those fellows "will be on you," and I took it, and I signed the receipt so much on account, so as not to have any misunderstanding with him on that point.

30,217. So you received everything except what would reimburse you your expenses?—Yes. There was a man called Lee at that time I did not have the 5*l.* for, because they were making up the lists for the election. Mr. Bealy says to me, "That man is now "living at Swansea." I said, "Yes." He said, "Do "you think we had better have him?" I said, "He "will want the money the same as anyone else, and "there is 5*l.* due to him at the former election." He says, "Why, it will amount to 20*l.*, and we can "have two with that amount." Mr. Bealy says that to me. That man, Lee, only had 5*l.* for that election.

30,218. (Mr. Price.) What calculation did you make; how many men you would be able to bribe at these elections?—We always reckoned it like this: if we bribed 200 we should win the election.

30,219. Under the old constituency?—Under the old constituency. We could nearly always get our men to go to the poll for 10*l.* each; that is, if paid straight off, without the bother of promising anything.

30,220. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then 2,000*l.* was the least sum you could win an election with?—I believe so.

30,221. Besides your own expenses, perhaps 500*l.* more?—As far as I was concerned, they were very immaterial.

30,222. You would want about 2,500*l.*?—I do not know; we should want 2,000*l.* probably on the day of the election.

30,223. (Mr. Anstey.) At least?—At least, to win the election, because there were always some men who stuck out for 5*l.* more, and if we had that money we could have won always.

30,224. (Mr. Coleridge.) Could you win on the Conservative side if there was no money going on the other side?—At the last election we could have, there is no doubt.

30,225. (Mr. Price.) Would that have been because Mr. Westropp had been known as a Liberal man, and had plenty of money, and Mr. Gray was supposed to be a rich man; would it have been because your party would have trusted to their paying them afterwards, or really done for love of the cause, without expectation?—I do not believe in it at all.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. W. Batten.

24 Sept. 1869.

30,226. Therefore your men would have had sufficient trust in the honour of the party. They would have voted last time for Westropp and Gray, if no bribery, and they would have had a majority, but the majority would have expected something or other to be paid?—I cannot tell what they would have expected, but I believe they would have won. It was an election won by a great amount of trickery, and what I call diplomacy.

30,227. Still, when you say won without money, do you mean without men ever being paid afterwards, or do you think they would have won it in this way: that your party would have trusted your 200, or the bribable body, to the honour of the party, and expected something or other to be paid?—I believe they did trust that time, I do not believe there was an intention; in fact I know the contrary; there was not to be a penny spent.

30,228. We know, but I want to know what your belief is the impression was on the minds of the voters?—No doubt that they were going to have money.

30,229. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have heard a deal of rubbish about the Conservative Working Men's Association. Do you believe it had any effect?—Well, it had, and did a good deal of good to our party.

30,230. Had it an effect?—It only made the men come-atable.

30,231. (Mr. Price.) Those two societies in Bridgwater only mean this, that a certain number of men on either side you could be sure of?—That is it.

30,232. One called the Liberal, and the other the Conservative Association?—Yes.

30,233. (Mr. Anstey.) In reference to these questions which the Chief Commissioner and my other colleague have put, I ask, do you remember a very important circular, signed by the man who was the chairman at the meeting at the "Clarence," at 8 o'clock on the morning of the poll. The circular was issued some weeks, or days at least, before that. It is headed, "Cornhill, Bridgwater, November 1868," and the copy, of which I hold in my hand, purports to be addressed to a Mr. Hayward. I will read it to you, and then ask you if any copy of it fell in your way:

"Dear sir,

"As a Conservative, and one deeply interested "in the coming contest, I beg to solicit your vote and "interest for our old friend Mr. Westropp and his co-"partner, Mr. Gray, feeling that it would prove, in "the future, everything you should wish for.

"Yours respectfully,

"R. Hodge."

"Postcript.—Will you come to me or write to me "by return. Polling, Tuesday."

—That is the first intimation I ever had of such a thing; it was perfectly new to me—what you have just read.

30,234. But it is very significant, is not it, feeling assured that it would prove in the future, not the present, everything you, Mr. Hayward that means, could wish for? Then, calling Mr. Gray a sharer in the election, and the expense, because it very properly calls him Mr. Westropp's copartner, do not you see that it is very suggestive, profit and loss?—I understand perfectly well how you put it, but my opinion is this, that that is not a genuine document, and I should be very much surprised to hear it, as you will find, before I have finished my evidence respecting Mr. Hodge.

30,235. Very much surprised if he ever wrote such a thing?—He never had any authority, I am sure.

30,236. That is another thing; we are not here to try questions of agency, it is no matter to me, and I suppose to no one, certainly not to the legislature; whether a person who bought up the cattle, as they are described to be, rambling about the streets looking for purchasers on that day, was an intruder into the noble office of bribe agent, or had Mr. Westropp's and Mr. Kinglake's authority to do so, it is nothing to me, it is sufficient that they were bought or purchasable?—That I cannot say, as I do not believe that can be a genuine document.

30,237. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to say with regard to Mr. Patton's first election. Some were paid 5*l.*, some were left with a promise, that is the state of things at the end of that election?—Yes.

30,238. Now come to the next election. Shortly before the second election did you see the mysterious stranger at Harden's?—I did.

30,239. Did he say he wanted to pay up the promises?—Yes.

30,240. And drew out your balance sheet?—Yes.

30,241. That is what you have told us about your expenses?—Yes, I have explained that fully.

(Mr. Price.) Now we will interpose Dr. Farmer.

Dr. Farmer.

Dr. Farmer recalled.

(Mr. Price.) You have been sworn, but you will have to be again as to the answers which you will have to take down to the questions which you will be provided with. We shall want you to go down, as you have been informed, to Exeter, and you will take with you a copy of the questions which we propose you should put to Mr. Richard Smith, and obtain from him such answers as he is capable of giving through his wife or otherwise. If it requires the presence of his wife to make intelligible to you what he says, why of course she may be present, but you will take care that she does not dictate any answers. We will assume that he has sufficient intelligence to prevent that being done. We think that you may, according to you discretion, let Mr. Smith know if you observe (and we shall certainly put you upon your oath when you return as to your giving us a full account of what passed) that he is in any way shrinking from giving answers to the question put, and you believe he has understood them, and is merely disinclined to give us information, let Mr. Smith know that we shall reserve to ourselves the right of insisting on his presence, I will not say in this court, but in this town, he having gone away under the advice of yourself, as his medical man, to avoid the excitement, and being therefore removed from the atmosphere of excitement here. You will exercise your judgment therefore, as his medical man, in addressing him for the purpose of eliciting the truth from him as to making him understand that it will be more unpleasant for him if he does not give intelligent answers. We reserve to ourselves that right, and therefore it it no use for him to try to escape from examination by that mode of dealing with it. It would only be on the assurance which you might give as a medical man, that it would be dangerous to his life, that we should not insist on his being brought back, and that you will also impress that on Mrs. Smith before you see him.

(The witness.) I shall have a conversation before I see him, of course.

(Mr. Price.) Under those circumstances we will get you to go down to-morrow and carry with you this paper, and it will be sufficient for us to swear you when you return that you bring back a truthful account of what took place.

(The witness.) Of course I have power, if I see that the questions are acting injuriously on him, of desisting.

(Mr. Price.) If you are able to tell us when you come back that you desisted from pressing the matter further on that ground.

(The witness.) I have a letter from Mrs. Smith this morning and she is alarmed about it.

(Mr. Price.) We must consider that if you tell us on your return that you consider, as his medical man, it would be dangerous to press any question on him in the then state in which he was, and take on yourself the responsibility of a medical man to say it was injurious, we should not press the thing further.

(Mr. Anstey.) We cannot take on ourselves before to say what we should do. We may or may not be satisfied that that is so.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN recalled.

30,242. (Mr. Price.) Go on now, if you please, with your account?—The next election is Patton and Vanderbyl's second election of 1866. The first thing I have a recollection of is the night of the nomination. I took a very active part in the nomination. I was at the "Clarence," and Mr. Bealy Smith, about 11 o'clock, came to the bar where I was and beckoned me out, and says, "Here Batten, I want to "talk with you; just walk home with me, will you." He lived at that time a mile out of the town, at Wembdon. I walked home with him, and he says, "We want you to do all you can, mind to work," and I complained to him that they had not treated me in a proper manner, and he said, "You go on to work at "this election, and I will see you shall be made a "very handsome present." And he said, "Go to "the 'Albion' and go up into the room, and you will "find some one." I went to the "Albion," and I think when we got there it would be about 1 o'clock in the morning. When there, I found Mr. Matthews, the same gentleman of course whom I had met several times before, and I knew him directly; we shook hands. I saw there Temblett and Harden, and Jarman, and Waddon. They, to the best of my recollection, are those I saw there. We were talking about money, and he said what money he had to win. Now I cannot swear what the amount was, but I know we all thought it was very little, inasmuch as we had heard before that the Liberals had been, and we knew very well that they were at that election on the night of the nomination, offering amounts of 15*l.*

30,243. Therefore your 10*l.* usual bribe would not do?—I believe, as far as my recollection carries me, that he had not enough even to meet tens, and my evidence will be to show that he had not enough, that he parted with at all events, and I should like to mention, to show that the Tories do not always begin bribery, that we did know that night that they were offering 15*l.*, and we were not prepared to fight then on the same ground.

30,244. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you know that?—You get voters coming up to you who know you pretty well in this town, if they know you have anything to do with the election, saying, "I can get so-and-so elsewhere."

30,245. In fact, they do it for the purpose of screwing out more money?—It is the regular case in this town that men will in volleys come and say, "Will you give us so-and-so?" and if you say "No," then they say, "We can go up to Mr. So-and-so."

30,246. Then how is it there was an election without a petition?—Well, for my part I should always try to keep off a petition.

30,247. (Mr. Price.) Both hands being so dirty?—Yes, I was always afraid of a petition in any shape or form.

30,248. (Mr. Anstey.) How does it happen that there was ever a petition against a return for Bridgwater?—Well, as to the petition when Mr. Westropp was turned out, they happened to find themselves, by accident, at the end of the election with their hands clean, and they thought they would have their spree out. I believe the reason was that they had so large a majority that they could not stand the expense.

30,249. But they did not pray the seat?—I believe they did.

30,250. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware at the last election Westropp and Gray abandoned the scrutiny? they prayed for it in their petition, and abandoned it before Mr. Justice Blackburn took his seat in this court?—Yes; the remark I made before was respecting the petition on which Mr. Westropp was turned out.

(Mr. Anstey.) It applies to all alike.

30,251. (Mr. Price.) A prayer for a scrutiny would have involved incrimination?—Yes, I was against scrutiny most decidedly at the last election.

30,252. It was rather to show that Westropp and Gray's friends' hands were not clean?—Yes.

30,253. Now, if they abandoned the scrutiny, it must have been, one must think, because they felt the door for recrimination would be open?—I will tell you my answer to that. Why I did not consider they would go into a scrutiny, was partly from some remarks that passed between me and Mr. James Trevor at the first meeting, at William Brice's meeting, when he asked me, "Batten, what do you think they did "spend on the last election?" I said, "I should not "think much more than 500*l.*" He said, "If that is "the case, I do not think we shall carry on our "petition at all." He said, "They must have spent "more." I said, "I do not think they did."

30,254. (Mr. Price.) So that there could not have been extensive corrupt practices?—We had not enough cases to turn them out on scrutiny and to get our seats.

30,255. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know the state of the register pretty well?—Yes.

30,256. Do you know whether a great many bad votes would have gone off; I do not mean bribed votes, but bad votes such as there are on registers generally, on account of non-residence and non-payment of rates?—I think we should have been very much on an equality as to non-residents.

(Mr. Price.) Go on to the election of 1866.

30,257. (Mr. Coleridge.) You think they would have been pretty level on either side as to bad votes; I am speaking apart from bribery?—Yes; I think so. Where I left off at that election was about when we were not satisfied with the amount of money that had been spent, and I remember saying, "Very well," and one or two others said, "Well, if that is the case, it is "a pity to rob Mr. Patton." They said, "We will not "rob Mr. Patton of his money, and let us go on "without spending a penny; it is only throwing the "money away for nothing;" and we came to a division upon it, and there were three to two for spending money.

30,258. Who were the three for spending money?—I cannot say.

30,259. Who were the two?—I know I was one of the two. I knew there was not enough money spent to win the election.

30,260. (Mr. Price.) You thought there was not enough money to ensure success?—Yes. That is all I can tell you of the nomination day.

30,261. That was discussed in the presence of this stranger?—Yes.

30,262. Did you say to him "I will not rob Patton"?—I did say it.

30,263. Did he say in answer to that, "It is not Patton you are robbing," and so on?—No. He did not take the trouble to qualify about Patton.

30,264. He did not say it was not Patton's own money?—No.

30,265. Did you really believe at that time that it was Patton's own money?—No, I do not think so, and I do not think so now.

30,266. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where do you believe the money came from?—I do not believe it came from him. I do not know about Mr. Patton's riches or his poverty, but I do not believe he spent a penny, because I remember helping him out of the carriage when he came to Bridgwater the second time, and he said, "How do you do? I suppose I have come here to "walk over." I said, "No." I think I said, "my "lord;" it was just after his having been made lord advocate. I said, "No, my lord, you have not. You "have a stiff candidate come down to fight you." He said, "Who is that?" I said, "Vanderbyl;" and I never saw a man more knocked up in my life. That was when I went down to the station to meet him.

30,267. Where did you suppose the money came from?—I suppose it came from his friends.

30,268. Do you mean the Carlton Club?—No, I do not believe anything of the sort.

30,269. Where do you believe it came from?—I have not the slightest idea or belief, only I do not believe Mr. Patton had the slightest thing to do with it.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. W. Batten.

24 Sept. 1869.

30,270. I do not ask you that; I ask you where you suppose Mr. Patton's money came from?—I am sure I cannot give you the slightest idea.

30,271. (Mr. Price.) This was discussed before the stranger?—It was, for a long time.

30,272. And it was determined to go on?—It was.

30,273. Did you receive yourself 120*l.*?—Very likely.

30,274. Have you got a list of the men to whom you paid it?—I have. I have only taken it from my recollection. They must have been just about the same as the last list, with the exception of Thomas Lee.

30,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) Read them out?—I did not give Thomas Lee anything, although I gave the qualification respecting him. Henry Billinger, David Brock, John Brown, William Burridge, Charles Cavill, Andrew Haste, Isaac Hooper, James Innalls, Charles Jones, William Marels, William Stocker, William Temblett, George Temblett, Thomas Williams. That is the list, and I bribed also a man of the name of John Spencer, and he afterwards voted against us.

30,276. Did he give you back the money?—I went to him, and got him to give me back the 10*l.*

30,277. Did he tell you what he got on the other side?—No. I was rather too much annoyed with him to say anything to him. I said, "All you have to do is to give me back the money."

30,278. (Mr. Price.) Give us the history of that 10*l.* What did you do with it?—I kept the money, and afterwards there were several others that had money left. I was given to understand that this stranger, the "man in the moon," came down to collect up what moneys that were not spent. It was a notorious fact amongst all our party, and I believe amongst the other party as well, and a matter of joke and laughter, that I had got back this 10*l.* from Spencer. However, I was told afterwards that "the man in the moon" had been and collected up the monies, and I said, "How was it he did not come to "me for the 10*l.*?" and I was told, "Oh, I understood "that Harden told him he had better not go to Batten, "because he wanted to talk to you about that election, "about the balance sheet between the two elections of "Patton's."

30,279. (Mr. Price.) Were you given a receipt for money on account?—Yes, he took care never to come to me for the 10*l.*

30,280. So, in point of fact, that 10*l.* you had had?—Yes.

30,281. And you also paid expenses?—I did afterwards. I made out my balance sheet and gave it Mr. Bealy Smith, showing this money, and they did pay me some.

30,282. Showing you kept the 10*l.*?—Yes, it is a well known fact through the town.

30,283. Giving them credit for the 10*l.*, you still had a balance owing for the expenses?—I explained it like this, that the 10*l.* would just make my account.

30,284. Of the former election?—Of the former election, right, and the money they paid me afterwards was with that certain knowledge.

30,285. At all these elections did you treat as you told us?—Yes.

30,286. At all the elections?—Yes, always. And after I had bribed my men I would go to the "Clarence" and stay there a great deal, knowing that there was a good many people about there, and I never saw any treating at the "Clarence." I used to be continually taking people in there, and used always to take them, and I never saw any man treating anyone but he always paid for it.

30,287. That is to say, you never saw drink given away and put down to the candidate?—No.

30,288. It was all paid for by you or some one who treated the individnal who drank?—Yes; and there is one remark I should like to make here, and that is I remember one of the elections, I think when Mr. Patton won, I had been up all night and not near my house, and after the election was won I was very much knocked up and tired, and I ordered some tea, and after tea I said, "I suppose you do not want to be paid for this," and they said, "Yes, you will have to pay," and I had to pay for it.

30,289. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not mean to say that people were not brought to the "Clarence" to drink who did not pay for their drink, but it was paid for by the person who brought them?—Yes.

30,290. Then what earthly distinction do you draw between treating in that form and the more vulgar running up of a score at such low places as the "Golden Ball"?—I do not draw any distinction as to the treating, but the distinction I draw is that there is no idea that the landlord was a party to the treating.

30,291. What earthly distinction is there?—If I took in anybody to treat him I should feel annoyed if the landlord did not take the order.

30,292. What consequence is it whether it is scored up or paid for on the spot?—I am not qualifying the treating at all.

30,293. (Mr. Price.) It makes no difference, because you make the candidate pay for it?—Why I mention the fact is that before you it was intimated that one of the treating houses where scores were run up was the "Clarence."

30,294. (Mr. Anstey.) Nothing of the sort; besides you are not here to advocate another witness. The voters I daresay were made as effectually drunk with the drink that was paid for at the "Clarence," as with the liquor not paid for but scored elsewhere?—Certainly.

30,295. (Mr. Price.) What do you think you could have won that election for if you had had more money?—At a time in the morning we were considerably ahead, and lots of men kept coming in at the "Golden Lion." It was at that time of the day, and the fact of the matter is, that I passed a lot of the men when this man in the moon, Tom we called him, gave the money. When Jarman left I stayed there and passed the men through.

30,296, Had you made any calculation of what you could win the election for if you had it?—Yes; I should say at the time if we had had a couple of hundreds more we had the men there ready to go up for 10*l.* each, which would have won the election if we had had it.

30,297. You had not even 10*l.* to give them?—No, none of us; not a farthing.

30,298. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did those go up for the other side, or remain neutral?—They went to the other side, no doubt about it.

30,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you in conversation with Mr. Lilly before Mr. Patton came down here as to his chance of re-election if he accepted the office of lord advocate?—I remember seeing Mr. Lilly, and he said "Patton is likely to be made lord advocate, he "has written down here to know what we think "about it. What do you think?" I said, "My advice is, let him stay where he is, and not risk another election."

30,300. (Mr. Price.) Why did you say this?—Simply because I believe it is a toss up of a penny piece as to who gets in, Liberal or Tory. I do not believe that a Liberal or a Tory has the majority.

30,301. (Mr. Coleridge.) A single-handed contest?—A single-handed contest or any contest.

30,302. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at that conversation which took place opposite the "Clarence" which Mr. Truman in his evidence spoke to, when they had doubts and fears, not having money, and Mr. Cooper went in and saw Mr. Lilly?—I did not hear Mr. Truman's evidence.

30,303. (Mr Price.) He said he went down in the morning, and it was arranged that one should go in and see Mr. Lilly and come out and dissipate their doubts?—I do not know anything about it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Truman here?

JOHN TRUMAN recalled.

30,304. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that so?—About 12 on the nomination night.

30,305. What is the name of that Mr. Cooper?—I saw him here.

30,306. I believe that was the last election?—The last election.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN recalled.

30,307. (Mr. Price.) Now come to the last election?—There is one thing I have not told you, do you wish to know anything about the nomination?

30,308. Anything you have to say?—I suppose at that last election of Vanderbyl's I must have paid 60*l.* to obtain the show of hands.

30,309. That is only another form of bribery I suppose?—No, I wish to tell you everything.

30,310. You are quite right, that is another form of bribery, because the getting the show of hands is of no practical importance?—Well, I felt that it was an illegal expenditure, and why I mention the matter to you is, that I paid I should think nearly 200 men 5*s.* each, and there were a lot more I paid 10*s.* each, to such as watchers out all night. I was ordered to do so by Mr. Bealy Smith, and I said, "I shall not do this "unless I have some guarantee that the men shall be "paid, because it will be a pretty thing on my back "to be answerable to all these men if I am not sure;" and he said, "You agree to give the men 5*s.* and the band 25*l.*;" and he said, "Make some other men watchers, and see they are paid for the night out;" and he said "You go to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith and he shall pay you the money," and on the Saturday after that election I made out a list of the men and got it signed by two voters, that was Heal and Stocker, I got to sign as to the men who had lost a day's work for the nomination. Afterwards I went to Mr. Joseph Smith, who was then a pawnbroker, now retired.

30,311. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who is a magistrate now?—Yes. I said to him "I have come for some "money. I want to pay all our men to-day for "the nomination." "Oh," he says; I do not know exactly what he said, however he said "I do not know anything about it." I said "If you go into Mr. Bealy Smith he will tell you something about it." I did not know what passed between them, but he came out, and the man outside paid me the amount. I do not remember what it was. I took it and gave him a receipt in full, and the men's acknowledgment I had received the money.

30,312. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything about Mr. Bealy Smith's departure from this part of the world?—Yes.

30,313. Tell us what it was?—The fact of the matter was this, that at the petition we worked very hard.

30,314. Which petition?—The petition of Mr. Westropp when he was defeated, and the old lawyers of the town seemed to shrink altogether, and left the burthen on Mr. Smith's shoulders.

30,315. By "the old lawyers," do you mean Mr. Trevor?—Yes, I mean Mr. Ruddock and the Trevors, we always looked upon them as too slow for any of this sort of work.

30,316. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the meaning attached to the word "slow," at Bridgwater?—Yes, "slow coach." John Trevor was always called the old slow coach of that party.

30,317. Meaning free from bribery?

(Mr. Price.) It means that he would not spend the money?—Yes, nor would he give us the advice we wanted.

30,318. (Mr. Anstey.) Does it mean a person who will not take part in bribery and corrupt practices?—I cannot say "yes" entirely. I must qualify the question to say so.

30,319. It is your own words; you said "Mr. Bealy "Smith was put forward, for Mr. Trevor would not "do for our work, he was too slow for it." I want you to explain your own language?—I beg your pardon, what I said was respecting the getting up of the petition by Mr. Bealy Smith, that the others were too slow for working up the petition. I had nothing to say about bribery there.

(Mr. Price.) Who was the slow-coach on the other side? They all seem to be fast.

30,321. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Carslake?—I should think so.

30,322. (Mr. Price.) His partner is a fast one, so he makes up for it?—Yes, I always thought we should like to get Messrs. Reed and Cook on our side.

30,323–4. They were very fast?—No, they were good working men, and we thought we could not go to any lawyer after Mr. Bealy Smith.

30,325. Now go on as to Mr. Bealy Smith?—After that he was in the full bloom of youth, you may say, and he was taken suddenly ill, so ill that he had to be put under surveillance of a keeper. He walked about perfectly mad; he was mad to all intents and purposes; and afterwards, when he came back into position again as partner of the firm with Mr. Boyle he did some extraordinary things as I have heard, such as carrying a little clock.

30,326. (Mr. Price.) He was subject to insane delusions?—Yes, I have no doubt about it.

30,327. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the reason of his going to Australia? Was he all right?—He went off because he was mad. He had a good business here.

30,328. No one knew he was going?—I heard he was going, and as to going for any other reason, I believe his friends had almost given him up.

30,329. Was it to avoid this commission?—No, most certainly not. He went before the last election.

30,330. (Mr. Price.) In the last election what part did you take?—Before going to that, perhaps you will let me give you a little information respecting the bottling up of the voters, which seemed to be a question raised here. The meaning of that is that there is a lot of men always hanging about Bridgwater that want money, and they happened to be waiting about for it, in fact, they are "out-bidders," as we used to call them, hoping to get a larger sum than those who are gone earlier. These men would wait about, and we would say, "Go into such a room and such a room, and we will see what we can do;" and they used to wait until we could do for them what they wanted, or get them to poll as we first proposed, or send them off to the other side to vote as they liked; but as to looking the men up I never saw it.

30,331. (Mr. Price.) At all events they were put away where they could not be got at by the Liberal side?—Yes, but if they had determined to come out, they could.

30,332. (Mr. Anstey.) But to induce them not to come out were liquors supplied?—Partly, not very much.

30,333. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not there a bill for liquors supplied for bottling voters at the "Clarence"?—I should be very surprised to hear such a thing.

30,334. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you mean by "partly supplied"? I do not understand that?—I mean, as I said before, any of us would take in a man, and would give him drink, and would pay for it out of our own pocket.

30,335. (Mr. Price.) What I understand you to mean was this: when you say "partly supplied," not by wholesale treating, but when men came in you treated them and paid for it, and you would be surprised to hear that a bill was run up at the "Clarence" for treating at the "Clarence"?—I should be.

30,336. (Mr. Anstey.) My question was, to prevent the men who were bottled up desiring to come out,

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

H. W. Batten.

24 Sept. 1869.

whether liquors were sent in. I did not say anything about score?—I should say yes to that.

30,337. Then why did not you?—I wish to qualify it, not for you to have an idea that there was a profuse supply of drink. If I took a man in there I should have given him drink, and have kept him there, no doubt of it.

30,338. (Mr. Price.) Now, at the last election?—The last election. The first thing I can remember is their coming here, a meeting being held at the Clarence Assembly Rooms, where we are obliged to have meetings, if we want an ordinary meeting at all, simply because the Liberals would not allow us to have it here.

30,339. Was there a meeting there?—Yes.

30,340. What date?—I cannot give you the date; it was before the last election.

30,341. Was Mr. J. R. Smith there?—No doubt about it.

30,342. Were you there when he spoke about the M D?—No, it was not there.

30,343. Then come to that?—I only wish to show you that I had not confidence in the lawyers at the ast election. At this meeting one Mr. George Parker was in the chair, and they were talking about the hope that our attorneys would be attorney-generals. I said, "I should like to see them." That I halloed out, as much as to say there was not much chance, to say I had not much confidence in the lawyers. I heard Mr. Smith at a meeting, I cannot remember where it was, whether it was the "Lamb," or another house, when he said "M D."

30,344. What did he say?—He was talking about a paper he had received that morning.

30,345. Was that a meeting of the Conservative Working Men's Association?—Yes.

30,346. What did he say about M D?—He said he had received a letter or bill that morning, with 100*l.* penalty, and he said, "That is the bosh the Liberal party always try on," and he said, "If any of you "were going to leave your party, do not be deceived "by promises, but have M D."

30,347. (Mr. Anstey.) "Money down," he added?—I do not remember his saying that. It meant the same, I think, he did say, as they always say in America.

30,348. Did he say anything about sugaring your plums well?—I do not recollect hearing such a word.

30,349. (Mr. Price.) Up to the time of the nomination, had you taken any part at all in the matter?—Oh yes, a great deal.

30,350. What?—Going to meetings, speaking at the meetings, inciting the men on to work.

30,351. (Mr. Coleridge.) Inciting them to work; what do you mean by work?—To get the men to be zealous, that is all, to get them up. There was a good deal of excitement in the town, and I did all I could to keep up the excitement on our side.

30,352. (Mr. Anstey.) By what means?—I must say at some meeting I made hints, which I made the men laugh at.

30,353. What hints?—I remember once saying, it was a very poor pun on Mr. Vanderbyl, "I hope you will be the yellow biles," or something like that.

30,354. Did you make allusion to giving money?—No, not in any shape or form that could be taken or laid hold of by any man.

30,355. That could be understood by the people?—Yes, no doubt about it.

30,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) A wink is as good as a nod to a blind horse?—Yes, and I took care not to say or give the men any hopes that they should have any money unless I was in a condition to give it.

30,357. (Mr. Price.) What did you say which they would understand? You are so inconsistent. One moment you say you took care to say nothing to give any hopes, and in the same breath you say they quite understood there would be money?—You misunderstood me. What I say is, I did not say anything which would give them the chance of coming and saying "You promised me," but they could only infer what I meant without saying I said so.

30,358. (Mr. Coleridge.) You rather vaguely pledged the party than your own credit?—Yes.

30,359. (Mr. Anstey.) You wished them to act on the belief that you had money, and at the same time leave yourself a loop-hole, if there was no money, to be able to say "I did not promise"?—Yes, that was the way I took.

30,360. (Mr. Price.) Now coming to the nomination day, did you ask Mr. Brice on that day whether there was any money to be spent?—Yes, I did. I went to the "Clarence" and saw Mr. Brice, and said, "You must let us know whether you are going to "fight a pure election or bribe," and he said, "Cer-"tainly not, there is not to be a penny spent or a "promise given," and I said, "It is all up," and away I went.

30,361. (Mr. Anstey.) What day was that?—On the night of the nomination.

30,362. What o'clock?—I should think it must have been about seven.

30,363. That is the first time you knew for certain that there was to be no bribery?—Yes, it was.

30,364. (Mr. Coleridge.) How after that do you account for the large majority the Conservatives got up to in the middle of the polling day?—I cannot account for it at all; I was amazed at it, in fact, and so disheartened I thought there was no chance of winning. I thought the others would be spending, and we should not, that I went home and went to bed, and did not get up until long after the meeting at the "Clarence," and when I got up I was perfectly amazed.

30,365. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you were not at the meeting at the "Clarence"?—No.

30,366. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nobody seems to be able to account for what gave you that run in the morning?—No, nor I.

30,367. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you had the curiosity at any time, particularly since the evidence given here by the witnesses on the other side, to look at the poll books, and see the names, to tell us those significant names of persons, which being read are understood by the Bridgwater men to at once suggest there must have been bribery, or they would not have voted so early for Mr. Westropp?—No, I cannot say that I looked through the register in that way.

30,368. (Mr. Coleridge.) May there have been money brought in late at night before the poll in the morning of which you and others of the party knew nothing?—There might have been.

30,369. I mean do you imagine there was, of which you knew nothing at all?—No.

30,370. (Mr. Price.) Were there any indirect inducements held out to voters which you knew of?—I should not like to say that there was or not.

30,371. But I believe you have given us to understand that you did thoroughly believe those who did vote, did so in expectation of money?—I cannot help saying so, that there would be money after.

30,372. Do you suppose when it was found out that the other side were actually spending money, that was the way in which the majority was diminished?—Yes.

30,373. M D being there on the other side?—Yes.

30,374. And the promise being on the one, that turned the scale?—Yes.

30,375. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you think if Kinglake and Vanderbyl had followed different tactics, and begun by bribery the day before, or early on the polling day, there would have been money, or at least promises of money, to counteract that on your side?—No, I do not think there would be.

30,376. I thought Mr. Gray was a rich man?—Well, so I thought. I do not know that he is not.

30,377. Do you know whether he made any objection to contract an expenditure with a doubtful result at the last moment?—I cannot say I did.

30,378. You do not know that?—No.

30,379. (Mr. Price.) Now tell us when you had any conversation with Hodge, the person, a copy of whose letter has been read to you?—At the time we were ahead, I remember coming into the room where the lawyers were, and I said, I have just got a list out of those who have not voted, and I said, "Now, "gentlemen, I want you to go and vote. It is all-"important now to poll as many as we can at the "present moment;" and I remember getting a sharp rebuke from one; I think it was Mr. James Trevor; he said, "Will you allow us to understand our own "business best?" I said, "It is all very well to talk "like that. If you lose the election, you will talk "differently. I suppose you mean because you are "agents you must not vote." And I went down to Mr. Hodge's and said, "Hodge, if you get some "money, I believe we could win the election like "a shot."

30,380. Did you name the sum?—Yes, I believe I did, 500*l.* "If we get 500*l.* we can win the election." He said, I believe with an oath, "If I know you spend "a penny I will expose you. If I know anybody "spending a farthing at this election I will expose "you."

30,381. (Mr. Anstey.) How late was this in the day?—About the time they were polling up about neck and neck.

30,382. How late according to you?—I should think it must have been between one and two o'clock.

30,383. Might it not be that Hodge thought it was too late to retrieve the election by bribery, but not too late to retrieve it by having a safe case of a petition?—I cannot tell his reason. My belief is that his reason was because we had got all these other men to poll without money, and there would be such a noise that the others holding back should have it afterwards.

30,384. You said that letter of his was false, or you would be surprised if it were his. I ask you whether there is any inconsistency at all between his having written that letter or something like it some days before the election, and at the last moment giving the warning he appears to have done?—I do not understand your question exactly.

30,385. Why, with reference to this letter which I read to you; when I read it first of all you said that by-and-bye you were going to state a fact which was quite inconsistent with that. I am endeavouring to point out to you that there is no inconsistency.

30,386. (Mr. Price.) That which you told us just now is what makes you think he could not have written such a letter?—Yes.

30,387. Did it appear to you earnest or sham?—It was earnest, because he was mad, and I do not think we spoke for some days after, because he spoke in such a manner to me, and I have not spoken to him on the matter since.

30,388. You think he was quite honest about it?—I do.

30,389. Did you see Palmer when he came to the "Clarence"?—I did.

30,390. Tell us what passed when he came there, was it a long time before he would give up the money?—Yes, he would not give it up until he had the money in gold which was collected.

30,391. Tell us all you know about the attempted compromise with the petitioners?—The first I remember is having a note or message.

30,392. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present on any occasion when either Kinglake or Vanderbyl was present?—No.

30,393. (Mr. Price.) There is only one other matter we want you to explain. Do you know how the men at the carriage department vote?—I do, I have taken the trouble to prepare a list.

30,394. Is that the carriage department of the railway, or what?—The Bristol and Exeter carriage department. I prepared a list of the voters. There are 60 Conservatives, 24 Liberals, and one who has not voted.

30,395. (Mr. Price.) Were they bribed at all?—No, I believe not.

30,396. It is only with reference to numbers. I want to know whether really there is any influence, because there is a large majority of Conservatives, and the chairman of the company is Conservative, is not he?—Yes.

30,397. And some of the directors?—Yes.

30,398. We want to know whether your knowledge is that any influence has been brought to bear in any shape or way, directly or indirectly, on those men to get that majority?—Certainly not.

30,399. Tell us how you know that?—In the first place respecting that placard issued from the board, directly it came, I remember Captain Bridges ordering it to be posted up inside where the men go in and out. I know this is the fact. I do not believe he has ever spoken to a man about his vote.

30,400. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know a case where a voter has been displaced, or his wages reduced?—I know the contrary. Two men voted the last election who have been since raised in our department.

30,401. Do you know of Captain Bridges having used his influence on the other side. The Chief Commissioner's question referred to influence used in favor of the Conservatives, have you heard of Captain Bridges' influence having been used in order to obtain votes for Mr. Vanderbyl, not a Conservative?—It never was, I am certain.

30,402. (Mr. Price.) Have you heard whether any notice has been taken of the conduct of Garratt, who, notwithstanding that notification, took on himself to act as bribe agent to canvass in the way he did?—It belongs to a different department. I do not know.

30,403. You know nothing about that?—No.

30,404. He is inspector of permanent way?—Yes.

30,405. He is in that company's service?—Yes.

30,406. (Mr. Anstey.) Then it may be that there are others in that department of whom you cannot speak?—It is in a different department. I cannot speak.

30,407. (Mr. Price.) Are you now speaking of the special department of which you have knowledge?—Yes, I am clerk under Captain Bridges, and I know respecting that department.

30,408. Is there anything more you have to tell us?—No. I have told you everything.

30,409. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you happen to know what the number of nominal Conservatives who voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl or either of them at the last election was, those who call themselves Conservatives?—I cannot tell you.

(Mr. Price.) You will bear in mind, if you can, to give us all the information from what you hear in the town as to the identity of this man. You will be doing a public service to the town by doing so, because it will save great expense.

MARY ANN ROBERTS sworn.

M. A. Roberts.

30,410. (Mr. Price.) You have come here to support your husband's statement, I suppose?—I do not know.

30,411. Do you know of your husband being under any pressure with regard to any money matters at the election when he got some money from both sides?—I know he was passing the court that day; he was insolvent; he had his last examination on that day.

30,412. He had a bill of costs to pay Messrs. Reed and Cook, had not he?—Yes, he had.

30,413. Did you pay?—I really do not know, I do not recollect. I took no note of those things.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

M. A. Roberts.

24 Sept. 1869.

30,414. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get the bribery money ?—I daresay if he had anything he gave it to me.

30,415. Did you always take care of the purse ?—I always had enough to do with it in business, and trials and troubles of one sort and another, failures and so on.

30,416. You knew he was bribed on both sides, did not you, and got 10*l.* from one and 10*l.* from the other ?—I think I recollect something about that.

30,417. What was it ?—I think I heard that Jarvis gave him 10*l.*

30,418. And who else gave him 10*l.* ?—I do not know anyone.

30,419. What did he give you altogether at the election time ?—I cannot recollect. Sometimes he would vote and did not get anything. When he was working at Brown and Company he did not get anything, I do not believe.

30,420. What did he get the last time ?—Nothing.

30,421. What the time before ?—I really do not think any.

30,422. Was it 25*l.* ?—Well, I believe it was last time.

30,423. 15*l.* from one and 10*l.* from the others ?—Yes, it was a very good thing he had it.

30,424. Do not you think it very bad for him to take it on both sides ?—(No answer.)

30,425. How often have you been bribed before ?—Me ?

30,426. Yes ?—I have nothing to do with politics.

30,427. How often have you received money for your husband's vote ?—I cannot tell.

30,428. A dozen times ?—No, I have not been in Bridgwater a dozen elections.

30,429. Half a dozen ?—No, I do not think so ; it may be four or five.

30,430. When were you first bribed one way ?—I cannot recollect.

30,431. Was it 1857 ?—I do not know at all. I know he was bribed.

30,432. Just try and tell us altogether how much money he has received for bribery ?—I think I could recollect about 40 or 45 in the whole.

30,433. Altogether ?—Altogether, I think.

30,434. You cannot tell exactly when it was.

R. Bussell.

ROBERT BUSSELL sworn.

30,435. (Mr. Price.) The first thing I am going to ask you about is, at what election did you first see this stranger ?—In 1866, the first election.

30,436. Where ?—At Mr. Frederick Harden's.

30,437. Did you ever see him in company with Mr. Westropp ?—No.

30,438. Is there anything which leads you to believe that Mr. Westropp knew who that man was ?—Certainly.

30,439. Tell us what that is ?—I received a note on the morning of Mr. Patton's election, about half-past 11 to 12 o'clock, from Mr. Matthews, to take to the hotel to Mr. Bealy Smith, the solicitor on our side, and going to the hotel I passed over the stairs, and I met Mr. Westropp in the lobby, and he said, "Well, Bussell," he was in a very excited state, "we have lost our election." I said, "Well, sir, it may be lost, or it may be won." He said, "You have a note in your hands." I said, "Yes, sir, it is for Mr. Bealy Smith." He said, "Is it from the friend at your house ?" I said, "Yes, sir." He said, "Give it to me." I did. He then took me into a bedroom ; I could point out the bedroom at the hotel ; and I then was instructed by Mr. Westropp to go for Mr. Bealy Smith, and Mr. Bealy Smith came into the bedroom with me and Mr. Westropp. Mr. Westropp then said to Mr. Bealy Smith that the friend at Bussell's house——

30,440. Did he say "our friend" ?—"The friend."

30,441. "The friend" ?—"The friend at Bussell's "house wanted 350*l.* to secure the return of his "friend Patton." The letter passed over from Mr. Westropp to Mr. Bealy Smith ; that was the letter that I had taken from Mr. Matthews from my residence.

30,442. Did Mr. Westropp say anything about giving you a cheque ?—He said, "Smith, it would "not do for me to give a cheque upon the bank, but "you get the money from your friends, and I will "guarantee you the payment." Mr. Bealy Smith then stated that he would go and consult his friends, and see what they could do. There was a remark in the letter which I took for my friend Matthews. Really and truly I did not know my friend was Matthews, but he was staying at my house, and I called him my friend, and that note was to this effect: "If you can supply us with 350*l.*, let Bussell know "if you can or not." That was to send me to the "Globe Hotel," Mr. Bagehot's private lodging, or the lodging at the "Globe Hotel," where our friend Tom stayed, our friend Matthews's brother.

30,443. (Mr. Coleridge.) Matthews stayed in the enemy's camp then ?—No, Tom, Matthews's brother stayed there, and if it was all right I was to go to them ; but the signal for me to Tom was that Tom was a regular Radical, and I was a downright Tory, so as soon as he saw me enter the "Globe Hotel" he would bet glasses round that this great long fellow the Tory was licked. I would bet him the same that we would win. All I had to do was to take off my hat, scratch my pole, and he was at my house in a second. That was the signal we understood each other by at whatever house we met ; and Matthews, the gentleman who was at my house, I could swear to in the dark if I could see him walking, and see his shape ; I would swear to the back of the man.

30,444. Have you seen him about this court at all ?—I have not ; if I had I would only be most happy to give you the information.

30,445. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you have been here most days ?—I have been here in that balcony, and I was never insulted until to-day, but I was insulted here to-day by the man Harden.

30,446. (Mr. Anstey.) Go on with this story about Mr. Westropp and the man ?—I went down to Tom and got the money, and it was supposed to be raised by Mr. Bealy Smith, and I was told by Mr. Henry Westropp that the money was right, and upon that I considered my duty was to go from Mr. Matthews to the "Globe Hotel ;" that was to consult our friend Tom. I went to the "Globe Hotel," but there was no Tom there. I proceeded home to tell Mr. Matthews that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Bealy Smith had told me the money should be forthcoming, the 350*l.* Mr. Matthews said, "You hardly left a moment, Bob, before Tom came in." "Well," I said, "which way could I have missed him ?"

30,447. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you can tell us about what Mr. Westropp did on that day with regard to this money and this man ?—He did so.

30,448. Did he call him "our friend Tom" when he spoke of him ?—He did. I gave him the letter.

30,449. When he asked for the note did he say, "Is that a note from my friend ?"—No.

30,450. What then ?—From the friend at my house.

30,451. Did he say "the friend" or "my friend" ?—The friend at my house. I knew, at least I had been informed by Mr. Matthews, that it was Mr. Westropp's desire that he should stop at my house.

30,452. How did you know that ?—Mr. Matthews told me so.

30,453. Did Mr. Matthews speak of knowing Mr. Westropp?—Yes, he told me he was down here for Mr. Westropp, and I knew no more about it than did the man in the moon when he was down here for Mr. Westropp.

30,454. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you were sent by Mr. Matthews?—I was.

30,455. Was the effect of what Mr. Westropp told you when you came back that there was no occasion for you to go there now; you had hardly left before this man whom you call Tom had come and given the money?—I said no such thing.

30,456. That is not what he said?—I have said no such thing.

30,457. I did not ask you that, but is that what he said to you?—Certainly not, for I had left prior to that.

30,458. (Mr. Price.) As I understand, you did not see Mr. Westropp when you came back?—Certainly not; the money was at my house.

30,459. You saw Mr. Matthews, and it was Mr. Matthews who said to you, "Tom has just been here"?—And the money was at my house.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.
R. Bussell.
24 Sept. 1869.

Adjourned to 12 o'clock on Monday.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

Monday, 27th September 1869.

PRESENT:

Edwin Plumer Price, Esq., Q.C.
Thomas Chisholm Anstey, Esq.
Charles Edward Coleridge, Esq.
Henry Francis Purcell, Esq., Secretary.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.
27 Sept. 1869.
R. Bussell.

Robert Bussell recalled.

30,460. (Mr. Price.) I think the last thing you said on Friday was about the interview which you had when Mr. Westropp stopped you with that note in your hand, and asked you if that was from a friend?—It was.

30,461. I want to ask you first, and wish you to be very particular about it, do you mean still to swear that you did not know this man and had never seen him before in your life, Mr. Matthews?—Until he was introduced to me by Harden?

30,462. Yes.—Never. I was taken to Harden's house when I first saw him.

30,463. How long have you lived in Bridgwater?—All my life.

30,464. He is not a Bridgwater man, then?—No, sir, he is a gentleman from London, a solicitor in Parliament Street.

30,465. I want to know whether he had never been seen about Bridgwater?—Not by me.

30,466. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you know that he was a solicitor in Parliament Street?—Well, he told me so. I believed it.

30,467. (Mr. Price.) Was it Parliament Street or New Palace Yard?—Parliament Street.

30,468. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he name the firm?—He did name his partners. He told me there were four of them.

30,469. Should you know the name if you heard it?—He never named it to me.

30,470. (Mr. Price.) Did he say there were four, and did he name himself as one? Did he represent himself as a partner of the house?—As one of the firm.

30,471. What happened after that? This was in 1859?—No, in 1866. The first election I mention I never had nothing to do with bribery till. Will you go back from the commencement?

30,472. You began with that?—No, you objected to that. 1852 is my first experience.

30,473. Then we had better go to 1852. I was asking you about it, there is no doubt?—Yes, you did.

30,474. Now finish 1852. What did you do in 1852?—Residing with my father at the prison.

30,475. When did you get the office of bailiff to the County Court?—20 odd years since.

30,476. Who appointed you?—Mr. E. C. Cole, the high bailiff appointed by the Lords of the Treasury. I am only sub-bailiff under the high bailiff.

30,477. Who is it?—Edward Charles Coles, Esq., of Orchard Compton. He is the high bailiff to the whole of the division of Somerset.

30,478. Has he the appointment of the bailiff to the County Court?—Yes, and the only person.

30,479. (Mr. Anstey.) Who appointed your father bailiff?—E. C. Coles, Esq.

30,480. And you sub-bailiff?—My father.

30,481. Your father appointed you sub-bailiff?—My father appointed me sub-bailiff. I was acting under my father. I had nothing to do with Mr. E. C. Coles. My father is responsible to Edward Charles Coles.

30,482. Did your father appoint you sub-bailiff?—He did.

30,483. When did he appoint you?—It was about the time of the County Court coming into force.

30,484. Were you a Conservative or a Liberal then?—I was only a lad.

30,485. (Mr. Price.) Are you the sheriff's officer for this part?—I had it offered by Mr. Nicholett's, but I refused it. I did not like that job, not the sheriff's work.

30,486. I never heard of such a thing as bailiffs being appointed by the high bailiff. Who is the high bailiff appointed by?—The Lords of the Treasury.

30,487. I think there is some mistake?—No, there is no mistake.

30,488. When did the Lords of the Treasury appoint him?—At the commencement of the Act being passed, and the clerk of the peace was appointed the registrar at the time, clerk at least.

30,489. (Mr. Coleridge.) The County Court judge appoints the registrar, does not he?—No, he was appointed, the registrar was, on the establishment of the County Court. The judge is appointed by the Lords of the Treasury, and the clerk of the peace of the county took the clerkship, and E. C. Cole, Esq., took as the son of the sheriff of the county.

30,490. Who has the appointment of the clerk ?—The Lords of the Treasury.

30,491. (Mr. Anstey.) Who is Mr. Coles ?—A gentleman, of Orchard Compton.

30,492. Of what politics was he ?—I cannot tell. I do not believe he had a vote at all.

30,493. (Mr. Price.) What did you do in 1852 ? How old are you ?—45.

30,494. What did you do in 1852 ?—I then waited upon the Kinglake party at my brother's. It was Lord Henley, Colonel Tynte, and Mr. Kinglake.

30,495. Did you vote at that election ?—No, I was a waiter then at my brother's for Mr. Kinglake.

30,496. At your brother, Henry Chapman Bussell ?—Yes.

30,497. Were you living with your father at the jail ?—I was.

30,498. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said just now that you were a lad when you were appointed deputy bailiff ?—Well, I was about 19 or 20.

30,499. You said your father was appointed about the time the Local Courts Act came into force ?—That would be about that time.

30,500. That Act came into force in 1846 ?—Yes ; I have been in it over 20 years.

30,501. You certainly were not a lad then.

30,502. (Mr. Price.) 1852 would be 17 years ago. Were you under bailiff in 1852 ?—I was.

30,503. And you were living with your father at the jail ?—I was.

30,504. Have you lived all your life in Bridgwater ?—I have ; one twelvemonth in London.

30,505. What did you do at your brother's at the election of 1852 ?—Conveyed the drink into the rooms where the meeting was held.

30,506. Your brother's house ?—Yes, that is for Mr. Kinglake.

30,507. Was there a great deal of treating going on at your brother's house then ?—There was.

30,508. For how long a time, how many days ?—I should think, perhaps, a week or a fortnight, 14 days.

30,509. A week or a fortnight before the election ?—Yes.

30,510. Was there treating going on every night ?—Yes.

30,511. To what extent ?—It was the only house that Kinglake had at that time.

30,512. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was his first time was not it ?—Yes ; Mr. Robert Bate, Mr. Thomas Ford, Mr. John Lovell Sealy, and Mr. Lovibond were Kinglake's patrons at that time.

30,513. (Mr. Price.) Was that all you had to do in 1852 ?—It was.

30,514. Do you know what your brother's bill was altogether then ?—No, not at that election.

30,515. What amount do you suppose was spent a night there ?—I should think it was about 50*l.*

30,516. 50*l.* altogether ?—Yes, during the election.

30,517. How much a night, however ; you say about 50*l.* during the whole week or fortnight ?—Yes.

30,518. Spent in treating ?—Yes.

30,519. That would be about 7*l.* or 8*l.* a night, probably ?—Yes ; then there would be men in the day who would get drunk ; it would not all be in the evening.

30,520. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did nobody pay for themselves at that time ?—No.

30,521. (Mr. Price.) In 1857 did you act in the same manner at your brother's house ?—I did.

30,522. Was treating going on in the same manner ?—There was.

30,523. To what extent ?—A large extent, because they were Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake.

30,524. For both of them ?—For both of them.

30,525. For how long a time before the election was that treating going on ?—I should think hardly so long. I should think not above a week then.

30,526. How much do you suppose the bill was, was risen up then ?—Well, I heard Mr. Faun state at the time soon after, when he was collecting in the bills, that is the gentlemen you have heard of, Henry Faun, state that the bills might as well be made 100*l.* as 97*l.*

30,527. Then it was 97*l.* was it ?—No ; Mr. Faun said it might as well be made 100*l.* as that, which I believe was afterwards paid 100*l.*

30,528. Was that all in a week ?—Yes, I should think that would not last above a week, that election.

30,529. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand why Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake being together, it should cost that sum, why the splitting their votes between Tynte and Kinglake should make the men who had previously plumped for Kinglake drink so much more. Do men drink more when they vote for two, than they drink when they vote for one ?—At the time you speak of, the first election in 1852, Mr. Kinglake recorded 101 votes, and when they voted for Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake I should think they polled something like 300 to 400, so that there were those men extra to drink.

30,530. (Mr. Price.) How many men consumed this quantity, give us some idea ?—The house, I can tell you, was full.

30,531. Were they the same men there every night ?—They would be different classes of people. I do not mean to say there were some that were continually there.

30,532. How many have you seen there at a time ?—Say 40 to 50.

30,533. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1857 do you know whether any money was paid to voters ; the election you are telling of ?—No.

30,534. Nor any promise ?—No, not as I am aware of. I had nothing to do with that.

30,535. Did they ask for any ?—I had only to attend the bar, and take the drink out.

30,536. Whilst attending the bar, did you accidentally hear about any ?—Never.

30,537. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you can tell us about 1857 ?—That is 1857.

30,538. Did you vote in 1857 ?—No.

30,539. Did you vote in 1859 ?—I did.

30,540. Who did you vote for ?—Padwick and Kinglake.

30,541. How came you to split your vote between Padwick and Kinglake ?—I had been up during the whole of the night of the nomination in Chiltern Street treating Conservative voters, some five.

30,542. Who employed you to do that ?—No one, I did it on my own account.

30,543. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you split with your brother at that time ?—No, that is how I came to vote for Kinglake.

30,544. Were you still living at your brother's at that time ?—No, I was married then.

30,545. (Mr. Price.) Had you left your father ?—I had.

30,546. And you had been appointed bailiff, I suppose ?—I was prior to that.

30,547. (Mr. Anstey.) Ten years ?—More than 10 years before that.

30,548. (Mr. Price.) You voted for Padwick and Kinglake, you say ?—I did.

30,549. Where were you employed in treating these men ?—I was not employed to do it.

30,550. Where did you do it ?—An inn called the "Crowpill," in the Taunton Road.

30,551. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much did you spend ?—15*s.* it cost me altogether to supply them all night with beer.

30,552. Who paid you ?—No one.

30,553. Did you pay ?—I did.

30,554. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say you did it for the love of the cause ?—I did it for Padwick and Westropp.

30,555. Padwick and Kinglake ?—Padwick and Westropp I was doing of it for.

30,556. Although you voted for Kinglake ?—Yes.

30,557. Why did you vote for Kinglake. Did you get any money for it ?—No.

30,558. Not a farthing ?—No.

30,559. Why did you vote for Kinglake when you were working for Westropp ?—I went in at the morning with one of my party I had paid money to out of my pocket. I went into the polling booth, and William Hurman, who was a witness in this court, said, "Well done, Robert, bring them up, we have "won the election, and we shall never get a Con-"servative here again." I said, "Do not make too "sure of winning yet, Mr. Hurman." I said to Mr. James Cooke, the solicitor that is now, he was the poll clerk, "Mr. Cooke, will you be so kind as to "take the names of these two voters." He said, "Yes, Bussell." They recorded their votes for Padwick and Westropp. I thanked them on behalf of Mr. Padwick and Westropp. On turning round laughing at Mr. Hurman, who should stand behind me but Mr. Henry Lovibond, my governor, and Mr. Kinglake. Well, I was rather vexed to think I had put myself so forward, and Mr. Henry Lovibond being right behind me, said then, "You have recorded "your vote, Bussell." I said, "No, I have not, sir." "Well," he said, "you ought to." "Well," I said, "I can, sir." I directly turned round to Mr. James Cook, and said, "Mr. Cook, I will give my vote now," and it was taken.

30,560. Who did you vote for ?—I voted for Padwick and Kinglake.

30,561. Now tell us why was that; because you were afraid of Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Kinglake, or what ?—Well, I do not know what it was. I had only promised Mr. Padwick to vote, and no other gentleman had solicited my vote.

30,562. Not Mr. Kinglake ?—Not Mr. Kinglake, and no other gentleman but Mr. Padwick, not even Mr. Westropp.

30,563. Did they hear you vote then ?—They did.

30,564. What did they say ?—Mr. Hurman thanked me on behalf of Mr. Kinglake, and some person in the poll booth thanked me on behalf of Mr. Padwick.

30,565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it on account of Mr. Padwick's private character that you voted for him ?—No.

30,566. Or because he was a rich man ?—No.

30,567. Well, what was your reason ? Why did you select him against Mr. Westropp ?—Mr. Richard Smith brought Mr. Padwick to my house, and said, "Here is a friend of mine, Bussell, and will you give "me a promise ?" He says, "I only ask you for "Mr. Padwick, knowing you will go with the "governor," alluding to Mr. Lovibond, "for King-"lake."

30,568. (Mr. Price.) Why did you call Mr. Lovibond the governor ?—That is what Mr. Smith called it.

30,569. And you too ?—Well, he is our registrar.

30,570. Had he any power of turning you out of your office ?—Not the slightest.

30,571. He has not ?—No; and I promised Mr. Smith I would vote for Mr. Padwick, and I also voted afterwards for Mr. Kinglake.

30,572. Did you get any money for it at all ?—I did not.

30,573. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not afterwards ?—No.

30,574. Or any promise ?—No.

30,575. (Mr. Price.) Is 15*s.* all you spent in treating ?—15*s.* is all I spent, and then I lost 4*l.* 10*s.* on a voter.

30,576. How was that ?—We had five men at the inn, and four of them I had conveyed to poll. I took them to Murlis', at the "Albion," and they received 10*l.* each. The fifth one refused to go to poll unless they were paid before leaving his house. I told him the price Murlis was giving, and he said he did not care about that. I said suppose I lend you 4*l.* 10*s.*, when you get to Murlis' house will you give it back to me again ?

30,577. What was that man's name ?—John Saunders.

30,578. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive ?—He is alive, I believe, but has left the town now. I think my brother knows where he is residing. He is a ship's carpenter.

30,579. (Mr. Price.) Did he vote then ?—Yes, he did; he went and got him from me; that is one of the men who barricaded the streets afterwards.

30,580. Your brother got him from you ?—Yes.

30,581. Did you ever get that 4*l.* 10*s.* back ?—Never.

30,582. You never claimed it ?—Never.

30,583. Did you mention it to anybody ?—Never; I have, but not to the parties.

30,584. To Murlis ?—Never.

30,585. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you do anything in treating at your brother's house at that election ?—No, not at that election, I stayed away from him.

30,586. Had you any quarrel with your brother, or what was the reason of your playing this shifty game ?—I did it for Mr. Richard Smith; he wished me to vote for Mr. Padwick.

30,587. What had he to do with you ?—Mr. Richard Smith has always been a friend of the family.

30,588. (Mr. Price.) How has he been a friend to the family ?—He was magistrate's clerk, and anything he could go and put in our way to assist us he would go and do; many things he had done for us.

30,589. Did Saunders get anything from the other side for voting for them ?—Yes, 10*l.*; my brother paid it, if not more.

30,590. 10*l.* or 15*l.*, which ?—Most likely 15*l.*

30,591. After he had voted, did you want to take him to Mr. John Murlis to get 10*l.* from Murlis in order that you might get back your 4*l.* 10*s.* ?—I saw him come out of Messrs. Nicholls' shop with my brother and his own brother-in-law. I went over, and said, "Come along, Saunders, let us go and get the 10*l.*" My brother said, "Come away from him; don't have "anything to do with him," and he did take him away from me, and he did not go and receive the 10*l.*

30,592. You intended to take him there and get your 4*l.* 10*s.* back ?—I should like to have had it.

30,593. That is what you intended ?—Yes, I did. I was not positive that he would have voted, because he came out of Messrs. Nicholls', the draper's shop, when I saw him the first time after I paid him the 4*l.* 10*s.*

30,594. With your brother ?—With my brother and another man.

30,595. You never did get your money back ?—Never.

30,596. Why did you not claim it from Murlis ?—Why he started, locked up his house, left.

30,597. How soon after the election did he go away ?—Before the election was over.

30,598. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get paid for your services at that election ?—Nothing. I never engaged to do anything.

30,599. (Mr. Price.) Did you do anything else in the way of money after that election with anybody else ?—No.

30,600. Anything with regard to a juryman, Henry Maidment ?—Yes ; I fetched two 10*l.* from John Murlis.

30,601. Was that after or before this 4*l.* 10*s.* of Saunders ?—A fortnight or three weeks.

30,601*a*. Do you know the date ?—It could be very soon found out. A quarter sessions here at Bridgwater he was sitting at as a juryman, and I went to Murlis and received the 10*l.*, and as he was sitting on the petty jury gave him the 10*l.*

30,602. Whilst sitting as juryman ?—Yes.

30,603. Was the Recorder there ?—He did not see that.

30,604. How did you manage to do it ? You seem to grin at these things as if they were good jokes. I do not see any joke in it ; but it was a most impudent and blackguardish transaction. — I was attendant.

30,605. Were you bailiff there in attendance ?—Yes.

30,606. And took advantage of your office to give a juryman 10*l.* for his vote ?—I did not know at that time it was 10*l.*

30,607. But you gave him something ?—I gave him something, and I afterwards discovered it.

30,608. The sooner you are turned out of your office as bailiff the more respectable for those who have anything to do with you. Who was he to vote for ?—Padwick and Westropp.

30,609. Did you tell him so ?—No ; I had nothing to do with it, no more than handing him the money.

30,610. You knew it was for his vote ?—Yes, I knew that.

30,611. And you thought that a creditable transaction as bailiff to the juryman to do ?—I was not bailiff to the jury.

30,612. You said you were ?—No, bailiff to the County Court.

30,613. What were you doing in the court to give a juryman that in the box ?—The Recorder was sitting in the position of you. I have to attend on the Recorder with paper and ink, and take any message. The jury box runs along here (describing), and John Maidment was sitting here, and I went and passed into his hand the 10*l.* without speaking or anyone noticing. I was not bailiff to the jury.

30,614. You were attending on the Recorder ?—Yes.

30,615. What office had you under him ?—I was door keeper.

30,616. Who were you appointed by ?—My father was town hall keeper.

30,617. Are you still employed in that capacity ?—No ; been out of it these 14 years and more.

30,618. Did you vote at that election ?—Yes, I voted at that election.

30,619. Was there any other person you bribed ?—No.

30,620. Any treating besides at that election ?—Only that 15*s.*

30,621. In 1865 did you have any money to give in bribing from anybody ?—Yes.

30,622. Where did you get it from ?—I am not positive whether from my brother-in-law Frederick Temblett or Frederick Harden. I received 20*l.*

30,623. Who did you give it to ?—Gibbs and Best, pawnbrokers.

30,624. The two of them ? — Two of them, partners.

30,625. 10*l.* each ?—Yes.

30,626. Who were they to vote for ?—Westropp.

30,627. Did you return that to anybody as having been paid ?—I went back and told them, whichever one it was, whether Harden or Temblett I am not positive. I saw them go to poll, and record their votes.

30,628. Did your brother offer you anything at that time for your vote ?—Yes ; that was prior to any election taking place.

30,629. When ? — Somewhere about 21st May 1865.

30,630. How much did he offer you ?—He offered me 40*l.* to vote for Kinglake and any other gentleman who might be brought forward Liberal in the place of Colonel Tynte.

30,631. What else did he offer you, anything else ?—Yes.

30,632. What was that ?—To go after the absentees.

30,633. Anything else ?—Yes.

30,634. Tell us what ?—I had been running a steamboat belonging to Mr. George Bryant Sully, and he told me if I had not taken the "Victor," that was a new boat come but for one journey, I could have the "Petrel" for 5*l.* a day, or else I might run her and take one-third of her profits.

30,635. Who does the "Petrel" belong to ?—Mr. George Bryant Sully.

30,636. That is what your brother offered you ?—Yes.

30,637. He is agent ?—Yes.

30,638. 40*l.* ?—Yes, and to go after the absentees.

30,639. Were you to have your expenses paid, or anything for your trouble ?—Yes ; he said I was quite aware that for fetching the absentees would be another 40*l.*

30,640. (Mr. Anstey.) You were to vote for Kinglake and who ?—Any other gentleman brought forward in the place.

30,641. What place ?—Colonel Tynte's.

30,642. That is, you to vote for the two Liberal candidates ?—Yes ; Sir John Shelley was not known at that time.

30,643. (Mr. Price.) It was before he was announced as candidate ?—Yes, during the Parliament sitting.

30,644. Have you ever had anything to do with the "Petrel" ?—Previously ?

30,645. Since that offer.—No, I would not have had the boat if they would give it to me.

30,646. Whose is the "Victor" ?—A gentleman named John Towells. I had been previously running the "Petrel" the summer before in 1864.

30,647. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it taken away from you ?—It was taken away from me because I had given the profits to the Working Men's Institution.

30,648. What working men's institution ?—Not the Conservative.

30,649. (Mr. Price.) Who took it away from you? —Mr. Sully.

30,650. Mr. Sully took it away from you because you gave the profits to the Working Men's Institution; what difference did it make to him what you did ?—He saw the amount of profits I was supposed to have got out of his boat, it got into the papers, and then he refused me.

30,651. On what terms were you to have the boats, no profits out of it or what ?—I do not know what terms he expected me.

30,652. You must have been engaged on some terms ?—I engaged the boat at 11*l.* a day, and got what I could. I ran the boat during the whole of the summer months, and eventually the Working Men's Association. They pay 2*d.* each a week, the working men do, and they have a library and reading rooms, no politics in that, and they were very low. I said I would give them an excursion if they chose to accept it, and if there was no profits they should pay no loss, I would stand the loss, and they should have the profit, and I think it ended in some 6*l.* or 7*l.* profit they got out of my giving them the boat.

30,653. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Mr. Sully find fault with in that ?—He found fault with it in this way, that he took away the boat from me.

30,654. What had you done wrong according to him ?—

30,655. (Mr. Price.) What reason did he give ?—He never gave me any reason. The gentleman which belongs to the rooms, which was a great supporter, and Mr. Carslake, the town clerk, and Mr. John Brown, a gentleman who took an interest in these affairs, and Dr. King, a gentleman of this town, said if I would take them to Donnett Castle they would guarantee me so many at 15 pence a head as a private excursion party.

30,656. There must have been some reason of that kind. Were you using this boat contrary to the agreement you had with Mr. Sully ?—Certainly not.

30,657. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not it that he found you made such a good thing of this excursion that he wanted you to pay more for the boat, and as you did not he turned you out ?—No, the reason of it was this, that Dr. King went and told Mr. Sully he had engaged his boat to go to Donnett Castle and told him the price he was about to pay me, and then Mr. Sully, as owner of the boat, says, "Bussell only takes "her from time to time, and if you choose to have "her you can of me as well as Bussell," and the boat was taken away from me.

30,658. (Mr. Coleridge.) You only paid when you were actually working her ?—Yes, once a fortnight.

30,659. You paid every fortnight for her ?—Yes, and then I understood I was to have her all the season.

30,660. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say as soon as Mr. Sully saw what the profits were in the print he took the boat from you ?—Yes.

30,661. That is what your counsel rather than you stated before the House of Commons, when the owner learnt what the profits were you never had the boat since ?—No, never.

30,662. (Mr. Price.) Was that all you had to do with the election of 1865 ?—That was.

30,663. Did you go up on the petition ?—I did. Yes, I went to the petitions.

30,664. Did you canvass Henry Vearncombe at that time ?—No.

30,665. You do not call it canvassing unless the candidate is by your side; did you ask for his vote ? —Never.

30,666. Did he speak to you ?—Yes.

30,667. Tell us what he said ?—I was on the hustings waving a blue pocket handkerchief, there was a fight, I jumped over the rails in front of the hustings, went down, and quelled the fight. I afterwards in a very exhausted state was glad to go out into the fresh air, and Vearncombe came to me and said, "Robert, "I want you to see Mr. Smith for me," alluding to Joseph Richard Smith. I said, "What for?" "Oh," he said, "I suppose you know." I says, "No, I "don't." He says, "It is about the scavenging con- "tract." He was the scavenger of the town. I said, "What do you want me to see him about?" He says, "To know that he will use his influence for "my receiving of it again." I said, "No, I am sure "I shall not, for me and Mr. Smith are not friendly." "Well," he said, "I have spoken to two or three, "and they all says the same. I have an I.O.U. for "15*l.*, Kinglake and Shelley's, and if no one will see "Mr. Smith for me I shall vote for him."

30,668. An I O U of Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes, from the other party he said, not from Kinglake and Shelley.

30,669. Be careful what you say. You represent the thing as if Shelley and Kinglake had given you an I.O.U. ?—No, from the party.

30,670. But you said Kinglake and Shelley.

30,671. That night did you see him again ?—I did.

30,672. Where ?—Opposite Mr. Paul Reed's late office, not the present.

30,673. Where is that late office ?—In the square.

30,674. Is there any other lawyer's office near it ? —Mr. Lovibond's is on the opposite side of the square.

30,675. Which Mr. Lovibond's ?—Benjamin.

30,676. You saw Henry Vearncombe that night ?—I did.

30,677. What passed between you ?—I was going from information I had received in the direction of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office, and in going round the Clarence Corner to go across the square, the first person I met was Vearncombe. I said, "Halloa, Harry!" and he said, "Holloa!" or something to that effect. He said, "I have been over to Mr. Lovi- "bond's," or to that effect, and he says, "I have got "the money as no one would see Mr. Joseph Richard "Smith," and he shook up something which sounded like money in his hand, and I said "All right then," and passed on, and said nothing more to him.

30,678. Did he say anything about his vote ?—I do not believe he did. Oh! for his vote, yes; he said for his vote and he should vote for Kinglake and Shelley, as no one would see Mr. Smith for him.

30,679. How far was this from Mr. Lovibond's ?— About 250 yards; it was the whole distance across the square.

30,680. Did you see what house he came from ?— No.

30,681. Did he say anything about the I O U ?— He did.

30,682. What ?—That he had got it cashed, had the money, and that was what he shook in his hand he told me.

30,683. He did not say where ?—No, he said he had been and got it cashed.

30,684. I suppose you are aware that Vearncombe denies all this ?—No, I do not; I am not aware of it. He cannot truthfully.

30,685. Had you any conversation with a man called Symes ?—Yes, he is a captain of one of Mr. James Wood Sully's vessels.

30,686. What is his Christian name ?—Thomas; an old gentleman.

30,687. Did you canvass and ask him to vote for Mr. Westropp ?—No; he said to me on the Monday prior to the election, the Wednesday, "What do you "think of the election, Bussell?" I said "I do not "know, a couple of more days will tell the tale."

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

R. Bussell.

27 Sept. 1869.

He said "I suppose you will vote for Westropp?" I said "Yes; who are you going to vote for captain?" He smiled and said "Oh, you know as well as I can "tell you," and I said "No, I do not." Then he said "I cannot afford to lose my place, and I shall "vote for Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley."

30,688. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know the person in whose employment he was?—No, he did not tell me; at least I knew.

30,689. Did he mention the name of the person by whom he was employed?—No, he said "the "governor."

30,690. What did he say about the governor?—He said that he could not afford to lose his situation.

30,691. That the governor could not?—That he, Symes.

30,692. What did he say about the "governor"?—That the governor was with the other party.

30,693. (Mr. Coleridge.) At this time you were a Conservative; were you going at that time to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office?—I stood upon the bridge, and this man Vearncombe had just gone in, and I went away to the bridge to watch him out.

30,694. You were not going to the house yourself?—No, only to watch him.

30,695–6. (Mr. Price.) This is what he said "Did "not you see Robert Bussell on the night of the "nomination day in 1865 on the bridge or near the "bridge?—I do not recollect. Robert Bussell, the "brother of Henry Chapman Bussell?—I do not "recollect. Were you on that night at Mr. Benjamin "Lovibond's office, the nomination night?—No, I was "not. Between 9 and 10 o'clock where were you that "night?—I cannot say. Did you meet Robert Bussell "anywhere in the street that night?—Not that I am "aware of. I will ask you whether this will refresh "your memory. Do you remember that night Robert "Bussell saying to you in the street 'Holloa Harry,' "and your saying in reply 'Well, I have been over; "'no one will see Smith' or J. R. Smith that means, "'on one will see Smith for me, shaking at the same "'time something like coin in your hands.' I have got "'the money, and now I shall vote for Kinglake and "'Shelley'?—Not to my knowledge, I never said the "words. Or anything like them?—I never said those "words to him, nor to any man, not to my knowledge. "But to that effect?—I cannot say that I did not "to my knowledge. (Mr. Price.) Do not say "'to your knowledge'?—I cannot say I did. (Mr. "Anstey.) To make it quite clear to you was it "150 or 200 yards from Mr. Lovibond's office, "and just opposite to Mr. Paul Reed's office?—"I was not there at all. Had you previously seen "Bussell on the nomination day?—No, I do not "remember seeing him at all. Do you remember "asking Robert Bussell to go and see Joseph Richard "Smith for you, upon which he said 'What for?' And "then you said you had been and asked him if he "would support you in your contract for scavenging "the town if you voted for Mr. Westropp?—"Nothing like those words passed. Nothing like it? "—Nothing like it. Do you remember telling "Robert Russell 'I have asked two or three times, "'and I have an I O U from the other side' that is "from the Liberals?—Yes. 'And unless somebody "'will intercede for me I shall accept it,' an I.O.U. "for 15*l.*?—Never such words passed." Now what do you say to that?—I say what I stated is true with reference to Vearncombe and to others. There is only one mistake that I may have made, and that is as to what I may have said as to his making use of Mr. Kinglake's and Sir John Shelley's names with reference to the I O U. That is the only mistake I made.

(Mr. Price.) That makes out not only that Vearncombe has told us an untruth, but it also goes to show that Mr. Kinglake's and Sir John Shelley's was not a pure election, which it has been represented to us it was, that there was no bribery.

30,697. (Mr. Anstey.) You still adhere to it?—I do positively.

30,698. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us about 1865?—I believe it is.

30,699. Now we come to 1866, Mr. Patton's first election, which I asked you about on Friday?—Yes.

30,700. You first saw this man at Harden's?—That was about 10 days prior to the election. Harden fetched me from the "Bull and Butcher."

30,701. Have you never seen anybody like this man in Bridgwater years ago?—Never.

30,702. Not at all like him?—No.

30,703. In the office of any solicitor here?—No.

30,704. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to ask you a question about the election petition first. You were examined before the Election Committee three or four times?—Three.

30,705. And you deposed, amongst other things, to substantially the same story as you told us to-day about Mr. Vearncombe, did not you?—I do not know.

30,706. Were you examined also with regard to a person called Cooze?—I was.

30,707. And you gave a good deal of evidence in order to show that Cooze told an untruth when he said that he had been offered a bribe and had received the bribe to vote for Mr. Westropp on that occasion?—I do not know as I did.

30,708. Well, your evidence is perhaps so worthless that I shall not waste the time of the Commission by reading it in extenso to you, but I will draw your attention to the heads of it. Do you mean to say you did not on oath state circumstances as the committee put it, tending to disprove the evidence of John Cooze as to his having received a bribe of Boys at the "Albion" hotel before going to the poll?—True.

30,709. Did you state circumstances tending to disprove that statement?—True; upon oath I said that Boys when accused never went to the back premises of the "Albion" hotel.

30,710. Was not that for the purpose of contradicting Cooze's statement?—It was.

30,711. You were called to contradict him or prevent him perjuring himself, was not that the object? Were you not called to show that Cooze was swearing falsely?—I was.

30,712. You also stated to the Committee on oath circumstances under which, according to you, you had learnt from Cooze shortly after the election, that he had received the 10*l.* not from Boys at all, but from Edward Stroud, and not with reference to his vote; you stated those circumstances, did you not?—I must be allowed, first, if the learned Commissioners will allow me, to ask to give an explanation upon the last question. If the learned Commissioner will allow me to give an explanation on the last question I shall feel great pleasure in giving it.

30,713. I would rather take it in my own way; did you swear this to the Committee, "Some time "after the election, in consequence of hearing some-"thing in the town about Mr. Cooze, I went to his "house, in company with Mr. Henry Cook," and so on, "He was at home. I said, 'Jack, what is the "'report I hear about this money, what does it "'mean?' I told him the report which I had heard "circulated, that he had received 10*l.*, and asked him "whether such was the case, and he said, 'Yes, and "'that damned Dyer made me drunk and took it "'away from me,' alluding to Ambrose Dyer, his "landlord. I said, 'Who gave it to you then, I "'ask?' He said, 'That damned doctor on the "'Pig Cross;' he alluded to Mr. Edward Stroud, "the druggist, who was present at the time in the "room; he was one of the parties that accompanied "us. Cooze was sober, and it was early in the "morning." Then he is asked, "What took place "then upon making use of that polite language "towards Mr. Stroud. His wife said, 'I will tell

" 'thee what it is Jack, if thee would'st go and " 'swear it on thy oath I would not believe thee.' " That is, if he swore that the money was given by ' Mr. Stroud?—That he had received the money. " That he had received the money at all, or that he " had received it from Mr. Stroud?— Mr. Stroud " I understood him to allude to. What did Mr. Stroud " say about it?—We had a fine laugh at him, and " the woman made use of some very foul expressions, " some very smutty language, and she kept us laugh- " ing at her, although they were very filthy expres- " sions. Mr. Stroud never said anything further, " good, bad, nor indifferent. Was anything said by " any of you in reference to Boys touching this " transaction?—There was not. Did you say any- " thing about Boys, whether Boys had been the " person who had given?—I never heard Boys was " charged with it, except since I have been in " London. I always heard Stroud was the person " whom he had charged with it."—I should like to ask the learned Chairman before I answer that question,——

(Mr. Price.) You must answer the question first.

30,714. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you or did you not swear to that effect before the Commission?—I will answer that question.

30,715. You shall answer it as a question; is it true or not?—It is.

30,716. (Mr. Price.) You swore that?—I did. Now I want to put in an explanation.

30,717. (Mr. Anstey.) You can give your explanation now.—Before the Committee of the House of Commons a question was put was I at the "Albion" inn? I told them "Yes." "Did you see Cooze " and Boys come into the house"? I said, "Yes." " Did you see them enter the back yard"? I said, " No." "Could they have done it without your " seeing them"? "No." Cooze had previously sworn that he went into the back premises. I contradicted that, and I do now at the present time.

30,718. (Mr. Price.) That is no explanation at all of what has been read to you?—The last part I do admit is my evidence.

30,719. (Mr. Anstey.) Now I am going to ask you, the whole question being who told the truth, you or Cooze. Are you aware that the Committee by their report found as follows: "It was proved to the Com- " mittee that John Cooze and John Staples were " bribed by the payment of 10*l.* each?"—I am.

30,720. Then you were discredited by the Committee of the House of Commons after hearing your evidence on oath, and the evidence of the other witnesses on oath against you?—The Committee do not state that they found out that the money was paid in the back premises. The money was paid by Boys in another place unknown to me, and not near the back premises of the "Albion," but it was unknown to me, and Boys will admit that he committed perjury in stating that I did so. I never did, it was done without my knowledge.

30,721. (Mr. Price.) Did you say that Boys will admit that he committed perjury, or that he will not admit it?—He will admit it.

30,722. He will?—Yes.

30,723. (Mr. Anstey.) Will admit what?—Will admit that he paid the money without my knowledge.

(Mr. Price.) You say he will admit he committed perjury.

30,724. (Mr. Anstey.) You say that you undertake to speak for Boys, that Boys is coming to swear that Cooze did not tell the truth. Now I ask you, did Cooze tell the truth or not?—He did not, for the very reason that when he said he received it in the back premises he never received it there.

30,725. You still adhere to your statement?—Yes.

30,726. You still mean to swear that it was Stroud who gave it to him and not Boys?—He did at his house.

30,727. You mean to swear that you never heard till you got to the Committee of the House of Commons, that Boys was the person charged with giving it?—I never heard of it till I got to London. There was a Mr. Lilly, an auctioneer in Bridgwater, who was present in the house.

30,728. Do you mean to say that until you got into the committee room of the House of Commons you never heard it was Boys and not Stroud who gave the money?—I did so.

30,729. Until you got to London?—In the House of Commons.

30,730. You do not retract the evidence that you gave in the House of Commons?—Certainly not.

30,731. And you say that Boys who gave his evidence along with you in the House of Commons is prepared to retract his evidence?—Only with reference to the back yard.

30,732. And you say that he is going to deny that he did bribe Cooze; that he is going to swear that?—He did tell me so.

30,733. Your evidence was taken down before you gave it in the House of Commons?—Yes.

30,734. Who took down your proofs in preparing the briefs?—Who?

30,735. Who was it took down the notes of what you were going to swear?—Mr. Bealy Smith.

30,736. What did he tell you to do?—Nothing; he told me to tell what I knew of the election.

30,737. Did you sign the note of your evidence?—I did.

30,738. Before you left him?—Before I left him.

30,739. And did you swear about it?—It was my own evidence that I gave.

(Mr. Anstey.) I must say myself that I think it fair to tell you that your brother has distinctly denied upon oath every syllable you have stated to day about the "Petrel."

(H. C. Bussell.) I should like you to ask a question of this witness.

(Mr. Anstey.) Sit down, we cannot hear advocates.

30,740. He has denied every statement that you have made about the "Petrel," and every statement about the 40*l.*, and denied it on oath. I thought it right to put it to him before you came here and gave your evidence, and he has denied it on oath. He has denied it on oath as Vearncombe denied what you were asked with regard to him, and as you have been discredited by the House of Commons, I really do not know that we can believe you.

30,741. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you want to say about 1865?—No.

30,742. What were you going to say just now?—I was going to say that the Commissioner said my brother denied it on oath; was that in London?—He was in the lobby.

(Mr. Price.) No, he was not examined in London.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled. H. C. Bussell.

(The Witness.) Will you ask this question. Was it not from his having a fall out with the captain, and because I would not agitate the question of having the captain turned out of his berth, that he would not get the boat any more.

(Mr. Price.) Was that so?

(Robert Bussell.) No.

(Mr. Price.) We must, somehow or other, have corroborative testimony of your statement. I think we must have Mr. Boys here in order that this matter may be cleared up.

THOMAS HENRY BOYS sworn. T. H. Boys.

30,743. (Mr. Price.) We are only going to ask you one question at present, and that is, whether that evidence you have just now heard read by my learned colleague is the evidence given by this man before the

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

T. H. Boys.

27 Sept. 1869.

House of Commons, and also that you backed him up in that story, was true or not?—Perfectly true.

30,744. Perfectly true?—Perfectly true.

30,745. That is to say that you still mean to say this man did not receive the money?—No, not that portion of it.

30,746. What portion?—I mean to say I could not go to the back of these premises for this man at all.

30,747. Was it not put affirmatively to you whether he was bribed or not?—I do not think it was put so directly as that.

(Mr. Anstey.) Wait a moment. You must be paying a poor compliment to one's eyesight, understanding, and memory. I will just read you this:—"Do you know a man of the name of John Cooze?—"Yes, very well. Did you see him the day before "the election?—Yes, I did. About what hour?"—I think between 6 and 7 in the evening. "Where did you see him?—I went to his house. "Was he there when you went?—He was not in the "house. I sat with his wife for two or three "minutes, and Mr. Andrew Allen came in, an "opponent of mine, and I left the room, and went "into the garden, where I found Cooze. Who is "Mr. Allan that you met there?—Mr. Andrew Allan "is an elector of the borough in the Liberal interest. "He was at Cooze's house when you called?—No, "he called when I was there. Then you went into "the garden?—Yes. Was it usual for you to call "upon Cooze?—Oh; very often. He was an old "acquaintance?—Not an old acquaintance, but relations of mine had kept premises adjoining Cooze's "house; another paid Cooze rent for that place, and "I used to have a horse there occasionally; that "brought me to the place. You saw Cooze in "the garden?—I did. Had you any conversation "with him about the election?—I had a few words "with him. What did you say?—I asked him if he "intended to vote for Mr. Westropp in the morning. "He said 'I do not know, and I shall not promise you.' "Nothing more?—No, I left him. Did you see him "during the evening?—Yes. Where?—About half-"past 9, I was standing at my gate. Is that near "Cooze's?—I should think 200 yards from his house, "in the same street. I saw him go home with his "daughter. In what condition was he then?—Well, "I should think he was very tipsy. Did he exhibit "the usual signs?—He did; he staggered along, and "his daughter was holding him as best she could. "What night was that?—The night before the "election. His daughter was holding him in the "best way she could?—Yes. He was going in the "direction of his house?—He was. Did he say "anything to you then?—Yes, he met me as he was "passing, and he said 'I have seen some one to night, "'and I must have over 30*l.* to vote for your side.' "What did you say?—I said 'I know nothing at all "'about it John.' Did any further conversation take "place then?—Nothing whatever. When did you "see him after that?—I should think it was about "half-past 9 next morning that I saw him. (By "the Committee.) That is, the morning of the poll?—"Yes. (Mr. Longfield.) About half-past 9?—Yes. "Had you any conversation with him then?—I will "state that I saw him in the High Street, and I said "'John, have you polled?'—He said 'No, I have "not;' and I said 'You may as well run in and poll "'now you are here.' Did you say for whom he was "to vote?—I did not ask him to vote for Mr. "Westropp on that morning; but I said 'You may as "'well run in and poll.' He understood that from "my asking him on previous occasions. What was "the answer?—He said, 'I want a drink.' What did "you say?—I said, 'Well, John, I will pay for a glass "'of beer for you; come along withme.' What did "he say?—He said, 'Where are you going then'? I "said, 'Let us go across to the "Albion."' Is that "near?—I suppose the 'Albion' would be 250 yards "from the place where I then saw him. Did you "go with him?—Yes, I went with him. Was there "any person at the 'Albion' whose name you know? "—Oh yes, we went to the 'Albion' bar door. Who "was at the bar door?—I saw Mr. Robert Bussell in "the bar, standing by the fire-place. Did anybody "else come in then?—I asked Cooze what he would "have to drink. Did any relative of Cooze's come in? "—His daughter came. I should think we had been "at the bar door for only about five or six seconds when "the daughter came. Mrs. Crabham, the landlady, "had not time to draw any drink until the daughter "came. Did you offer the daughter a glass of beer too? "—I did. What did she say?—She said she would "have some, and I told Mrs. Crabham to draw a quart "of beer. What then?—We had a quart of beer, "and Miss Cooze paid for the beer. Did you go to the "poll then?—I went to the poll. Did you then go "behind the house with Cooze?—Behind what house? "The 'Albion.'—No. Did you then give him any "money?—Certainly not. Did you give him one "cartridge or any cartridge?—Nothing whatever. I "did not go from the back of the door with the man. "Or at any other time?—Or at any other time. "Did he then in your presence take and open any "two pieces of paper?—Certainly not. Did you "say to him 'You bloody fool, why 'did you "open them?'—No, never. Did he say they "might be a lot of farthings?— No, never. Did he "tell you that he had got any money from Westropp? "No. Did he go to the poll with you?—We left the "house immediately the beer was drunk, and we had "gone about 100 yards from the house when Mr. "Bussell overtook us, and we walked through the "market place the three together. We went to the "poll; he recorded his vote for Mr. Westropp, and "I told him I was obliged to him. At what hour "was this?—This would be drawing on to about "10 o'clock. Was the election, in fact, won then?—"Oh yes, certainly. Is it true or false that you gave "him any money either at the 'Albion' or any other "place for his vote for Westropp?—It is false. "No money whatever?—It is certainly false."

30,748. (Mr. Price.) Now then, is that true or false?—I never handed him any money in his hand at all.

30,749. Is it true or not that you gave him any money?—I did not give him any money directly; I placed money on the window of the bar door, and then he took it up.

30,750. Do you think we are to be imposed upon; do you think we shall take your story as true when you answered you never gave him any money but that you put it down; you knew he was going to take it up?—I say this, I stated before the House of Commons that which was not strictly in accordance with the fact.

30,751. That it was not strictly in accordance with the fact?—That it was not, and I can explain it.

30,752. Do you mean to say that you committted perjury?—I do, sir, in the strict meaning of the word.

30,753. Then we shall know how to deal with you when you come to give your evidence before us.

30,754. (Mr. Anstey.) You are in employment?—I am, and I was then.

30,755. And you are not likely to lose it?—I was under a threat at the time.

30,756. You are not likely to lose it?—I am not.

(Robert Bussell.) Will the learned Commissioners allow me to put a question to the witness?

(Mr. Anstey.) You are not an advocate, and we would not hear you if you were.

(The Witness.) Will you allow me to explain something.

(Mr. Price.) I do not think you can explain away the fact of your having committed perjury.

30,757. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which Smith is it in whose employment you were?—Mr. Bealy Smith's. The very morning after the election Mr. Bealy Smith called me into his room, and he said, "This is a most "extraordinary thing for us to hear, and a most un-"pleasant thing for us." He said he had heard that Cooze had made a statement of his having received money from me, and refused to give it up. He said, "It will not do for us to go before the House of "Commons, and for you to have any knowledge of "these elections. I would not have you know of "such a thing for the world, as my reputation would "be gone for ever." I had a wife and family, and what was I to do. That threat was held over me at the very time of the petition. He said the petition would be fought to the very death.

30,758. (Mr. Anstey.) You say that he suborned you to commit perjury?—I do, and if he was present—

(Mr Price.) It is easy to hurl these statements at individuals who are absent.

30,759. Is it true that Mr. Bealy Smith is in Australia?—I do not know.

(Mr. Anstey.) I wish to ask any person in Court whether it is true that a letter has been received by Mr. Smith's family within the last six weeks stating that he was coming back?

(The Witness.) I have heard that Mr. Bealy Smith was on his way home, and I have tried to ascertain as well as I can the origin of that report.

(Mr. Anstey.) If it is true that such a letter was received, then Mr. Smith's family and his friends have practised upon us a very great concealment.

(Mr. Boyle.) I was formerly in partnership with Mr. Bealy Smith.

(Mr. Price.) You had better be sworn, and your evidence taken properly and regularly.

William Carvill Boyle sworn.

W. C. Boyle.

30,760. (Mr. Price.) You were in partnership formerly with Mr. Bealy Smith?—I was for a short time.

30,761. Will you tell us what was the last intelligence you received from Mr. Bealy Smith?—The last I heard, I think, from him was about two months ago.

30,762. Where from?—From Melbourne, and in that letter he asked me to send some money and direct it to him to the Post Office at Melbourne. We did do so, and he said nothing in that letter about coming home; but I was going to mention that a day or two since I received a letter from Mrs. Richard Smith, in which she said "I have heard from Bealy, who is "still at Melbourne."

30,763. Did he say he was going to California?—No; those were the only words that were in the letter. I will write to her and ask her if there was anything in the letter showing that there was any intention on his part to return.

30,764. (Mr. Anstey.) The words were "still at "Melbourne"?—Yes.

30,765. Which would imply that he intended to stay there for a time?—Those were the only words.

30,766. (Mr. Price.) You do not know anything about his coming home?—Only by rumour, nothing further.

30,767. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard that lately?—Lately.

30,768. That he was coming home?—Some few weeks ago I heard that he was coming home, but I have heard nothing direct about it myself.

30,769. You have heard him publicly branded with the charge of suborning a witness to commit perjury, and it is right that he should have an opportunity of contradicting it?—I am sorry to hear such a charge made, and from my knowledge of Mr. Smith's character, I think he is a man who would not be capable of such a thing, and I do not believe there is a word of truth in the statement.

30,770. (Mr. Price.) Therefore, it is the more important for him to be here. If we had any reliable information that he was on his way home we would take care that he should be examined.—Quite so, and I will write to Mrs. Smith to know if there was anything in that letter to show that he had any intention of returning.

Robert Bussell recalled.

R. Bussell.

30,771. (Mr. Price.) You wanted to explain something to us while Mr. Boys was in the box?—I wanted to explain this to the learned Commissioner while Boys was in the box, if the learned Commissioner would only put the question "Had I any knowledge of the "bribery that existed?" That is the only question.

30,772. How can he know? It seems to me that both you and Mr. Boys designedly kept the Committee in the dark as to the transaction, and you swear by the card, if I may use the expression, so that you might possibly be swearing the truth in that sort of way, but at the same time you were cognizant of a great deal which you did not let the Committee know about, and whether it might amount to perjury or not we do not know, but you might have sworn by the card with reference to the point about the back yard, and you might have been swearing the truth with regard to that.—I was not aware that I was charged with bribery at the time I was giving my evidence.

30,773. Now we come to Patton's election; we asked you a good deal about that on Friday, and I want to ask you a question about that now. I was asking you at the time when you were taken back to the evidence you gave before the Committee of the House of Commons about this stranger, and you say you never saw this man before?—No.

30,774. You say you have no recollection of him? Yes.

30,775. Has he ever been in Bridgwater as much as 20 years ago?—I never saw the man until I saw him in Harden's house.

30,776. You told us all about the bet you made, and you say his wife was there with his luggage?—Yes.

30,777. Did he appear to know anybody at Bridgwater, or did he appear to be a stranger to the place?—On his first being introduced to me, I believe it was on the 2nd of June, it was some 10 days prior to Mr. Patton's first election, I was then taken to him by Harden. Harden fetched me. I then went, and Harden said, "This is Robert Bussell," to a strange gentleman who was sitting in the room. This strange gentleman said, "I have the pleasure of knowing "Bussell by seeing him in the lobby of the House of "Commons." He held out his hand to shake hands, I did the same. He then told me what he was down about, and he said that he was recommended in London to take up his lodging in my house. Not knowing where to go, he had called upon his friend Harden for him to fetch me.

30,778. But you knew he had been down in 1859, did not you?—No more than a child unborn.

30,779. In 1865 I mean to say?—Never.

30,780. You know now that he had been down?—Yes, I know now; but I did not know the man.

30,781. How much money did he bring down at that time?—800*l.*

30,782. Did you get it?—Yes.

30,783. In gold?—Yes.

30,784. Who had charge of the money?—His lady made it up all in tens and fives.

30,785. At your house?—Yes, at my house; tens and fives.

30,786. Did you ever see any name on his luggage or his clothes or anything, no initial, no anything?—Well, my belief is there was that on a small portmanteau. He left on the Saturday evening, and went to London and brought his wife down. He had been down prior to that, and these men, Harden, Temblett, and Jarman, had been to my house night after night

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

R. Bussell.

with a list of voters, and they were making out what men each one was to receive the money for, to make up the money.

30,787. That does not really answer my question. I want to know whether during the time he resided in your house you saw no marks on his luggage or linen or anything, no initial or anything of that kind?—There was an initial on his portmanteau.

30,788. Then why could you not tell us so at once?—"I. G." I believe it was.

30,789. On his linen?—I did not see his linen.

30,790. Had he a wife?—Yes.

30,791. Was she living in your house?—Yes.

30,792. I suppose he had shirts and stockings?—Yes.

30,793. Is your wife here?—Yes.

30,794. Did he have his things washed?—I do not know.

30,795. You are not able to say?—No.

30,796. Will your wife be able to say?—I do not know. I have not put the question to her.

30,797. You believe the initial was "I. G."?—I believe the initial was "I. G." My wife will tell you.

30,798. We had better have your wife here. It is an extraordinary thing that you should not know anything about this man. What day did his wife come?—On the Tuesday was the day of the election; she came on the Monday, and went away on the Tuesday.

30,799. She was only there one night?—No. It was the lady who brought down the money.

30,800. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did she ever tell you where they got the money from?—They came from London because the brother came down.

30,801. Who did?—The brother.

30,802. What brother?—Mr. Matthews.

30,803. (Mr. Price.) How do you know he was the brother?—Only from his statement at the poll. Mr. Matthews told me at the poll on the Saturday night that his brother would be down there, and he said if I was not there his brother would knock at the door, and would walk right in, and would say to my wife, "All right."

30,804. What did Mrs. Matthews call her husband?—I did not her call him anything by his Christian name, only his surname "Matthews." She would always say, "Matthews, I want you."

30,805. You never heard her make use of any Christian name towards him?—No; if she were upstairs and Matthews was downstairs, she would call out and say, "Matthews, I want you."

(Mr. Anstey.) Probably Matthews was his Christian name instead of his surname.

30,806. (Mr. Price.) Did you say she made up this money, this 800*l.*?—Yes, she and Mr. Matthews' brother.

30,807. When was it given so?—I think that Temblett and Harden must have had theirs on the night of the nomination.

30,808. Did Jarman get any?—Yes; I took it to him.

30,809. How much?—I am not positive whether it was 250*l.* or 300*l.*, but 250*l.* I believe.

30,810. Anything to Jarvis?—Jarvis' was about 80*l.*

30,811. And Batten?—Batten; I took him his money, but I could not get him to get up, and I took it home again, and he received it from Matthews himself.

30,812. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much?—It was 80*l.* he was to have received; I do not know; 80*l.* is his list.

30,813. Did Matthews' brother give you any money besides?—That was in the middle of the polling day, I received 100*l.*

30,814. (Mr. Price.) 350*l.* did not you?—Not at that time.

30,815. Did not you get altogether 350*l.* from Matthews' brother; never mind about the time of day?—I did.

30,816. Did you take 100*l.* of that to Harden?—Yes, Harden distributed it.

30,817. And then did you go to this man to the "Bull and Butcher," and did he pay the money away in the bedroom?—Yes.

30,818. And was he the person who paid the money away by the window to the different persons who came and stood and took the money by the table?—No; the door was open, and Matthews' brother stood behind it, and the parties put their hands in.

30,819. And he put his hand out?—And he put his hand out.

30,820. (Mr. Coleridge.) Matthews did that?—No, Tom, the brother, did that.

30,821. (Mr. Price.) Then you told us about the 350*l.*, you got that because it was subscribed?—Yes.

30,822. Did the wife and Tom make that up into packets?—Yes, that 350*l.*

30,823. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that all the money?—Yes.

30,824. Was any more money brought down afterwards?—No, I did not meet him till Patton's second election.

30,825. (Mr. Price.) Did you meet him on the Monday in the churchyard?—I did.

30,826. Did you meet him by appointment?—No.

30,827. How was it?—By accident.

30,828. What did he say?—He said he was come down; he had brought down 1,000*l.* to pay for we chaps.

30,829. He said he had brought down 1,000*l.* to pay you chaps?—And a few bills, and he said a pretty mess he had got in. There was Vanderbyl here; there was an opposition. I told him he had better stick to the 1,000*l.*, for if he did not, Mr. Patton—

30,830. Do you mean to say there was anything like 1,000*l.* paid amongst you chaps, and for the bills?—There were certain claims put in by Harden and Temblett and Jarman for promises to us of money which we had not received.

30,831. Do you mean to say it was anything like a thousand?—I think from what I have heard in this Court that it would want 600*l.* or 700*l.* to have been paid, to pay off their promises.

30,832. How much were you chaps to be paid?—I never heard anything about being paid until Mr. Matthews told me of it.

30,833. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—10*l.*

30,834. (Mr. Price.) Then you told him he had better stick to the money?—Yes, I did.

30,835. Did you say why?—I told him he had better go and see the others, as he was not going to stay at my house; that he had better go and see the other men to ascertain what money they had received at the last time.

30,836. Did you tell him that Harden had stuck to the money he had had to bribe with?—No, I did not tell him that; I told him that people complained that they never received the money.

30,837. Did you tell him that Temblett, Harden, and Jarman had struck to the money?—No, I never used those words.

30,838. How came you to tell our secretary that?—I did not tell the secretary that.

30,839. I have got it down so?—The secretary will explain that; I wanted to see what the secretary had down. It was done in a moment, and I wanted to put my initials to it.

30,840. They had stuck to it and had given promises instead?—Yes, they did.

30,841. They had stuck to the money?—No, they had given promises.

30,842. I put it to you again. Have you not said that you told this man Temblett, Harden, and Jarman had stuck to the money that they got, and had given promises instead?—Yes, I did.

30,843. That they had kept the money and given promises only?—And that they went and paid the money after that time, after I saw Mr. Matthews?

30,844. Yes, but up to that time you intended me to understand that they kept the money?—Yes, that the money had not been paid.

30,845. That they had stuck to it?—Yes.

30,846. Then why do you not say so at once? After you had told this to Matthews, you mean to say they went and paid the money?—Yes.

30,847. That they had had it all that time?—Yes.

30,848. You advised him to keep the thousand pounds you say?—I did.

30,849. Did you refuse to allow him to go to your house?—I did.

30,850. Why?—He desired me when he left my house to go to the three men to get lists of what they had done with the money. I went according to his requisition, and I had to send up to Parliament Street to tell him what they had done with it.

30,851. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now you can tell us what number in Parliament Street, to a post office.—I went to Harden, and he told me if I did not go out of his shop he would kick me, and I refused to have anything more to do with it.

30,852. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything more for his staying in your house?—Yes.

30,853. How much?—6*l.*

30,854. Was that the reason you told him you would have nothing more to do with it, because Harden had said he would kick you out of his house?—Yes.

30,855. Did he owe you anything more than the 6*l.*?—I considered he did. I never told him so.

30,856. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he ever acknowledge your accounts?—I did not send an account to him.

30,857. You wrote to him?—Yes.

30,858. Did you get an answer?—Yes, he told me that he had had the letter and he was sorry it was all up between us.

30,859. Did he tell you what elections he had been engaged in before?—Yes; Totnes, Liskeard, and Windsor. I think he told me in so many places, but I think those were three of them.

30,860. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you in what year at Totnes?—I think he told me at the disfranchisement of the place.

30,861. Did he say who he went down for?—I understood for the Conservative gentlemen.

30,862. What election was it at Windsor?—Oh, I fancy it was at the general election in 1865; in 1865 he was there, because he said he was successful. Whoever he went there for, he was successful both here at Bridgwater for Mr. Westropp and his friend at Windsor.

30,863. At Windsor his member was unseated?—Successful in carrying his men, not in the keeping of them in.

30,864. (Mr. Price.) Is that all that you know of the second election in 1866?—Yes.

30,865. In 1868 had you nothing at all to do with the election?—Nothing at all.

30,866. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

30,867. Did you vote?—I did.

30,868. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

30,869. Did you have anything for what you did in the second election of 1866?—No.

30,870. You never did anything at all?—No.

30,871. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Robert Bussell, I find I have not given you the opportunity of clearing yourself with regard to another of the findings of the Committee of the House of Commons. I thought I had; that is, the finding with regard to John Staples. Do you recollect, if you do not I will read to you the passages, that John Staples like John Cooze was mentioned as a person that had been bribed. It was stated in evidence by witnesses that he was one who had been bribed by Boys. Staples himself said that Boys did bribe him, and thereupon you were called upon to swear with regard to Staples just as you have been called to swear with regard to Cooze, and that afterwards in your presence Staples gave an entirely different account of the matter. I will read to you the very words. You swear this "I never had any money given to me. I "received the freight of a cargo of coals from Mr. "Stone's clerk. I got the cheque to the bank and "got it cashed, and then the sons of ——— "made me drink, and took the money from me, and "said 'it was election money.'" That you swore before the House of Commons and Mr. Boys swore the same. Have I given a correct account of your evidence?—No, you certainly have not.

30,872. What did you swear before the Committee of the House of Commons?—It was Edward Stroud who was charged with bribing, and not Mr. Boys.

30,873. But that Mr. Boys was present at?—No.

30,874. Boys said he was not, did not he?—No.

30,875. Then you mend your statement by saying it was Stroud?—Stroud was the man charged by a man of the name of Hook, and has admitted in this Court that he was the one who bribed Staples.

30,876. Is what I have read to you incorrect?—It is.

30,877. You still say that Staples swore that?—Yes.

30,878. Mr. Boys swore the same?—Mr. Boys, to my knowledge, had nothing to do with that case.

30,879. Is not Thomas Henry Boys the person you are talking of?—Yes, Thomas Henry Boys.

30,880. Are you not aware that he swore before the House of Commons that he had received 10*l.* for freight and had been robbed of it, and had applied for a warrant in the matter?—No, I am not aware of it.

30,881. Did Boys and you talk over the matter before you went to the House of Commons?—No.

30,882. You are aware at all events, that the House of Commons found that Cooze and John Staples were both bribed?—I am quite aware of that.

30,882 a. And therefore you are aware that on that point, as in Cooze's case, the House of Commons would not believe your statement. The question was what Staples told you. Was not that so?—He came and applied to me if he could put him in a County Court, and I advised him not to do so, and to go to Mr. George Wilson, in the town, to let him have the money, and he would not.

30,883. You swore that before the House of Commons?—Yes.

30,884. They did not believe you on your oath?—I say it is true.

30,885. But they did not believe you on your oath?—Oh—well—

30,886. I suppose you do not care about that; you have already stated that you have committed deliberate perjury in the case of Cooze. You have heard the statement about Staples' case?—Yes.

30,887. And is the evidence you gave as to Staples' case perfectly true?—Perfectly true.

30,888. Are you aware that in the House of Commons Staples denied that he had received a bribe?—Yes.

30,889. From Stroud?—From Stroud.

30,890. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you have to state?—No, nothing of the last election.

30,891. You are aware now that you have been, I will not say found guilty, but at all events discredited by the House of Commons, and you are aware now that you have acknowledged that you intended to convey this impression to the Man in the Moon, that these persons stuck to a large sum of money; you acknowledge these two things, and you acknowledge that as a bailiff acting in some official capacity in the Recorder's Court, you took advantage of your position

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

R. Bussell.

27 Sept. 1869.

to hand a sum of money to a juror to bribe him as a juryman. Those are the things you have acknowledged, and I take upon myself to say that you are a thoroughly discredited and disgraceful man, and if there is any means of removing you from holding those offices you now hold, I think it a very great discredit to those who have the power of removing you if they do not exercise it.

H. W. Batten.

HENRY WILLIAM BATTEN recalled.

30,892. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say?—The secretary has wished me to come into the box to make a statement. In my evidence on Friday I stated that I had no other interview with Mr. Spofforth but at that time in the Committee Room of the House of Commons. I have since thought the matter over, and I remember going to Mr. Spofforth's office during that petition, and seeing him, and also seeing clerks there, and I thought I would just tell you of it; and another thing I have thought of also in talking over with a friend with respect to the presentation of the last petition in London. We went to one or two of our solicitors to Court when they presented the petition, and on our way there with the agent, I think Mr. Vizard or one of the firm, he said, "I hope you "will take better care of this petition than the one "of Mr. Vanderbyl's," that is Vanderbyl's first election, "and not let Mr. Spofforth tear this up as "he did that one." I thought it better to tell you this, as that shows he was cognizant in some way or other that bribery had been going on, and was anxious therefore in some way to get rid of it.

(Mr. Price.) I do not know whether Temblett and Harden and the others are in Court, or whether they wish to make any statement upon the evidence made by the last witness that they stuck to the money. However, they can make that another time.

J. H. Waddon.

JOHN HENRY WADDON recalled.

30,893. (Mr. Price.) You are a rope-maker?—Yes.

30,894. What was the first election you took any part in?—1865, Westropp's.

30,895. Were you a voter then?—Yes, I voted Westropp.

30,896. Did you receive any money for your vote?—No.

30,897. Did you receive any money to bribe with?—I received 10*l.* of Harden, and paid it to William Francis.

30,898. Have you given his name before?—No, I have not.

30,899. Did you see anything of the stranger?—Not at that time.

30,900. Have you anything with regard to that election to say to us?—No. Oh, yes. I saw a Mr. Jones, who came to our door and asked what was going on, and I said if he would stay a bit I would give him 10*l.* That is how I came to get another 10*l.* of Harden. Harden says, "Here is 10*l.*, I wish "you would give it to Francis." I took it, and with that I went out. That is all that passed.

30,901. Was that the evidence you gave in London?—No; I was telegraphed for by Mr. Smith to come to London, and when I went to the "Grosvenor" next morning,—

30,902. You were trying to get 10*l.* for Jones?—Yes.

30,903. Was that what you were examined about before the Committee of the House of Commons in London?—No.

30,904. Did you state that?—No; I was told by Mr. Smith that the man was not telling the truth, and would not go into the box.

30,905. Is that all you know about Mr. Westropp's first election?—Yes.

30,906. Now about Mr. Patton's first election; did you get anything then?—20*l.* from Jarman and 20*l.* from Harden.

30,907. How did you dispose of that?—I paid George Harwood 10*l.*, William Hensley 10*l.*, J. F. Frape 10*l.*, John Lee the gardener 10*l.*

30,908. Had you any money for yourself?—No.

30,909. Nothing for expenses?—No. I was asked to send in a bill for expenses, and I declined to do it. Mr. Smith said, "You have not sent in a bill for "expenses," and I said, "No, what I have done is "for the good of the cause;" and I declined to do it.

30,910. At the next election did you get any money?—Yes; I got 5*l.* from Temblett before Patton's second election.

30,911. How did you happen to get that?—I met Temblett by his door, and he said, "I went to Hobbs "and did not find him there. It is rather late. I "wish you would carry these sums of money to the "parties."

30,912. Had any of them been promised?—No. I paid four men, Charles Hayward 5*l.*, Dr. Matthews 5*l.*, Charles Sprankling 5*l.*, Henry Hobbs 10*l.*

30,913. The day before the election were you introduced to this stranger at Temblett's house?—Yes, I met him at Temblett's door.

30,914. You are a Bridgwater man?—Yes.

30,915. And have been here all your life?—Yes, I was born here.

30,916. You have been here more than 20 years?—I have been here from 1832, and have not been away for more than a month at a time.

30,917. I suppose you would not recollect very much about the stranger 20 years ago?—I think I should. I think I know every man in Bridgwater by face.

30,918. As a boy you do not recollect seeing this man 20 years ago?—No; I do not recollect his being a Bridgwater man. I have no recollection of him before that time.

30,919. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he seem to know his way about?—Yes; he seemed to know everybody in the place better than I did, and he knew where he was going. He seemed well acquainted with the list of voters, and the way in which each man would vote.

30,920. (Mr. Price.) He seemed to have a great deal of local knowledge?—Yes, he seemed to be a gentlemanly man, and well up in his business.

30,921. He asked you to prepare this list?—Yes; and I went to Harden, it might be to others—

30,922. I do not think we need take you through that. Were you one who voted in the minority against Mr. Patton spending any money?—Yes; and I think that a Mr. Batten wished him not to spend any money unless he could give 50*l.* to each voter. A clerk named Neal at Mr. Smith's office came to me at a quarter after 6, and told me we had better commence paying.

30,923. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who is this Neal? Just tell us something about him. He came to you to say you had better begin to pay?—He was an articled clerk.

30,924. How long has he been with Mr. Smith?—18 months or two years.

30,925. What is his Christian name?—I do not know.

30,926. How does he spell his name?—Neal.

30,927. Where does he live?—I do not know.

(Temblett.) In the Taunton Road. I think he is some relation to Mr. Richard Smith's wife.

(Allan.) I think he is a nephew of Cuthbert Ritson, the timber merchant.

30,927 a. (Mr. Anstey.) Has Mr. Smith an old person in his service not a clerk, a servant, a coachman, or anything of that kind?

(The Witness.) Walter William Neal is his name. He is an articled clerk of Mr. Smith's.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY

27 Sept. 1869.

THOMAS HENRY BOYS recalled.

T. H. Boys.

(The Witness.) Walter William Neal is his name.

30,928. (Mr. Price.) Where does he come from?—He was an articled clerk to Mr. Smith.

30,929. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where has he gone to?—I think he has gone to London. His articles were changed in consequence of Mr. Smith's illness.

30,930. Did he go to Mr. Smith's agents?—I do not know at all.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then he had not served his articles.

JOHN HENRY WADDON recalled.

J. H. Waddon.

30,931. Now did you get 180*l.* from this stranger?—I did.

30,932. Give us a list of the names distinctly, that the shorthand writer may take them down.—I paid Mr. Bryant for some other voters, 50*l.*, he returned 5*l.*; Henry Hobbs, 40*l.*, returned 7*l.*; Frederick Temblett, 30*l.*

(Frederick Temblett.) That must not go down as given to me.

(Witness.) It was given to Temblett for some voters. Mr. Smith's Man Friday, I think he called him. Captain Clutterbuck, 10*l.*; Frape, 10*l.*; William Johnson, 10*l.*; John Kibble, 15*l.*; William Smart, 10*l.*; returned to Matthews, 17*l.*

30,933. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for yourself?—Nothing.

30,934. Neither before nor after?—No; but in February 1867, Mr. Lilly came to me and said Mr. Smith was desirous of making me a small present. I told him I had always refused. He said, "You may "as well have something."

30,935. (Mr. Anstey.) What election was that?—In February 1867, no election, but six or seven months after. He sent me down a small present worth 5*l.* or 6*l.*

30,936. (Mr. Price.) What was it?—Half-a-dozen silver dessert forks.

30,937. You got them from Mr. Lilly?—Yes.

30,938. It was by Mr. Smith's wish?—By Mr. Bealy Smith's wish.

30,939. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you not left the Liberal party?—No, I never belonged to the Liberal party.

30,940. Is your name "John Henry"?—Yes.

30,941. Are you the John Henry Waddon who is named by Mr. Carslake in his evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons in 1866 as having had the colours of the Liberal party intrusted to him by the party?—No, not by the party. Mr. Faun kept the colours, and I married Mr. Faun's daughter. That is how I got possessed by them. I did not wish to keep them. I told Mr. Lovibond that I would give them back; or, no, I think I told Mr. Smith that.

30,942. A letter was produced in evidence from Mr. Benjamin Lovibond to you?—Yes, I produced that letter.

30,943. "Please deliver to Mr. Smith the colours," &c., and again, another letter, "Mr. Charles Webb "has informed me that you have some flag poles and "will deliver them up." Then he is asked the question, "This Mr. Waddon is the person who had the "flags in his custody since the previous election." and the answer is "Yes."—Well, I will tell you how I had them in my custody. Mr. Faun retired from business, and went into Church Street, and when he got there there was no room to keep them, and he asked me to put the poles in the rope-walk, which I did. After Faun's death I knew I had no business with the Liberal colours, and I said I would give them up to anybody who was appointed to receive them.

30,944. (Mr. Price.) Did you give them up?—Yes.

30,945. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you recollect whether amongst the colours there was one of a golden or yellow colour, with "Purity of election" on it?—I do not know that I ever looked over the colours and examined them. I think it is very likely. They belonged to the purity party.

30,946. (Mr. Price.) Were you at the "Clarence" at all during Patton's election—in the room under the stairs at the "Clarence"?—Yes.

30,947. Was that where the voters were bottled?—I do not think they were bottled.

30,948. They were kept there. There was a man stationed at the door?—There was a man stationed at the door.

30,949. To prevent anybody from the other side getting at them?—There was a man stationed at the door.

30,950. That is bottling to all intents and purposes.—There was a window looking away from the door, and only two or three feet from the ground. Any man could have got out if he chose.

30,951. 1868,—had you anything to do with that election?—Not in the shape of bribery.

30,952. Did you have a conversation with Mr. James Trevor before the election?—Yes, I met Mr. Trevor and Mr. Lilly in the Cornhill, and they said they had heard from Spofforth, and he asked what we were going to do respecting the coming election, and they wanted to ask my opinion whether I thought there would be any chance of success, because, he said, "If Mr. Westropp comes he is going to fight a "pure election." I said, "If he is coming to fight a "pure election, I think there will be a very great "chance of success. I do not think the other side will "bribe against him after the way they have served "him." He said, "Suppose they do, what will our "success be then?" "Then I suppose we shall "bribe too." He said, "Suppose they bribe on both "sides?" "Well," I said, "then we shall lose."

30,953. What made you think that?—Because they have more that take up with it, and they run head over tail, and will buy them at any price.

30,954. Do you agree with what has been stated—that the Conservatives never exceeded 10*l.*?—Yes.

30,955. And the Conservative voters trust to promises, whereas the other side would have "M. D."?—Yes, that is what I expect.

30,956. What was the conclusion of that conversation?—With Mr. Trevor and Mr. Lilly?

30,957. What conclusion did you come to? What was the result of it? What did you understand was the determination? To fight the election as a pure election?—As a pure election entirely; and that Mr. Westropp should look out for another man that he thought would be acceptable to the Bridgwater people, and also acceptable to himself, to come and fight it together as a pure election.

30,958. The same reasoning would not apply to a stranger that would apply to Mr. Westropp. You say that you believed they had behaved so badly to Mr. Westropp before that the other side would not bribe against him; the same reason would not apply to a stranger?—Well, you see, the same men would be working for both candidates, Mr. Westropp and whoever it might be, and what was done for one would be considered as done for the other.

30,959. Did you understand from what part you did take in the election that it was a pure election?—Yes; I told Mr. Brice that I would not have anything more to do with money in my life.

30,960. Do you agree with what others have said—that although no money passed and there were no promises, yet a great many men voted for the Conservatives on the general understanding that if afterwards it was safe to give money, money would be given?—I do not think there was any promise, but I think they expected it, the majority of them.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

J. H. Waddon.

27 Sept. 1869.

30,961. They would take it upon trust?—They would take it upon trust.

30,962. That if it was found safe afterwards to give money it would be given?—I have no means of knowing that was the determination.

30,963. But there was a very large majority early in the day?—I was not at the meeting at the "Cla- "rence;" I do not know what was said there; neither was I the night before.

30,964. You have heard nothing of that kind?—No.

30,965. Nor did you hear Mr. Smith's speech about "M.D."?—No, I did not hear that speech.

30,966. Is there anything else you can tell us about the election of 1868?—No; I attended one or two meetings, but heard nothing said about money matters. There was a little drinking going on, which was paid for by those present.

F. Temblett.

FREDERICK TEMBLETT recalled.

(Witness.) I have been sent for. I do not know whether I am wanted or not.

30,967. (Mr. Price.) It is because your brother-in-law has accused you of sticking to some money?—I do not wonder at that. He has accused people of a great many things.

30,968. You are accused of certain things, and I only thought it fair to send for you. You have a perfect right to come and speak about this, because it is a very grave accusation. He certainly did suggest to this stranger that you and Mr. Jarman had kept money.—I wish you would ask him the question whether he had anything to do with the bill that was issued and circulated all over the town at the time respecting that matter. When he is here I wish you would ask him.

(Mr. Price.) I do not care to ask him anything more, because I tell you candidly that I do not believe him.

(Witness.) I wish you would ask any of the gentlemen of the party what is their opinion; any of the gentlemen of the party who came before you, what they think of the matter.

(Mr. Anstey.) To Robert Bussell's evidence I attach no weight at all, only looking upon it as perhaps affording here and there an opportunity of some clue to some person who will speak the truth; but taking it altogether, I believe him to be a perjured man, and utterly incredible on his oath.

(Witness.) I think, gentlemen, my list is quite enough.

(Robert Bussell.) I have spoken the truth, gentlemen.

T. H. Boys.

THOMAS HENRY BOYS recalled.

30,969. (Mr. Price.) In 1865 were you clerk in Mr. Smith's office?—I was.

30,970. You are now clerk to Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Yes.

30,971. When did you leave Mr. Smith's office?—About August 1866, I think.

30,972. Before 1865 what were you? Before you were at Mr. Smith's office what were you?—I was a clerk in Mr. Philpot's, in Newport.

30,973. When did you go to Mr. Smith's?—Some time in 1859, I think.

30,974. How long did you remain a clerk in his office?—From that time up to July 1866.

30,975. We had better begin with 1859. In 1859 had you anything to do with that election at all?—Nothing whatever.

30,976. In 1865 you had?—In 1865 I had.

30,977. A week before the election did Mr. Bealy Smith call you into his room?—He did.

30,978. Well, what did he want you for?—He said to me, "We want your assistance this end of the town "to work with Mr. Harden and Mr. Temblett to get "the voters to the election. Money will be going. "We want you to assist us." He said, "You make "me out a list of those men that you know, that you "think, you can rely upon to pay, and give me the "list."

30,979. Did you make him out the list?—I said, "Very well, I will make out the list during the "day," and I made out the list and handed it to him. The list, I believe, contained 30 or 40 names of men I knew, and who, I thought, would vote for Westropp. I gave him the list the next morning, and he told me I should have some money; and, I think, the day afterwards, and the day after that again, I saw this stranger. I think Mr. Temblett has made a little error as to how we came together with respect to the man.

30,980. It really does not matter unless it is very important. You got acquainted with him. That is all. Did you afterwards arrange to meet him at Harden's house?—I did. Lists were subsequently made out at Harden's house, and my list was reduced to 22 names.

30,981. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that by striking out doubtful ones, or were those in other lists?—I saw he had got other lists in his possession. He had that which I had handed to Mr. Smith a day or two before. This stranger made out lists from those given to him.

30,982. (Mr. Price.) He could only have got your list from Bealy Smith?—Yes, decidedly; nowhere else.

30,983. Did he call at your house on the night of the nomination, with a lady with him?—He did.

30,984. Did he give you anything then?—A parcel of money.

30,985. Was it light or dark?—It was dark when he called; about 10 o'clock.

30,986. Did he beg you not to light the gas?—I asked him to walk in, and I said, "I will give you a "light." He said, "Oh, no; do not light the gas." He had a lady with him. He gave me a parcel and the 22 names, and he asked me if I should be likely to see Mr. Batten. I said very likely I should see him; and he gave me a parcel for Mr. Henry Batten.

30,987. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did he and his lady stay at the time?—At lodgings at a house in Bell Lane.

30,988. At a widow Harden's?—At Mrs. Harden's, I believe the name was.

30,989. (Mr. Price.) How much did you have?—220*l.*

30,990. Did you pay all that 220*l.* away?—No, not all of it. I have a list of those I paid. I paid 190*l.* These are the lists prepared at the time. They are very old documents. Charles Browning, William Hellard, Charles Jeffreys, Edward Lane, James Long, John Matthews, William Palmer, James Palmer, Henry James, Charles Tottle, John Cooze, James Fryer, George Pugh, William Baldock Gilbert, John Batten, Thomas Crocker, Thomas Jones, Charles Hook. That was 190*l.*, you will find.

30,991. There is 30*l.* unaccounted for?—10*l.* of that 30 was intended for William Gilbert, the tailor, but he refused to take the money; and another 10*l.* was intended for Mr. Robert Mogg, the tea dealer, who I did not see during the day.

30,992. What did you do with it?—I will tell you. And the other was for Henry Score, whom I did not see. There was 30*l.* unaccounted for. The day after the election I was called into Mr. Smith's office, who told me the rumour respecting Cooze being bribed. I said "It is a most unfortunate thing;" and he said "Yes it was, and it would not suit my purpose or his "purpose for me to have any knowledge whatever of " the election, and supposing there should be a " petition presented to the House that I was to deny " all knowledge of any transactions with their " office."

30,993. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long after that precious advice did Mr. Smith go away?—Well, he has not been gone very long, I think about 12 months, and I remained at the office 12 months after that. I must candidly admit to you that I was weak enough to say I should deny all knowledge of it, and I only regret doing so. Well, then I said, "I have a surplus " in hand; what am I to do with it?" The man that I received the money from had gone directly after the election was over, on the previous day. I told him that I had a balance in hand, and he asked me how much. I said, "30*l.*" I asked him, "What " am I to do with the 30*l.*;" and he said, "Give it " to me, I will account for it." I gave him the 30*l.*, and he gave me 10*l.* He said, "There is 10*l.* for " yourself."

30,994. Had you a vote?—Yes.

30,995. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell Mr. Smith exactly who was bribed?—Yes; I produced the list.

30,996. Did you tell him it was done by putting the money down on the ledge of a window in the passage when the man was following you, and that you turned round afterwards and saw the package had disappeared?—I did.

30,997. Did Bealy Smith say, "You can very easily " say—you can very easily swear—that you never " paid any money"?—Yes.

30,998. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know whether he has come back from Australia?—No.

30,999. Have you ever heard from him?—Never a word.

31,000. (Mr. Price.) Is this true about his going away in a state of insanity?—It is said so. I remember once he came from London, and he was nursing a little clock at the "Clarence" that he had brought from London.

31,001. (Mr. Coleridge.) What has become of the business?—The business is in the hands of Smith and Boyle.

31,002. (Mr. Anstey.) Who is the Smith in " Smith and Boyle"?—I do not know.

31,003. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that old Mr. Smith?—I have heard that he had a share in the business.

31,004. Is it his intellect that directs it?—I do not know at all.

31,005. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether it is true that Mr. Smith, who has been unfit for bare excitement for so many years, nevertheless went up to poll at the last election, a particularly exciting election, and polled for Westropp and Gray?—I do not know it.

31,006. If it is so, it has been concealed from us?—I do not know it.

31,007. I should like to know.—It may be so. I do not know.

31,008. (Mr. Price.) Do you know that Mr. Smith has been living in Bridgwater within a short time, and that he has only gone away since we have been here?—No, I do not say that. Do you mean Richard or Bealy Smith?

31,009. Old Mr. Smith.—Oh, he has been living about the town.

31,010. His name is still lent to the firm?—I understand that the name is in the firm still. Mr. Bealy Smith is out of it.

31,011. Mr. Boyle could tell us about it?—Yes.

31,012. Now, it is fair to you, Mr. Boys, to ask you at this period of the examination, why did you leave Mr. Smith's employment?—It was in consequence, in my opinion, of the petition of 1866. There is no doubt in the world that Mr. Smith had known, and the party generally had known, that I had gone there and stated what was not the fact; and I received, as it were, the cold shoulder from the party. During the first election of 1866, Mr. Patton's people came in the office and barely spoke to me; and more especially during the second election not one single word escaped from their lips to me respecting that election, and I concluded it was in consequence of Mr. Bealy Smith being so very indiscreet at the first election to employ me at all in it, and being the head clerk in the office, too, it was a most mad thing to do. They did not employ me at all then.

31,013. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the last election they seem to have employed Neal?—Neal was quite a lad. He was an articled clerk; and after Mr. Smith's illness, the articles were removed to some firm in London.

31,014. Who were Mr. Smith's agents in London?—Boyle and Son.

31,015. Were they removed there?—I do not know.

31,016. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean that although Mr. Bealy Smith knew that you had assented to his suggestion that you would swear in this disingenuous manner (to put a mild construction upon it), after you had done that for the sake of him, to save his office and to save the party, although you had done all that, they gave you the cold shoulder?—Oh yes, perfectly true. This is 12 months afterwards.

31,017. It seems a very strange thing, because by doing that, and running the risk of offending you, Mr. Smith put himself very much in your power?—The petition was all over.

31,018. Yes, but he could have been had up for subornation of perjury at any time, according to your story?—I was acting under his advice and direction.

31,019. And he could have been struck off the rolls to all intents and purposes, upon an affidavit made by you, by the Court of Queen's Bench. By making an enemy of you he was putting himself under your power.—Yes, I believe Mr. Bealy Smith was poisoned somewhat by other people in this matter.

31,020. What had old Mr. Smith to do with you?—Nothing at all.

31,021. He never spoke to you about this?—No, not a word.

31,022. Is there any truth in what has been suggested, that you were turned away from Mr. Smith's employment for having made use of this bribery money?—Never the least imputation.

31,023. A large sum has been mentioned?—400*l.* has been mentioned.

31,024. There are certain things given to us upon information which we are bound to follow up. They may or may not be true. We are bound to follow them up, and of course they have the effect, for a certain time, of creating suspicion on the mind.—I am very glad you have put it.

31,025. Therefore, when a man comes into the box he ought to have an opportunity of denying it?—Never anything of the kind has taken place.

31,026. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Bealy Smith still an attorney?—I do not know whether he is on the rolls.

31,027. (Mr. Anstey.) Is the Richard Smith of Dampiet Ward who appears on the poll book the man of whom we have been speaking?—Yes.

31,028. I find that he voted at the late election for Westropp and Gray, and that fact has been carefully concealed from me, and, I believe, from my brother Commissioners, by every person who has deposed to his pitiable state of health. The story that we have had from his medical adviser is that he has been in a hopeless state ever since 1866 or 1865, being in the middle of the election of 1865, stricken down along with Benjamin Lovibond?—That is so.

(Mr. Anstey.) And I must say that it is a material fact for me to have known that his medical adviser and his family did not prevent him from going to the poll at that hotly contested election in December last. I say it is a material concealment, and it is a great deal too bad.

31,029. (Mr. Price.) Did he take an active part in that election?—None whatever.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

T. H. Boys.

27 Sept. 1869.

31,030. Did he go about the town canvassing?—No.

31,031. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who took him up to the poll?—Do you mean at the last election?

31,032. Yes.—I was not aware that he voted until this moment. I thought you were speaking of the election of 1865.

31,033. (Mr. Price.) You deny utterly that there is any truth in that?—Entirely.

31,034. You say you had a letter from the stranger?—Yes.

31,035. Will you produce that. Just let us have it; in the envelope and everything.—Shall I read it to you?

31,036. Yes, you may read it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Read it first, and then hand it in.

(Witness, reading the letter.) "27th September "1865. Dear Sir. I daresay you have been expecting "to hear from me ere this, but I have been very "much engaged, and taking all circumstances into "consideration I thought it better not to show up "for the present. In order, however, to satisfy some "of the most pressing of the claims, I sent an assistant "down a few weeks ago to do the needful, intending "to arrange with you afterwards, knowing that you "were in no hurry. I am obliged to leave London on "business of importance which will occupy six weeks "or two months; at the end of that time I intend "to come down and meet you and the other trusty "friends of the cause, somewhere near, when we can "discuss the whole business together, and tip you "something for your trouble and loss of time. If you "have any expenses to charge please send me an "account in the course of this week; address as at foot, "and it shall be attended to. It is hardly necessary "to add that the position of matters render it very "desirable that you watch the other side, and say "nothing. All will be right at the proper time. "Yours, most sincerely, W. Humphreys. Please "address your letter to Mr. Frederick Field, 6, Clyde "Terrace, Harvey Road, Camberwell Park, S." [The letter was handed in.]

31,037. (Mr. Price.) Then let me ask you. A great deal has been said about you, Mr. Boys, by Heal. Heal says that you took down a statement of his, and got him to make a false statement in the presence of J. R. Smith, which he could not get out of, and that you told him that he could not get out of it, and you made him sign it, and said it would be produced against him if he swore to the contrary of it.—In defending the petition against Mr. Westropp, Mr. Bealy Smith was extremely anxious as to what Heal was about to say, in consequence of his having very recently left the other side, and, moreover, the report which had been circulated about his keeping back 200*l.*; and he said to me, "How shall we manage "to see Heal? I think," he says, "that he is "desirous to make a statement." "Well, shall I see "him, sir?" I said. "Well," he said, "I think you "had better see him." "Where shall I see him?" I asked. He said, "Ask him whether he has got any "objection in coming over to this office to see me." I saw Heal, and he said yes, he certainly should have an objection in coming to the office at all, but he had a statement at the same time to make about 40*l.* that had been promised to him by Benjamin Lovibond at the same election. I said to Heal, "I will ask Mr. "Bealy Smith where you had better see him." I saw him, and he suggested at his uncle's, Mr. J. R. Smith's. There was a time appointed that we should meet there, and, in the presence of Mr. Smith, Heal made a statement denying all knowledge of bribery and of any money. It was voluntary on his part, and I took the statement down myself, and he signed it. I had no interest in the matter. I was merely a clerk acting on Mr. Smith's instructions.

31,038. It was not done at your dictation?—No, not in any way.

31,039. Nor at Smith's dictation?—Nor at Mr. Smith's.

31,040. How much did you get in all for your trouble of different kinds?—In answer to that letter I sent an account about the expenses which I had paid away, and about a month after the time that I sent the letter addressed to them, addressed to the stranger, another man altogether, who I had never seen before, came down; and he produced a file of bills on my table, and turning them over he came to my account, and said "I have come to pay you a little "money, Mr. Boys." I said, "It will be very accept-"able;" and he paid it and went away, and I never saw him afterwards.

31,041. How much was it?—12*l.*

31,042. What name did he give?—No name at all. After that, about a month, the first man, Humphreys, came down to my house and gave me 20*l.*

31,043. At the two elections you say you were not employed, and your idea is that they gave you the cold shoulder?—Yes.

31,044. What was there that could possibly have induced the party to do that to you?—I have never been able to fathom it to this day. I could never understand it to this moment.

31,045. When did you go to Reed and Cook's?—I think I can give you the date; the 2nd August 1866.

31,046. Then you were in their employment in 1868?—I was.

31,047. Were you employed in the election then by them?—Not in any way. I was engaged in the booth the whole day as check clerk.

31,048. Did you vote for the Liberals?—I did.

31,049. Did you help to make out the briefs for the defence under Mr. Cook's direction?—I did.

31,050. Did you take upon yourself at all to prepare any of the briefs yourself, or were they all made out by Mr. Cook?—People came to the office, and I took down the statements, no doubt.

31,051. You took the proofs from the witnesses?—From the witnesses.

31,052. (Mr. Anstey.) Did a man come there with a statement, named George Dyment?—I do not remember the name at all.

38,053. Do you remember Mr. Lovibond sending or bringing a draft proof for Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

31,054. Did Mr. Lovibond bring it himself, or how did you get it?—Oh, I won't be certain; but I recollect seeing the proof.

31,055. There are blanks left in the fair copy draft, several blanks which have never been filled up?—That I have no recollection of. I recollect seeing the draft proof of Mr. Kinglake, but as to how it came in the office I have no recollection.

31,056. Did Mr. Vanderbyl come to the office, and give instructions about the proofs?—I do not know at all,—certainly not to me.

31,057. Had you been active about the election, the last election?—The last?

31,058. Yes.—I never said a word to a soul during the election.

31,059. Had you been present at, or taken any part in, any conversation to which Mr. Westropp was a party?—Yes, one.

31,060. Where?—With Mr. John Truman.

31,061. Where was that?—In the market house.

31,062. When?—Just a week previously to the petition, before the petition was filed, two or three days after the election.

31,063. After the election?—After the election.

31,064. What took place then?—He told me that they had had money in the town.

31,065. Who told you?—John Truman. He told me that the Conservative money was in the town. That he was down at the "Three Crowns" on the night of the nomination, and a party came in there who they thought was a spy, and they thought it was not desirable to spend the money, although the money was in the town.

31,066. Was anybody else present at that conversation?—No.

31,067. Truman was asked about it, and he said he would not swear that it had not taken place?—It is a fact nevertheless.

31,068. I asked him the question, and he says he won't swear that it did not take place. He does not contradict you at all. Was that what he said,—that the money had been in the town down to the night of the nomination?—He said the money was in the town. Those were his words.

31,069. Not then,—not after the election?—He said the money was in the town.

31,070. Did he say, "The money is in the town?"—No, there was no necessity for the money being in the town then.

31,071. I want to know what he said. I don't want your argument on it?—I will give you his words, "We had our money in the town, but we "did not like to spend it."

31,072. What did he say about the day of nomination? You mentioned that just now.—He said he was down at the "Three Crowns" the night of the nomination. Lots of them were sitting round there talking and smoking, and that some one came into the passage who he thought was a spy, and he told his party of it, and they were afraid to let the money go.

31,073. That was shortly before the filing of the petition?—Yes, it was.

31,074. Were you present at any conversation during the election at which Mr. Westropp himself was present?—No, certainly not.

31,075. You had met Mr. Westropp in the election of 1865, I think. You had been with him?—I had seen him in and out of the office; Mr. Smith's office.

31,076. Had you been at his committee rooms, or been about with him?—Never about with him.

31,077. You are aware that it was sworn by several of the witnesses—amongst others by Mr. Ford—that you had been seen on, at least, one occasion with him on the hustings?— That may be, on the hustings, but never in the town canvassing.

31,078. I did not ask you about the canvassing. I am told that there is a catch in that word in Bridgwater. "Canvassing" does not mean canvassing, but means something else; and therefore I did not use the word. But had you been about with him?—There is no doubt in the world that I had been with him on the hustings.

31,079. Were you employed for him in that election?—In that 1865 election, by my employer, Mr. Bealy Smith.

31,080. And with Mr. Westropp's full knowledge that you were acting?—I do not know that.

31,081. He says distinctly he knew you?—Oh, yes, he may.

31,082. There was no concealment, I mean, that you were acting by employment of your principal?—Mr. Smith gave me these instructions.

31,083. Was there any concealment of the fact that you were to be busy in the election. Was it to be concealed from Mr. Westropp?—I had no instructions to conceal it from him.

31,084. That is what I am asking you. I wish you would attend to the question.—I had no instructions to conceal it.

31,085. As far as you knew there was no concealment about the fact of your being employed?—As far as I know, none.

31,086. Were you a member of his committee?—Yes.

31,087. Was Mr. Lilly also a member of that committee?—He was.

31,088. Where did it meet?—There were some meetings at Mr. Lilly's office.

31,089. Were you the person that gave the order with regard to the flags and colours at that election?—I ordered several flags and colours.

31,090. And all that was done, was done by the authority of Mr. Bealy Smith, and not found fault with afterwards?—Everything.

31,091. All that was done by you?—Everything.

31,092. And he never found fault with you?—Never.

31,093. When you came down from the House of Commons after giving that evidence—particularly the evidence on the subject of Cooze—did Bealy Smith say anything to you?—Not a word.

31,094. No comment?—Not a word.

31,095. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote on that occasion for the Conservative party?—Yes.

31,096. And you mean to represent that since you have been in the employment of Reed and Cook you have voted for the Liberals?—I did.

31,097. Then do you mean to say, Mr. Boys, that the attornies of this town exercise such a terrorism over their clerks that they can get them to commit perjury for the side of politics to which they belong, and to vote for whichever side the masters happen to be?—That is the only instance I know as to perjury.

31,098. As to your vote. Did you vote honestly for the Conservatives?—I voted because—

31,099. Why did you vote so? Was it because you were in Bealy Smith's employ?—No doubt that influenced me.

31,100. And did you vote for the Liberals afterwards because you were with Reed and Cook?—No doubt that influenced me.

31,101. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence that these exclusive dealings which were exercised with regard to attornies' clerks took place with regard to all others?—I think there are one or two clerks in the town who voted differently from the way their employers did.

31,102. Then there are exceptions?—I think so.

31,103. Then it is not true?—Not strictly, I think.

31,104. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who, do you say, can tell us most about the present constitution of Mr. Smith's office, Mr. Boyle?—I should think he could. He is still in the firm; and I should think he is the man who can tell you.

MR. WILLIAM CARVILL BOYLE recalled.

Mr. W. C. Boyle.

31,105. (Mr. Price.) Just tell us, what is the constitution of your firm now?—I am practising by myself now.

31,106. Is there no firm of Smith and Boyle?—There is no firm. No.

31,107. Has Mr. Smith, the old man, you know—has he been in your firm up to a late period?—Oh no; he has not been able to practise for some time. I think I will explain to you.

31,108. Just tell us, was the firm Smith and Boyle at one time?—Yes, it was.

31,109. Then who was the Smith then?—Mr. Bealy Smith was the Smith then.

31,110. Was the other Mr. Smith ever in the firm?—He was a member of the firm of Richard Smith and Son. I will explain to you how I became connected with it. My father had been London agent for Mr. Richard Smith ever since he had been in practice, and in fact of Mr. Smith's father before him, and some two or three years ago Mr. Richard Smith was stricken down with paralysis, and then his son, Mr. Bealy Smith, carried on the business entirely by himself, but his father was in partnership with him, and he carried it on under the name of R. Smith and Son, although his father was quite incapable of any business. Then in March 1867 Mr. Bealy Smith had a very severe attack of illness, something connected with inflammation of the brain or something of that kind, and then the business being deprived of both of its heads was in a very perilous position, and Mrs. Richard Smith then wrote to town to my myself and my father, who were practising in partnership in town under the firm of Boyle and Son, and stated the unfortunate position in which they were in consequence of the illness of both father and son, and asked if we could suggest anything to relieve them in the matter, and then it was arranged that I should go down at once to take charge of the business for them, and, in fact, I did take charge of the business through the whole of Mr. Bealy Smith's illness; and then he recovered from his illness, and it was then a very serious question as to what was to be done with the business. In fact, then, there was a question as to whether the business should not be disposed of, but the disposal of it to a mere stranger would have caused such a sacrifice, and it was my desire that Mr. Bealy Smith should still remain in the business, and then it was arranged between us that he and I should enter into partnership, and Mr. Richard Smith assign to us the whole of his interest in the previous firm of R. Smith and Son—should assign to us the whole of his business, and articles of partnership were entered into between us in September 1867. Well, then, a few months after the partnership articles were signed Mr. Bealy Smith, to my great surprise, expressed a determination to go out of the business altogether, and also to leave the town. Well, I tried as far as I could do to dissuade him from doing so, and he was persuaded to remain for a certain time, and he came back at intervals for a few days to the office, but after that he was so determined to leave the firm and to have nothing at all to do with the business that a deed of dissolution of partnership was subsequently signed between him and me, and I now carry on the business under the name of "Smith "and Boyle." I simply retain the name "Smith" in the business as a matter of policy.

31,111. To identify the office?—Yes.

31,112. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Bealy Smith give you any reason for leaving the business?—No, he did not give me any reason, but he was very strange, and I think he was a little soured. I do not think he felt his position was the same in the town after his illness as before.

31,113. That is, after the petition?—No; not referring to the petition in any way. I think that he was rather soured politically. I think he considered that his illness had been the cause of his losing the leadership of the Conservative party in a great measure, and I think he was soured by that.

31,114. What has become of him now?—He is now in Melbourne. Some month (I think it was September) last year he sailed for Melbourne.

31,115. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, Mr. Boyle, you have had a subpœna served upon you to appear before this Commission, served upon you in the very first week after the Commission was issued, or in fact as soon as the Commission issued. Well, I want to draw your attention to the fact that although asked for again and again we have not obtained any briefs or drafts of briefs, or proofs or drafts of proofs, on your side, the Conservative side of the question, in the case of the election petition of 1865-6. It was proved in evidence before us by our chief clerk that the only papers received from your agent in London are worthless papers, manuscript copies of what are already printed in the Blue Books, namely, the minutes of evidence, and those are labelled "All the "papers in our power." From your firm we have received not a single document of any kind, not even so much as a letter, and that is the only firm of solicitors which has not communicated to us all the papers they were bound to disclose; have you any explanation to offer?—Oh yes, I will explain that to you perfectly, and I also explained it to your secretary. I have not a single paper relating to election matters in my office, and I will tell you how that is: I think it was about a month after Mr. Bealy Smith and I entered into partnership Mr. Bealy Smith informed me that there were in the office certain papers relating to the election, to the elections in fact, and he had determined to send them away. He said, he considered now—we might consider now, that we were a private firm entirely, and that we ourselves, as Smith and Boyle, would have no connexion with election matters, and he said all the papers had better be sent away, down to his father's. I had nothing at all to do with it. I had no connexion at all with the elections, and I believe, as I was afterwards informed, that he had all the papers, whatever papers there were in the office relating to election matters, taken away, and taken down to his father's house, to Bingford House, where his father is living.

31,116. The old man who is said to be paralytic?—Yes.

31,117. A man who is too old to answer the smallest question put by a Commissioner but not too ill to go up on a contested election and vote?—I believe he simply drove up in his carriage, and Mr. Carslake came to the carriage and very kindly took his vote.

31,118. I suppose he had exercised his judgment before voting?—I have no doubt he had exercised his judgment before voting for the Conservative party.

31,119. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you suppose Mr. Smith has still got those papers?—No, I believe they were burnt by Mrs. Smith. She told me.

31,120. When?—I think about the beginning of this year.

31,121. Since the petition was disposed of by Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Well, sir, I think it must have been after—after the petition was filed.

31,122. With a full knowledge that Mr. Justice Blackburn had reported that corrupt practices extensively prevailed, and therefore with a view to the impoverishment of this Commission of what means of information it otherwise might have had?—That I cannot speak to. I was not aware of it myself until about a week or two since. Mrs. Smith informed me a week or two ago. I was not aware of what had been done with the papers.

31,123. Will you tell me, Mr. Boyle, as the propriety of examining or not examining Mr. Smith has been discussed, who took upon himself the serious responsibility of sending him away?—I believe it was his medical man, Dr. Farmer.

31,124. After he had been told that we were discussing the question?—That I do not know.

31,125. Is it the same Dr. Farmer who proposed Dr. Parker to take the chair at the public meeting in this hall, at which the Conservative candidates, Westropp and Gray, were adopted?—Oh yes, the same.

31,126. A strong politician therefore?—Oh yes.

31,127. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Bealy Smith about the stranger at any time?—Oh no, we never had any conversation about election matters. He merely sent away the papers, and we had no other conversation about them. I concurred with him as to the advisability of our having nothing to do with them, the new firm, nothing more.

W. Cooper.

WILLIAM COOPER sworn.

31,128. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember being with Mr. Batten,—I think with some friend of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, on the night of the nomination—on the day of the nomination at the last election?—I recollect being on the Cornhill or somewhere in the High Street, and some one said to me (I do not recollect the name, I cannot recollect who it was)—

31,129. Can I recall it to you? Do you remember going into the "Clarence" to see Mr. Lilly?—Yes; he said to me, "There's a meeting at the 'Clarence,' "would you like to go in?" I said I did not mind. I went into the "Clarence," and went upstairs into Westropp and Gray's room. When I got there I was about the last going into the room. When I arrived there I found Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, the two Mr. Trevors, and Mr. Lilly. There were about eight or 10 altogether, and of course Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray was there.

31,130. Tell me what you said when you went in?—I did not say anything. I was listening to what the others said.

31,131. What were they talking about?—Someone said—

31,132. What was his name?—I cannot recollect.

31,133. Very well.—That no doubt the other party would spend money, and unless we were prepared to spend money the election would be lost, and with that some one said Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray had better leave the room.

31,134. Oh, they were in the room?—They were in the room when those words were said. Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray went out of the room, and it was then that Mr. Trevor, I believe (I am nearly certain it was), said that if any money was spent he would have nothing to do with it, and Joseph Richard Smith spoke up and said, "If we had money or "could provide money, is there any of you gentlemen "who would like to risk going to Taunton gaol for "two years?" and we all said "No, oh no," and it was then decided that no money should be spent.

31,135. Who decided it?—The meeting, those who were there.

31,136. Unanimously? Was there any objection or any opposition to it?—I do not recollect that there was.

31,137. Did anybody say the election could not be won unless there was?—I believe the remark was made, that unless money was spent the others would be sure to do it, and the election would be lost. I believe that was said.

31,138. How long were you there?—Well, half an hour, I should think, altogether.

31,139. And then at the end of it you understood that there was to be no money spent?—No money spent. And Mr. Gray spoke up and said, "Let's have "a pure election, gentlemen; if we lose, we lose." That was Mr. Gray's remark. He sat on the sofa when he came back.

31,140. He came back. Did Mr Westropp and Mr. Gray both come back?—They both came back.

31,141. What did they say to Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray when they came back? What was said to them?—I really do not recollect what was said.

31,142. You do not recollect that they were told that in their absence the others had been discussing, and what they had determined upon?—I expect they must have been.

31,143. Then did you go out?—I went out of the room, but this was not midnight. I should think it was about 9 o'clock. I went out of the "Clarence," and told several people that I had been to the "Clarence" at a meeting, and that no money was to be spent, that it was to be a pure election. I told Truman the same words at my door, I think it was.

31,144. What was stated by a witness was this, that a few of you were met in the street talking outside about the election about 11 or 12 o'clock at night, and that the opinion was generally expressed that if there was no money spent it would be lost, and that it was desirable to ascertain whether or not, and what was meant to be done about money; that you were deputed to go into the "Clarence" and ask some of the leaders there what was to be done, and that you went in and saw Mr. Lilly, or at least you come out and reported that you had seen Mr. Lilly, who had told you positively that no money was to be spent; upon which the witness said he went home and gave up the election as lost. I was not in the "Clarence" after that meeting, and I did not want to go into the "Clarence" to know whether there was any money to be spent, because I knew it before. That was a mistake.

Mr. William Brice sworn.

Mr. W. Brice.

31,145. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Brice, you are a professional man; we will deal with you as with the other professional gentlemen, leaving you to make any statement.—I purpose commencing my evidence from the time I come to Bridgwater, and I think I shall take a very short time to give you my statement, leaving you to ask any questions you think proper. In 1856 I came to Bridgwater and commenced practice in offices previously occupied by Mr. Gooding. I did not purchase his practice. I came purely on my own account. Shortly after I came Mr. Benjamin Lovibond came to me and said "Your predecessor, "Mr. Gooding, who occupied your offices, has been a "warm supporter of our cause. What course do "you intend to adopt?" I told him "Really," I said "I have not given my attention, I have no vote, "and as far as this election is concerned it is perfectly "immaterial."

31,146. Did you know before you came to Bridgwater what an important part the lawyers played in the drama here?—Yes, I perfectly understood that, but I thought it would be 10 years before they would be trusted.

31,147. Before they were made Freemasons?—Yes, before they were made Freemasons or Shepherds. But Mr. Lovibond said "Will you accept a retainer?" I said "I have not the least objection to accept a "retainer, but I have no vote, you understand." I believe I received 25*l.*, which was published in the printed returns. I canvassed for the members from time to time, and I neither gave money, nor promised money, or employment, or anything of the kind. I don't believe any money was spent as far as within my knowledge and belief; and as far as that election is concerned I have nothing more to say. That was 1857. In 1858, that election I should tell you—

31,148. At your first election you acted upon your retainer of 25*l.*?—My retainer which was published.

31,149. And you did what you were called upon to do as a legal adviser, legal agent?—Yes, to canvass as legal agent. I had no vote.

31,150. What did you do?—I canvassed from time to time and attended their meetings, but I did nothing more.

31,151. Make speeches for them?—I do not think I was trusted.

31,152. At that election Mr. Follett was the Conservative and Tynte and Kinglake Liberals, and the latter two were returned.—Yes; in 1858 I had a vote.

31,153. The next is 1859?—In 1859 I had a vote, and I intimated to Mr. Lovibond that I could not vote for Mr. Kinglake and I certainly could not accept his money, and I then had a retainer from the other side.

31,154. (Mr. Anstey.) From which side?—The Conservatives. Mr. Richard Smith came to me.

31,155. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was that? How much?—In 1858, 25*l.* only.

31,156. In 1859, you mean. You got your vote in 1858.—In 1858 I got my vote, and I afterwards intimated to Mr. Lovibond that he must not consider me in any way as concerned. At that election Mr. Padwick came down as a Conservative, and Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake as Liberals. It was rather unfortunate, for as soon as Mr. Padwick's name was announced Mr. Smith and I had a serious altercation. I contended that he had a man palmed off upon him whom I could not support, and many of our party had serious doubts which way to vote or whether they should vote at all. It was only after considerable pressure had been put upon Mr. Auber and several others that we were induced to countenance Mr. Padwick. I thought then of him as I think now. It was understood at that election that Mr. Padwick came down to win his election, which of course means spending money wholesale. I believe at that election money was spent by Mr. Padwick, and not any money was spent by Mr. Westropp, excepting 200*l.* I am wrong there; at that election I believe money was spent by Mr. Padwick and 200*l.* by Mr. Westropp; that money was spent by Tynte and Kinglake or one of them also.

31,157. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Padwick went away early on the day of the polling?—So he did.

31,158. Like Mr. Kinglake last time. He did not stay to fight the battle out.—In those days, and frequently now, an election is won or lost by 10 o'clock. All the doubtful voters are pushed to the poll before that time, in order that they may not be contaminated by the other party, and then the election is safe.

31,159. Mr. Padwick did go away.—He did go away. By 1 o'clock the election is either won or lost.

31,160. (Mr. Anstey.) As far as I recollect, the evidence goes the other way?—No, I think with this particular qualification, sir.

31,161. The evidence is that every single election has been turned by voters brought up at a later period of the day, as in the case of Bagehot's defeat, in the case of Patton's defeat, and in the case of Westropp and Gray's defeat?—Yes, but with this exception, that on those occasions money was spent sparingly, and here they spent their whole funds days before, a week before.

31,162. (Mr Coleridge.) What did Mr. Padwick spend?—I believe 2,500*l.*, but I believe a great deal went into improper hands as far as I haye always understood. However, Mr. Padwick went away by express train, and he said if he ever came again, he should come for the other side.

31,163. Did Mr. Padwick like the rest, take care to know nothing about his agents?—I have no doubt.

31,164. And to be surprised by the corrupt practices?—I have no doubt he will take care to say that he knew nothing of it, because he was purposely kept ignorant of it.

31,165. (Mr. Anstey.) A story was told by a former witness, of money being laid on a window ledge instead of being put into the hand, and of kissing the thumb instead of kissing the book?—I have no doubt there was a great deal of that.

31,166. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know whether Mr. Padwick brought the money down himself?—No, I do not know that he brought the money down himself, I don't believe he did. I believe Mr. Westropp spent some, and Mr. Padwick found the rest; the arrangement being that if they both won Mr. Westropp should pay half the expenses, and if they lost Mr. Westropp should pay 200*l.* and Mr. Padwick the rest. Then Mr. Westropp was the second horse, and whenever there were any split votes it was arranged that Mr. Padwick should have them. Then as to Tynte and Kinglake, a great deal of money was spent on their behalf, and Mr. Kinglake was generally supposed to have gone in on Colonel Tynte's back.

31,167. Don't you know that he had a great deal of money from Mr. Bate on that occasion?—Mr. Kinglake had. I did not know it until in the course of this inquiry, and I was astonished to hear that statement made. In reference to that election I should tell you, I never knew until these proceedings that even a petition was threatened. I was on unfriendly terms with Mr. Richard Smith, always have been, and I believe that was the commencement of it. I have heard since that a petition was threatened and purchased off for 1,200*l.* which Mr. Padwick put in his pocket.

31,168. (Mr. Anstey.) How was that?—Well, sir, he left the other people in the lurch, and took the whole of it.

31,169. Who paid the 1,200*l.*?—I believe Colonel Tynte. You must please take this from what I have heard only. I have reason to believe that this 1,200*l.* that Mr. Padwick got by this petition was paid in London; that Mr. Padwick got hold of the cheque and said, "Now gentlemen, I shall have plenty of "money," and he put it in his pocket and walked off with it.

31,170. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not it more likely that Colonel Tynte had the money, being in difficulties?—No; but then Colonel Tynte had friends. He had a father living at that time.

31,171. (Mr. Anstey.) We had it in evidence that there was then pending an action at law, and a rule for a criminal information against the Tories, and the petition against the Liberal sitting members was a set-off, a sort of mutual credit set-off, against the proceedings at law, and on the Attorney General entering a nolle prosequi in the criminal case, and on the plaintiff discontinuing his action it was agreed that the Tories should discontinue their petition against the Liberals?—I believe it is true.

31,172. Well, then, you say 1,200*l.* over and above that went into the pocket of Mr. Padwick?—I have heard a floating rumour of that kind for the last two or three years.

31,173–4. It would, probably, take the form of a bet?—Very likely. I have heard a floating rumour for the last two or three years, but never thought it worth while to inquire into it, but lately I have inquired, and I fully believe that Mr. Padwick put it in his pocket.

31,175. He is supposed to have great talent for managing?—I do not know if it is called talent. The end of it was that Tynte and Kinglake were returned, and Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp were nowhere, and the election was won by 10 o'clock in the morning by wholesale bribery on both sides, and the result was a threatened petition, and I have since heard there were several prosecutions, one against Heard and one against Smith. I have heard that the terms of the compromise of the petition were that those actions should be withdrawn, and a certain sum of money should be paid on the nail, which Mr. Padwick of course obtained. Then we met afterwards Mr. Richard Smith, we came to be paid our fees. I should tell you that the greatest fee I ever received was about 40*l.* for the whole thing. Mr. Smith came in with a long face and said, "Well, you know, we've lost the elec- "tion. I think it right to tell you that before enter- "ing on this contest I made an arrangement that if "I did not win I would take nothing for my ser- "vices." I remarked, "That is very unlike you, "Mr. Smith," and at the time I did not believe it; but, however, he pledged himself that he had agreed to take nothing for his services, and we abated our fees to make up a fee for Mr. Richard Smith, the Trevors and myself. I do not know about Mr. Auber. I rather think Mr. Padwick's presence determined Mr. Auber not to touch it, but however, we abated our fee from 50*l.* to 40*l.*, that is 50*l.* for the two, or 25*l.* each, and we paid the other to make up a fee for Mr. Richard Smith. We had another altercation on his bringing such a man down, and it ended by saying, "It is no good now, let by-gones be by-gones," and we determined not to be palmed off by the card on anything else. However, we paid our fees back to make up a fee for Mr. Richard Smith, though we were under the impression that there was no occasion to have done so. The next election I neither gave money nor promised money. I took very little part in the election except canvassing with the members, and I frequently dined with them. I was neither party nor privy to bribery of any kind. The next election was Sir John Shelley's. He came down. It was Shelley, Kinglake, and Westropp. That was a three-cornered election. I should tell you after 1859, in the year 1865, Mr. Padwick, it was perfectly determined, could never come again, and therefore Mr. Westropp had the field, as far as the Conservatives were concerned, to himself. A great intimacy seems to have sprung up between Mr. Richard Smith and himself, and he frequently stayed at his house and was an accepted guest whenever he liked, and he nursed the borough from 1859 to 1865. In the year 1860—he spent two or three hundred a year—whoever asked for money seemed to have it, and he spent money (I used to think) in a very absurd way. I remember Mr. Trevor and myself waited on him in the year 1861. We asked Mr. Westropp for an interview. That interview was granted, and we said "Mr. Westropp, we feel that you "are under the impression that the money you are "spending will promote your interest at a future "election. We think it right to tell you as solicitors "on the Conservative interest that we do not think "the money now given will help you one iota. We "think that all these follows you are giving money will "have to be bribed again, or else they will vote on "the other side." [A pause] I think I left you at the election of Sir John Shelley, Mr. Kinglake, and Mr Westropp in 1865. Mr. Westropp nursed the borough as he termed it, or as it has been termed, from April 1859 to 1865, but a year or two afterwards, seeing Mr. Westropp spending money as we thought in a profligate way, Mr. Trevor and myself had an interview with him, and we stated that it was very kind of him to do as he had; he had been, no doubt, kind to many people, but we thought that if his object was to promote his election at a future time it was a mistaken notion. We were desirous of putting ourselves straight, so that if he did so it was at his own hazard and not on our advice. We thought we were under the imputation of advising a man to spend three or four hundred a year uselessly.

31,176. (Mr. Price.) They would take his money, and would have to be bribed over again?—We told him our impression, and he said "Oh, I will tell "you what," he said, "You know it all comes out of "my income; I may as well spend it here as any-"where else." We said "If that is the case we have "not another word to say; we hope you will stay "here to all eternity."

31,177. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a retainer?—No, I never received a halfpenny at this election.

31,178. Then how did the money go?—If a man was in distress and could not pay his rent he would give him 5*l*.

31,179. Did you receive anything for registration?—I never received a halfpenny for registration. I think he paid Mr. Smith 20*l*. a year. I am subject to correction.

31,180. Did the money go to pay up the rates?—No, it was not necessary till just before the election.

31,181. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Brice, it will throw some light, if we want any, on Mr. Westropp's motives if you're able to inform us, ay or no, whether Mr. Westropp has been equally charitable and bountiful since the entire failure of his hopes by consequence of the particular wording of Mr. Justice Blackburn's judgment as he had been before the last election?—He has not.

31,182. (Mr. Price.) It was a hopeless case?—In fact, I would not be a party to it as long as I had any influence in the matter. I think it a sort of genteel swindle that Mr. Westropp should spend his money; it could be no other motive than to promote his election. I am not green enough to suppose that Mr. Westropp would come down here and spend two or three hundred a year for charity. Well, after that observation, in which I am glad to be corroborated—after Mr. Westropp's observation, which was generally discussed in the town and which was generally known, we allowed him to spend as much money as he liked, and I believe he spent something like two or three hundred a year in giving to people who wanted money, and to various public charities of the town. The registration at that time was looked after by Mr. Richard Smith. I do not want to throw dirt on him in his absence, and I should be sorry to say a word reflecting on him, except this, that as Mr. Richard Smith at that time was the leader of the party, and had the whole control of the election matters, and no one else had anything to do with it.—I do not say this to favour myself, because I am ready to answer any questions you may ask me afterwards, but that is really a fact—that we were never consulted except just pending an election, when we may have been consulted as to the course to be adopted.

31,183. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Smith got himself into that position by talent or by hereditary heirship, or what?—Why, Mr. Smith's father, sir, had occupied a very prominent position here as a pawnbroker and had considerable influence, and I am bound, in justice, to say that Mr. Richard Smith—I consider him a man of talent—I did consider him a man of talent, and I do consider him, as elections are carried on here, a very able person, and if he had merely had control of temper and judgment he would have made a very good man.

31,184. (Mr. Anstey.) A money lender I believe, Mr. Brice, has very considerable influence on both sides?—No doubt.

31,185. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, was he not a money lender?—Yes. I am not aware that Mr. Smith was a money lender in that sense.

31,186. A pawnbroker is a money lender. That was his father, Joseph Richard Smith. He succeeded his father.

31,187. The money lenders have considerable influence at elections and otherwise?—No doubt, considerable influence. A pawnbroker necessarily must. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was a money lender. He had a greater facility for lending other people's money than Mr. Smith.

31,188–9. I mean more particularly in his later days, was not he a money lende?—Oh yes, for many years, and he is supposed to havemade a great deal of money by it. However, in the 1865 election, which was between Sir John Shelle and Mr. Kinglake on the one side, and Mr. Westropp on the other, that election, I believe, was a pure election so far as Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake were concerned, except with respect to treating. Mr. Westropp no doubt spent a lot of money, and got returned, I think, by a majority of nearly 100; by between 90 and 100.

31,190. (Mr. Anstey.) You have heard the evidence of Robert Bussell about Henry Vearncombe?—No, I have not. I daresay I have heard the case.

31,191. When he admitted having received an I. O. U. before the election, and also admitted his having had that I. O. U. cashed, and that he got 15*l*. or 18*l*.?

(Mr Price.) 15*l*.

31,192. (Mr. Anstey.) In coin, which he jingled on the night of the nomination, and either in the neighbourhood of Mr. Henry Lovibond's, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's, or Messrs. Reed and Cook's offices?—I think it is very likely to be true.

31,193. You think it is very likely to be true?—I do, because money was spent wholesale by Mr. Westropp at that election.

31,194. (Mr. Price.) No, it was the I. O. U. from the Liberals he said he had got?—I never heard of that before.

31,195. Your opinion coincides with the opinion on the other side, that, with the exception of treating at Kinglake's and Shelley's election, they did not spend any money at all?—They did not.

31,196. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not heard anything about promises?—No.

31,197. You have heard about the statement made by Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell, that, although he had every reason to believe that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had bound himself by a promise not to corrupt, that he told the corruptible voters that there would be money, and that they had better wait?—My impression is this, that no promises were made, but that they were led to believe money would be going at the proper time.

31,198. That is a very slight distinction?—Yes. I qualify it in that way, and I quite believe that, but I do not think there was any promise made to meet the Liberals, and that Mr. Westropp should spend money. It is likely enough that Sir John Shelley never spent any money. It is mere hearsay.

31,199. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember how many cases would have gone up, or could have been proved against them, if the inquiry had then taken place. There were upwards of 110 cases altogether and only seven inquired into?—I will show you the position I was in with Mr. Smith. I was not on friendly terms with him. I was not subpœnaed on the petition. I was out of the place, and I took the opportunity of going out of town in another direction, and did not attend. I did not go near London the whole time.

31,200. You did not have anything to do with it?—Not the least, in any shape or form. I said I would not have anything to do with Mr. Smith in any shape or form. I think that Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley did not spend any money, except for the purpose of treating, but I think the voters waited till the last moment, hoping it would come, and I have no doubt it would come. They had the hope of money in their minds. I should tell you at the end of the day, about half-past 2—of course the election was entirely in the hands of the Conservatives, it was in our power to return Mr. Kinglake or to have returned Sir John Shelley—a meeting took place between several of the parties as to whom we should return. Sir John Shelley, I should tell you, was the popular man. Mr. Kinglake was considered the literary man.

31,201. (Mr. Price.) And not popular, therefore?—And not popular. I think not. Mr. Kinglake's friends were close friends—that is men of some little position and standing. Mr. Kinglake's friends are very strong friends of his. Sir John Shelley, I think, was the friend of the Apollo meetings, he was a chairman of meetings, and so forth, and was a very popular man.

31,202. And with the ladies too?—And with the ladies too, and with the men too.

31,203. (Mr. Coleridge.) And was not there an idea that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond would throw over Mr. Kinglake?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was not a strong admirer of Mr. Kinglake, he was an admirer of Colonel Tynte; he was a Tyntite and Henleyite, and not a Kinglakite. A meeting took place at half-past 2 as to whether we should return Sir John Shelley or Mr. Kinglake. Some were in favour of returning Sir John Shelley, and others were in favour of Mr. Kinglake. We thought, "Well, let us return the man "who will not petition." That was discussed, we said, "Well, Mr. Kinglake's friends are the most "respectable people here, and more likely to have an "influence," and we returned, on special invitation, which I shall have hereafter to allude to, we returned Mr. Kinglake, although we found out afterwards that the friends of Mr. Kinglake were most active in supporting the petition.

31,204. (Mr. Price.) Was it not the understanding that they should not favour the petition?—No, there was no understanding of that sort. These men were sent up like a flock of sheep to vote for Kinglake and Westropp, and I think a great number split their votes for them, and a petition was presented against the return, and I never went up to it.

31,205. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor were you present on the hearing of the cross petition against Mr. Westropp?—No, I did not. I think there was an action threatened against Mr. Lovibond for words used against Mr. Joseph Smith, on the hustings, which were said to be slanders, but which I think were true, but, however, the greater the truth the greater the slander.

31,206. (Mr. Price.) Not under Lord Campbell's Act?—However, that is so, I believe. We got in Mr. Westropp; he was a strong favourite, and of course he was popular with a certain class of people in consequence of the great amount of money he spent, and for the money he spent besides upon so-called charities that you have heard of, and he was especially popular with the old women. If you went to canvass with him you would find he would almost get pinned up to half a dozen of them. I had nothing to do with bribery, I never bribed a man nor promised a man, and I never touched the money in any shape or form. After that petition a strong feeling sprang up in favour of Mr. Westropp; many people thought he had been an ill-used man, as it was thought perfectly clear that the party who had petitioned against him, although they might do that, they were not pure in themselves, and therefore that they petitioned with a very bad grace, having at previous elections had to do with bribery.

31,207. (Mr. Anstey.) Now comes the election of 1866?—That was in consequence of Mr. Westropp being declared not duly elected. The next election came on the 7th of June 1866. Very little notice of that election was given; Mr. Patton came down here on the one side, and Mr. Bagehot on the other. Of course at the time Lord Derby's government had just got into power, if I remember rightly, and it was considered everything to Mr. Patton (whose death I greatly lament) that he should get into Parliament. No doubt Mr. Patton's accession to Parliament would be an accession to something else, which may be bribery in some other shape. Probably, I ought not to designate it in that way.

31,208. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was probably useful to the town?—It was probably useful to the town. The money was spent on behalf of Mr. Patton.

31,209. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Westropp introduced him?—No, I do not think Mr. Westropp introduced him. What I think is, that Mr. Smith introduced him, or Mr. Westropp fathered him, took charge of him when he was down here. Mr. Westropp, I think, had a certain experience of this borough.

31,210. Was he so much a father to him do you think, that he opened his purse to him as well as his arms?—I think so.

31,211–12. You think Mr. Westropp found the money for him?—Not himself. I think it will appear by-and-bye that Mr. Westropp did all he could to promote his election, and I will not say that he was not privy to it, but that he was not a party to that. Mr. Patton came down and was opposed by Mr. Bagehot. Money was spent on both sides, and Mr. Patton's election was hopeless at 12 o'clock. The Liberals of course thought that they had 280 or 290 votes, or something of that kind. However the Liberals thought, they had enough to win the election, and that we could not win it, spend what we liked. By "we" I mean the party. Later in the day the different voters got out of the public houses voters who had been holding out. I might mention that if you poll in the morning you may get your 10*l.*, if you wait to the afternoon you may be paid 25*l.* Some speculate and wait for the 25*l.*, and some secure the 10*l.* An interview took place as to whether it was possible to win the election; it ultimately resulted, I think, in Temblett, Harden, and one or two others being instructed by Smith, that if they could get a certain number of men together, and bottle them up for a certain time, and these men were left to turn the tide, that they would win the election, but it would be no good to get less than 30. These men were got and the money was subscribed.

31,213. (Mr. Price.) Did you subscribe?—No, I was not a party to it. On that election, fortunately I should say, it was my province to take charge of the southern booth, and I was in the booth the whole day. I was not in the committee room of the "Clarence" or in any committee room all day, and I was not present or party or privy to getting that money in any shape or form. However, these men were got together, and some of them would have gone to the Liberals for a soverign, and some of them for 10*s.* These men were got together and were paid their 10*l.* or 15*l.*, and it resulted in the return of Mr. Patton by seven, which was considered a great constitutional victory.

31,214. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not think Mr. Westropp found this money?—No, I do not think Mr. Westropp found this money, but I think he knew all about it.

31,215. (Mr. Price.) You say he knew all about it?—From what I have heard; as I have told you before I had charge of the southern booth; what I heard was this, all the available money was expended, and it was necessary to get some 300*l.* or 400*l.*

31,216. That we know to have been subscribed?—That was subscribed, and it was enough to carry the election.

31,217. That was whipped up?—That was whipped up.

31,218. And that was repaid afterwards as we know by Mrs. Smith?—I do not know at all.

31,219. What I was asking you was this, have you any idea where the money, which was expended and which was brought down for the purpose of bribery at Patton's election, was found?—I was under the impression it was under the control of Mr. Pitman.

31,220. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he here during the whole of the time?—He was during the day of the election; Mr. Pitman was Mr. Patton's agent. I do not say it was brought by himself; it was brought through his instrumentality, and he pulled the strings. I may be wrong but I think so, and Mr. Westropp did all he could to promote Mr. Patton's election in every shape and form, and I believe he did it good service. I never bribed or promised a man money, nor did I see the money.

31,221. (Mr. Price.) Were you paid for your services at that election?—I think I got for that and the next election 40*l.*; from that to 80*l.*

31,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you did not see the money nor bribe with it, but you knew all about it?—Well, certainly I did, and so did every man, woman, and child in the place. In fact you could not help knowing it. I do not think there was anyone within five miles of the place who did not know it, unless they wilfully avoided it. It is an absurd thing for one side to spend money and the other side not to spend money, if you mean to make a contest of it. However, it ended in this great constitutional victory being obtained. Then Mr. Patton soon afterwards got his appointment of Lord Advocate, and he came to Bridgwater for re-election. I should tell you that after 1865, Mr. Richard Smith was struck down with paralysis, or at any rate absented himself from the political arena.

31,223. Mr. Richard Smith?—Mr. Richard Smith; and Mr. Bealy Smith took his place, and I believe assisted in the matter of Mr. Westropp's petition, and took the control of the other. I must confess there was, I will not say jealousy, but some annoyance felt by some among us that so young a man as Mr. Bealy Smith should assume the position he had. It was thought he ought not to have done so after our having carried through the election of Mr. Westropp. He undertook the elections of Patton and Bagehot, and also the election of Patton and Vanderbyl. In July 1866, Mr. Patton came down for re-election, and until the day before until Mr. Patton arrived on the platform I do not think it was generally thought by us that there would be any contest whatever. We had heard of Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Barham going to London in search of a candidate, and we had come to the conclusion that they could not get one as no candidate had been announced, and we thought it improbable under the circumstances that they had got a candidate, it being the etiquette that a man should not be opposed on re-election to office; that is the etiquette amongst a certain class.

31,224. Do you know who it was determined that there should be a contest?—I understood that it was Mr. Kinglake. I may be wrong, and may be doing him injustice.

31,225. Not the gentleman who was made knight—Sir William Drake?—That I will come to by-and-bye. What I understand was this, that they tried to get a candidate. Of course Mr. Kinglake would not promote a candidate, because he had no object or interest to do so, but I have no doubt that when they were in town they called upon Mr. Kinglake and asked him if he knew anybody who would come down, and I have no doubt that they had seen two or three gentlemen, and they declined, and as a last resource they went to Mr. Travers Smith, I may be wrong, and were introduced to him by Mr. Kinglake; Mr. Kinglake went with them, I think. It was then arranged that if they could succeed in getting a candidate, that they would telegraph down to Bath and stop them there; a telegram was sent, and stopped them at Bath, and they met Mr. Salmon.

31,226. (Mr. Price.) We all know about that?—It is not necessary to go through that. Mr. Vanderbyl came down and spent money, and the price was at first 10*l.*, and went to 25*l.*, and the men went up to poll like a flock of sheep, and there was a quantity of drinking and debauchery going on in the town the same as usual.

31,227. Sheep do not drink.—We determined that we would not petition. We determined as we had possibly bribed before that election, and had possibly bribed at that election, we could not be party to anything of that kind. I had no retainer. Mr. Smith was our agent. I do not mention Mr. Smith's name because he is away and cannot defend himself, but I might say that he had the sole control of our party.

31,228. Instead of being annoyed with these other gentlemen because Mr. Smith had got the place, I suppose you were rather glad of it?—I do not say that I should have adopted the same line as he did. I should have taken care that no money should have passed through my hands. No doubt I am as great a sinner as he is.

31,229. (Mr. Coleridge.) As to other elections, you decidedly winked at it?—No doubt of it. Then the next election we determined not to petition, for the reason that we were as black as they were, and it would be absurd for us to do so. Soon after that Mr. Smith lost his head or was ill, and was away a couple of months, and came back, and got married, and soon after got considerably better, and soon after that he was as bad as ever. I believe that is the story.

31,230. (Mr. Price.) Did he marry a Bridgwater lady?—No, he did not he went; to Southampton. We then had a meeting as to the course to be adopted for the party. It was then proposed that I should take Mr. Smith's place as the leader of the Conservative party. I objected on the ground that I was inexperienced, because really before coming to Bridgwater I was never brought up in the atmosphere of politics in my life, and had never taken the steps that were necessary to my position.

31,231. You had not been educated as Mr. Disraeli said of his party?—I had not been educated. What I said was I would not do it, Mr. John Trevor would not do it, and Mr. Ruddock would not do it, and Mr. Auber would not do it.

31,232. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. James Trevor was living at Stowey?—Mr. James Trevor was living at Stowey. I consented at last, on condition that Mr. James Trevor would allow his name to be put before my name or after my name, so that I might fall back upon him for advice. That was 1867, and soon after Mr. Smith got a little better, and he was dissatisfied with the course which had been taken with regard to him. We stated to him that we had done everything that was fair towards him, that we had not done it to displace him, but merely for the purpose of the party, and not with respect to him. That is 1866. We come now to a more eventful time. Everything went very well until 1868. I will commence the last election in 1868 with the bridge committee dinner, that is, the 5th May. I think you know from the evidence which has already been given what the bridge committee is.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. W. Brice.

27 Sept. 1869.

31,233. (Mr. Anstey.) No, we do not, except that it was mentioned that you were to let us know. One or two witnesses said that.—I do not know why I should be able to tell you. I do not know why I should be pitched upon.

31,234. I asked several witnesses, and their answers were uniformly that you would tell us who constituted the bridge committee.—I believed it was constituted on the occasion of the new bridge being put over the river. At that time the Conservatives were in the ascendancy.

(Mr. Price.) 1797.

31,235. (Mr. Coleridge.) 1796?—I did not know that. At any rate the bridge committee are composed of Conservatives wholly and solely, and there is a large cup which is considered to belong to the president for the time being of the committee. They are composed of Conservatives, and no one who is not a Conservative has any chance whatever of being on the committee of the bridge. We meet once a year and dine.

31,236. (Mr. Price.) Is it a matter of honour or profit?—No, none whatever.

31,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does the dinner come out of the trust funds?—I rather think we pay for it—we do.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I wonder at it.

31,238. (Mr. Anstey.) Are there any of the funds consumed?—No, I do not think there are. I think that is part of the purity in Bridgwater. A meeting always takes place on the 5th of May—there are the books here. However, this bridge committee is a Conservative meeting in other words, and the meeting takes place on the 5th of May, at which we dine. There is a secretary, and a president is elected. We ask the gentlemen in the neighbourhood to attend, and we generally get some gentlemen in the neighbourhood. Conservative toasts are in great request and favour, and we generally get home as late at night as we possibly can, and no doubt feel the penalties of it in the morning. That is all I know of it.

31,239. At this bridge committee what happened on the 5th of May?—After the election of 1866 Mr. Westropp wrote a letter withdrawing himself as a future candidate of the borough, and we thought Mr. Westropp would not be seen here again, and at the same time his charity ceased, if I might pollute the word. However, on the 5th of May 1868, at the dinner, Mr. Westropp was invited with others to attend the dinner, I think at the "White Hart." He was most enthusiastic, as he had always been on the previous occasions; he was well received, and during the evening, whether it was after my speech or after Mr. James Trevor's speech, I will not say, or whose speech it was, but, however, during the evening regret was expressed that Mr. Westropp had come to the conclusion not to come down again to contest our borough. You know it is not a very easy thing to find a candidate to do it. We are like Barnstaple, we are not very pure, and it is difficult to get a man to do it.

31,240. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before you go further, you were going to say something about Mr. Edwards coming down?—Yes. Mr. Edwards came down on the Saturday night. I remember well, he came up the line from Barnstaple. Mr. Edwards belongs to a firm in Delahay Street, London.

31,241. Ratcliffe, Edwards, & Co.?—Ratcliffe, Edwards, & Co. Mr. Edwards came with a very pretty daughter, it was said at the time. I remember we had a meeting at the hotel, and Mr. Smith said, "We have got another candidate, and I will tell you "what, he has a very pretty daughter. It will put "all the young men in our part on the look out." Mr. Edwards was introduced to us, he was a short man, and he explained the circumstance of his coming here. We had him into another room, and asked him whether he seriously intended to stand for the borough. He said he did. Some parties sat up the whole night preparing his address. He said, "I am in "your hands entirely. I will adopt whatever course "you think proper." We said it was a very absurd thing to keep the man here over Sunday, it is not a very delightful place to spend a Sunday in; we said, "You have friends in the neighbourhood, go to them, "and come back on the Monday," and we got the address out, and commenced canvassing. The address was published, but he got the start of us, and he never came back at all.

31,242–3. Do you know whether the Liberals use the church door for their addresses?—I do not know. Mr. Edwards bolted straight. No doubt when he heard he would have to buy his way in, and buy his way out, that was the thing that made him bolt.

31,244. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not hear of a Major Wellington Guernsey either with Mr. Edwards or about that time?—I never heard about that before. I think Mr. Edwards came up from Barnstaple. I am sure of it.

31,245. (Mr. Price.) Probably somebody had come up beforehand to feel the way for him?—No, I never heard anything of the kind.

31,246. (Mr. Anstey.) You are going on to the 5th May.—On the 5th May the dinner was at the "White Hart," and Mr. Westropp was present, and regret was expressed that Mr. Westropp should have determined not to come down again to contest the borough, and that we should be very glad to see Mr. Westropp down again, and Mr. Westropp said, I think—I do not know whether his dinner had the better of his reason, but he said, "After the way "I have been received by the new constituency"—

31,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) He did not know the condition of the constituency?—No, he did not. He afterwards intimated his intention of withdrawing from the borough, and he should carry it out unless he had a requisition numerously and respectably signed for his coming forward again, and that was the only condition on which he would come forward. I do not think that requisition was signed or presented, but I think we said he might consider that as already done. Mr. Westropp then determined to come forward, and on purity principles.

31,248. (Mr. Price.) How much did he spend in this borough altogether with his 300*l.* a year and other things?—Not so much as you would think.

31,249. How much?—At his first election he spent 200*l.*, and at his second election he spent 3,000*l.*, and then there was his 300*l.* a year.

31,250. And other things besides. We have heard of his being godfather to a great number of children in Bridgwater, and their being christened after him?—I do not know about that.

31,251. I see only one toast set down in the minute book; it seems to refer to the election, and that only by inference, and that is the sixth toast, "H. West-"ropp, Esq., by the president," the president being Mr. James Trevor?—Yes, those are the formal toasts.

31,252. Then about six weeks after that the consulting committee is stated, according to a minute dated the 11th of June 1868, consisting of only five of those who were at the dinner, to have resolved, "That it is desirable to form a Working Men's Con-"servative Association in this town"?—Yes, no doubt.

31,253. That was done by the bridge committee?—Yes. The bridge committee were a Conservative body, and I have no doubt that this possibly sprung out of it, but the practice of the bridge committee was this, to enrol members from year to year who were Conservatives; in other words to strengthen the party. That was the sole object of it.

31,254. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose there is not a single working man a member of the bridge committee?—Oh no.

31,255. Have you had the dinner this year?—The time has not come yet.

31,256. May 1869?—No; we have had quite enough to think of altogether.

31,257. Probably you will have it after we have gone?—Most likely.

31,258. At that election Mr. Westropp's name was very favourably received.—No doubt he was most popular in the borough, and no doubt he had the sympathy of a considerable number of his political opponents. They thought he had been persecuted.

31,259. Is it not the case with every candidate who has come here?—No; I think it is especially so with Mr. Westropp.

31,260. Is it not the case with every candidate who has come here, that he procures a great deal of sympathy if he has given voters 10*l.* apiece. Does not he gain a considerable amount of sympathy?—I think not.

31,261. Does not the giving away of 300*l.* a year to a charity procure sympathy?—No doubt; money speaks volumes. I should like to qualify it, and say from 200*l.* to 300*l.* a year. I do not think Mr. Westropp was so rich a man as was generally supposed.

31,262. You mean "be the same more or less"?—That expresses it. Mr. Westropp came down, having previously written a letter stating that he would withdraw from the borough, and there was an expression of regret at his determination to withdraw himself, and a hope that he would come down again; something of that kind. He said he withdrew for the reasons explained; but he said, if a requisition was signed respectably and influentially he would consider it. That was the substance of it. I think after the first week in July we commenced the election. We talked of election matters, and from July to September was spent in getting candidates, which ended in Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray coming to the borough. They came down the first time on the 10th October. I unfortunately was absent, and we had a meeting in this hall, in which a man got thrown from the top of this gallery to the bottom. I believe it was Honyball. I have heard so. I believe at that meeting—I do not know whether you wish to hear anything that took place between July and October?

31,263. (Mr. Price.) No, I think not.—Mere fruitless attempts to get candidates, and so forth. However, Mr. Gray was brought down here and introduced.

31,264. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray's first meeting—at their first appearance?—No. I had a large sale, and I could not get back till the next mail.

31,265. Are you aware that Mr. Westropp carefully avoided saying that he knew anything of Mr. Gray, except that he knew he was a merchant of great eminence in the city?—I have heard so, and I believe it.

31,266. Nothing was said of his qualifications beyond that?—There is no necessity for speaking of a man's qualifications in this borough. If he is introduced by the leader of a party, it is presumed. I do not think they ask what his politics are here, except as to the Ballot or Permissive Bill, or something of that sort.

31,267. He was not a good speaker?—No.

31,268. And Mr. Westropp was.—No. I do not think he was a very good speaker.

31,269-71. He was the chief speaker?—He was the chief speaker. However, Mr. Westropp had enough to say for himself. I was not present at that meeting; I was attending a large sale. I got up by the up mail, and Mr. Westropp introduced Mr. Gray. There was a meeting of the other party to interrupt our proceedings, trying to throw into Mr. Westropp's face that he had resigned his pretensions to the borough, to try to throw a firebrand in his face.

31,272. You were going to tell us about the opposition.—There was an opposition got up here by several people, as I understand, to try to get Mr. Westropp to retire, for at that time he was a very formidable opponent. They thought he was no doubt backed up by money, and they tried to hoot him down, and I believe Honyball, who has been before you, got thrown from the top of this gallery to the bottom, and how it was that he did not break his back I do not know. He turned right over.

31,273. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it the fact, as represented in one of the briefs which have been delivered at the late trial, that so near was the division of the meeting on that very question, as to whether Mr. Westropp should be accepted after having declined the borough, that the chairman was obliged to say, "I am not sure "which way the majority is"?—I do not believe that there was any division as amongst the Conservatives. I believe not.

31,274. There was not amongst the Conservatives.—As amongst our own party we were unanimous. The fact is, Mr. Westropp would not retire. I think we asked him to retire, because we could not get anybody to come with him. Everybody said, "What is "the use of my coming after he has been here and "spent his money? What is the use of my playing "second fiddle to him?" And there was a little pressure put upon Mr. Westropp to retire; that I grant, but at this time we would not let our opponents know this, and, in fact, one of our charms, if it be a charm, is our unanimity.

31,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was no chance, there was a split in the party?—No, we could not afford it. This was May 1868, the dinner; and then from July to September was occupied in getting candidates, and we got Mr. Gray.

31,276. (Mr. Anstey.) Then this meeting you speak of took place?—Yes, and we determined that nothing should be done during the greater part of September; and we determined that one party should not get a candidate without letting the other know.

31,277. And that was not rigidly adhered to?—That was not rigidly adhered to.

31,278. (Mr Coleridge.) You could not trust each other?—Yes; if they gave me their words I would take it.

31,279. You agreed you would not canvass.—No. Immediately the other side saw that faith was going to be broken they sought for their candidates, and said, "Come here as quickly as possible."

31,280. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear that anybody was likely to come into the borough to dispose of money in the interest of Westropp and Gray?—I never heard of it.

31,281. You never heard it was expected?—I would not go to that extent, I believe the party expected it. I believe up to the last it was expected that Mr. Westropp would come down to spend money.

31,282. By your party?—I think so.

31,283. Down to when?—Down to the day of the election.

31,284. Who is Mr. Gray?—He is a respectable man; he is a general merchant in London; his place of business is in Great St. Helen's.

31,285. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is of the great mercantile class who is suited for this borough?—Yes. Mr. Westropp was a popular man, and Mr. Gray was thought to be a millionaire, and that he had ships enough to float the Parret from here to the sea, and all that sort of thing.

31,286. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you put it in this way, that Mr. Westrop had paid money for years, and that Mr. Gray was a rich man and could pay money?—Yes, I think that is the interpretation to put upon it. I think Mr. Westropp had determined not to spend money.

31,287. You think he got sick of paying?—Yes, undoubtedly. I think he suffered considerably. Mr. Westropp is not a man of strong health, and I think during his contested elections, and during his petitions, he suffered materially.

31,288. (Mr. Coleridge.) In health?—In health, no doubt, as well as in pocket. We had no money in the town, and I did not think there was any money then,

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

Mr. W. Brice.

27 Sept. 1869.

and I do not think so now, notwithstanding all that has been said. We determined to fight the election on purity principles. Mr. Barham stated that a suggestion was made that we should fight a pure election. Now that suggestion emanated from his mind at the same time that it emanated from the mind of Mr. James Trevor and myself, or rather of Mr. James Trevor. I remember his coming one day and saying, "Brice, what do you think of our election?" I said, "I think Westropp will get one seat;" and I think so now.

31,289. (Mr. Price.) If it was pure on both sides?—Yes. "I promise you what I will do, I will not "touch money in any shape or form," he most decidedly knowing that I never have done so. He said, I will go to Mr. Henry Lovibond. He did so. Mr. Henry Lovibond's reply to him was, as I was told afterwards, "Trevor, I shall be as delighted as you to "fight a pure election, but I tell you candidly I can- "not control my fellows, and I tell you candidly I do "not think you can control yours. I will try it if "you like, but I do not think it is of any use;" that is what Mr. James Trevor told me.

31,290. (Mr. Anstey.) After the election was over were you present at any of the conferences at which Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl appeared?—Oh, yes.

31,291. Which of them?—I will come to that now if you like, I will come to this first if you will allow me. The night before the election we determined not to spend any money. I was in the "Clarence" with Mr. Westropp when in came eight or nine people, and Batten came in, when he said, "Have you brought "down any money?" I said, "Do not make any "mistake, we do not desire that there should be any "bribery at all in any shape or form;" at that time they began to treat. I should tell you treating had been going on on the other side during the two days before to a very limited extent, and they came here and said, "Here are our men going away to this inn "and that inn, and unless we can spend a little "money to keep them together, that is to hustle them "together for the purpose of voting, we shall have to "cave in." I said, "You do not understand our "position. We do not want anybody to spend a "farthing in treating or bribery, therefore what you "do remember you do on your own responsibility, "and take my word for it you will not be paid." I began to think my position was a very unpleasant one; I got roundly abused, and I got down into the street and I said, "Do not make too much noise, people will "hear us." One gentleman, I think Mr. Ruddock, said they behaved very disgracefully, and it ended by their going away with the notion that we were not to spend any money. Soon after that there was a talk of retiring. We became so impressed with the notion that Mr. Kinglake was going to spend money, and there was really a conference as to what was to be done.

31,292. (Mr. Price.) The other side say they had the same fear of you.—No doubt, it was a mutual fear.

31,293. No doubt they thought Mr. Gray had money and would spend it.—No doubt.

31,294. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not mean to say there was no money actually spent on your side?—I do indeed.

31,295. Do you not know of 3*l.* given to one man, and 5*l.* to another?—I do not think there was any money spent, but I think there was a promise. I will come to that. I do not think there was a farthing spent in the town, but I have heard of an isolated case of a promise; that is the only case I know of, and I do not believe there was any money expended in treating, not a bill that ever I heard of as being spent in a public house, nor that I ever heard of a publican being dissatisfied at his not being paid.

31,296. (Mr. Coleridge.) But are they not hanging over until these proceedings are terminated?—No; I do not think they will be paid a penny.

31,297. (Mr. Anstey.) You heard the other day about a promise having been made to a man by Mr. Leaker?—I alluded to that isolated case a moment ago. Mr. Parker, I think, came up; Mr. Parker had been made an alderman a few days before. He is a very respectable man, and he came and said on behalf of the Conservative Working Men's Association that he would not hear of anything of the kind; and Mr. Trevor also stated that all the money had been spent that was necessary for a contested election. "Let us "see how things are going on."

31,298. (Mr. Price.) It was a question of retirement?—It was a question of retirement. Before that it was determined that we should go to poll. I should say I know something of the attempt to coalesce between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp. It was certainly true what was stated that Mr. Westropp came to my house.

31,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Vanderbyl present on either of those two occasions?—He was.

31,300. And Mr. Fennelly?—I did not see him. Mr. Westropp was at my house when he was sent for, and I said, "Do not you go."

31,301. Were you present when Mr. Westropp met face to face either Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Fennelly?—Never. I have the letter here which was written by Mr. Spink from the "Globe," which Mr. Westropp gave me; and they came to my house with a message to me to go to Hennett's, and I said, "Oh no, I shall "not go there, if they want me they must come to "me." I never saw Mr. Fennelly. I said, "What "is the use of you going to meet Hennett and Spink "to bind the party? Send the heads of the party to "us. What is the use of going to Hennett and "Spink, they cannot bind their party, and it is all "nonsense," and I would not hear it. I said, "If "Mr. Lovibond or any other of the heads of the party "comes here I will speak to him," but as to talking to Hennett and Spink I would not hear of anything of the kind. I said to Mr. Westropp, "You may just "go to hear what it is they have to say, it may open "our eyes;" and he came back with a cock-and-bull story which I could not make head or tail of.

31,302. (Mr. Price.) At that time do you think the thing could have been carried out without a contest of the parties on both sides?—No; unless it was arranged that we should have one seat on each side, that is all we wanted.

31,303. You think it could have been carried out if you had one seat on each side?—Yes.

31,304. Do you think it was arranged that Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl should be the chosen candidate?—No; one was trying to sell the other, no doubt about that.

31,305. (Mr. Anstey.) Had there been intrigues going on a month before with Mr. Vanderbyl, with a view to shut out Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

31,306. By a coalition with Mr. Westropp?—Oh yes; and no doubt Mr. Vanderbyl was doing everything he could to make himself popular with the firms here. He succeeded in getting popular with Hennett.

31,307. And he was justly popular in that sense in which Mr. Westropp was?—Yes; and Mr. Vanderbyl tried it also on the rifle corps, and I belonged to the rifle corps, and I endeavoured to use my influence in the best way I could, not as Mr. Vanderbyl did, but by trying to get them to stick to us, each trying to sell the other. Each tried to take care of himself.

31,308. Each knew what the other was trying to do against him?—No doubt I did, and no doubt they tried all they knew. Unfortunately, they did not bring to us the heads of the party; if they had we should have been only to glad to have arranged the matter with them.

31,309. (Mr. Price.) You understood Mr. Gray would have given way?—We did entirely. Mr. Gray said he came down here to do something for his party, and Mr. Gray behaved extremely well; he said, "Brice all I have come down here for is to "strengthen the party, and if you think you do any" thing by getting me to retire, you can do what you " like in using my name to promote Mr. Westropp's " election." That was down to the last day, the day of the polling, that Mr. Westropp came to that determination.

31,310. Does that lead you to the conclusion that Mr. Westropp had spent any money in bribery?—He had not.

31,311. You were not in Mr. Westropp's confidence?—No, I thought so then, and I feel so now that I never had Mr. Westropp's confidence. During the time he was here, he was so much isolated with Richard Smith and Bealy Smith, that my position was so doubtful in consequence, being on unfriendly terms with them, that naturally no great confidence existed between us; he was always extremely kind and courteous, and he trusted me to a certain extent.

31,312. You were not in the same position with regard to him as the Smiths had been?—No. I had condemned the course he had taken in connexion with the Smiths, and with his associating himself with the Smiths as he had done. I remonstrated with him over and over again. He was doing our party damage. That brings us to the day of the election, then there was a meeting at the Town Hall; I was not present, and probably you would prefer to have the evidence of those who were present.

31,313. Yes?—I was not present. I found the men were going up to vote with great rapidity. I certainly could not make it out. I was certainly paralysed.

31,314. How do you account for it now, that they voted, the great mass of them, thinking that they should eventually get money if money was going?—Yes, my impression is that there was no money going then, and that they thought amongst themselves, if we go up and vote for the Liberals they will not forget it afterwards. If they had thought that the Liberals were not going to spend any money at all, I do not think they would have voted.

31,315. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you account for the Liberals having a lot of money in their hands and not using it?—The reason is this, that Messrs. Reed and Cook were on one side and Mr. Barham on the other, and Messrs. Reed and Cook tried to save Mr. Vanderbyl's money, and Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond tried to save Mr. Kinglake's money. That is the only way I can account for it. With respect to what Mr. Barham has stated as to my having 8*l.*, his statement is perfectly true. I only had 8*l.* when the petition was over; the 10*l.* was given. Two men claimed 2*l.* Mr. Westropp paid 8*l.* and Mr. Collette paid 2*l.*, and Mr. Hennett 2*l.* I paid 12*l.* instead of 10*l.*, and I have never been recouped. The election was over, I could not understand it. About 10 or 12 we were ahead by 150 or 200, then the Liberals began to creep up. Then the majority was first of all reduced to 30 or 40, and then to 20 and 10, and so on, and then Temblett came down to me and said, " For God's sake let us have some money." My opinion is at that time we could have won the election for 50*l.* " There are a lot of men down at " the 'Mason's Arms' who you can get for 1*l.* apiece." I said " I had no money, and if I had you do not " suppose I was going to be fool enough to spend it " in that open way that he suggested." I said we had not spent a farthing as yet, and we are not going to begin now, and I do not think there was money spent in any shape or form afterwards. That is all I have to say so far as the election is concerned.

31,316. (Mr. Anstey). Tell me about the meetings at which Mr. Kinglake was present?—That is what I am going to. Then after the election, the defeated candidates consoled them by a dinner at the "Clarence;" I was not present. There was a great crowd there down below, and great excitement prevailed.

31,317. (Mr. Price.) Tell me, before you go any further, before there was a petition, had you any representations made to you by the men who voted for Westropp and Gray, that they should expect to be paid?—None whatever.

31,318. Have you any reason to suppose that there were any who expected to be paid?—I have no reason to suppose so, and I do not think so.

31,319. Of course, after the petition, people would be alarmed, and would not say anything?—No, I do not believe a word about it.

31,320. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to tell us that this petition was decided upon at this dinner?—Yes, the same day.

31,321. Therefore there would be no time at all for the voters to get the money?—No. What I think exasperated the voters was, that the Liberals had got paid the money, and they had not. After the election there was a dinner at the "Clarence," a sort of consolation dinner. I think the consolation " steaks " were handed up, of which a great number partook.

31,322. (Mr. Price.) Had you the gallant cup there, belonging to the bridge committee?—No great excitement prevailed, and we were called upon to go out and make a speech, and we went out and made a speech, and said that the election was gone by bribery, or something of that sort, and that we should take early steps to present a petition; we threatened a petition at the same time, and there were various meetings, and Mr. Trevor went to them, and I have taken this sketch from his books. I have no memoranda of my own of any kind. These were taken from Mr. Trevor's books as a guide to me.

31,323. I think the principal thing we want to know is about the interview when Mr. Kinglake was present, for really that is a very important matter about what took place when Mr. Kinglake came himself and interfered in the matter of the compromise, because it has a very important bearing?—I went to London and Mr. Trevor went to London.

31,324. (Mr. Anstey.) Give us those meetings at which he was present?—There was only one meeting at which I was present. I went to town with Mr. Trevor before the petition was presented. Various suggestions had been made for compromising the petition. We said at the time we thought we were entitled to one seat out of it, and we should have been satisfied with one seat, and if one seat had been properly and fairly offered us, probably this Commission would not have taken place. One seat was offered at the expiration of a twelvemonth. We would not accept it. Then it was nine months, and then six months, and then there was the London season, and then the sole object was to retain the seat for Mr. Westropp. Then we were offered one seat at last. We had no intelligible offer which we could have accepted, or we should have done so. Then I met at the " Tavistock " Mr. Kinglake, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Sealy, Mr. James Cook, and Mr. Trevor. It was a very long one, and we were discussing the thing over in a thousand different ways as to what was to be done with this petition

31,325. (Mr. Price.) Was there any disguise, or was it passed over in silence? Was it discussed at all in Mr. Kinglake's presence, that the seats must go if there was a petition?—No, it was not, I think. I must do Mr. Kinglake the justice of saying, as far as I am able to judge, that as far as his party are concerned I think it had not been discussed. It was said that some of his influential friends had got into a mess, and he must sacrifice himself to save them if possible.

31,326. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said then or before then that Dr. Kinglake had some days or weeks before the election raised 1,500*l.* on behalf of his brother?—No, it was never discussed.

31,327. Was it known or believed by you?—No, we did not know it at the time of negotiating this petition. We were perfectly in the dark. You will see by the previous offer, and by the correspondence, that we were doubtful as to succeeding or not. We had no idea where the money came from; it was mere surmise, but the surmise turned out to be well founded.

31,328. I think you are wrong.—No.

31,329. I think Mr. James Trevor gave a pregnant and sound suggestion when he said that it was raised that day, and it was known throughout the day ?—I remember the brief. It was mere surmise. We had no evidence of it. It might have turned out to be moonshine—it was pure surmise. You will find no proof on that part of the case. You will find the proofs in the brief.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not know what the proofs are.

31,330. (Mr. Price.) You had the case of Palmer. —We had Palmer, and then we had to bring agency home to Bussell.

31,331. (Mr. Anstey.) You drew the brief ?—Yes, with Mr. Trevor.

31,332. I want to know by whose instructions this very important statement was made :—"Mr. Vanderbyl, "on Sunday, the day before the nomination, sent his "confidential friend, Mr. Fennelly, to Mr. Westropp, "asking him to coalesce with Mr. Vanderbyl, stating "that Mr. Vanderbyl had put himself in his hands, "and had had a row with his agents, Messrs. Reed and "Cook. He at the same time offered Mr. Westropp "to meet him half way, by which Mr. Westropp in- "ferred that he would join him in bribery."—I do not believe the statement. I do not believe it was true.

31,333. You say you drew the brief ?—Part of it, in conjunction with Mr. Trevor.

31,334. But did you draw that part ?—No.

31,335. Then I will not ask you the question. It comes to a matter of belief, which I can form my own opinion about as well as you.—Yes.

31,336. (Mr. Price.) That was the object of Mr. Kinglake's going ?—Yes.

31,337. I am glad you have stated that, because the impression on my mind was unfavourable to Mr. Kinglake, namely, that he must have felt his own seat in peril through bribery, or he would not have given way, he being very ambitious to have a seat in Parliament, and it was said that before the petition he must have known that there had been improper practices ?—Well, I believe that.

31,338. By his own party ?—Well, I believe that fully.

31,339. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say that Mr. Kinglake was not prepared to give up both the seats ?—No, I never heard it.

31,340. But you have heard it stated by Mr. Cook that he was ?—I do not believe it.

31,341. That was when he was pushed at the last; he said we had better have one ?—Oh, that was when it was perfectly hopeless and out of our control.

31,342. I know.—It may have been then.

31,343. I am asking you with reference to the last statement which you made, and which the Chief Commissioner has just remarked upon. Is it true, then, that Mr. Kinglake did at one time contemplate the possibility of having to give up both seats ?—I do not say so, because I do not know it.

31,344. You do know it.—No, I do not deny it and I do not corroborate it. I am quite under the impression that Mr. Kinglake believed he would be compromised by his friends.

31,345. Who were his friends ?—I do not know.

31,346. Was his brother his friend ?—It turned out to be so.

31,347. Was he himself his friend ?—Yes, by his friends in Bridgwater.

31,348. (Mr. Price.) Somebody said that money was in the town—we have the money in the town ?—Yes.

31,349. What was that said in reference to ?—I do not know.

31,350. Was not that the last election ?—That would be the last election alluded to.

31,351. Somebody said so to Truman : "We had "the money in the town. Our money was in the "town," or something of that kind.

31,352. (Mr. Anstey.) It was Truman said that to Boys.—I should be very sorry to be answerable for anything that Truman made use of.

31,353. (Mr. Price) I am asking you ?—I never heard of it.

31,354. Wait a moment. You were the leading lawyer of the party, and you were very much in the confidence also of Mr. Gray, and to a certain extent, of course, you must have known something of Mr. Westropp, and I understand you say that Mr. Westropp desired not to spend any more money ; but as you are immensely in the confidence of Mr. Gray, was there any foundation for that suggestion that money was in the town on your part ?—None whatever.

31,355. Was there any money lodged at Stuckey's bank ?—None whatever.

31,356. Was there any credit open on your part corresponding to that of Dr. Kinglake on the other side ?—None whatever.

31,357. Are you quite certain about it ?—Quite certain.

31,358. (Mr. Coleridge.) No credit at all ?—None whatever. When I was in the town a few days before, I said, "Now, Mr. Gray, we are determined "to fight a pure election. As to the necessary costs "of the election I should like to see your private "solicitors, as I should like to be advised by them."

31,359. (Mr. Price.) I want to know this, why was it a better thing for your party to fight with two men if you wanted to fight a pure election, admitting that you wanted to fight a pure election ; why was it better to have a rich man down, a stranger to the town, who could float the whole of the Parrot, as you say, from here to the sea, especially when you had Mr. Westropp down as a popular candidate ?—I did not think it was necessary to fight a three-cornered contest. I did not think it was advisable.

31,360. Was Mr. Gray brought down here for the purpose of holding the purse, holding out the red flag to the bull. Was Mr. Gray brought down here for the purpose of dangling the purse before the eyes of the electors ?—Yes.

31,361. (Mr. Coleridge.) In a place like this, in fighting a three-cornered election, there are lots of voters who vote one and one, and take money on both sides ?—No doubt.

31,362. (Mr. Price.) Seeing that Mr. Vanderbyl had all kinds of contracts to dispose of, and plenty of money, it was thought necessary to have a second man down here, and to let the electors draw their own inferences ?—No doubt.

31,363. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know Mr. Hodges' handwriting ?—Yes.

31,364. There has been a good deal of doubt raised as to the authenticity of that letter. Do you believe that to be his handwriting (handing a letter to the Witness) ?—I do.

31,365. Will you read it ?—"Cornhill, Bridgwater, "Nov. 14, 1868. Mr. Hayward. Dear Sir. As a "Conservative, and one deeply interested in the "coming contest, I beg to solicit your vote and "interest for our old friend Mr. Westropp and his "copartner, Mr. Gray, feeling assured it would prove "in the future everything you could wish for. Yours "respectfully, R. Hodges."

31,366. "Feeling assured it will prove" ?—Yes. "P.S.—Would you come to me, or write by return. "Polling Tuesday."

31,367. (Mr. Price.) Is that Mr. Hodges' handwriting ?—Yes, I believe it is.

31,368. Who is Hodges ?—He is a respectable person.

31,369. Is he an influential and active man in your party ?—Yes.

31,370. Is he the Nicholls of your party ?—The Nicholls ?

31,371. Yes. There is always a draper on the one side and on the other ?—No, I do not think he was. He was a very influential man and spoke at all the meetings, in fact spoke himself blind nearly.

31,372. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not put the question to you in the style in which it has been laid before me, but it is fit and due to you that you should have an opportunity of saying in public how you obtained the clerkship to the magistrates?—Well, I will tell you the whole story. Mr. Richard Smith was a Conservative, and held the appointment of clerk to the magistrates. He had been out of health for a very long time, and his duties had been performed by Mr. Barham, as deputy. We felt that there must be an end to his being a deputy, as he had retired from being a member of the firm of Smith and Boyle, and we put a pressure upon him to retire at the time, and we thought there should be a Conservative to succeed him, and he did so; and Mr. Smith from the time that Mr. Padwick came here tried everything he could to prevent my getting it, and to prevent his party giving it to me. I then threatened to move the Bench, that is, that the Mayor should proceed to the appointment of another clerk. We, in the meantime, could not get a batch made, and the question was whether we should get a batch made for the present election. Mr. Barham and Mr. Reed were running for the appointment at the same time. Mr. Barham threw up Mr. Reed, and took up Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Reed is a very impetuous man. I am not speaking of Mr. Reed's ghost at the "Globe," but I am speaking of Mr. Reed himself. He is a very impetuous man, and very excitable; and I believe that he was the cause of the great split amongst the lawyers.

31,373. (Mr. Coleridge.) You came in amongst the dissentients?—I ran in between the two.

31,374. (Mr. Anstey.) I will put it in this way. I shall not gratify the writer of the letter by putting it in his own words, but it is due to you that I should ask you the question, it is only fair to you, did you use any private or indirect method in order to procure any vote in your favour?—Well, of course I know what you allude to. I have never given Mr. Reed the least benefit out of it. I have never given him one farthing arising from the office.

31,375. Did you never give anything?—Not a halfpenny.

31,376. Did you use any private or undue influence?—You mean in the way of bribing anybody?

31,377. Yes.—Certainly not, not a penny; I had not the slighest idea of doing any such thing.

(Mr. Price.) These things are sent to us, and I say these things which are sent to us on the one side, and on the other, I think do very little justice to our opinions or our mode of conducting the inquiry here, when the parties who send them withhold their names from us. Why do not they come forward like men, and state the things they mean to state, and let it be thoroughly inquired into?

(The Witness.) I never gave a penny, nor offered a penny to anyone.

(Mr. Price.) It is very disagreeable for persons to take the opportunity of an inquiry of this kind (when, no doubt, a great deal of unpleasant matter is brought out) for the purpose of anonymously maligning individuals.

(The Witness.) I never, either directly or indirectly, paid a voter.

(Mr. Anstey.) And when these things are so improbable on the face of them, as to be utterly incredible, and they are inquired into, then the writers threaten that they will immediately bring the Commissioner's conduct before the public, when these things tend to nothing but confusion and contention.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

Mr. J. Cook.

31,378. (Mr. Price.) There was a question I put to your partner the other day, with regard to a man, I forgot his name, who was supposed to be under a pressure for rent,—probably you have heard the question, and who stated that he gave the 10*l.* to you, that was the impression on our minds, which he had received from the Tory party, in consequence of a pressure which was put upon him?—The man's name was James Roberts. I saw the statement which he made to the Commissioners, and I have referred to my books, and I find that in the month of April 1866 we adjudicated him a bankrupt in the County Court of Bridgwater, for which he was to pay us a sum of 12*l.* On the 8th of May 1866 he paid us 6*l.* on account, and on the 16th July he paid us a balance of 6*l.* to make up the costs; and that is how the amount is made up. We were acting for him, to adjudicate him as a bankrupt. We were acting as his solicitors at the time.

31,379. He was not a very creditable witness at the time?—No. I have observed his observations, made at the time as to pressure; it is absurd.

31,380. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember the proof of Mr. Kinglake coming over, as we have it from Mr. Lovibond's to your office?—I did not see Mr. Lovibond personally about it, but I understood from my partner that he had arranged with him to exchange proofs, that we should give him a copy of Mr. Vanderbyl's, and he should supply us with a copy of Mr. Kinglake's.

31,381. Did you ask Mr. Kinglake whether he was going to swear to what was put down here?—No, not a word.

31,382. Who did?—I do not know.

31,383. Has Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Lovibond has supplied us with the proof, who did so I cannot tell; we never had any conversation with Mr. Kinglake on the subject of his proof.

31,384. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you read these proofs lately?—I do not think so.

31,385. Can you tell us anybody, who has discussed any of these statements with Mr. Lovibond, the statements there mentioned?—I certainly can say myself, I never discussed them with Mr. Lovibond nor has my partner.

Mr. William Brice recalled.

Mr. W. Brice.

(The Witness.) There is an important statement I omitted by accident. I had an interview with Sir William Drake.

31,386. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes, you said you were going to mention something about Sir William Drake?—Yes, I omitted it. I did not do so purposely.

31,387. (Mr. Price.) Where did you meet him?—In London. It is true we had a meeting the same day after we had seen Mr. Kingslake, and we had a private discussion in every shape about the petition. It was said by some one afterwards, I cannot remember by whom, I think it was Mr. Henry Lovibond, "Go and see the gentleman who called upon you and "make an appointment to see Mr. Drake." I was left behind to go down by the late train. I rather demurred to that, I did not quite see it; however, I consented, as being the youngest man perhaps, and in the afternoon I went to Sir William Drake's, and found he was not at home, and had to go again. I was rather indignant, because it involved travelling all night. I went into his house, and saw hampers directed to him, and saw that they were directed to his country seat, which was very near a friend of mine, and I got acquainted with him before going to business by mentioning our mutual friend. I said I had come to him with reference to the election petition, and should be very glad to hear what he had to say. He said "I shall be very glad to hear what "you have said." I said "Oh no, I have not come "to propose anything, but I have come to hear your "suggestions, and to see if they are in the least degree "practicable to carry out." He said there was no suggestion that he had to make. He said the only thing he could do was that whatever Mr. Kinglake would do he would undertake to carry out, in other words that he would be answerable for any course consented to by Mr Kinglake. We sent for the last Act of Parliament, and I pointed out the clause with respect to the making of affidavits and so on, and there were various other things. I said "There is "another thing, I smell a conspiracy, we are getting "pretty nearly to a conspiracy; I do not like the matter, "and the sooner we are out of it the better."

31,388. (Mr. Price.) What did he say to that?—He was smoking a cigar; he proposed nothing and I proposed nothing, and it was ended in smoke.

31,389. (Mr. Anstey.) That objection that there was a conspiracy came from you and not from him?—It certainly had been pointed out to me before, and I discussed it before with Mr. Collins, our counsel.

31,390. But I say the objection came from you and not from him?—Oh, clearly, because I had discussed it before with counsel.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10 o'clock.

THIRTIETH DAY.

Tuesday, 28th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

THIRTIETH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

28 Sept. 1869.

MR. EUSTACE BARHAM recalled.

31,391. (Mr. Price.) You have an explanation which you wish to make?—Yes. Mr. Brice yesterday in giving his evidence stated that I had run wide with Mr. Reed about some arrangement with reference to the magistrates' clerkship. That is precisely what Mr. Reed did say at the time, and the first intimation I received of his saying so was in a letter from his brother, which I have here, and will hand in. I immediately after the election called on Mr. Reed, either for an explanation or a retractation of it. The matter was referred to Mr. Joseph Ruscombe Poole, and he heard Mr. Reed's statement and mine, and the evidence on both sides, and gave his decision, which I hold in my hand, and which I will put in if you will allow me, by which he entirely acquitted me of anything of the kind. Mr. Reed in consequence very honorably retracted the accusation which had been made, and we shook hands. I wish to make that explanation, because, as I stated, it was as if I really had run wide in the matter, and that Mr. Reed was quite satisfied of it.

31,392. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was this signed by?—Mr. Joseph Ruscombe Poole.

(Mr. Anstey.) It came out inadvertently.

(Mr. Price.) And was not part of our examination at all.

(Mr. Anstey.) It was in answer to a question which I put not relating to that, but which was misapprehended by Mr. Brice, and then I put the question to him again, and he gave me the answer I wanted.

(The Witness.) It is quite irrelevant to your inquiry, but as it affects me I felt sure you would give me an opportunity of clearing up. I do not wish to impute anything to Mr. Brice. I believe he had forgotten it, but it had the effect that I have mentioned.

(Mr. Brice.) I think it right to state that I had good ground for saying so. I had it from Mr. Reed's own lips.

(Mr. Price.) It seemed under the circumstances that your statement was warranted; however, it is all retracted now.

I have had what I suppose I may treat as an official communication from the returning officer for Wednesbury, the borough of which Mr. Brogden is now the representative. He stated in his evidence before us that he paid the returning officer 500*l.* for election expenses, and the returning officer and the professional gentlemen have written to me to say that Mr. Brogden has made a mistake; that two of the candidates deposited 500*l.* with the returning officer as security for the expenses. The amount ultimately charged was 271*l.* It is due also to Mr. Brogden to say that he wrote a letter to me to explain the matter in that way. No doubt it was a mistake made by Mr. Brogden of an immaterial kind, because it struck all of us that 500*l.* was an enormous sum to pay for legitimate election expenses.

W. Parminter.

WILLIAM PARMINTER sworn.

31,393. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I do not follow any business.

31,394. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am a voter for the borough.

31,395. Did you vote at the election of 1866, Patton's?—I never voted before the last election.

31,396. Then you did not vote, I suppose, at the election of 1866?—I did not.

31,397. You did not get 10*l.* from Truman?—No.

31,398. For your vote?—No; my name is William Parminter.

31,399. What others are there?—Thomas Parminter, a nephew of mine.

31,400. Had he a vote in 1866?—He has a vote in this borough.

31,401. Had he in 1866?—I cannot say that.

J. Truman.

JOHN TRUMAN recalled.

31,402. (Mr. Price.) Is this the man you say you paid?—No, a young man.

WILLIAM PARMINTER recalled.

31,403. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for your vote at the last election?—Nothing at all.

31,404. Were you offered anything?—Nothing at all.

31,405. Were you promised anything?—No.

31,406. You got nothing after the election?—Nothing at all.

31,407. Who did you vote for?—Westropp and Gray.

LAWRENCE DARE sworn. L. Dare.

31,408. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A stonemason.

31,409. Is it true, or not, that you got 10*l.* from Truman to vote at the election of Patton in 1866?—10*l.*, yes.

31,410. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid you?—Well, I cannot be certain about it, whether Mr. Truman put the money on the table or Frederick Harden. It was one of them, they were both present.

31,411. Are you quite sure that they did not both pay you?—Yes.

31,412. When did you first vote?—At Follett's election in 1857.

31,413. Which way did you vote?—For Follett, a plumper.

31,414. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

31,415. Nothing after the election?—No.

31,416. Nothing for expenses?—No.

31,417. When did you next vote after that?—1859.

31,418. Whom did you vote for?—Westropp.

31,419. What did you get that time?—10*l.*

31,420. From whom?—I received it from John Murlis in the front room.

31,421. Is that all you got?—That is all I got.

31,422. Did you not get a second 10*l.* from the other side?—No.

31,423. At the next election of 1865 how did you vote?—For Westropp, I believe.

31,424. Did you plump for him?—Yes.

31,425. What did you get that time?—10*l.*

31,426. From whom?—That is 10*l.* I got from Truman and Harden.

31,427. No; the 10*l.* you got from Harden you got in 1866 at Patton's first election—Bagehot and Patton?—Yes.

31,428. And another 10*l.* then?—Yes.

31,429. At Vanderbyl and Patton's, what then?—10*l.*

31,430. Who from?—I received that at the "Bull and Butcher."

31,431. From whom?—It was a hand; presented behind a door.

31,432. Is that all you received?—Yes.

31,433. Did you receive nothing at the last election?—No.

31,434. How many tens altogether?—Four tens and a five.

31,435. You have not told us about the 5*l.*, when was the 5*l.*?—The 5*l.*, I believe, was at Patton's last election.

31,436. After Patton's last election, or at the time?—Well, the election, the polling day.

31,437. Did you get anything after?—No.

31,438. If I understand, you got in 1859 10*l.*, and in 1865 10*l.*?—Yes.

31,439. And in 1866, Patton's first election, 10*l.*?—Yes.

31,440. The second election, 5*l.*?—15*l.* together.

31,441. Who gave you that?—I received 10*l.* at the "Bull and Butcher" from a hand. I did not see the person.

31,442. What time in the day?—Somewhere about 1 o'clock.

31,443. What time did you vote?—About the same time.

31,444. Then you got 45*l.* in all?—I got 45*l.* in all.

31,445. (Mr. Price.) You cannot say whether it was Truman or Harden paid you this last 10*l.*?—The money was put on the table either by Harden or Truman, it was one of them.

31,446. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were they both present?—They were.

ABRAHAM FROST sworn. A. Frost.

31,447. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I have been a builder. I am doing nothing lately. I kept a public house.

31,448. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

31,449. Did you get 10*l.* from Truman at the last election of 1866?—No, nothing.

31,450. Whom did you get it from?—I never had anything from Truman all my life.

31,451. Did you get anything for your vote then?—Yes, from a man of the name of Harden in 1865, I think.

31,452. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first vote at all?—About 40 years ago, I think.

31,453. Tell us as much as you can. When were you first paid for your vote?—I voted, I should think, 14 or 15 years without anything at all for old Colonel Tynte at the time I was in Mr. Axford's employ. I think just after that Mr. Frederick Axford asked me to vote for Mr. Astell. I said no, and I did not change. I voted from that time up as far as Mr. Tayleur's election before I knew about any money.

31,454. Whom did you vote for at the first election at which you had money?—It think it was Leader.

31,455. Leader?—I was telling you about Tayleur's; I was offered by Mr. Robert Bate 20*l.* a day or two before the election. I said, "No sir, I do not want "20*l.* at present."

31,456. Tell us what did you get at Leader's election?—30*l.*

31,457. And the next election after that, whom did you vote for?—Really I can hardly tell.

31,458. (Mr. Anstey.) The next election was Sheridan and Broadwood—Lethbridge and Broadwood.—I received nothing to the best of my knowledge, but my memory is not very good.

31,459. Leader's election was in 1835, and you received 30*l.*?—Yes.

31,460. Have you received money at every election since?—No.

31,461. How many have you received it for?—I do not know, five or six I suppose.

31,462. What was the next you received?—I voted for Kinglake three times, and never had a penny from him, and never asked him.

31,463. Who gave you this 30*l.* at Leader's election?—Mr. Thomas Ford.

31,464. Did he give you 30*l.* at the next election?—Not as I am aware of. No, I cannot mind many of them.

31,465. How much have you had lately for voting?—Really I cannot tell. I made no momorandum.

31,466. Have you had 100*l.* altogether?—I daresay, very nearly. I should say so.

31,467. What did you get at the last election of all, 1868?—Not a penny.

31,468. Whom did you vote for?—Westropp and Gray.

31,469. Were you promised anything?—No, not a farthing. I went at 9 in the morning.

31,470. The next before that, Vanderbyl's election, what did you get?—10*l.*

THIRTIETH DAY.

A. Frost.

28 Sept. 1869.

31,471. Who gave it to you?—I believe it was William Heal, that honourable man.

31,472. At Patton and Bagehot's election, before that, you say you had 10*l.*, from whom—not from Truman?—No, I never had any in my life.

31,473. Who from? who gave it to you at Patton and Bagehot's, when you voted for Patton; Truman has sworn that he gave it you, and you swear he did not. You must tell us who paid it to you. Was it Harden?—I think not. I do not think I ever had but two 5*l.* from Harden in my life.

31,474. When was that?—In 1865.

31,475. In 1865 you had two 5*l.* from Harden?—Yes.

31,476. Never from Truman?—Never in my life.

31,477. Did you ever at any election?—I never had a penny from the man on any business whatever.

31,478–9. What did you get in 1859 at Kinglake, Tynte, and Padwick's election? Nothing from Mr. Padwick?—I got 10*l.*

31,480. Who from?—I think it was Edward Denner the elder.

31,481. Is he alive?—I believe so.

31,482. In 1857 what did you get?—I do not know anything.

31,483. The first time that Kinglake came?—I was of the 100 plumpers.

31,484. What did you get for it?—Not a farthing, nor yet a second time.

31,485. How came you to vote for Kinglake if you were Conservative?—I was on the Liberal side for 35 or 36 years.

31,486. When did you first change, at Mr. Padwick's election?—When Mr. Bate owed me 600*l.*

31,487. Was it at Mr. Padwick's election you changed and got 10*l.* from Denner?—I think it was.

31,488. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you say about Mr. Bate?—Mr. Bate sold some property for me in the Taunton Road for 930*l.*, and he brought me 30*l.* and stuck to 600*l.* of my money the first starting.

31,489. He did not give you the money?—Never a farthing, he put it out at interest.

31,490. I suppose he had some charge against you?—Yes, he had 300*l.* on all the property, and stuck to it all.

31,491. He had some charge against you?—No, no interest.

31,492. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you say the whole of the property sold for?—I believe it sold for 900*l.*

31,493. And there was a mortgage of 300*l.* upon it?—Yes.

31,494. Which he deducted, and you ought to have had 600*l.* minus his costs?—Decidedly.

31,495. Did you ever sue him?—I asked about it over and over again, and I thought as an honourable man he would put it out at interest, and I did not vote with that party any more.

31,496. Used he to pay you interest?—He never paid me nothing.

31,497. Did you ever sue him for it?—No, I asked Mr. Paul Reed about it, and he said that was eat all up. They sells the property to Brown and Co. unknown to me. They had an auctioneer into the borough to knock it down for anybody's money.

31,498. Do you mean you went to Mr. Paul Reed, and he told you that the whole 600*l.* was eaten up?

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

MR. P. O. H. REED recalled.

(The Witness.) I recollect seeing Mr. Bate on the business, and was perfectly satisfied at the time that not a shilling was coming to the man, and so I informed him.

31,499. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was mortgaged to its full value?—Yes.

A. Frost.

ABRAHAM FROST recalled.

(The Witness.) I can swear with a clear conscience that I did not owe the man any money.

(Mr. Price.) It is one of those cases where people get confused in their affairs and find their property turns out to be worth much less than they expected.

31,500. (Mr. Coleridge.) It seems from all you have told us you have been pretty consistently paid; during the last 30 years you have got 100*l.* for your vote and never anything from Truman?—Never in my life.

31,501. Were you paid by anybody for your vote when Truman was present?—Yes.

31,502. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure about Vanderbyl's election that it was William Heal paid you?—Yes, because he sent for me by my daughter up to my house after me.

31,503. Who did you vote for at that election when Mr. Vanderbyl was elected first?—Vanderbyl.

31,504. You did vote for Vanderbyl?—Yes.

31,505. I thought you said you turned Conservative in consequence of Mr. Bate's conduct and remained so?—Yes, I was forced to, because owing the other parties some money for interest they would turn on me directly.

31,506. And you turned Liberal?—I was forced to, because I had the property in their hands. I have always voted for Mr. Westropp every time he has been here.

31,507. (Mr. Coleridge.) And he has always paid you?—No, not always, because I never had a penny of the money, and never thought about it.

T. Mogridge.

THOMAS MOGRIDGE sworn.

31,508. (Mr. Price.) You are the son of Charles Mogridge?—The brother of Charles.

31,509. The son of John?—Yes.

31,510. John is deceased?—Yes.

31,511. And your brother is in London?—Yes.

31,512. Are you a voter?—Yes.

31,513. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

31,514. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

31,515. Did you get anything for it?—No.

31,516. Nothing at all?—No.

31,517. Did you vote in 1866 for Vanderbyl?—Yes.

31,518. Did you get anything then?—10*l.*

31,519. Who from?—Mr. Bulpin; he has given an account of it.

31,520. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything from Truman?—No.

31,521. (Mr. Price.) In 1866, at the first election, did you get anything?—Yes, that was Patton's; 10*l.* from Bulpin.

31,522. Who did you vote for?—Bagehot.

31,523. In 1865 who did you vote for?—I did not vote then; I had a vote but would not use it.

31,524. Had your father a vote?—Yes.

31,525. How did he vote?—For the Tories.

31,526. For Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

31,527. Did he get anything for it?—Yes, I believe he had 10*l.*

31,528. Who did he get it from?—He had 6*l.* 10*s.* I think it was Patton and Westropp's he voted for the first, and John Murlis gave him 6*l.* 10*s.* at the "Albion."

31,529. I will draw your attention to the election of 1865. Your father's name has been given in by Truman as a person to whom he paid 10*l.* in 1865?—

My father never had any money from Truman at all on any occasion.

31,530. How do you know that?—I am quite certain of it.

31,531. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is your father alive?—No, my mother is.

31,532. And she would know?—Yes, and so would I, because he never had any money excepting I knew it or mother.

31,533. (Mr. Price.) You say that your father and brother Charles got each 10*l.*?—I am not quite so sure about Charles, but they had it from Harden.

31,534. What makes you say so?—I have every reason, because father used to tell me everything in connexion with his affairs.

31,535. Did he tell you Harden?—He mentioned Harden's name; my impression of it was he had it at the "Three Crowns," where he went to breakfast. Dare, the painter, in St. Mary's Street, went with him; they went there to breakfast on that occasion, and our impression was that he had it at the "Three Crowns," but I since believe he had it from Harden, but not from Truman for certain.

31,536. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why had you no vote in 1865?—Because I had so many customers on each side, and to keep friends with all I would not vote.

31,537. What did you get for not voting? I got nothing, but for voting I lost most of my Tory customers.

31,538. You say your father went to breakfast at the "Three Crowns" with this man Dare, and he can tell what took place?—Yes, I think so; I have never had any communication with him.

WALTER JARMAN sworn. W. Jarman.

31,539. (Mr. Price.) You are a voter of this borough?—I am.

31,540. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

31,541. Who for?—Westropp and Gray.

31,542. Did you get anything for it?—No.

31,543. Did you get any promise?—No.

31,544. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or any expenses?—No.

31,545. Neither before or after?—No.

31,546. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866 at Vanderbyl's?—No, I had no vote at that time.

31,547. Did you vote at Patton's in 1866?—I am only a new voter at the last election.

31,548. Are you the only Walter Jarman in the town?—I am.

31,549. Is it true or not that you got 10*l.* from Truman in 1865?—No, I think it is rather a mistake in the name; it must be Charles Jarman.

31,550. Is he alive?—Yes.

31,551. Where does he live?—Fryern Street.

GEORGE SELLICK sworn. G. Sellick.

31,552. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

31,553. What are you?—A currier.

31,554. How did you vote at the last election?—Westropp and Gray.

31,555. Did you get anything for it?—Not a farthing.

31,556. Did you get any promise or any expenses? No.

31,557. Or anything of that kind?—No.

31,558. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or afterwards?—Nothing.

31,559. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1866?—Yes.

31,560. At the second election how did you vote?—For Patton.

31,561. Mr. Vanderbyl stood?—Yes.

31,562. Did you get anything then?—I did.

31,563. How much?—10*l.*

31,564. Who from?—From behind the door at the "Bull and Butcher."

31,565. Did you get anything at the first election of Patton?—I did.

31,566. How much?—5*l.* at the poll day, and 5*l.* previous to his coming on the second election.

31,567. Who gave you those two 5*l.*?—Temblett.

31,568. (Mr. Coleridge.) Both of them?—Both of them.

31,569. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865, when Mr. Westropp first came forward?—I did.

31,570. Who for?—Westropp.

31,571. Did you get anything then?—Yes, 10*l.*

31,572. Who from?—Truman.

31,573. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the election in 1859?—No, I voted the one previous to that, Follett's.

31,574. Who for?—Tynte and Follett.

31,575. What did you get?—Nothing.

31,576. How came you not to vote in 1859?—I had no vote, I was not in a rateable house.

WILLIAM STONE sworn. W. Stone.

31,577. What are you?—A beerhouse keeper.

31,578. Do you live in Back Street?—Yes.

31,579. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

31,580. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

31,581. Who for?—Westropp.

31,582. Did you get anything for it?—No.

31,583. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you plump for Westropp?—Yes.

31,584. (Mr. Price.) Did you get any promise, or anything of that kind?—No.

31,585. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any treating bill at your house?—No.

31,586. (Mr. Price.) In 1866, Vanderbyl and Patton, how did you vote?—For Patton.

31,587. Did you yet anything then?—Yes.

31,588. How much?—10*l.*

31,589. Who from?—I cannot say whether from Newton or one of the committee at the "Three Crowns."

31,590. Was it from Truman?—No.

31,591. You swear that?—No, it was not.

31,592. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the first election in 1866, when Patton first came—Bagehot and Patton?—Yes I think I did.

31,593. How did you vote then, did you vote at both elections?—Yes.

31,594. The first of the two, how did you vote then?—Mr. Patton.

31,595. What did you get then?—Nothing.

31,596. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get nothing after?—No.

31,597. Not between the two elections?—No.

31,598. Not a 5*l.* note?—No.

31,599. Are you sure?—Yes.

31,600. (Mr. Price.) In 1865, how did you vote?—I voted for Westropp.

31,601. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

31,603. Who from?—Newton.

That is what Truman says; he gave 40*l.* to Newton to pay away.

31,604. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the election before 1859, when Padwick came?—Yes.

31,605. What did you get then?—Nothing.

31,606. How was that, the streets were flooded with money we are told?—I voted for Mr. Tynte.

THIRTIETH DAY.

W. Stone.

28 Sept. 1869.

31,607. And was not his the winning side?—I voted at two elections for Mr. Tynte.

31,608. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the money you got in 1866 at Patton's unsuccessful contest in 1866 given to you to vote then, or for both your votes?—For my vote.

31,609. A vote at that election, and the election before?—Not as I understood.

31,610. Only that one?—Only that one.

31,611. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1859 what did you get for your vote?—Nothing.

31,612. How often have you been paid altogether?—Three times.

31,613. You have told us of two?—I had three 10*l.*

31,614. When was the other?—I had 10*l.* in 1866 of William Heal.

31,615. What was that for?—Well, I went up and asked if him whether there was not something going on, and he said yes.

31,616. At which election?—1866.

31,617. Did you vote for Patton or Vanderbyl?—Vanderbyl.

31,618. You told me you got 10*l.* from Newton then?—No, 10*l.* from one of the committee.

31,619. No, from Newton or one of the committee?—In 1865 I had it from Newton himself.

31,620. Your first answer was "In 1866 I had 10*l.* "from Newton or one of the committee"?—Yes.

31,621. When did you get this other 10*l.*?—The same day from William Heal.

31,622. Then you got paid twice over?—Yes.

31,623. Then was not the 10*l.* from Newton or one of the committee intended for your former vote at the previous election?—Not as I understood.

31,624. Was not what you got from William Heal intended for it?—No.

31,625. Do you suppose that you got two 10*l.* for that one election. Do you suppose you were paid for one vote, and not for two?—I am sure I do not know.

J. Stacey.

JOHN STACEY sworn.

31,626. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A mariner I was, when able to work.

31,627. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

31,628. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

31,629. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

31,630. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

31,631. Any promise?—No.

31,632. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing for expenses?—Nothing at all.

31,633. (Mr. Price.) Now pay attention and do not give us trouble about it. Did you vote at the election when Vanderbyl stood first in 1866?—I did.

31,634. Who for?—Patton.

31,635. What did you get?—10*l.*

31,636. Who from?—Mr. Temblett and Mr. Harden was present.

31,637. Is that all you got at that election?—It was.

31,638. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything from the other side?—No, I did not look for it.

31,639. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at the first election in 1666?—I did.

31,640. Who for?—Mr. Patton.

31,641. Did you get anything then?—I did.

31,642. How much?—10*l.*

31,643. Where from?—Newton, at the "Three Crowns."

31,644. Did you get anything more at that election?—I did not.

31,645. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

31,646. Who for?—Westropp.

31,647. Did you get anything then?—I did not.

31,648. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get anything afterwards?—After or before?

31,649. (Mr Price.) Neither after nor before:—Neither after nor before, nor yet promised.

31,650. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get any expenses for coming home?—Nothing. I was home, worse luck, for I was an invalid.

31,651. In 1859?—I had no note.

31,652. Was your first vote 1865?—Yes.

31,653. You had no vote at any earlier election?—No.

31,654. What do you make out you had altogether?—20*l.*

31,655–6. You are quite sure it is not 30*l.*, that you did not get 10*l.* in 1865?—I am quite certain, neither a promise.

Capt. G. Brooks.

CAPTAIN GEORGE BROOKS sworn.

31,657. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter?—Yes.

31,658. How did you vote at the last election?—For Westropp and Gray.

31,659. Did you get anything for it?—No.

31,660. Anything for expenses?—No.

31,661. Did you vote at the election of 1866 Vanderbyl's election?—No.

31,662. Not at all?—No.

31,663. Had you a vote then?—No.

31,664. Had you no vote in 1866?—No.

31,665. Had you no vote in 1865?—Yes.

31,666. How did you vote in 1865?—Westropp.

31,667. What did you get for it?—10*l.*

31,668. Who from?—I do not know.

31,669. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you mean?—I do not know who gave it to me.

31,670. (Mr. Price.) Where did you get it?—I cannot say; in some dark place, somewhere in a house.

31,671. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you so drunk that you cannot recollect?—No, I was sober.

31,672. Why cannot you tell us?—Because I went to the door and it was open.

31,673. Who sent you to the door?—Truman.

31,674. Truman sent you to the dark place, and you got 10*l.*?—Yes.

31,675. How was it he did not send you to a dark place in 1866, had you no vote?—I had no vote.

31,676. In 1859, before that?—I voted for Padwick and Westropp.

31,677. What did you get then?—10*l.*

31,678. Who from?—Murlis; and 2*l.* I had for the detention of the vessel.

31,679. Who from?—Murlis.

31,680. Had you anything for the detention of the vessel in 1865?—Nothing.

31,681. In 1857 had you a vote the first time Mr. Kinglake came?—Yes.

31,682. Who did you vote for?—The Conservatives then.

31,683. What did you get?—Nothing.

31,684. How much have you got altogether?—Only 20*l.*

31,685. 20*l.* in two tens?—20*l.* in two tens.

31,686. That is all?—That is all.

31,687. (Mr. Price.) You never got anything from Truman. He put you down as one of the men to whom he paid 10*l.*; that is not so?—Not so. I received nothing from him.

FREDERICK HARDEN recalled.

31,688. (Mr. Price.) You have been sworn in this inquiry?—Yes.

31,689. You are on your oath now; what have you to say about Mr. Truman?—I mean to say that I was very much surprised at hearing that he had 200*l.* to pay voters with. He was working with me, and the most I can tell is 30*l.* or 40*l.* he must have paid away. He said, either the night the stranger gave it or the morning, "I propose that we pay ourselves handsomely "first before paying away any money." I did not like to tell you that the other day, because we had a lawsuit, and I did not want to say anything against him, because I thought it would look malicious, but he proposed that we should pay ourselves handsomely first, before we began to pay voters. I said "I will "have nothing to do with that." I was very much alarmed about it, and I went and told Temblett about it, and asked him his advice. I was very much alarmed at his proposal of sticking to the money, because I thought we should have a tight contest, and every shilling would be wanted.

31,690. This was in 1865?—This was in 1865, the only time he had the handling of any money to my knowledge. The stranger told me he was not to be trusted again. In the morning he paid, I should think, three or four voters. I was not aware that he had so much. I thought probably he might have had 50*l.*, and he said very early, "My money is done, I "have nothing more." And now I find that he has broken into my list to make up his 200*l.*, and I believe nearly every man whose name is down to-day will deny having money from him.

31,191. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who are they?—William Harwood; I gave him early in the morning. William Jarman never had a shilling at that election, either for himself or anybody else.

31,692. He never had?—He never had.

31,693. We must have him here?—He is dead; his name is returned for 50*l.*

31,694. William Jarman is not returned for 50*l.* by Truman?—No, I mentioned his name; the next is William Jarman.

31,695. He is not returned for 50*l.*; he is returned for 10*l.* The man who had the 50*l.* is Robert Newton, now in America.—If you read on you will find that Jarman's is 40*l.* for four voters, and I do not believe either of those men had a shilling.

31,696. We cannot take it from you without it is your own knowledge?—The men are subpœned. Stacey, who has been called, is one of the four.

(Mr. Anstey.) If they do not choose to come we have only one course to take, and that is to believe the statement and schedule them as bribed. That we shall do in every case if they do not choose to attend.

(The Witness.) Has Parminter been called?

(Mr. Price.) One has, but it appears the wrong one. If you will take the trouble to give us the names in we will send for them.

31,697. (Mr. Coleridge.) When Truman said this to you about paying yourself well first, what did you say?—I said I would have nothing to do with it.

31,698. Did you pay yourself?—No, I had not a pound.

31,699. How much were you paid altogether?—20*l.*, a day or two before Mr. Patton's election.

31,700. Do you mean to say you paid away all the money you had?—I did.

31,701. And to make out his list Truman has broken into yours?—He has, because he worked with me, and kept my book.

31,702. You do not know that those men were paid twice over, once by him and once by you?—Certainly not. Charles Hayward is another you have not called. Newton is put down for 50*l.* I consider that I let Newton have the money to pay those men myself.

31,703. How do you mean you consider, did you or not?—I would not swear, but I believe I did. I should like to have the man's word before being certain of it. The two Pooles you have not called; they are in Court.

31,704. (Mr. Price.) But the two Pooles are not returned by Truman as men paid?—I think so, if you will read on.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then let William Poole come up at once.

31,705. (Mr. Anstey.) You have said that when you were last examined you concealed these facts because you did not like to tell us. Did you reflect upon the passage in your oath which obliges you to tell us the whole truth?—The whole truth touching the matter in question, I suppose, but I considered it was not necessary to go into that which was not done.

31,706. Then I beg to tell you, and all persons, that it is necessary to tell the truth, according to the tenor of your oath, everything relating to matters which are inquired about. This was one, namely, "Can you tell us anything with regard to any past "election?" And you concealed this for a reason you had; is there anything else you have concealed?—Not that I remember.

31,707. It is a very serious thing.—It was merely a conversation between us.

31,708. (Mr. Price.) What is this lawsuit about?—We have no lawsuit now.

31,709. Is there bad blood between you?—No, not at all.

31,710. What do you mean by saying you did not want to say it?—I thought perhaps it would look as if it were malicious to bring out these conversations between ourselves.

31,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not your reason that people were saying that either you or he had stuck to the money, and you wanted to clear yourself at his expense?—I wanted to clear myself entirely, but not at his expense.

31,712. But you must clear yourself at his expense?—I want to do so by having all the voters called.

JOHN TRUMAN recalled.

J. Truman.

31,713. (Mr. Price.) Was Poole one of the names you mentioned?—One of the men after I had expended the first 200*l.* not in the list. I should like Harden to produce my book. He had it.

WILLIAM POOLE, junior, sworn.

W. Poole, jun.

31,714. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

31,715. Are you a voter?—Yes.

31,716. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

31,717. How did you vote?—For Westropp and Gray.

31,718. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

31,719. Neither before nor after?—No.

31,720. No promise?—No.

31,721. Did you vote at the election of 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl first came forward?—Yes.

31,722. How did you vote then?—For Patton.

31,723. Did you get anything then?—Yes.

31,724. How much?—That is after the election; 20*l.*

31,725. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who from?—Jarman.

31,726. (Mr. Price.) Was that in respect of your vote at that one election?—That was for myself, and I drew the money for my father's vote.

31,727. Did you vote at the first election in 1866?—Patton's.

THIRTIETH DAY.

W. Poole, jun.

28 Sept. 1869.

31,728. Did you get anything then?—The same afterwards.

31,729. 10*l.* for yourself and 10*l.* for your father?—Yes.

31,730. (Mr. Coleridge.) From Jarman?—Both from Jarman.

31,731. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote in 1865?—When Mr. Westropp was returned?

31,732. Yes, did you vote then?—Yes.

31,733. For Westropp?—Yes.

31,734. What did you get then?—I had 20*l.* from Harden.

31,735. Had you any money from Truman?—No.

31,736. Never?—No.

31,737. Did you ever see Jarman about it at all?—No, I never saw Harden about it till I had the money.

31,738. Was that 10*l.* for yourself and 10*l.* for your father?—Yes.

31,739. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is your father here to-day?—Yes.

31,740. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote at any other election besides that?—No.

31,741. Did your father vote at any other?—I do not know.

31,742. You are quite sure you did not see Truman about this election in 1865, and got the money from Harden?—No, I never saw him at all about it.

31,743. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that the first election you voted at?—Westropp's.

31,744. Was that the first at which you ever voted?—Yes.

31,745. Did you get the money for your father before you had a vote yourself?—No.

31,746. Not in 1859 or any time?—No.

W. Poole, sen.

WILLIAM POOLE, senior, sworn.

31,747. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you the father of the last witness?—Yes.

31,748. What did you get for voting at Vanderbyl's election in 1866?—Whatever I got he got it for me, because I never once did.

31,749. Did he get you 10*l.* for voting?—I believe so.

31,750. Did anybody give you anything else at that election?—I believe not.

31,751. And the election before that?—No.

31,752. Patton and Bagehot's election?—No.

31,753. Did you get 10*l.* from your son then for voting?—Well, I daresay I did.

31,754. Did you get 10*l.* from anybody but your son?—No.

31,755. In 1865 did you get 10*l.* for voting for Westropp?—Yes.

31,756. Did you get that from your son?—Yes.

31,757. Those are the three times your son paid you?—Yes.

31,758. Did anybody else pay you besides your son?—No.

31,759. Did Truman ever pay you?—Never a farthing. I never spoke to him.

31,760. Did Harden pay you?—I never spoke to the man in my life.

31,761. In 1859 had you a vote, when your son had not, in Padwick's time?—I think I had. I am not positive.

31,762. How much did you get?—If I got anything it would be 10*l.*

31,763. From whom?—I cannot tell.

31,764. You must recollect, that if you got 10*l.*, who gave you the 10*l.* at Padwick's election?—I had 10*l.* once from Hill.

31,765. William Heal?—No, Thomas Hill.

31,766. That was 1859, I suppose?—No, I cannot tell you.

31,767. Before then, in 1857, had you a vote when Kinglake first came?—Then that must have been Hill. I voted then for Kinglake and Tynte, I believe.

31,768. And Hill gave you 10*l.* for it?—Yes.

31,769. That is 1859, I suppose?—Yes.

31,770. When before that?—No, I never had a farthing in my life.

31,771. How much altogether have you had for your vote?—I cannot tell.

31,772. 100*l.*?—No.

31,773. You have told us of 40*l.* Is that all you got?—I do not believe I ever had 40*l.*

31,774. If you had not, your son had for you; you have told us three times?—Whatever he had, he brought it and gave it to his mother. I never saw it, it is all the same thing.

31,775. How often has your wife had money at elections before?—Never in her life.

31,776. Will you swear that?—Yes.

31,777. The first time was when Hill gave it to you in 1859?—Well, we had not a vote previous to that.

31,778. Was 1859 the first time you had a vote?—Yes.

31,779. Then you have received 40*l.* on your own showing.

C. Lear.

CHARLES LEAR sworn.

31,780. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A hairdresser and picture dealer.

31,781. Are you a voter for the borough?—I am.

31,782. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, I did.

31,783. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

31,784. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing at all.

31,785. Did you vote at the election before?—Patton's, no, I did not.

31,786. At Vanderbyl's and Patton's did you vote then?—I did not. I must tell you about a week after Mr. Patton's first election I heard a man of the name of Newton had drawn from the Man in the Moon at his house 10*l.* in my name. After I heard it, which I believed was true, I said "Well, I will never vote "again unless it was a case of necessity to assist the "Conservative party." That is the truth of it.

31,787. Did not he give you the 10*l.*?—No, not he.

31,788. Did you get anything for voting at Patton's election?—Not a halfpenny; not anything at Patton's at all.

31,789. When were you paid in 1865?—I will tell you. In 1865 I voted for Westropp and had 10*l.* from that very man Newton.

31,790. Then you got nothing?—Nothing since Westropp.

31,791. (Mr. Price.) Your name is Charles Lear, hairdresser?—Yes.

31,792. You are returned by Truman?—Yes.

31,793. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he ever pay you anything?—No.

31,794. (Mr. Anstey.) At that election, 1866?—That was Patton's and Vanderbyl's.

31,795. At that election, of 1866, at which Mr. Vanderbyl was returned, it is said that you or your father, or both, were at the "Clarence" hotel amongst a number of other voters shut up in a room?—I beg most distinctly to deny anything of it at all.

31,796. What?—I deny it quite.

31,797. Were you there in charge of any voters?—Yes. I will relate that to you.

31,798. Attend to my question. You were not shut up with other voters; were you there attending to other voters?—Attending to other voters—no, certainly not.

31,799. Were you taking care of voters?—No.

31,800. What were you doing at the "Clarence"?

—I will tell you. I think a man, by the name of Thomas Collett, an innkeeper at East Over, came to me about half-past 3, from that to 4, on the afternoon of Mr. Patton's election, and he said to me, "Will you vote for Mr. Patton? We can get him "in." I said "No, I had made up my mind not to "vote in consequence of Newton." He said, "We "can get in Patton, will you come over to swell the "majority?" I said, "I don't mind it, if you can "get him in; but understand this, if I go to the "'Clarence' and find that Mr. Patton cannot be "returned, I will stick to my promise and not vote." I went to the "Clarence" and moved up and down for 10 minutes, and by accident heard that Mr. Patton could not be returned. I left the "Clarence" and came home again, and was not there more than 10 minutes.

31,801. Did anything take place like what I have described in my first question at the previous election?—Nothing.

31,802. Neither to you nor your father?—No.

31,803. Your father is dead?—Yes.

31,804. You know what is meant by the local phrase, "bottling voters"?—Certainly.

31,805. Have you or your father ever been in such a position as is described by that, "bottled"?—Certainly not.

31,806. Did you or your father ever have anything to do with bottling of other voters?—Certainly not.

31,807. I thought it due to you to put the question?—But I have one thing more to say—I voted for Padwick and Westropp, for which I received 10*l.*

31,808. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave you that?—Murlis.

31,809. (Mr. Price.) Was that the first time you voted?—No, certainly not. I said I had 10*l.* from Murlis, and when he gave me the 10*l.* he had two packages in his hand of 10*l.* each, I consider, which I took to two voters.

31,810. Who were they?—Thomas Herbert and Lane, a pastrycook. I was not employed for it; it was by accident I took the money to these men.

31,811. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1857?—Yes.

31,812. What did you get then?—Nothing; for Follett and Tynte.

31,813. Did you vote the time before?—Yes. Follett and Mansell.

31,814. What did you get then?—Nothing.

31,815. Then you have only got two tens altogether?—I have had 20*l.* in my life, that is all.

31,816. How much has your father had?—I think the same.

31,817. How came you to vote for Tynte?—I was employed in the house for Tynte, and it was a sort of condition, I think, between Tynte and Follett, and I waited on him and his family, and I found out afterwards, when I voted for Westropp, I never went to the house. Mr. Hayward, who is a Liberal, had this work of mine.

31,818. Do you know what your father has had altogether?—The same, I should think, since I have known him. That is the true story. There was a little thing occurred between me and Mr. Kinglake at Westropp and Gray's election. Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake solicited my vote, and I told Mr. Vanderbyl I could not vote for him, I was a strong Conservative, and also Mr. Kinglake. Mr. Vanderbyl left the shop and Mr. Kinglake remained behind, and he said, "Oh, Mr. Lear, if there should be anything "in the way of a coalition, will you think of me in "preference to Mr. Vanderbyl." I said, "Yes, I "will; if anything can be done to return you, I shall "be very happy to vote for you."

Mrs. Jane Mogridge sworn.

Mrs. J. Mogridge.

31,819. (Mr. Price.) You are the widow of the late John Mogridge, are you?—Yes.

31,820. And the mother of Charles, and the mother of the young man who is in London?—Yes.

31,821. How much did your husband get in 1865 for his vote, do you know?—I cannot remember, for I never mind the time at all. I know he had money three times.

31,822. Do you know whom he got it from each time? I know he had it from Murlis. He had 6*l.* 10*s.*; and Mr. Temblett brought it to the house the next election, and gave him 10*l.*; in fact, he gave it to me.

31,823. Did he ever get any money from Truman?—No; he never got a farthing from Truman.

31,824. How do you know that?—Because I am certain of it. He never had it but three times.

31,825. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your son has always sworn that he got it from Truman. Now you say, Temblett brought it to you?—Temblett brought it to my house at one election.

(Thomas Mogridge.) That is quite a mistake. I did not say that I ever received any money for my father.

(Mr. Price.) It was Poole. Are you quite sure your husband never got anything from Truman?

(The Witness.) I am.

William Harwood recalled.

W. Harwood.

31,826. (Mr. Price.) What do say about this 10*l.* in 1865? Did you take 10*l.* from Truman then?—I never took a farthing from him in my life.

31,827. I think you said so before, if I remember right?—I took 10*l.* from Mr. Harden.

31,828. You are quite sure about that?—I am quite sure about that.

Charles Haste sworn

C. Haste

31,829. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—I am a carpenter and joiner.

31,830. You have been examined before?—Yes.

31,831. What have you to say about receiving this money in 1865 from Truman?—I never had a halfpenny of it.

31,832. Do you live in Silver Street?—Yes.

31,833. Are you Charles Haste, of Silver Street?—Yes.

31,834. Whom did you get money from then, from Jarman?—From no one at that time.

31,835. Did you not get 10*l.* from Jarman in 1865?—No.

31,836. Are you quite sure of that?—I am; nor from no one else at that time.

31,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) When?—I never had it but three times in my life.

31,838. Did you ever get any money from Truman at any election?—Never.

31,839. You swear that?—Yes.

31,840. (Mr. Price.) Nor from Jarman?—No.

31,841. You are returned by Jarman as one of the four he bribed?—I do not know how Jarman could have done so. We were always working together.

THIRTIETH DAY.

J. Richards.

28 Sept. 1869.

JOHN RICHARDS recalled.

31,842. (Mr. Price.) Are you the butcher of Back Street?—Yes.

31,843. You have been examined before?—Yes.

31,844. What do you say about this 10*l.* from Truman in 1865?—I omitted to state the other day, that I took 10*l.* from some one in a room, and they handed me the parcel back over the shoulder. (Describing.)

31,845. Where was the room?—At the "Rose and Crown."

31,846. The "Three Crowns," was it not?—Yes.

31,847. Was it Mr. Harden?—I do not know who it was. I never saw their faces.

31,848. It might be Truman?—It might be. There were three writing there, and somebody handed it over their shoulder.

31,849. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever receive money from Truman to your knowledge?—Never.

31,850. (Mr. Price.) The return is, that you were paid by a man of the name of Newton. Are you quite sure it was not Newton?—Yes.

31,851. You are quite sure it was not Newton?—Yes, I am quite sure it was not Newton, because Newton showed me into the room.

J. Irish.

JOHN IRISH sworn.

31,852. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A bargeman.

31,853. Are you a voter?—I am.

31,854. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

31,855. Who for?—Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

31,856. Did you get anything?—Nothing at all, neither a promise.

31,857. Nor expenses?—No expenses. I was busy at work both days, the nomination day and the polling day, until half past 1 o'clock, when I went home, and polled before I went into the house for Westropp and Gray.

31,858. Did you vote at the last election of 1866?—I did.

31,859. For whom?—I voted for Mr. Patton at both elections in 1866.

31,860. Did you get anything for it?—I did.

31,861. How much?—I got 20*l.* at both elections.

31,862. 20*l.* at both?—Yes, 10*l.* each time.

31,863. 20*l.* for the two?—20*l.* for the two.

31,864. Whom did you get that from?—From Mr. Frederick Jarman, St. John Street.

31,865. Did you get anything in 1865?—I did.

31,866. For whom did you vote then?—I voted for Mr. Westropp.

31,867. Did you get anything then?—10*l.*

31,868. From whom?—Mr. Hayward, the hairdresser.

31,869, Mr. Hayward paid you?—Yes.

31,870. Is Hayward here?—Yes, I believe he is.

31,871. Is that all the money you got in 1865?—That was all the money I ever got for electioneering then. I can go as far back as 1841.

31,872. Did you ever get any money then?—No.

31,873. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you never get any money in Mr. Padwick's election?—No, I was off the register. I paid the rates to my landlord.

C. Hayward.

CHARLES HAYWARD sworn.

31,874. (Mr Price.) Are you a voter?—I am.

31,875. Are you a hairdresser here?—I am.

31,876. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

31,877. For whom?—Westropp and Gray.

31,878. Did you get anything for it?—Nothing.

31,879. Did you vote in the election of 1866, Vanderbyl and Patton's election?—Yes.

31,880. For whom?—For Mr. Westropp.

I am asking you about Vanderbyl and Patton's election.

31,881. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1866 Mr. Westropp had been unseated?—Oh, I am mistaking,—Yes, for Mr. Patton.

31,882. What did you get?—5*l.*

31,883. From whom?—From Mr. Harden.

31,884. What was that for, your vote?—Yes.

31,885. Did you give 5*l.* to anybody else?—Not at that election.

31,886. The time before, how did you vote,—at Patton's first election?—I mean Patton's first election.

31,887. (Mr. Price.) No. You are asked about the time that Mr. Vanderbyl first came down. Did you vote then?

31,888. (Mr. Coleridge.) The second election of 1866?—Yes.

31,889. For whom did you vote?—For Patton.

31,890. What did you get?—At Patton's second election?

31,891. Yes.—Nothing.

31,892. Nothing?—No.

31,893. Nothing promised?—Not at the second election.

31,894. Nothing after the election?—No.

38,895. Did you not get some money to give to another man?—Not at the second election.

31,896. At the first election you got 5*l.* for your own vote?—I did.

31,897. And what for another man?—And 5*l.* for two others.

31,898. Who was that for?—Thomas Crocker and Thomas Herbert.

31,899. Did you get a second 5*l.* for each of them afterwards?—No. I received 5*l.* for myself from Mr. Waddon.

31,900. Then in 1865 what did you get for yourself—Westropp's first return,—what did you get at that time?—I had 30*l.*, 10*l.* for myself, 10*l.* I gave to Thomas Crocker, and 10*l.* I gave to John Irish.

31,901. (Mr. Price.) Where did you get that money from?—I went to Mr. Harden's house, and helped myself to it in a dark room.

31,902. (Mr. Anstey.) In whose house?—Mr. Harden's.

31,903. (Mr. Coleridge.) What house is that?—Mr. Harden, the baker.

31,904. (Mr. Anstey.) You were examined before the committee?—I was.

31,905. Tell me, did you ask Mr. Benjamin Lovibond for 50*l.*?—I did not.

31,906. Did you ask him for any sum of money at that election?—He said he would make it worth me 50*l.*, as well as I can remember.

31,907. Answer my question. You can judge from the tenor of my questions that I am fully aware of the disgraceful circumstances under which you gave evidence before that committee. Did you ask him for any money at that election?—I did not ask him.

31,908. Did you give him to understand, by hint or otherwise, that you owed 50*l.*, which you must clear off at that election, and which you intended to clear off at that election, and that you had made up your mind to have it, being oddly circumstanced, and in short gave him to understand that at a time when he came to you about your vote?—I did not.

31,909. You mean to say, to put the question as shortly as possible, that you never gave him a hint to the effect that if he would get you or enable you to get out of your embarrassment you were inclined to vote for the Liberals?—I did not tell him so.

31,910.—You are aware that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond stated that before the Committee of the House of Commons ?—He did ; I am aware of that.

31,911. You are aware, also, that you swore before the Committee of the House of Commons that on one occasion, two days before the election, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, having no occasion to have his hair cut, it having been cut just before, the same day, I believe, came a second time into your shop, asked to have his hair cut, sat down, and then when you were in that relation towards one another he offered you some money. You swore that?—He said he would make it worth me 50*l.*

31,912. That you know you swore?—Yes.

31,913. And you gave evidence further to the effect, that this offer was made to induce you to vote for Sir John Shelley and Mr Kinglake ?—It was.

31,914. And you are aware that the Committee of the House of Commons heard a good deal of evidence on that subject, Mrs. Badger's evidence, I think ?—Yes.

31,915. Young Badger's evidence, who has been examined before us, and I think your daughter or sister?—I had nothing to do with young Badger.

31,916. But your daughter or sister ?—My daughter.

31,917. She was examined and you were examined, and at last Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was examined ; are you aware that the Committee of the House of Commons, after hearing all the evidence on that subject, reported "That Alexander William Kinglake, "Esq., is duly elected a Burgess to serve in this present "Parliament for the borough of Bridgwater." You are aware of that ?—Yes.

31,918. And you are aware that your direct and and positive testimony to those facts, that you have again mentioned to-day, was discredited by the Committee, you are aware of that ?—I do not know that it was discredited by the Committee.

31,919. You told the Committee, as near as possible, what you have told us to-day ?—Yes, as near as possible.

(Mr. Price.) That was quite enough to have unseated any member.

31,920. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you owe 50*l.* for repairs done to your house about the time of the election ?—I did not.

31,921. Were you in want of a sum of money at that time ?—Not particularly.

32,922. Well, generally ?—I was not pressed by anyone for money.

31,923. That is not an answer to my question, and you know it. Were you in want of a sum of money generally ? Were you pressed or not pressed about the time of that election ?—No ; I was not in want of money.

31,924. Generally or particularly ? Please to answer my question. Were you in want of a sum of money about that time ?—I cannot remember being in want of money.

31,925. Had you ceased to be in want of that sum of money after that time ?—I never received any.

31,926. Not from Mr. Westropp, come ?—I helped myself to some at Mr. Harden's house.

31,927. How much ?—To 10*l.*

31,928. Are you quite sure it was not nearer 50*l.* ?—I am sure it was not.

31,929. What did you do with the 10*l.* you helped yourself to ?—I used it in my business.

31,930. Did not you use it towards paying off some money demands that were then owing by you ?—I used it in the business. I cannot say for what purpose.

31,931. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by "the business" ? Was it to pay your debts ?—Yes.

31,932. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore you did owe money at that time, and got money to pay it off. Did you not throw out that suggestion to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, or something like it, which I mentioned before ?—I never did.

31,933. (Mr. Price.) How much did you help yourself to ?—I helped myself to three packets of money.

31,934. Who told you to do so ?—Mr. Harden told me to go into the room.

31,935. And to take as much as you liked ?—Yes ; it was on the table.

31,936. And to take as much as you liked ?—There was only 30*l.* there.

31,937. If there had been more, you would have taken it, I suppose ?—Yes, I should.

31,938. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1859 had you a vote, Mr. Padwick's time ?—Yes.

31,939. What did you get for your vote then ?—Nothing.

31,940. Nothing afterwards ?—No.

31,941. For whom did you vote ?—I voted for Colonel Tynte.

31,942. And you got nothing at all ?—No.

31,943. Did you vote the time before, that in 1857 ?—Yes.

31,944. For whom did you vote ?—I voted for Mr. Kinglake.

31,945. What did you get then ?—I cannot remember whether I had 10*l.* then from Mr. Crocker or not. He was my landlord then ; I rented a room of him at that time. He is the Mr. Crocker who keeps the "Fountain" inn. I had a room there, and he told me to go into my room and have a bit of lunch, and I went in and found 10*l.* in sovereigns on my bench.

31,946. That was in the election of 1857 ?—That was at one of the elections ; I will not swear.

31,947. Did you vote in the previous election, Lord Henley's time ?—Yes.

31,948. For whom ?—Tynte and Follett.

31,949. What did you get then ?—That is the amount I alluded to just now.

31,950. It was either in 1857 or 1852 that you got this 10*l.* ?—Yes.

31,951. Did you not get it in both ?—No.

31,952. When was the first time you voted ?—In 1852.

31,953. And either in 1852 or 1857 you received 10*l.* ?—Yes.

31,954. And you cannot say which ?—I cannot say which ; I know I received 10*l.*

31,955. Did you get any money from anybody else in 1859 ?—No I did not.

31,956. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you anything to James Hayward ?—No.

31,957. Nor to Henry Hayward ?—No.

CHARLES LEAR recalled.

C. Lear.

31,958. (Mr. Price.) Just tell us again when was it that Mr. Kinglake stayed behind Mr. Vanderbyl when they were canvassing, to state to you about the coalition ?—The last election.

31,959. How long before the election day ?—Well, I think it must been a week.

31,960. Soon after they began their canvass ?—Yes. It is not generally that the Liberal party solicit my vote, because they merely pass on, and pass the compliment to look in.

31,961. You volunteered this matter you know ?—Well, it is a fact. Of course I tell you the truth.

31,962. (Mr. Anstey.) And from your mentioning that Mr. Kinglake saw you in person it is clear that it must have been during his canvass ?—Of course it must.

31,963. Because we have it in evidence that he and Mr. Vanderbyl shut themselves up on the polling day ?—Yes.

THIRTIETH DAY.

C. Lear.

28 Sept. 1869.

31,964. So that it could not have been on the polling day ?—No. I think it was a week or a fortnight before the election. Mr. Jarman was there. He came with them.

31,965. It was a joint canvass for himself and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Certainly.

31,966. He was endeavouring to obtain his return by means of a coalition ?—Yes.

JOHN TRUMAN recalled.

J. Truman.

31,967. (Mr. Price.) Do you keep a banking account ?—Yes.

31,968. Where do you bank ?—At the West of England.

31,969. We should like to look at your book for 1865 and 1866 before we go any further, so you will be good enough to get it, your pass-book ?—I will go and get the book.

31,970. (Mr. Coleridge.) They will have the duplicates if you have not got them ?—I will go to Capt. Ford.

31,971. (Mr. Price.) Go to Capt. Ford and get it. (Addressing Mr. Henry Lovibond) You want to make a statement I believe ?

(Mr. Henry Lovibond.) Yes, if convenient to the Court.

(Mr. Price.) Then you had better go into the box.

MR. HENRY LOVIBOND presented himself.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

(Mr. Price.) Before we commence, I think it right that I should inform you that we shall not interrupt you in the course of your statement. You will be at liberty to make it as fully as you please, and of course, according to the mode in which you make it, and the way in which you account for and fill up the deficiency of your former evidence, so shall we be the more inclined to look upon it as a complete statement on your behalf. Therefore it will be incumbent upon you to bear that in mind. You have now the fullest opportunity, therefore, in whatever order you like, to make your statement, without our interference in any way. The statement will be entirely your own, and it will depend, as I said before, exactly upon the mode in which that statement will be made whether it will be received at our hands with any consideration or not. Of course, therefore, you must not expect from us that we shall assist you in any way in the shape of questions, you are at liberty to say now what you please.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I will commence at the first election at which I had anything to do with, and go down to the present time. In 1847 was the first election that I had anything to do with in Bridgwater. At that time the Liberal party was represented by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, Mr. Thomas Ford, and Mr. Bate. Some disagreement occurred between Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, Mr. Bate, and Mr. Ford, in consequence of which Mr. Bate and Mr. Ford determined upon bringing in a candidate. I may say, in the first place, that there were only two candidates at the time; they were Colonel Tynte and Mr. Broadwood. It was supposed by Mr. Bate and Mr. Ford that a coalition was intended. At the request of Messrs. Bate and Ford I went to London, and was introduced to Serjeant Gaselee, and I induced him to come down, representing to him all the facts that I could ; that was that a section of the Liberal party was supposed to have entered into a coalition with the Conservatives. The Serjeant thought there was a possibility of being returned under the circumstances, and he came down. He only came into the town on the day of the nomination. He was nominated and seconded in the usual way. He was a very good speaker, and he had the show of hands in his favour. On the day of the poll, in the early part of the day, he was very well supported, in fact so strongly was he supported that the Conservatives were so much alarmed that they believed that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had broken faith with them, and they, in consequence, went to him and said, "Now, as you have broken faith with us, you must "buy a certain number of the balance men, in order to "make Mr. Broadwood's election secure." That was done, I was informed, and, in consequence, Mr. Broadwood was returned; otherwise, I firmly believe that Mr. Serjeant Gaselee would have been returned in conjunction with Colonel Tynte. I heard it stated in this court, I think it was by Mr. John Trevor, that that coalition was brought about for the sole purpose of preventing bribery. I have my doubts about it. I believe that it was brought about by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, as he represented to Colonel Tynte, solely for the purpose of spending as little money as possible, so far as he was concerned, and that it was brought about by the Conservatives, because Mr. Broadwood had no money to spend, in fact he compromised or compounded with the agents afterwards, and paid 10*s.* in the pound, or something like that. The next election took place in 1852. At that time the differences in the Liberal party had not been healed up. Many of the influential tradesmen of the Liberal party formed themselves into an association for the purpose of introducing candidates, so as to be independent of the lawyers. One of the rules, I believe, of the association was, that no candidate should be supported unless he was introduced by that association; and another rule also was, that the candidate, if returned, should not vote in the House of Commons upon any question except the question had the sanction of the association. Lord Henley, who, I believe, but I am not sure, was first introduced by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond—the association introduced him—consented to the terms submitted by the members of the association. Mr. Kinglake was asked to do the same. Mr. Kinglake wrote them a letter refusing to accede to any such terms; he thought they were what no man of any independence would submit to. The Liberal party was then divided into three sections ; there were the men who supported Mr. Kinglake, others who supported Lord Henley, and others who supported Colonel Tynte. We went to poll, and the party some of them plumped for Mr. Kinglake, some for Lord Henley, and some for Colonel Tynte, but the party was divided into three. The consequence was that before 10 o'clock, I think, the Conservatives, Messrs. Follett and Mansell, were in a considerable majority, so much so that everyone thought they would have been returned. However, very shortly after a large sum of money, I believe, was expended on behalf of Colonel Tynte, for the purpose of bribing voters for Mr. Follett as well as Colonel Tynte, so as to prevent any petition. The money was distributed, I believe, in that election by William Heal and a man of the name of Haslam, who is dead. It was reported at the time that William Heal had helped himself very considerably. At the next election which took place, in 1857, the Liberal party then became united. There was only one Conservative, and I always understood from that time down to this Commission that that was a pure election, that no money was spent by Mr. Kinglake at that election, nor was any money spent by Mr. Follett. Mr. Kinglake was returned at that election by a majority, I think, of nearly 100 over Mr. Follett. Then came the election of 1859. The Conservative candidates, Messrs. Padwick and Westropp, were entire strangers to the town, and something was very soon known of Padwick in consequence of his connexion with Palmer, who was afterwards, I think, convicted—hung, in fact,—for poisoning a man of the name of Cook. What was known of Padwick was of his being a witness at the trial, at which he made a statement of his having lent some money, and had some transactions with Palmer ; and it had been also known, in fact, he had been examined before the House of Commons on some election committee. That was the only thing that could be found out about Mr. Padwick. As regards Mr. Westropp nothing had been heard at all. Mr. Ford was then dead, and that election was managed by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond on the part of Colonel Tynte, and by Mr. Bate on the part of Mr. Kinglake. I recollect two days before the election that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, hearing that bribery was going on by the Conservatives, offered to double any sum of money that might be brought to him by an elector who had received it from the Conservative side, and one Walters, a butcher, came with William Heal with a sum of 10*l.* I think he said something of it here. I think I heard something of it in this Court when he was examined. He stated that he had the sum of 10*l.* from the Conservative party, but without mentioning any names. Mr. Lovibond afterwards, as soon as Heal and Walters were gone, stated to me that he believed it was a trick of William Heal for the purpose of inducing the Liberals to begin spending money, and also for the purpose of getting 20*l.*, being double the sum which Mr. Walters got. But from what I gathered from Mr. Walters' manner, I did not think it was a trick, but I thought it was perfectly true. At that election I understood there was no money spent by the Liberals until the morning of the election, but for several days money had been spent by the Conservatives. The amount I understood that was advanced was 1,000*l.* on the part of the Liberals, 500*l.* on the part of Colonel Tynte and 500*l.* on the part of Mr. Kinglake. How Colonel Tynte's money came I have not the slightest idea. With regard to Mr. Kinglake, I think Mr. Bate, who has acted professionally for the family, raised the money somehow. The machinery for expending the money was managed by Foister, who was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's clerk. I believe he had several meetings night after night at Mr. John Smith's, and Mr. Foister organized the machinery for the distribution of the money. After that election I think a petition was presented but withdrawn. There were some legal proceedings also commenced against one of the party, I think against Mr. Heard, for a libel which he published against Mr. Reed. However, the petition was withdrawn, and the legal proceedings were stopped, the one in consideration of the other, so that nothing was done about that. The next election was in 1865. There was then only one Conservative, Mr. Westropp. The Liberals at that time were Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley, and I may say, in reference to Sir John Shelley, that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had been in communication with Mr. Travers Smith with regard to finding a candidate, and that I went with Mr. Lovibond to London and was introduced by Mr. Travers Smith at his office to Sir John Shelley. At that interview Sir John asked Mr. Lovibond what the probable cost would be, and Mr. Lovibond replied 500*l.* Some conversation took place with regard to Sir John Shelley's principles, which were considered by Mr. Lovibond and myself perfectly satisfactory. We returned from town, and in the course of three or four days afterwards Mr. Benjamin Lovibond went back to town in consequence of some telegram he had received. I never knew what the object of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's second visit to London was, until the day of the election. Then it was that I heard that Sir John had exacted a promise from Mr. Benjamin Lovibond at the second interview that no money should be spent for corrupt purposes on his behalf. I canvassed with Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake. Sir John Shelley was a very good canvasser and very popular amongst the electors, and I believe everyone supposed, I believe the Liberal party supposed, and I believe the Conservative party supposed, that Sir John Shelley was going to spend money. I never heard to the contrary until about 12 o'clock on the nomination might, the night before the election, when Mr. Benjamin Lovibond informed me, that Sir John Shelley could not spend any money. With regard to Mr. Kinglake, I had a conversation with him and with Mr. Bate, a day or two before, and Mr. Bate said, "Well we "shall have an easy time with Mr. Kinglake, as there "is no opposition, in fact with Mr. Kinglake we shall "not want to spent any money." That election being over, the Liberal party, or a great many of them, were very angry with Mr. Lovibond for deceiving them, in not telling them that Sir John Shelley did not intend to spend money, or in fact that they had got Sir John Shelley, who would not spend any money.

Mr. Benjamin Lovibond also, I know, was very angry, and I think one reason for his starting the petition was in order to divert the feeling that there was against him, into another channel, and I think the Liberal party were somewhat satisfied in having a petition. The petition was got up and presented, and the seat was claimed for Sir John Shelley. Sir John Shelley's counsel advised that he was so many behind, that it would cost such an enormous sum, in fact that every vote almost was like trying an action at nisi prius. I think Mr. Powell said he thought it would last a month, and in consultation it was decided that that part of the petition should be abandoned. After the petition was over, and Mr. Westropp was unseated, then the Liberal party were very anxious that Sir John Shelley should stand again. A memorial, I think, was got up by the Liberal party, to induce Sir John to stand. Sir John said he should like to do so, and said "I should wish you "to act as my agent, Mr. Lovibond," and I consented to do so. However, some two or three hours after that Sir John spoke to me, and asked me what I thought the chances of his success were. My reply was, I thought they were exceedingly doubtful; that the money which had been spent by Mr. Westropp, not only at the election, but for the five or six years during which he had really been bribing the electors of the borough, I said, that in all probability that money would have its effect, and that he would stand but a very poor chance. In addition to which it was well known that the man who petitions, always stands at a very great disadvantage. Sir John thought over it, and he said "Well, if you really think that is "so, I shall abandon the idea of standing." He did so. Then we had to look about for another candidate, and some communication was made to some electors in Bridgwater from some friends of Mr. Bagehot. A meeting was called at Mr. James Wood Sully's, and a resolution was passed that Mr. Bagehot should be invited to attend, and also, I believe, that myself and Mr. Barham and Messrs. Reed and Cook should communicate with him. I went to London with Mr. Barham and Mr. Reed. We had an interview Mr. Bagehot at his house for, I suppose, some 10 minutes or a quarter of an hour. Nothing, as I recollect, at that interview was said about money matters. I do not think it was referred to either by Mr. Bagehot or by either of us. However, Mr. Bagehot agreed to come down whenever the writ was moved for. Mr. Barham has stated in his evidence that he received a communication from two very influential electors, the present Mayor and Mr. Henry F. Nicholls I think, and that he gave them a pledge that no money should be spent, and that he communicated that to me, on our way to town. I can only say, that I have not the slightest recollection of that communication having been made to me, and I cannot help thinking, that if it had been made that it would have produced such an impression upon me that I could not have forgotten it, because I do not see how, in the face of that pledge, given to such men we could have gone to London without first having a release from those gentlemen. However, I do not mean to say that he did not communicate it to me. Mr. Barham has stated so upon his oath. I can only say according to my recollection, and nothing further; I have not the slightest recollection of that having been stated. Mr. Barham has given you an account of Mr. Bagehot's election, and, with the exception of what I have just stated, I quite substantiate what he has said. I will not go over that ground again, as you have already got it in evidence, and I think it would be a mere waste of time.

THIRTIETH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

28 Sept. 1869.

Well, Sir, after Mr. Bagehot's election, I recollect going with Mr. Barham to Mr. Bagehot at his lodgings in this town, and Mr. Barham I think it was communicated to him that a sum of money had been expended for illegal purposes. Mr. Bagehot said he was sorry to hear it, something of that sort, and I know that we were referred to his solicitors, Messrs. Robins. Mr. Barham has given you an account of that, and I quite agree with him in that account. I do not think I have anything to add at all to that statement. With regard to the election of Mr. Vanderbyl, when the writ was moved for, I went to Mr. Barham's office. First I think I saw Mr. Mogg, and I told him of it; then I went to Mr. Barham's office and found that he was in Wiltshire, and I went to Messrs. Reed and Cook's office, and I saw Mr. Cook, who informed me that Mr. Reed was in London. I requested, or Mr. Cook volunteered I think, to communicate with Mr. Reed, requesting him to meet me in London the following day; and I also asked the clerk at Mr. Barham's office to do the same with respect to Mr. Barham. I went to London and met Mr. Barham, but not Mr. Reed. Mr. Reed did not come to the hotel where we were staying, nor, in fact, did we see anything of him. Mr. Barham and myself called, I think first, upon Mr. Robins, Mr. Bagehot's agent, and we asked him if he thought Mr. Bagehot would stand. We thought it was due to him as he had been beaten before that he should have the opportunity of standing. Mr. Robins' reply, I recollect, was this, that "It comes so soon after the other election, that "Mr. Bagehot would not be inclined to stand now, "but he would rather do so at the general election." Our answer was this, if we returned a candidate, that Mr. Bagehot would not then have the chance if the seat was occupied. We had several interviews. We first went, I think it was, to Mr. Kinglake, and then we went to Mr. Travers Smith, and there is a little difference between Mr. Barham's recollection and mine. My impression is that a sum of money was mentioned to Mr. Travers Smith. My impression is that a sum of 1,500*l.* was mentioned. With the rest of his evidence I quite agree, and I do not think I can add anything to that at all, it was given very correctly. Then we returned. You have heard the account of how we met the secretary of Mr. Brogden, Mr. Salmon, on our way down, and the next morning, the Monday morning after our return, I and Mr. Barham called upon the Mayor, Mr. George Sully, and I think some very influential voter was with him. We told him what we had done, and Mr. Sully, I know, gave us the cold shoulder. We said, after taking the the trouble we had, and after the difficulty we had had in getting a candidate, that if Mr. Sully did not support us, and if there was any division in the Liberal party, that we should not bring Mr. Vanderbyl down. It was bad enough to go with a dissatisfied party to the election, but to have a divided one was worse. However, Mr. Sully, after some time, said "Well, I shall vote, but "you must not expect me to do anything more." I saw Mr. Mogg, and Mr. Mogg was perfectly well satisfied with it, and he said, "I am very glad you "have a candidate." I do not know that I can give you any other account of that election than that which Mr. Barham gave. His account was perfectly correct as to the mode of conducting that election. Some time after the election was over, some accounts of the other elections, that is, of Mr. Bagehot's election, and Mr. Kinglake's election, and Sir John Shelley's election, were brought in. I think it must have been about two months afterwards. The accounts were, I think, most of them sent in to Mr. Barham, and perhaps two or three to Messrs. Reed and Cook. However, Mr. Barham brought them all to me, and Mr. Barham took down, I recollect, the different names of the persons who sent in the bills and the amounts, and he made a list of each, that is to say, so much is due on Mr. Kinglake's account, and Sir John Shelley's, so much on Mr. Bagehot's, and so much on Mr. Vanderbyl's, and each of those accounts were paid by the respective candidates to whom they were made out; that is, Mr. Kinglake paid that which was due from him, Sir John Shelley paid that which was due from him, Mr. Bagehot paid that which was due from him, and Mr. Vanderbyl did the same. I know we went through the accounts, and saw that they were paid and charged. Something has been said about Mr. Vanderbyl's paying accounts of Sir John Shelley. There were two accounts that were paid; no doubt one of them was sent in by Mr. Babbage; 20*l.* was paid by Andrew Allan to him before he would vote, and a small sum to a voter of the name of Merson. There was another bill brought in by a man of the name of Stephen Crocker, a very large amount, supposed to have been incurred in making Sir John Shelley a Shepherd. I repudiated it. I asked Andrew Allan about it, and Andrew Allan said he thought that account was a swindle. That account was not paid. I do not think there was any other account at the time. I do not know of any. With regard to the last election the account given by Mr. Barham with regard to the interviews between Mr. Fennelley, and also with Messrs. Reed and Cook, at his office and mine, are substantially correct. That takes me up then, I think, to the Saturday before the election. On that evening there was a large meeting in this hall, and also a meeting at Mr. Sealy's, which you have heard about. I recollect on my returning home on going down the street after the meeting at Mr. Sealy's place, a resolution was come to with regard to the support of Mr. Vanderbyl. I met an influential elector, I am not certain, but I think it was one of the partners of Messrs. Browne and Company, Mr. Wilton; and I recollect his saying, "Well, these disclosures make it very "awkward with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl, I don't "like them, I do not know what to do." I recollect that produced some impression upon my mind. That night I thought over the position of the Liberal party, that is, the Saturday night, and on the Sunday morning I determined to call a meeting of the solicitors, Mr. Barham and Messrs. Reed and Cook. I sent a note to Mr. Barham, and also to Messrs. Reed and Cook, to call upon me. Mr. Barham attended. I told him precisely what has been stated; how the Liberal party stood, that I did not like our present prospects; that I thought a deal of money must be spent, that I did not like it. I thought it was very much better that we should carry out that which we had suggested before, that is, that one of the candidates should retire, that we should then have a pure election in all probability. I dreaded very much the spending of money, and I thought there would be a good deal which would have to be spent, knowing the antecedents of Mr. Westropp, and knowing that he could not be possibly elected without his spending a great deal of money. That was the conclusion I came to, either rightly or wrongly, and I believe that opinion was entertained by almost every member of the Liberal party. You have heard a great deal of evidence about the meeting at Nicholls' on the Sunday night. I will not weary you by going through that again. I can throw no new light upon it, except that my sole object at that meeting was to get Mr. Vanderbyl to retire. I know that was not acceptable to Messrs. Reed and Cook. They were very anxious that money should be spent, and that we should go on in the usual way to win the election. Now there is a statement which has been attributed by Mr. Cook to me, and that is my answer to Mr. Cook, when he stated to me the next morning that Mr. Fennelley had gone to London to bring money down. Mr. Cook stated that I said, "Well then that meeting has had its effect." The words I made use of were these, "The meeting has "had some effect then," meaning that it had not the effect which I wanted but that it had produced some effect. Those were the words which I made use of at the time. Then with regard to the nomination, I had a great difficulty, as you have heard, a very great difficulty, in getting gentlemen to nominate. I applied to several, but they refused. At last I said to Mr. Cook, "As Mr. Vanderbyl is here we must "nominate him, at all events, we cannot turn our " backs upon him, we must nominate and second him " ourselves, unless we can get a substitute ; I will do " my best to get some one, if I cannot I will nominate " him myself;" and he said " Very well, and I will " do the same or second him." I asked Mr. Hurman, and Mr. Hurman consented to nominate, and Mr. Cook the same. Then the next day, the day of the polling, I think you have my evidence with regard to that. I adhere to the statements I made with regard to what took place on that day, in the morning when it was decided no money should be spent, and I think I am corroborated in that by an answer which Mr. Reed made to Mr. Commissioner Anstey as to the reason why we did not spend money earlier, seeing that the majority was gradually increasing. His answer was, " It was owing to the vacillating " conduct of Mr. Lovibond." Then in the latter part of the day, when he asked " Where is Mr. " Lovibond." I think you will find that that is confirmed by Bussell, and one or two others. After we had decided that no money should be spent, this was about 11 or 12 o'clock, after Messrs. Reed and Cook and myself had decided that no money should be spent, and that the election was lost, as I have stated, I went to Mr. Vanderbyl, who was at " The Globe" hotel, and told him of the fact. His reply was to me, " Well how is this ? can you account " for it ?" I said, "Indeed, Mr. Vanderbyl, I cannot, " except that we cannot get the voters to the poll, " there are a number of voters we cannot get to the " poll." I then went to Mr. Kinglake's lodgings. I then saw Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. Sealy, and Mr. Bate, and I think Dr. Kinglake was there, but I am not quite certain. I said to Mr. Kinglake, " Your " election, sir, I am sorry to say is lost." Mr. Kinglake said " Well, how is this ?" I think my answer was " Well, we cannot get the electors up to poll. " I am very sorry that we cannot get the electors up, " but I thought in the morning, at 9 or 10 o'clock, " we should have a majority of 150." Mr. Kinglake's answer to that was, " Well, what am I to do, is it " necessary that I should be at the hustings when " the poll is declared ?" I said, " No, sir, it will " be a very humiliating position for you to be in, " having represented the borough for so many years." He said, " Well, I shall go back to town," and there was a Bradshaw in front of him, and he put his hand over to the Bradshaw, and he said, " When is the " next train back ?" I said, " At half-past 1." He said "I shall go back to town by that train." I recollect speaking to the Doctor too. The Doctor came in, and he said he should do the same, he should return to Taunton. I think that I walked a part of the way with Dr. Kinglake, and we had got as far as the bridge, I think, when Mr. Reed joined us, and Mr. Reed, I recollect, said to me, " Well, don't you think the " election could be got for 3,000*l.* ?" I do not know whether Dr. Kinglake heard that or not. My impression is that he did not hear it, and he certainly made no answer. I said, " Oh no, Mr. Kinglake " has gone, 6,000*l.* would not win it now, it is " perfectly useless, it is idle talking. The election is " utterly gone." Mr. Reed has stated that I said it was a very great object for Mr. Kinglake to get in, because he expected to get office under the Government. No such conversation took place, and I think Mr. Reed must have been labouring under some great mistake with regard to that, for some years ago, I recollect that Mr. Kinglake was very often speaking upon foreign questions in the House of Commons, and Mr. Reed said then, " I " should think Mr. Kinglake would like to get into " office." I am perfectly certain that on the polling day nothing was said by me to the effect that Mr. Kinglake would like to get into office. At that time it was uncertain how the elections would go, and nothing was known about whether there would be a new Government or not, but I am perfectly sure that Mr. Reed must have confounded the statement he made some years ago with what he thought I said to him on the polling day. Then it was about half-past 12 that I saw Mr. Barham, and told him that the election was gone, and he agreed with me. I think Mr. Barham said, " I shall go home," or " Go some- " where into the country," and then Mr. Barham left me. I went, I recollect, afterwards back to my office, and sent my office boy to the committee room which I had the conduct of, that is, the south ward committee room, to request the check-clerk there to close it up, and bring the books home. I also asked my other clerk whether I should have time to go down to Highbridge, as I had to superintend the erection of some polling booths there for the county election. He looked at the clock and said, " No ; it is now half- " past 1 ; you will not have time." I then went out and went down the street, and I think I met Mr. Nicholls. Mr. Nicholls made a remark to me, and said, " You are looking very depressed, Mr. Lovibond ; " you are looking very ill, you had better come with " me and have some lunch." I went to Mr. Nicholls' house, and after being there about an hour, Mr. Mogg came in front of the window,—I may tell you that Mr. Mogg lives near Mr. Nicholls. Mr. Mogg said, " Lovibond, you are wanted by Reed and Cook at 'The " Globe ;' " and, at the same time, a knock came to Mr. Nicholls' door, and the servant came in, and said to me " You are wanted." I have forgotten who it was I saw at the door, I think it was Mr. Bate. I went out and saw Mr. Mogg coming towards me, and he said, " You are wanted ; we are within ten or a dozen, we " shall win the election." Mr. Mogg had not his hat on, and he went back into his house. I went on myself to " The Globe," where I saw Mr. Cook first, and Mr. Cook alone. I do not recollect at all whether Mr. Reed was present. I saw Mr. Cook, and then it was that Mr. Cook made the communication to me of which you have heard, and from that communication I believed that Mr. Cook had spent somewhere from 1,000*l.* to to 1,500*l.* No sum at all was mentioned by him, but that was my impression, He said, " Well, you must " do something," and very soon afterwards I saw Andrew Allan, and very soon after I had seen Andrew Allan, and when I was going up the street from the bridge towards the Cornhill,—I think it was on the bridge,—the first person I saw was Mr. Bate. I said, " Mr. Bate, will you take this message " to Mr. Prior ?" and he said, " No, I would rather " not ; you had better ask some one else ;" and immediately after I saw Mr. Mogg : and I may say with regard to Mr. Mogg, it was purely accidental my meeting him, as well as Mr. Bate ; there was no appointment and no arrangement of any kind whatever, it was purely accidental ; and if I had met any other trustworthy person belonging to the Liberal party, I should have asked him the same thing. I think I gave my evidence before as to what took place after that. Then I recollect, knowing that Mr. Barham had gone away, I went to the committee room which he had the management of in the north ward, and I did so because there were complaints made down at " The Globe," that they could not get any returns from the north ward nor from the south ward. Knowing that Mr. Barham was not there, I went to the north ward, and I also went to the south ward. Well then, on coming up from " The Globe,"— I think I was going to the north ward again,—I met Mr. Robinson, and Mr. Robinson said to me (I was going very fast, and was in a very great hurry at the time) " There is a voter in our rifle corps I can get." I said, " Why don't you get him then." His answer was, " He wants 10*l.*, but I think I can get him upon " a promise, shall I do so ?" I answered, " No ; you " know I cannot promise him anything. I will have " nothing to do with it." I then went on. That completes, I think, the account of what took place on the election day.

(Mr. Price.) We will now adjourn.

[The Court then adjourned for a short time.]

THIRTIETH DAY.

T. Symes.

28 Sept. 1869.

THOMAS SYMES sworn.

31,972. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a master mariner?—Yes.

31,973. In the service of Mr. Sully?—Not in the present.

31,974. Were you in 1865?—Yes.

31,975. Was there a William Symes in his service at that time?—No.

31,976. Robert Bussel speaks, I think, of a William Symes. Oh, I see that your name Thomas Symes was mentioned in the Committee of the House of Commons. Now you are aware that you were, or are you not aware, that you were mentioned before the Committee of the House of Commons which sat in 1866?—No.

31,977. Well I will ask you, do you remember being canvassed (that is to say, being asked to vote or asked about your vote) during the canvass for Kinglake and Shelley?—No.

31,978. Do you remember anybody saying to you, in the street or anywhere, on the Monday you know, "I suppose you will vote for Westropp," and you said "Yes;" or do you remember saying to anybody "I "suppose you will vote for Westropp," and his saying "Yes," do you remember that?—No.

13,979. Do you remember anybody saying "Who "are you voting for"?—No.

31,980. Did you tell anybody "I must vote for Mr. "Kinglake and Shelley, as I cannot afford to lose my "berth"?—No.

31,981. "You know which side my Governor is "going"?—No, I never heard the words.

31,982. I ask you specifically did you say anything like that to Robert Bussell?—I did not.

31,983. Did you tell anybody that you must vote on the same side with your governor?—No, I did not.

31,984. Did you vote for Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes, I did.

31,985. Were you asked by anybody to vote for them?—I was not, by any one; no candidates nor any one.

31,986. Had you ever voted Liberal before?—I had not.

31,987. Had you ever a vote before?—Yes.

31,988. For whom did you vote in 1859?—Well, I do not know who the candidates were, I am sure.

31,989. Padwick and Westropp were the Tory candidates?—That is who I voted for.

31,990. (Mr. Price.) In whose employment were you then?—In Stuckey and Co.'s.

31,991. They are Conservatives?—I believe they were.

31,992. In 1857 who did you vote for?—Oh, I do not remember.

31,993. The Conservative side?—On the Conservative side.

31,994. And in 1852 whom did you vote for?—The Conservatives.

31,995. And in 1847?—Conservative.

31,996. And in 1841?—Well, I don't know or not whether I had a vote or no then. It is so long.

31,997. You never voted Liberal before you got into Mr. Sully's employment?—I did not.

31,998. Did you vote at the election at which Mr. Bagehot was defeated and Mr. Patton came in?—Yes.

31,999. Whom did you vote for?—Bagehot.

32,000. Whose employ were you in then?—Mr. Sully's.

32,001. For whom did you vote at the next election when Mr. Patton was defeated and Mr. Vanderbyl came in?—Mr. Sully's employment. I voted for Mr. Vanderbyl.

32,002. You were still then in the service of Mr. Sully?—Yes.

32,003. For whom did you vote at the last election, 1868?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

32,004. In whose employment were you then?—Mr. Sully's.

32,005. And in whose employment are you now?—No one's.

32,006. Do I understand that you have always voted on the side on which your employers voted?—Well, I have done. I was never asked to do it by no one.

32,007. (Mr. Coleridge.) What have you ever got for your vote?—I had two 10*l.* from the Conservatives.

32,008. Which elections?—I am sure I cannot say.

32,009. Was it in Padwick's election 1859, you had 10*l.*?—Oh, I not know whether it was or not.

32,010. Had you 10 or 20?—10.

32,011. What had you in 1865 when you voted for the Liberals?—Nothing.

32,012. What did you have in 1866 when you voted for Bagehot?—I had 5*l.* after the election.

32,012*a*. And what had you in 1866 when when voted for Vanderbyl?—I had 10*l.*

32,013. And what had you in 1868 when you voted for Vanderbyl and Kinglake?—Nothing.

32,014. There was nothing going?—I had nothing.

32,015. That is three tens and one five?—Yes.

32,016. Is that all you ever had?—Yes.

32,017. Did you have nothing earlier?—No.

32,018. Nothing in 1857?—No.

32,019. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ask for any money at the last election?—No, I never did.

32,020. Did anybody say to you it would be all right?—No.

32,021. Did you expect anything?—No.

32,022. Not afterwards?—No.

32,023. Who gave you the money at Vanderbyl's election?—Henry Bussell.

32,024. Who gave you the money when Bagehot was defeated?—Henry Bussell.

32,025. Who gave you the money in 1865?—Henry Bussell gave me all in the Liberal concern.

32,026. In 1865?—Yes.

32,027. How much did you get in 1865?—One ten and a five.

32,028. From Henry Bussell?—Yes.

32,029. How soon after the election?—I do not recollect how long it was when I had the 5*l.* I had the 10*l.* before I went to vote.

32,030. At that election you voted for Kinglake and Shelley?—Yes; no, Kinglake and Shelley. I had nothing at that election.

32,031. In 1865?—No.

32,032. Were you promised anything?—No, I had it after Bagehot's election.

32,033. You got ten and five?—Yes.

32,034. Was it for voting for Bagehot and for voting at the former election?—Yes, I suppose it was.

32,035. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much money do you say you have received in all?—25*l.*, I think.

32,036. Oh no, you have told us about 35*l.*?—Yes, three tens and a five, that was it.

32,037. Did not you get anything in 1865?—No, I got it after the election.

32,038. Who brought you home to vote last time?—I was in Bridgwater at the time.

32,039. Bussell did not send for you?—No, he did not.

32,040. So you did not get any expenses?—No.

32,041. What have you got for expenses besides these sums you got for your vote at elections?—Nothing at all.

32,042. Never been paid your expenses?—No.

32,043. (Mr. Anstey.) To make it quite clear—you got nothing in 1865, but in the following year at Bagehot's election you got two sums—one of 10*l.* and one of 5*l.*, and you believe that those two sums were given you for having voted in 1865 and for voting again in 1866?—Yes.

32,044. (Mr. Price.) Just let us understand. You see you have acknowledged that you have always voted the same way as your employer?—Yes.

32,045. Is that the general understanding amongst men in your position in life that they vote according to the politics of their employers?—I do not know, I am sure.

32,046. How do you account for it?—Why, my fancy led that way—to vote Liberal.

32,047. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you change?—I do not know.

32,048. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say if you had remained in the employment of Stuckey and Co., who were Conservatives, you would have voted Liberal?—I do not know that I should.

32,049. It is nonsense talking about your fancy. Be honest about it?—I be honest; speaking the truth.

32,050. Is there any doubt that you voted for your master's politics, in favour of your master's politics, because it is thought the best thing to do?—No, because when I voted Conservative some of the owners then were Liberal and wanted me then to vote Liberal, and I would not do it.

32,051. (Mr. Anstey.) How many were Liberals?—I do not know. There was a man of the name of Mr. George Leward.

32,052. How many Conservatives were there?—I do not know how many owners I had at the time.

32,053. In the firm?—In the firm.

32,054. Do you know which way the balance lay?—No.

32,055. Don't you know that there were more Conservatives than Liberals in the firm?—No, I do not.

32,056. When you were first asked you said they were Conservatives?—Well, some of the parties; I do not know how many.

32,057. You have only named one who was not?—Yes, Mr. George Leward.

32,058. (Mr. Price.) Have you always voted according to the politics of your employers?—No, I have gone according to my own principle.

32,059. What principles have you?—I changed my mind the same as other people have done!

32,060. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the question upon which you changed your mind?—Nothing at all. No question at all in it.

32,061. You don't understand me. What was the great political question of the day that made you change your mind?—I do not know, particular.

32,062. Was it the Reform Bill, or the Irish Church Bill, or what?—No, nothing at all.

32,063. (Mr. Price.) What was it?—I do not know. I cannot understand the question.

32,064. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know the difference between a Liberal and a Tory?—Yes, I do.

32,065. And now you are a Liberal?—Now I am a Liberal.

32,066. (Mr. Price.) As long as you are in Mr. Sully's employ?—I am not in any employ. I am not in a situation.

32,067. You are hanging on as a balance man?—No; my labour is done for work.

32,068. (Mr. Anstey.) Where do you expect to get employment?—Nowhere. I have injured my back. I cannot work any longer.

32,069. Are you looking for any assistance?—No.

32,070. What are you going to do?—I must trust for that.

32,071. That is it. To whom do you trust?—Trust to the Lord.

RICHARD BALE sworn. R. Bale.

32,072. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at a meeting at "The Clarence" or some other place a day or two before the nomination day at the last election?—Yes, I was.

32,073. Was Mr. Joseph Richard Smith there?—Yes.

32,074. Where was it?—At "The Lamb" inn.

32,075. Did you hear Mr. Joseph Richard Smith address the people present?—I did.

32,076. Was it a Conservative meeting?—Yes.

32,077. A meeting of the Conservative working men?—Yes.

32,078. What did you hear Mr. Joseph Richard Smith say on the subject of money?—He told them—it was this—they were not to be gulled, because there was always plenty of bribes, and there would be for ever, he believed.

32,079. Go on.—And he told them to have the money down before they go to poll.

32,080. Did he say anything about sugar?—And sugar their plums well; or something similar to it.

32,081. What is understood by sugaring plums in this borough at the time of an election?—I suppose that means money—having plenty.

32,082. Was that received with favour by the people present, or did it seem to be disliked?—Oh, they received it with favour.

32,083. What did they do?—Oh, they had three cheers or something similar to it.

32,084. (Mr. Price.) Did he use the word "bribes" or money?—"Money down" he said.

32,085. You say that he said there was sure to be plenty of bribes going?—He said there always was bribes, and there always would be.

32,086. Did he use the word "bribes"?—Yes he did.

32,087. (Mr. Anstey.) "Sure to be bribes going, "and there always will be"?—Yes.

WILLIAM NICHOLLS sworn. W. Nicholls.

32,088. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you at that meeting?—I was.

32,089. What did you hear Mr. Joseph Richard Smith say?—I heard Mr. Joseph Smith say, at the time I was there, something about a prince, some foreign prince; about "M.D," I think the expression was. He said "I do not know whether there is "any of you here that know the meaning of 'M.D.,'" and there was some individual there, but who he was I cannot tell, said "Money." Mr. Smith says "That "is the thing; M. means money, and" he said "M.D. is money down. Mind," he said, "men, "don't be gulled by no promises; but," he said, "Before you go to poll have the same as I said "M.D., money down."

32,090. Did he say anything about sugar?—I was not there to hear nothing at all about sugar; about sugaring plums; nothing of that sort.

32,091. Did the people cheer?—There were three cheers given.

32,092. Was that a Conservative Working Men's association meeting?—It was, at the "Lamb" inn, at the Conservative meeting.

32,093. How many people were there do you suppose?—I should think there was a hundred, or better than a hundred.

32,094. What day was it?—It was a few days, I cannot tell the day, because I did not think I should be brought before you to give the day, but it was three or four days, or something like that, before the election.

32,095. You remember the nomination day was on the Monday, and it would not be on the Sunday?—This was the week before, I might say. It was between Wednesday—

32,096. And Sunday?—And Sunday, something like that. It was a few days previous to the last election.

32,097. Was it at night?—Yes. I was asked to go by a neighbour of mine to the Conservative meeting, and accordingly I did so, and I came down town. I should think it was between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening.

32,098. After the men were off work?—After the men were off work. I was invited to go.

32,099. (Mr. Price.) Did he say who they were not to be gulled by?—Oh no, he did not mention any one's name; not no more than he said,—

32,100. No, no. Did he say which side? Did he say this sort of thing, "Now, if you are going any of "you to vote on the other side, don't be gulled by "promises"?—No. I do believe that Mr. Joseph Smith meant that the men were not to go to poll neither side—

32,101. Neither side?—Neither side.

32,102. On promises?—On promises,—but have money down; because Mr. Smith said, "There was "always bribery ever since I recollect, and will be "bribery this time," and he said, "Therefore, men, "don't be led away by any promises, but have the "same as I tell you, M.D., money down."

32,103. What are you?—A brickyard labourer.

32,104. Are you a voter?—Yes.

32,105. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

32,106. Whom did you vote for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

32,107. How did you happen to be at a Conservative Working Men's Association?—I was asked to go to the Conservative meeting.

32,108. Who by?—Nathaniel Evans, a Conservative; he voted Conservative.

32,109. Is he here in the town?—He is working by the river side, a little way off.

32,110. He can be found?—Well, he was subpœnaed last evening.

32,111. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for your vote?—Nothing.

32,112. Any promise?—No.

32,113. Any M.D.?—No.

32,114. I suppose last time was your first vote?—Last time was my first vote.

32,115. (Mr. Price.) Whom do work for?—Browne and Co.

32,116. (Mr. Anstey.) Whom does Bale work for?—Browne and Co. There is one thing I should like to bring to your notice, if you please, that is, I do believe one day last week it was stated here to you, to the Bench, that the brickyard men actually were drove up in drifts to the poll. I believe that must have been Mr. Temblett. Now I can honestly tell you it is a great untruth, because neither the masters at Browne and Co., nor neither the foremen that belong to Browne and Co., never put a question to the men to ask them what side they are going to vote for.

32,117. Dudderidge did, did he not?—He did not.

32,118. Dyment did, did he not?—Dyment I know nothing at all about. Oh, Dyment, he's not working in the same employ, I don't believe.

32,119. Somebody did?—It was reported that Dudderidge did.

32,120. But somebody did. Somebody asked for votes.—Oh yes, some one asked; but the only ones were Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Reed.

32,121. No, no, I don't mean the open canvass, but before, and during, and after the canvass?—No. I will be on my oath that no one ever asked me which side I was going to vote.

32,122. (Mr. Price.) Have you spoken to Dudderidge since he was examined here?—No, not on the previous election.

32,123. Have you spoken to Dudderidge about this matter?—No, I have not.

32,124. About being driven up to the poll?—No, I have not.

32,125. (Mr. Anstey.) But you know it was said by Mr. Mogg and one or two others of your party, I think several stated it, certainly Mr. Mogg and Mr. Bryant, that about half-past 1 o'clock on the polling day it was believed by him and by them, and by all the party generally throughout the town, that Browne's men were hanging back because they wanted to be paid?—I know nothing at all about that.

32,126. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time did you vote?—Well, I should think it was somewhere about 12 o'clock. It might be a little before.

32,127. What is your dinner hour? What is the time the men go away?—1 o'clock is the dinner hour.

32,128. (Mr. Anstey.) What time do you knock off work?—Begging your pardon we have job work. I was at job work that day. Sometimes we have job work, and we leave about 12 or just before. It is according to what we have got and the circumstances of the business.

32,129. When you heard these things said by Mr. Alderman Smith, did you go and report his words to anybody?—Nothing, no more than in our common discourse in the yard.

32,130. I mean, you made no secret of it?—No secret whatsoever; and little did I think that I should be brought here before you, because it was not my wish or desire to come.

32,131. Did Mr. Smith ever find fault with you about reporting him as using those words?—No; I always found Mr. Smith an upright and just man in his dealings.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

MR. HENRY LOVIBOND recalled.

(Mr. Price.) Before you commence again, I think it right to tell you that in the course of your remarks you say "This will complete" so and so, and "This "will complete that." You must not infer, you know, from the silence of the Commissioners their satisfaction that that completes any part of the case; and so also when you say "I agree with Mr. Barham as to "what he has said," we place no limit upon you. It is not a question of time. We place no limit upon your going into the whole history of the case quite independently of what any other witness has said, and therefore you must not infer from our silence that we consider that anything you have said completes any portion of the case, or that it is sufficient to say "I "agree with Mr. Barham about that." We don't want to curtail you or to intimate to you in any wise in what way you should make your statement; but you must not infer anything from the silence of the Commissioners that on any portion of your statement they are satisfied, because, as I have already told you, we do not intend to interrupt by questions for the purpose of further satisfying ourselves in respect to what we are not satisfied upon. Therefore you must take that chance. The satisfaction is one which you have no right to infer from the mere fact that we do not put questions to you. I only wish you to be quite clear in your own mind about that. Your statement is entirely under your own control, and you are not to infer anything from the silence of the Commissioners that anything has been cleared up to their satisfaction.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I thought I should be wasting the time of the court in going over everything that Mr. Barham has done. Where he had stated distinctly, I thought it would be best to cut it short.

(Mr. Price.) With regard to that part I do not say anything more, but with regard to the expressions you have used as to your completing anything you must not infer from our silence anything in accordance with your view.

(Mr. Lovibond.) Well then, with that intimation sir, I will just go through the interviews that took place between me and Dr. Kinglake when Mr. Barham was not present.

(Mr. Price.) You will just do as you please, but we are very anxious to guard against any notion in your mind that we have, during the course of your statement, assented to any portion of it as being satisfactory to our minds, because under the circumstances in which you are now placed we have left it entirely to you, and we carefully abstain from expressing any opinion whatever, waiting till the whole statement is completed, when we shall weigh it carefully to see what effect it produces upon our minds. Therefore, that being so, you are quite at liberty to go back to any portion which you think you have not fully disclosed yet or fully explained. That you are quite at liberty to do, and the needful amount of time shall be given to you.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I will just correct the last answer I gave. On referring to the note, it is not quite correct. The answer I gave Mr. Robinson was this, (on reference to my note) "Well, why do you ask "me? You know I can not make promises." Then, sir, I will go back to my interviews with Dr. Kinglake. The first I had with Dr. Kinglake was somewhere about ten days before the election. Dr. Kinglake called upon me, and stated he supposed more money would be wanted. I said "Yes, I am afraid "so, from Mr. Westropp's antecedents." He then asked how much I thought, I said about 1,500*l.* would be Mr. Kinglake's share. Dr. Kinglake asked me if Mr. Vanderbyl had not better raise it, as he could do it much easier in London amongst merchants than it could be done in the country. I said I would see to it, but I did not think it would be of much service. He said "Well, I wish you to try." He left. He said he would call again and ascertain. He called again. I think it must have been two or three days afterwards, and I told him that it was no use, that I had seen Mr. Barham, and it would be no use for us to go any farther, and he must raise the money himself. He then asked me if I could not do it. I said "No, I will have nothing to do with raising money at all. I will have nothing to do with the money. I said I would have nothing to do with raising the money, I think at the first interview, but I am not clear. However, he said he did now know how to do it. I said "Well sir, I cannot tell you." He then said he would try what he could do at Taunton. He first asked, I think, if it could not be done through Messrs. Sealy and Prior's bank. I said "No, "certainly not." He then said he would see what could be done. He called again, I think the following day or the day after, and told me that he had tried at Taunton and could not succeed in doing so. Then I heard nothing more of him until the day before the election, when he told me that he had seen Mr. Prior and agreed with him to raise either 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* I saw nothing of him then until the next day. I told him that the election was gone (it was about 12 o'clock), lost; and I said also that no money had been spent, and he said he was very glad to hear it. He said he should go home, go back to Taunton. His brother was going back to-night, and he left with the full impression that the election was entirely lost. I saw nothing of him further until about 10 days after the election; I think 10 days after the election. He called upon me, and then asked me if any money had been spent. At this interview Dr. Kinglake asked me if any money had been spent. I answered "Yes." He said "How "much?" I replied "500*l.*" He then said "I have "called on Prior, on the day of the election, before I "left and cancelled my security." This I was very much surprised at, and this was the first intimation I had heard of his security being cancelled. I had no communication with Dr. Kinglake from the time that he told me he had made arrangements with Mr. Prior for advancing the money until this very time, 10 days afterwards, and I had not the slightest idea but that his security was then at Mr. Prior's bank. He also asked me how much Mr. Vanderbyl had spent. I said "I cannot tell you, sir." That was all that had ever taken place, and I do not think that I have seen Dr. Kinglake since upon this subject, or in fact I do not recollect I have had any conversation with him since at all in any matter. And a day or two after I heard of Mr. James Trevor's going to London to present a petition. I went to "The Tavistock," and I found him there and ascertained from him that his object was to get one seat only. He did not want to to go any further with the petition, but his object was to get one seat only. I said "Well, some-"thing must be done, Mr. Trevor. It won't do "to present a petition," and his answer was, "Well, "I think our party will be satisfied with one "seat." I then went and saw Mr. Kinglake and told him that the petition was going to be presented, and told him that one seat only was claimed or wanted, and asked him if he would consent to resign and give up his seat if it should be necessary. Mr. Kinglake at once said he would. I then came back to Mr. Trevor. I also saw Mr. Vanderbyl. Then it was that Mr. Trevor saw— I think he saw Mr. Fennelly up there, and it was a question of time as to when this seat should be given up. There were some one or two meetings upon it; however it ended in this, that Mr. Kinglake's seat was to be given up at Easter or some short time after Easter, and Mr. Trevor obtained in writing from Mr. Westropp, and showed me the terms upon which Mr. Westropp agreed not to present a petition. Well, sir, I then returned from London, believing that no petition was going to be presented, but in a day or two after my return Mr. John Trevor called on me and said that his friends or his supporters (the Conservative party) would not submit to it, that they were determined that the petition should be presented, and that he had written to Mr. Westropp to that effect. Seeing that Mr. Trevor appeared to be sorry for it, I thought he was equally anxious with me, and considered that it would be desirable to prevent the petition being presented, and that he was ready to open the negotiation again. I agreed to go to London to see Mr. Westropp again, and see what we could do with Mr. Westropp. In the meantime a memorial was got up, I believe, to Mr. Westropp, signed by 200 or 300 people, upon the representation that there was going to be another election. When we came to London on the following morning, the Monday morning, we found that four or five persons had come up to urge upon Mr. Westropp to present the petition. Those four or five persons were Hook, the man who had received bribes on both sides, and I think Mr. Harden, and one or two others. They pressed upon Mr. Westropp to present the petition. The petition was presented. I had several interviews after with Mr. Trevor to see whether anything could be done for the purpose of withdrawing the petition. I may say at that time a number of petitions were filed, and they were being withdrawn almost every day, but how it was to be done neither of us could possibly tell. I also, at the request of Mr. Kinglake, called upon Mr. Drake to know whether he could help me at all. First, he asked me the question whether Mr. Kinglake's personal honour was compromised. I said, "Certainly not." He said he would see what he could do; I was to call again. I did call again, but then he was out. He seemed a very difficult man to get at, and I think a third time I called, and then I saw him. I also asked Mr. Brice; he was in town. It was the request of my parliamentary agent that Mr. Brice should call upon Mr. Drake to see whether he could do anything as representing the Conservative party. Mr. Brice went there, and, as I understand, nothing came. At the last interview I had with Mr. Drake I told him what had taken place after Mr. Kinglake left; that there was money spent, and that it had purchased the election. When the trial came on, and Mr. James came down here, I informed Mr. James of the whole thing, and he said, "Well, I shall see Mr. Kinglake. Mr. Kinglake "must put himself in my hands." I went with Mr.

THIRTIETH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

28 Sept. 1869.

James then to a consultation at Mr. Serjeant Sargood's chambers. Mr. Serjeant Sargood said that they thought they had a very good case. Mr. James, I think, said, "I think differently." At all events he asked us, the solicitors, to retire, and I and Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook retired, leaving the counsel to have a consultation. Then the day following, I think it was, Mr. James said, "Well, we must take a favourable opportunity "of throwing up the sponge," or something of that sort, but I never had any conversation with Mr. Kinglake; that was confined entirely to Mr. James. With regard to what has been sworn as to Mr. Kinglake's evidence, that there was a gentleman whom it had given a great deal of surprise and pain to, I can say as to Mr. Kinglake's evidence, I have never heard anyone express himself in that way since that evidence was given,—from any party. Something has been said with regard to the sums we received. At Mr. Vanderbyl's election there is no doubt that the sum I received there was 200*l.* It is 22 years since I have had anything to do with the elections. I have had eight elections, and I find the average price for each election has been 53*l.* That amounts to 19*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* taking them by the year. That is the whole extent of what I have received for the elections of Bridgwater. There was a question, I think, which a learned Commissioner asked Mr. William Heal, whether he had suffered in reputation. Mr. Heal said he had not. I can only say of Mr. William Heal that he has been a bankrupt, that he has lost all reputation, and there is no man that would take his word, I believe, not even take his oath. How could he have any credit? He is a man bankrupt in business and in character, and in every sense of the word. I may say this much from my personal experience of electioneering, that with very few exceptions I think the money that has been spent in bribery at Bridgwater has done positive injury. I could only name three or four who have received any benefit from it. The money is generally spent in public houses or in some way which is injurious to the character and health of men. That is my statement. I think that finishes it. If there is anything the Commissioners would ask at all or suggest in any way, I should be very happy to reply.

(Mr. Price.) We have already told you the conditions upon which you have made your statement, that no question is put to you.

(Mr. Lovibond.) I quite understand that you put no question. I thought, perhaps, you might like to point out or make any suggestion. I am quite aware that you do not put questions. There is one thing more. I have had nothing to do, it is as well for me to say, as a principal in the management of elections until Mr. Barham had. While Mr. Bate was living and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, they had the financial management of the elections. I came in at the same time as Mr. Barham, and Mr. Barham had much the same knowledge as I had. Mr. Barham has stated that I have persuaded him to do so-and-so. All that I can say is that I did no such thing, and Mr. Barham, a man of such ability, is about the very last man I should attempt to persuade. It is much more likely, I think, that he should persuade me than I should him. However, we came into this electioneering business at about the same time, and we have gone on together up to this time.

EMMA HARVEY sworn.

E. Harvey.

32,132. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your name now?—Harvey.

32,133. It was Harden, was it?—Yes.

32,134. Do you recollect when you were living here at election times a stranger coming down to lodge with you?—Yes.

32,135. What year was that?—1865, I think.

32,136. Did he tell you where he came from?—No; he came to me and said he had come to Bridgwater to look for work.

32,137. Did he say who sent him to you?—No; he came on a Saturday night about half-past 10, between 10 and half-past.

32,138. Did he say what made him come to you for lodgings?—No.

32,139. Were you in the habit of letting lodgings?—Yes.

32,140. What name did he give you?—Humphreys. He came on the Sunday.

32,141. How long did he stay?—He went away about half-past 12 on the day of the election.

32,142. Did you happen to see any mark on his linen whilst he was there, his name?—No.

32,143. Were there any initials on his luggage?—No.

32,144. Who paid you for his lodgings?—Himself or Mrs. Humphreys, I forget which. His wife was with him.

32,145. Did you hear from him after he was gone?—No.

32,146. Never heard of him since?—No.

32,147. Did he ever come to lodge with you again?—No. He said if he came again he should come to me.

32,148. Did he say he was a native of Bridgwater?—No.

32,149. What did he bring in the way of luggage?—He did not bring very much. He told me he was come to look for work.

32,150. Did he look like a working man?—No; I thought he was some kind of agent at the time he came.

32,151. Had he anything very heavy with him?—No, I almost forget; I won't be certain. I do not think he had very much.

32,152. Do you know anything about his paying voters?—No, nothing at all.

32,153. Did people come to the house after him?—No; I only saw one young man that came there.

32,154. What was his name?—I do not know. He was a young clerk, quite a young lad. He was a clerk at Mr. Smith's. I do not know his name.

32,155. Was it Neal?—I do not know at all. I think he was an articled clerk there. He had not been there very long. He was quite a youmg lad.

32,156. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it Mr. Neal?—I do not know his name.

32,157. (Mr. Coleridge.) You cannot tell us anything about this mysterious stranger at all?—No.

32,158. Should you be very much surprised if he turned up in court here now?—I do not think I should know him if I saw him.

32,159. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you seen him since?—No.

32,160. (Mr. Price.) Should you know him again?—No.

32,161. What sort of person was his wife?—I was hardly ever in the room while they were there.

32,162. (Mr. Anstey.) By what name did his wife call him when she spoke to him?—I was never in the room when they were in conversation.

32,163. Did you ever hear him call her by name when they were speaking to each other?—No, when he spoke to her he called her Mrs. Humphreys.

32,164. You never heard him call her Jane or Mary or anything of that kind?—No.

SAMUEL OLIVER sworn.

S. Oliver.

32,165. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A bricklayer.

32,166. Are you a voter?—Yes, I am a voter.

32,167. At the last election whom did you vote for?—Mr. Westropp and Gray.

32,168. What did you get for that?—Nothing at all; I voted freely and independently.

32,169. No promise?—I never had no money, nor never had any promise from no one.

32,170. Did you vote in 1866 at Vanderbyl's election?—1866?

32,171. Yes.—I voted for Mr. Patton.

32,172. What did you get?—At Mr. Patton's election I got 10*l.*

32,173. What did you get for the two?—10*l.* from Patton in 1866.

32,174. Was that the only 10*l.* you got that year; or did you get two that year—two 10*l.*?—10*l.*, that was Mr. Patton.

32,175. Mr. Patton stood twice, you know; did you vote twice for Patton?—Yes, I voted for Mr. Patton both times.

32,176. How much did you get for both elections?—I had 10*l.* for each election.

32,177. Whom did you get it from?—Frederick Harden paid me one, but the other, I did not know the man, he was a stranger; at the "Three Crowns."

32,178. At the "Three Crowns." That was in 1865. Whom did you vote for then?—Mr. Westropp.

32,179. Did you get anything?—Nothing whatever; no promise whatever. Mr. Truman has got me down for 10*l.*

32,180. That is not true?—No.

32,181. You never got 10*l.* from Truman?—I never received a farthing.

32,182. Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

32,183. Whom did you vote for?—I voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray last, and Patton the time before.

32,184. In 1859 did you vote?—I never voted. I never had a vote before 1865.

SAMUEL CHAPMAN sworn. S. Chapman.

32,185. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Chapman?—Clerk to Mr. Boyle.

32,186. Are you a voter?—Yes.

32,187. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

32,188. How did you vote?—Westropp and Gray.

32,189. Did you get anything for it?—No.

32,190. Any promise?—No.

32,191. Any expenses?—No.

32,192. Employment?—Yes. I was employed in the chief room keeping the accounts of the election.

32,193. Then you were paid?—I was not; I volunteered.

32,194. Did you vote in 1866?—No, I had no vote before the last election.

32,195. I do not know why you were put down on this list; is there any explanation you have to give us about anything at all?—I was clerk to Messrs. Smith and Son, and clerk to Mr. Richard Smith.

32,196. Can you give us any information about Smith and Son, anything that took place at that time, when you were in their employment?—Yes, I think Mr. Purcell wants me to go through the books with him. At the present time I think I am called rather prematurely.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then you had better come back again.

32,197. (Mr. Anstey.) Has Mr. Bealy Smith returned since yesterday?—I believe he is in Melbourne, Australia.

32,198. You share in that belief, do you?—Yes.

JAMES LEAKER sworn. J. Leaker.

32,199. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Leaker, you are the landlord of the "Clarence Hotel," as everybody here knows?—I am.

32,200. And that was the blue house—the Tory house at the last election?—It was.

32,201. And has been for some years?—For many years.

32,202. The head-quarters. How long have you been there—the landlord?—Three years last Lady Day.

32,203. Well, you were a voter, no doubt?—I was.

32,204. You had before that a public house here?—I had.

32,205. And before that you were employed in the Customs Department?—I was.

32,206. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was that house—the one you had before?—The "Golden Ball."

32,207. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you not also at the "Globe"?—No; my brother.

32,208. That was a Liberal house?—It was.

32,209. (Mr. Price.) Perhaps we had better begin with the beginning of the elections, as we have begun with the others. When did you first have a vote? When you were in the Customs I suppose you did not vote?—I had no vote then.

32,210. When did you first have a vote for the borough?—The first election after 1850. I do not know what.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It was 1852, then, Lord Henley's election.

32,211. (Mr. Price.) 1852; did you vote then?—I did.

32,212. Voted for whom? Tynte and Lord Henley?—I forget the names now.

32,213. Tynte, Lord Henley, and Follett, I think, were the candidates.—Oh, Tynte and Follet.

32,214. Did you have anything then for your vote?—I had not.

32,215. Were you then at the "Golden Ball"?—At the "Golden Ball."

32,216. Was your house open for treating them? Was your house open on that side?—I think it was at that election. I think Mr. Tynte had his committee room there.

32,217. At your house?—That was the first election, yes.

32,218. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was a Liberal house then?—It was a Liberal house. I voted for Tynte and Follett. It always had been a Liberal house, by my father.

32,219. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there treating going on there?—There was a little treating; not to any extent.

32,220. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a bill for treating against them afterwards?—I should think not more than 2*l.* or 3*l.* They had a dinner after the election was over. Mr. Gooding, he was then the principal agent for Mr. Tynte. They had a dinner. I think 16 or 17 dined there after the election was over. That was the whole treating that I knew of.

32,221. Now we will come to 1857. Were you still at the "Golden Ball" then, in 1857?—I was.

32,222. Did you vote then?—I voted for Tynte and Follett.

32,223. Was there any money paid you then?—None at all.

32,224. Was there any treating going on then?—Not at all.

32,225. None?—None.

32,226. None whatever?—None whatever.

32,227. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do with paying voters at either of these elections?—No; nothing at all.

32,228. (Mr. Price.) Now then we come to 1859. Were you still at the "Golden Ball" in 1859?—I was.

32,229. Did you vote then?—I did.

32,230. Who did you vote for then?—Padwick and Tynte.

32,231. Did you get anything?—I did not.

THIRTIETH DAY.

J. Leaker.

28 Sept. 1869.

32,232. Had you any bill at that election ?—Not one ; not a shilling.

32,233. No treating going on ?—Not the least.

32,234. Or did you pay any money to any voters ? —I paid 10*l.*, which I received from Mr. Murlis.

32,235. John Murlis ?—To Joseph Stoodley. I held the money. I did not bribe the man, but I held a 10*l.* note for him. He would not take the 10*l.* " No," he said, " he thought there was more money going. Mr. Murlis gave me the 10*l.* And he said, " If there is more money going you shall " have it."

32,236. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Padwick was staying in your house. Do you know how the money came down ?—He was not staying at my house.

32,237. Where was he staying ? — At the " Clarence."

32,238. But do you know ?—No, I did not have anything to do with money matters except this 10*l.*

32,239. (Mr. Anstey.) That is Stoodley's. Where did you give him the 10*l.* ?—He received the 10*l.* at the " Golden Ball."

32,240. Was it the same man, do you know, who at the next election was bribed at the " Golden Lion " ?—I have heard so, by reading of it in the Blue book.

32,241. It is the same man ?—The same man.

32,242. Is he still living ?—He is still living.

32,243. (Mr. Price). Well, now, that is 1859. Is that all you can tell us about that election ?—It is all.

32,244. Well, in 1865 were you still at the " Golden Ball " then ?—I was.

32,245. Did you then vote ? — I voted for Westropp.

32,246. Did you get anything then ? — I did not.

32,247. Had you any bill against Westropp ?— Not the least.

32,248. No treating going on at your house ?— Not a shilling.

33,249. Did you pay any money to anybody at that election ?—I did not.

32,250. Nor in any way interfere in the matter at all ?—Not in the least.

32,251. In the way of money, I mean ?—Not in the least.

32,252. Nor promises ?—Nor promises.

32,253. At the first election of 1866 were you then at the " Golden Ball " ? — I was then at the " Clarence." I had been moved there about three months.

32,254. Did you vote ?—I did.

32,255. For whom ?—Mr. Patton.

32,256. Did you get anything then ? — I did not.

32,257. Mr. Patton stayed at your house ?—He did ; and his lady was there, and Mr. Pitman, and Mrs. Patton's sister, and another gentleman.

32,258. Do you know whether any money was brought down by Mr. Pitman ?—I do not.

32,259. How long was Mr. Pitman there before Mr. Patton ?—He came at the same time.

32,260. Mr. Westropp came down soon after ?— I believe they came together. I believe they all came together.

32,261. Did Mr. Westropp stay in your house ?— Yes.

32,262. All staying in one apartment ? — All staying in one apartment.

32,263. You had a bill then, of course, against Mr. Patton for his private expenses ?— His private bill.

32,264. Did you have a bill also against him at that election for treating ?—I do not remember much treating going on. Perhaps there may have been treating going on in the rooms occupied by the clerks ; poll clerks. That was the only treating, and I see a little item of 19*s.* which was supplied to the smoke room. The barmaid is not with me now who kept the accounts, but I suppose that smoke room must have been the great bottling room.

32,265. That is the room under the staircase ?— Yes.

32,266. Was there any bottling at that election of 1866 ?—I heard that these men were there, but I never entered the room whilst they were there.

32,267. Who brought them in ?— I do not know.

32,268. Could they be brought in from the street instead of through the front door ?—They could be brought in the other way, but I believe they all came through the principal entrance.

32,269. You did not see them ?—No.

32,270. Where did you hear of it ?—I heard of them continually. It was quite a joke.

32,271. They had 30 men there ?—Oh, nothing like 30 ; the room would not contain them. I should think myself there must have been 15 or 20.

32,272. (Mr. Anstey.) Who had the care of that part of the house ?—No one particularly, because it was a public entrance.

(Mr. Anstey.)—I know, but the room was not public.

32,273. (Mr. Price.) Was there a man stationed at the door ?—Oh, no. There is a pair of glass doors before you come to this room.

32,274. (Mr. Anstey). You took care not to be there ?—I had quite sufficient to attend to the duties of the bar.

32,275. No doubt your reasons are admirable, but you did not, as a matter of fact, know what was doing there ?—I did not.

32,276. But somebody did ?—I can only bring one into my recollection as taking an active part, Mr. Best, the pawnbroker.

32,277. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not think you understand the question. You see your house is a house that needs to be looked after and protected and guarded and watched, and you, for some reason or other, were not yourself taking charge or taking care of that particular part. Now which of your establishment or family was looking to this particular part where the great bottling room is situated ?—I should say the under waitress.

32,278. What is her name ?—Emily Day ; she is still with me. I should think it was her duty to attend to that room on that day.

32,279. (Mr. Price.) They would have drink carried into them from time to time ?—They had very little drink, principally lemonade. It was an intensely hot day.

32,280. She would be the person who would have to take it in ?—Yes, I should say so. I am not aware of anyone else.

32,281. Well, now then we come down to the second election of 1866. Did you vote then ?—I did.

32,282. For Mr. Patton again, I presume ?—For Mr. Patton.

32,283. Was Mr. Patton again staying at your house ?—He did.

32,284. Was Mr. Westropp down with him the second time ?—He was not.

32,285. Was Mr. Pitman down with the second time ?—I cannot recollect whether Mr Pitman was there or not.

32,286. As far as you recollect there was only Mr. Patton and his wife ?—Mr. Patton's wife was not with him the second time.

32,287. On that occasion did you get anything for your vote ?—I did not.

32,288. Had you a bill for treating then ?—No bill for treating then, only merely his private account.

32,289. Was there any bottling of voters at your house then ?—There was not, because the election was lost early in the day.

32,290. I only want to know. Is that all you know of the second election of 1866 ?—That is all.

32,291. Now come to 1868, a more important matter respecting yourself. You were still at "The Clarence" and still a voter?—Yes.

32,292. You did not get anything for your vote?—I did not.

32,293. Will you explain to us about this money, which it is said you promised, 3*l.* in the first instance to the two men, and they then said they must have more, they wanted 5*l.*, and Temblett gave you a wink, and upon that you acted and gave 5*l.*?—I will tell you. That morning we had been indulging a little in my private room in some champagne on the unexpected success of carrying our two gentlemen, and the news came in that the tide had turned, that the others were creeping up gradually, and our men and I myself in an unlucky moment went into the passage and saw those two men, the elder Trapnell, who was an old servant of my father's years ago, his son was with him, and I asked him "Why, have you not been "to poll?" They said "No." I said "Why not "go?" Well, they wanted some money, and I said there was nothing going on our side, and they said "There is something going on the other." I said "Go to poll," and if Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray succeeded in getting into Parliament perhaps something would be done for them afterwards. So they said they would go if I would give them a promise. I said "Well, what do you want, will 3*l.* do?" They said "No, we shall require more than 3*l.* If you "will give your word you will give us 5*l.* apiece we "will go to poll directly." I said "Very well, you "go."

32,294. You did not give them any money?—I did not on that occasion. I gave one of them, the son, 1*l.*, the father I gave 2*l.*

32,295. Before they voted?—No, after they had voted, a long time.

32,296. But in performance of that promise?—In performance of that promise which I made then.

32,297. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you not to give them the whole 5*l.*?—Well, I hesitated a good deal about paying them at all, for I thought it was not very likely that ever I should get the money, but for my word's sake I paid them 1*l.* at a time. The young man Trapnell I guaranteed a suit of clothes, which he had made at Cooper's.

32,298. What did you pay for them?—3*l.* 19*s.*; he has had all his 5*l.*

32,299. (Mr. Price.) And the other has had how much?—The other has had only 2*l.*

32,300. Was not there a third man you promised something to that day?—No.

32,301. Was he called before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—He was not.

32,302. (Mr. Anstey.) What is Trapnell's Christian name?—Isaac the senior, and James the junior.

32,303. (Mr. Price.) Have you been repaid that 5*l.*?—I have not.

32,304. In any shape or way?—Not at all.

32,305. You have not added it on to your bill against Mr. Westropp?—I have not, one shilling.

32,306. (Mr. Anstey.) To whom did you look to be paid?—No one at all. I did not expect ever to get the money; and I would not think of taking it now the gentlemen have been unsuccessful.

32,307. To whom did you at one time look for repayment?—I should have looked to the agents for repayment if there was anything given afterwards.

32,308. Who was that?—Why, Mr. Brice; he was the agent.

32,309. Have you had any quiet conversation with Mr. Brice since the election on the subject?—I do not recollect having any conversation whatever. I spoke to Mr. Brice afterwards, and told him what I had done, and he said, "You should not have touched "it."

32,310. You have had so much conversation as that?—I have had so much conversation as that.

32,311. And he told you what?—That I should not have touched it; those were his words.

32,312. But it was the voters who touched it, not you?—Well, those were the words of Mr. Brice.

32,313. Did he tell you anything about looking to him for repayment?—He never held out any hopes.

32,314. Did he tell you you were not to hope?—He always told me so.

32,315. Always?—Always told me there was no chance of getting the money.

32,316. He has told you more than once then?—Since the petition.

32,317. That is what I say, several conversations?—No, not several, only on two occasions, I think.

32,318. "Always" you said, and then he has told you not to expect it?—Yes.

32,319. Did he tell you that in a way which made you believe that he was very sincere in saying so, or that there was some hope notwithstanding his words?—Well, I believe from what he said he did not leave any hope for me to expect to receive the money from him.

32,320. From him?—From him.

32,321. And from no other quarter?—No other, because I should have received it from him as agent.

32,322. You have never found anything like fairy money left at your house since the last election?—I have not.

32,323. It may come.—Well, I have not received Mr. Westropp's account, his private account.

32,324. His account is still unpaid?—His account is still unpaid.

32,325. And also Mr. Gray's?—Yes, and also Mr. Gray's.

32,326. You have the materials for making the account?—They have had their bills.

32,327. What was the amount of their bill?

32,328. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose Mr. Patton's accounts have all been settled?—Mr. Patton's bills have all been settled; the amount of Mr. Westropp's and Mr. Gray's bills, that was from the commencement of October, they came down for a month—

32,329. The 10th October?—The commencement. I have not the date here. That was 21*l.* 16*s.*

32,330. From the 10th to the middle of November?—From the 10th to the middle of November, one month's account, 21*l.* 16*s.*, and their second account was from November; they were there a long time, and it was altogether for posting. Mr. Westropp's private account when he came down about the petition, he came down alone, was altogether from the commencement, staying at my house till they left, 139*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*

32,331. Were there any payments made either by Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray, or for them?—None at all. I never had a shilling of their money yet.

32,332. Does not it strike you as a very long time to leave a mere hotel account unsettled?—It is.

32,333. Does not that suggest that in Mr. Westropp's mind, if not in yours, there are other items of expenditure which he has to account for?—I really do not know; but I have applied for the account to Mr. Brice, and they have said, in consequence of the Commission coming down, and one thing and another, they did not feel inclined to pay it.

32,334. (Mr. Price.) If there are no items but what a gentleman would legitimately incur for himself or a few friends by way of hospitality, why should he be afraid of paying it?—Well, I think it lies between the lawyers and themselves. They fancy that the lawyers have had sufficient to pay my account, and the lawyers fancy that there are other claims on them.

32,335. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not it that there are items for conveying voters to the poll in hired carriages in that account?—No.

32,336. Were not there such items?—I lent a carriage from my stables to take two or three, such as Saunders, who could not go.

32,337. There was not any general system?—No; I never charged a shilling for a carriage.

32,338. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not this what Mr. Brice said to you, returning to the question I have been putting to you, that having regard to the election trial and the present Commission, and one thing and another, Westropp and Gray's agents thought it better to lay down a general rule, that is, to settle none of Westropp and Gray's for the present ?—I never heard that mentioned at all.

THIRTIETH DAY.

J. Leaker.

28 Sept. 1869.

32,339. Is not it the fact that there are no election accounts positively settled yet ?—I do not know a single word about any account but my own account. My account is still unpaid.

32,340. Do you suppose if all other bills had been settled yours would have been made an exception ?—I should think not. I should think there were several in abeyance up to the present time.

32,341. Is Mr. Brice the only election agent ?—No, the Trevors.

Mr. W. Brice.

Mr. William Brice recalled.

32,342. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you explain that ?—Yes, thoroughly. The day after the election Mr. Leaker came to me and said he had promised the Trapnells, and I told him he was a great fool for his pains. He felt greatly put out about it, and did not know what to do. I said, "They may prosecute you, or "bring a qui tam action or something of the kind "against you, and my advice is to make the best "terms you can. You are a great fool for your "pains, and must do the best you can under it." I think he suggested that it should be done through Temblett, who was a known bribery agent, and secure the thing in the best way he could. I believe it was done a pound at the time, so that they would not have a large sum of money. Then he came to me for Gray and Westropp's account, and I suggested that he should deliver his bill. I think it came to 130*l.* or something of that kind. I wrote to Mr. Gray for it. Mr. Gray replied it ought to be paid, and I suggested that the better way would be to send a cheque in that case. Well, he wrote again to say Mr. Westropp was hanging fire.

32,343. Who did ?—Mr. Gray. He said it ought to be settled, and he said, "I will take an early opportunity of seeing Mr. Westropp." I heard nothing more from him, and I wrote again to say I thought it was rather a discreditable thing, post boys bothering me for five shillings and chambermaids for their fees. I thought it was one of their bills that ought to be paid, more especially as there was nothing in the bill at all objectionable.

32,344. (Mr. Price.) Had you satisfied yourself of that ?—Yes, quite.

32,345. (Mr. Anstey.) You saw nothing objectionable ?—Nothing at all objectionable, and nothing that could be found fault with, and it was such a bill as they might produce to Mr. Justice Blackburn or yourself ; it was a mere private hotel bill.

32,346. (Mr. Price.) It might have gone through the hands of the election auditors ?—Oh yes. Then I should tell you that I saw Mr. Gray afterwards, and I said, "Mr. Gray, this ought to be settled."

32,347. My experience is that you must send in your personal expenses to the election agent ?—Yes, but this was the petition bill mostly ; the election bill was sent in in the usual course, but this was a private bill after the election.

32,348. (Mr. Anstey.) And neither of them has been settled ?—Yes, it has been settled in a way which Mr. Leaker did not state. I saw Mr. Gray and told him that this bill ought to be settled, it is rather a disreputable thing. He says, "I have told Mr. West-"ropp so, but he says he will not pay anything until "the whole thing is over." I said, "It is all very "well, but Mr. Leaker may issue a writ, and I do "not know whether I should dissuade him from it." I came home, gave Mr. Leaker a cheque, but with this qualification, "Do not consider the payment by "me, for I hold you answerable in case these gentle-"men should repudiate my payment."

32,349. (Mr. Coleridge.) You converted it into a loan ?—I converted it into a loan, for which I took his note of hand, which I can transfer to you or anyone else.

32,350. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not in the nature of a payment then ?—No.

32,351. Of Gray and Westropp ?—I have no claim on them ; there is no privity between us, but I was not going to allow Mr. Gray to pay it all and Mr. Westropp not to recoup him ; but I left him his remedy against Gray and Westropp, and mine against all three.

32,352. Were you acting for Mr. Gray ?—Yes. I was supposed to be acting for both, but I never had anything to do with Mr. Westropp or his money matters.

32,353. Are there any other bills connected with the election which are in the same case with that bill ?—I think I have had two or three sent in which I have sent back again.

32,354. As a matter of fact, there are claims on Westropp and Gray arising out of the election which are unsettled ?—No, not the election. The petition I was alluding to.

32,355. But the election ?—I know of none.

32,356. None unpaid ?—None unpaid.

32,357. Except this one ?—That is not an election bill ; it is the petition bill.

32,358. It is both. He has received no payment of either ?—Yes, he has sent his bill for the election before.

32,359. No doubt, but he had not got payment ?—Yes.

32,360. He says he has not ?—To the election auditor that must have been.

32,361. I have asked him, and he says not ?—He must have misunderstood you.

(Mr. Leaker.) I received a certain amount at the election before.

(The Witness.) This is a subsequent bill, consequently there cannot be any objection to it, not the least.

32,362. (Mr. Price.) There can be nothing to turn up since ?—No, it is what you call hanging fire. That is all.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I see Mr. Gray's personal expenses are 76*l.* 1*s.*, and Mr. Westropp 72*l.*

(Mr. James Trevor.) They were included in that amount.

Mr. J. Leaker.

Mr. James Leaker recalled.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then you have received a portion of this ?

32,363. (Mr. Price.) You received all up to the end of the election ?—Yes, what was incurred before the election ; legitimate expenses, such as rooms on the election day, and those things.

32,364–5. They make a return to the returning officer through the election agent. 76*l.* 1*s.*, and 72*l.* their personal expenses, that must surely include your bill, would it ?—Yes, my bill, the election expenses, not the private bill.

(Mr. Trevor.) You will find there is another bill of Leaker's which I paid him.

32,366. (Mr. Price.) What bill have you been paid which you now speak of which you have in your hand ?—Merely the bill for the committee room and things that were sent to the polling booth.

32,367. No personal bill at all ?—No personal bill at all.

32,368. From the month of October down to the present time ?—No, not a shilling. I have received their personal bill.

32,369. (Mr. Anstey.) You used a phrase just now which struck me as important. You said that the only part of your bill which was paid was the demand for their own legitimate expenses. What other expenses were there in the month of October and November 1868 incurred at your place besides those which you call legitimate ?—No other expenses, only their private account in October.

32,370. What do you call the private account which is not settled by the election auditor ?—Their private account would be for their apartments, and dining, and wine.

32,371. And that is not in the account furnished to the election auditor ?—Certainly not.

32,372. Then do you mean legitimate expenses, or merely those expenses which were specified just now by you—the committee rooms, sending refreshments, or whatever it was ?—To the polling booths.

32,373. And things of that sort; but that formed a very small part of the entire demand, did not it ?—A small portion it was of the entire amount.

32,374. (Mr. Price.) Was it anything like 76*l.* ?—No, nothing at all. I gave Mr. Trevor the bill.

32,375. (Mr. Anstey.) As a matter of fact, how much money in pounds, shillings, and pence have you ever received on your demand against Westropp and Gray through the election auditor, if you received nothing from anybody else ?—I think, as far as I recollect, it would be 22*l.*

32,376. The entire demand is 139*l.*, is not it ?—139*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* There is one thing I forgot to mention, that at Bagehot's first election I was one of those who provided some money that made up the 300*l.* you heard of. I gave 30*l.*, to whom I cannot tell, but the party who paid me was Mr. Smith.

32,377. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Bealy Smith ?—Mr. Joseph Richard Smith.

32,378. (Mr. Anstey.) He repaid it to you ?—He repaid it to me, and he made this remark, when he repaid it, that it had not been required, and was in the same state as when it was received.

32,379. You mean the Alderman ?—Yes.

32,380. Were you about your house early on the polling day ?—I was not.

32,381. Can you tell me whether Mr. Westropp was or was not present, for it has been asserted by some and denied by one other person present at the early morning meeting, at the "Clarence" hotel that morning at 8 o'clock ?—I was in bed the time that meeting was held, but I have heard many parties say Mr. Westropp came from his bedroom partially dressed, and went in and addressed the electors on that occasion.

32,382. One person says that he was there from the beginning to the end, and nobody spoke but Mr. Hodges, and that Mr. Westropp was not there, and all the other witnesses say that he was there ?—Mr. Hodges will be able to tell you that.

32,383. Was Mr. Hodges always the chairman at meetings held there ?—No.

32,384. But he was that morning ?—I do not know. I cannot tell you. I was in bed at the time.

32,385. Did you see the condition of any of the voters, those who were about the front of the "Clarence" that day, who went up to poll for Westropp ?—Yes, I saw them continually.

32,386. Was there much intoxication amongst them ?—Well, nothing very particular; merely electioneering excitement, and some would be and others not.

32,387. About as much as usual in Bridgwater ?—Yes, about the same.

32,388. Which is a good deal ?—Well it is on certain occasions.

Mr. William Brice recalled.

(The Witness.) Mr. Leaker is a private client of mine, and he came to me in that capacity, and I may say, with reference to that allusion of his about the lawyers, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray paid a deposit of about 600*l.* or 700*l.* to pay the legitimate expenses of the whole election with.

32,389. (Mr. Price.) Are you responsible for these two returns, 121*l.* and 195*l.* ?—No, not in anyway.

32,390. Who is ?—They were sent to the election agent.

32,391. Are they furnished by you to Mr. Trevor ?—No, they were sent in direct to Mr. Trevor.

32,392. You say 400*l.* or 500*l.* was deposited to pay additional expenses ?—600*l.* or 700*l.*

32,393. Supposing these two were paid there would be a balance of available ?—Quite available for 139*l.*, but we are several hundreds out of pocket at this moment.

32,394. That accounts for it. We only want to know how you would account for it, because there would be a balance then, which if there had been no petition would be ample to pay Leaker's bill ?—No doubt.

32,395. And you say you are prepared to produce the account to show that has been expended on the expenses of the petition ?—We are 700*l.* out of pocket at the present moment.

Emily Day sworn.

32,396. (Mr. Price.) Are you the under-waitress at the "Clarence" ?—Yes.

32,397. Were you so in 1866 ?—Yes.

32,398. You remember the election when Bagehot and Patton stood ?—Yes.

32,399. During that day, do you remember any voters being brought to the "Clarence," and put into the smoke room ?—No.

32,400. None at all ?—No.

32,401. Do you remember going to the smoke room during the day to wait on anybody there ?—I might have gone in. I cannot say.

32,402. Do you remember whether you saw a number of 15 to 20 men there for some time ?—No, I cannot remember.

32,403. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect supplying them, not the last election, but in 1866 ?—I cannot remember anything at all about it.

32,404. It is the last election of 1866, Vanderbyl's election ?—I cannot remember.

32,405. Do you remember supplying some people with drink, and not being paid at the time ?—I was paid for everything I took.

32,406. For everything you took on the election day there ?—Yes.

32,407. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember supplying some people with drink, and being paid by some one else who was with them—give these men drink, and pay for it ?—No, I cannot remember it at all. I know all I took in I was paid for.

32,408. Do you remember anyone being there in June 1866, when Bagehot came ?—No.

32,409. (Mr. Price.) There were a great number of people in and out of your house that day ?—Yes.

32,410. Have you no recollection of seeing a number of 15 to 20 men in the smoking room, who were there a considerable number of times ?—There may have been, but I cannot remember.

32,411. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you remember supplying a great deal of lemonade. Mr. Leaker said it was a very hot day, and they chiefly had lemonade? —I cannot recollect what I took them.

32,412. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you in charge of the smoking room at all that day?—Yes.

32,413. And at the last election were you in charge of the old coffee room?—No; I was never in there that I know of.

32,414. Mr. Vanderbyl's election the next month? —No, I do not know that I was.

32,415. Who was in charge of the old coffee room that day? That was July 1866, the second election that year, when Vanderbyl was elected, and Patton thrown out.—I cannot say.

32,416. Do you remember who had charge of the old coffee room?—No, I cannot say.

32,417. (Mr. Coleridge.) The present waiter was not at the "Clarence" in 1866?—No.

32,418. Who was?—There was a waitress then.

Mr. J. Leaker.

MR. JAMES LEAKER recalled.

32,419. (Mr. Anstey.) Who had charge of the room described as the old coffee room at Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866, when Mr. Patton was defeated?—We had a waitress on that occasion.

32,420. What was her name? — She is now married, and living at Taunton.

32,421. What is her name?—Hackleton now. I can give the address: "The Billiard Room, Taunton." Her husband is a billiard marker.

Mr. R. Hodges.

MR. RICHARD HODGES sworn.

32,422. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a hatter and draper?—I am a woollen draper and general outfitter.

32,423. Did you take part at the last election on the side of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray?—Yes.

32,424. And you voted for those?—Yes.

32,425. Were you chairman at a meeting at the "Clarence Hotel" early on the morning of the polling day?—I was.

32,426. You were in the chair on that day. Was Mr. Westropp present at the meeting that morning? —Mr. Westropp was present part of the time.

32,427. Did he address the people who were there? —He did.

32,428. What did he say to them?—It would be impossible for me to tell you what Mr. Westropp said on that occasion. I was far too excited to recollect what Mr. Westropp said. I recollect a portion of what he said, but very little.

32,429. Tell me what that little was?—I recollect perfectly well, if you will allow me to begin by saying that Mr. Gray was the first to come on the platform, and Mr. Gray said to me, "What shall we say to the "men?" "Tell them," I said, "there will be no "money;" and Mr. Westropp heard the remark beyond a doubt, and came forward to the men, he being the senior candidate, and told them so, that there would be no money; that all he could ask them to do was to go and poll for him like men, to carry out the pledge which they intended to hold towards the Conservative party of the town generally, and themselves in particular; and Mr. Gray followed in the same strain, and told them that he hoped they would poll for him; that he was anxious to see the Conservative Working Men's Association poll for himself and Mr. Westropp; and I believe from the arguments employed on that occasion,—and perhaps I may take credit more particularly for it myself, as I spoke much longer than those gentlemen did,—I believe those arguments used on that occasion were the means of causing the men to poll.

32,430. Did you hear anything said by Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray as to the danger of bribery; the dangers which beset bribery since the new Act?—I did not.

32,431. Or about going to prison?—No; but I used a great many of those arguments myself.

32,432. Why was it thought necessary for either Mr. Gray or Mr. Westropp to tell the people who were present that there would be no money?—For this reason, that I called that meeting on my own responsibility, but I had no one to back me up except the men themselves. The men were reputed in Bridgwater to be seeking for money, and it was a very risky thing almost for me to do under those circumstances, to go to those men, and say, "Go to the poll, "my men." I wanted Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray to go and tell them themselves.

32,433. Why did you call that meeting?—I called that meeting from circumstances that occurred the night before.

32,434. What was that?—The night before the election; but I think I am rather before my time, because I need go back further beyond that, perhaps a week or more, but, at all events, I will give you what occurred the night before. In the afternoon I had men coming to me, and telling me the Liberals were very active indeed in getting the voters together. I said, "Surely they are not going to "bribe them to-day," and the remark that was made was, "Well, I do not know that, it has been done in "Bridgwater, and we ought to look after the men." "Well," I said, "I know nothing about it; the only "think I have heard is that there will be no money, "that is for certain." I had heard from different parties that there would be money, but not for certain that there would be; but I had heard from authority on which I could depend so far, that there would not be money, that is the lawyers. I heard from Mr. Brice, in fact.

32,435. How late was it that you heard that—that there would not be money?—Previous to this night; I heard it that night as well, but something like three or four days before.

32,436. You had heard it positively for the first time that night?—Positively. I heard it positively from the gentlemen themselves, in fact.

32,437. That night?—That night.

32,438. How late?—About 9 o'clock, or it might have been a little after I am not sure about that.

32,439. How could that move you to call a meeting of the bribable men to tell them that they were to have no money?—Merely this reason—I do not know that they were bribable men.

32,440. You have mentioned already persons of that kind.—Reputed to be. I cannot say that they were.

32,441. But you sent for them because they were so reputed.—No, I did not send for them; it was a public call.

32,442. Well, you called for them.—Well, I will tell you.

32,443. It is quite immaterial. You called that meeting of persons because they were reputed to be bribable men, and you wanted to appeal to them not to take bribes; what earthly effect would such an appeal have in your opinion?—I should appeal to all Bridgwater men the same as the Liberals appealed to the working men of the Liberal side from that place, asking them not to poll for money.

32,444. Were they merely the bribable men of your own party?—You have had it that nearly all Bridgwater are bribable men.

32,445. If you will take the trouble to hear my question you would save us much time. Were those you invited that morning, or called that morning, to the meeting men of your own party or men of both parties?—Men of both parties, if they choose to come to a public meeting.

32,446. How could the incident of the night before, namely, your having heard that the other side were going to bribe, have induced you to call that meeting?—I was going to state it to you. When I came to the "Clarence" I went with the intention of knowing whether there was money or not. I considered I was in that position that I ought to know, not as a bribery agent, but that I might make my services useful to carry the election for the Conservatives if possible.

32,447. Whether money was going or not?—Whether money was going or not.

32,448. That was that morning?—That was the night before, and I went to the "Clarence" with three other gentlemen, that is, Mr. Heard, and Dr. Farmer, and Mr. William Moore. When we came up into the room where the candidates were, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and I think there were two strange gentlemen, at least I know one by name, Mr. Toogood, and I am not sure about the other, but I think a friend of Mr. Gray or Mr. Trevor, I rather think it was Mr. James Trevor, but I am not certain about that, and Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, and one or two others, but I cannot recollect names now, and we said, "Well, gentlemen, we have come to know "whether there is money to be spent or not," and the reply we had was, "Certainly not." Mr. Gray said, "I shall not spend one penny piece illegally in Bridg-"water on anything, but any amount that you can "spend that is legal I am prepared to do." "Well," I said, "if that is your decision, well and good; but "my impression is that Mr. Vanderbyl is come down "here to win the election, and will bribe wholesale as "he did before, and will beat us flying. But," I said, "cannot we let them know it? I will go for one, "and tell them that we are not going to bribe, and if "they do, it is at their peril." Well, I do not know who it was, but some one in the room said it was not advisable to do this, that if we did so it would be showing our hand, what we were going to play, whereas if we kept quiet we did not know what would turn up in the morning. Well, I think I left, and Mr. Joseph Richard Smith went home with me. I went home thoroughly satisfied in my own mind that we should be beaten, but I must tell you before I got home, as I was going out of the door, there was a lot of men in Bridgwater, as I had taken a very conspicuous part in getting up the Conservative Working Men's Association, who were waiting, and wanted to know whether there was to be money or not. As I passed out of the door, one man, of the name of Bowerman, said to me, "Well, sir, what shall we do?" I said, "Go home and go to bed." I believed it would be a hint broad enough to tell him there would be no money. I did not tell him that we were not going to spend any, but I said, "Before you go home, put "some one if you possibly can on the track of the "Liberal party, and let me know in the morning at 7 "o'clock whether they are going to spend money or "not." Well, he acted on this, because, as I told you, I went home and went to bed, and at five minutes past 7 I was at my front door, and the man Bowerman was there, and there may have been 20 others there, pulling a very long face, and I said, "Where are our "men?" and the reply was, "Well, I think most of "them are at home, for there was no one to keep "them together last night." I said, "So much the "better. Now, how about the Liberals? Have they "spent any money?" "Not a fraction." "Let me "know whether they have promised any." And the reply was, "Not a halfpenny." Then I was told what had occurred at an inn, the "Mason's Arms," in the bullock market, that is, that they had bottled up a number of men there, and given them drink, that these men were anticipating to be paid, that towards daybreak they considered they were throwing their chance away, that they could not get money, and could not get a promise, and therefore they started, and left the party in charge of them there to do the best they could. And from that very fact I drew my own conclusion that beyond all doubt the Liberals would not spend any money. Well, I acted on this at once, and did not take as many minutes to do it as it has taken me, and I said to those around me, "Go as fast "as you can to the right and left over the town, and "tell every one you meet that we shall meet at 8 "o'clock at the 'Clarence,' and anyone who likes to "come, voter or not voter, can come to the 'Clarence,' "we have a public meeting there." They did so, and a few minutes after 8 I arrived at the "Clarence."

32,449. I do not want to hear speeches, but still I must ask you the question which you have a quarter of an hour it appears to me to answer. What object did you propose to accomplish by this meeting, for I do not see it?—Simply this, that on the meeting there was some objection made by Mrs. Leaker to the men going up to the room at first.

32,450. I do not want details, but the object you had in your own mind when you convened this meeting; what was it to do?—Simply this, to tell the men that we were not going to spend money, and the Liberals said they had only to fulfil their promises to us, and we should win.

32,451. There was something occurred some time before you stated, which you were going to allude to; what was that?—I think on the Sunday it was that I was passing down the Fore Street, and I met young Mr. Pain, and he said, "Well, how do you think we "are getting on." I said, "Very well, I should say;" but I said, "Will there be any money," and his reply was, "I believe so." Well, I was impressed from that, as he had canvassed, that there would be.

32,452. Was it Mr. Pain the lawyer?—Mr. Pain the lawyer.

32,453. What firm?—He is the son. I think it was Mr. Pain, junior, there are two.

32,454. He was not concerned professionally, I think?—He was canvassing with them. I do not know whether concerned.

32,455. Was it the young or the old man you saw?—It was the young man.

32,456. He said there would be money?—He said, as near as I can recollect his words were to this effect, that he thought there was no money.

32,457. Previous to that, on the 14th of November, did you write that letter to Mr. Hayward (handing it)?—I did.

32,458. That letter was proved by Mr. Brice yesterday, and doubted by one of your party?—There is no doubt about it, it is on my printed headed paper.

32,459. What is the meaning of telling him, "Feeling assured it would prove in the future every-"thing you could wish for"?—As a Conservative I do believe it would. I believed it favourable.

32,460. To Mr. Hayward?—Yes, Hayward individually.

32,461. What Hayward was it?—Hayward the captain.

32,462. Who stated before Mr. Justice Blackburn that he had not been bribed?—He is a customer of mine, and comes to the shop, he often has done.

32,463. You see it is addressed to him in terms of intimacy, "Dear sir," and it seems that you know what he could wish for. You are aware of the character of this Mr. Hayward, are not you?—I am not, I was not then. I can only say this that at that time he was holding rather a respectable position.

32,464. Why do you call Mr. Gray by the significant name co-partner with Mr. Westropp?—I do not know. I might as well call him so as "Mr. Gray;" I did not see any difference much.

32,465. "Co-partner" has a very significant sound about it to a person in trade?—He would be a co-partner if he comes with Mr. Westropp, in expenses and everything else.

32,466. No doubt in buying and selling the borough; but supposing there was no buying and selling?—He could be, for this very reason, that the whole of their expenses, whether 10*l.* or 10,000*l.*, he would be liable for one half of, most decidedly.

32,467. Did you write that letter to Mr. Hayward, knowing that Mr. Hayward was a corruptible person?—I did not.

32,468. Did you believe him to be corruptible?—I do now, because he has been bribed. I did not then.

32,469. Would you think of writing it all the same, whether he was bribable or not bribable?—I should; he was a respectable captain at that time.

32,470. You would all the same?—I would all the same, and I did to several out of the town, whose names I will give you.

32,471. Corruptible persons?—I do not know that they are.

32,472. I am asking you about corruptible persons; do you say that you would have written in this strain?—Yes, to any person.

32,473. Bribable or not bribable?—Yes, to any person out of town.

32,474. Did you send many of those letters?—I think I sent six or seven, I am not sure.

32,475. All worded in the same way?—No, I think you will find them all worded different; I think very probably.

32,476. But to the same effect?—Well, perhaps not.

32,477. Was the word "co-partner" in all of them?—I should say not. I should say you would not find it in any of the others.

32,478. Did each contain "it," that is, the election, "Would prove in the future everything you could wish for"?—I do not know.

32,479. You have already told me you were quite prepared to have done just the same thing for Westropp and Gray, whether money was to be spent or not?—Most decidedly. I am a Conservative, and will do my best for the cause. I have written to one Charles Hankell, who has been mentioned here, of Wellington.

32,480. (Mr. Price.) Did you believe Hayward to be a Conservative at the time you wrote?—Yes, I did, because I had some talk with him previously, some month or nearly previous to this.

32,481. Had he ever voted for the Conservatives?—I really do not know. There is one thing I should like to state in respect of that letter. Mr. Hayward came to me early on the morning of the poll, and said, "Oh, I "had the letter from you all right." I said, "That "is all right. Have you polled." He said, "No." I said, "Go to poll then as soon as you like." Well he said, "How about my expenses." I said, "I "know nothing about your expenses, most decidedly "not; if you come home here to vote, you vote for "your own interest, go and poll the same as I do;" but he did not poll, and I heard afterwards that he had been bribed. I wrote to one Henry Latham, of Gloucester, and to Captain Hayward, at Swansea. I wrote to one Robert Waters, of Bristol, and I wrote to Henry Teague, Longfellow Road, Mile End Road, London. I believe that is all, I am not certain; but I entered these because I like to take care of these sort of things in case they are wanted.

32,482. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you wrote to Mr. Hayward believing him to be a Conservative?—I did.

32,483. His own account of himself is, that after the election at the time of the election trial he really did not know whether he had ever been a Conservative in politics, or what he was before and at the time of the election, so that you must have known more about him than he did himself?—That is very often the case. Men will very often express opinions they do not know themselves.

32,484. Did not you write that letter to him intending to give him confidence that if money was going at any future time he would have all he could wish for?—Decidedly not. I should have told him so when I saw him in the morning; but there are previous elections in which I took part.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us anything you know.

32,485. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever given money at any election?—I have not, and never received any in my life.

32,486. Have you ever made a promise of money in any way?—I have not. I have never given a promise, and I never received a promise. I never had a bill or anything else.

32,487. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever had money paid after the election?—No.

32,488. As a present?—No, certainly not.

32,489. How many elections have you voted at?—I voted at four elections since 1865.

32,490. (Mr. Price.) What is it you want to tell us; is it anything we do not know already?—It is this much: I was one of those who, I suppose, would be accused of helping to find the money for Patton's first election.

32,491. Did you?—Well, I did not know at the time decidedly that it was for that purpose, although I guessed as much.

32,492 Who got it from you?—Mr. Westropp himself took it out of my hands.

32,493. What, the money?—The money.

32,494. How much?—30*l.*

32,495. Did he tell you what it was for?—He did not.

32,496. How did he put it; did he say, "I want "you to lend me 30*l.*," or what?—No, I will tell you. Mr. Moore met me as I was going into the committee room of the "Clarence." He was coming down stairs, and he said, "Hodges," I think it was Mr. Moore, I am not decided about it, but I believe he said, "Have you any money at home?" And I said, "Yes, a little, I think." He said, "Will you "lend it to Mr. Westropp?" I said, "Most de-"cidedly," and went home; and I had 30*l.* in the house, and I took it across, and took it upstairs, knocked at the door, and opened it on the right-hand side. I saw several gentlemen in the room, and I went back and knocked at another door, thinking of course Mr. Westropp was not there, and I should have to find him elsewhere, and Mr. Westropp was in the other room, the bedroom, and I gave him the bag with the money in it.

32,497. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say anything?—I do not really recollect.

32,498. Who repaid you that?—Mr. Joseph Richard Smith repaid me himself.

32,499. How long after the election?—I think from three weeks to a month; my hand book will tell you that exactly.

32,500. (Mr. Anstey.) That would go only a very little way itself in Mr. Patton's large expenses?—It would go a very little way, although I did not know what his expenses were, for I do not mix in bribery at all.

32,501. Do you know who else Moore applied to to advance money besides you?—I cannot say.

32,502. You do not know who the others were?—I do not know who the others were. There is one other little thing I should like to mention that has been spoken of, that at the meeting at Mr. Joseph Richard Smith's, there was a giving out of some books, which has been spoken of, I believe, in this hall by some witness, that it was for the purpose of consulting with respect to money spent; it is a complete farce.

32,503. There has not been any such evidence given. The statement was this, that the usual books were given up, and in those books were some names, the names of persons who were reputed to be bribable, others not?—The names of all the voters in Bridgwater, every voter in Bridgwater.

32,504. You are mistaken in supposing there was anything of the sort, if you are going to contradict that it is only a waste of time?—I do not contradict anything. I only say that no question of money was mentioned. Nothing was said about it.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

The (Witness.) I should wish you to ask Mr. Hodges this question, whether he did not tell me in his own shop since the election that the meeting of the Conservative men at the "Clarence," the morning of the poll, was called, and that the idea all the men had when they came to that meeting was beyond all doubt that they would be paid; that at that meeting Mr. Westropp addressed them, and Mr. Hodges also, who spoke most, and he so arranged his language that it was completely diplomatic, that he did not make a promise, did not commit himself to a promise, but caused every man there to believe that they would be paid, and they went to poll under that impression.

32,505. (Mr. Price.) I think we are quite sufficiently satisfied that the majority which Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray got early in the day was caused by the feeling that they would get money if any money was going. We do not believe that the majority was got as a pure majority—I say Mr. Hodges told me so.

RICHARD HODGES recalled. R. Hodges.

32,506. (Mr. Price.) What do you say to that?—It is a long question, but I will answer it.

32,507. Did you tell Allan the idea the men had after you called that meeting was that they would be paid?—I did not, but I did say this, it was the idea of the men afterwards from the language used at the meeting in the morning at the "Clarence" they would be paid money, but that idea was put into their heads by the Liberals of Bridgwater.

32,508. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell Allan that the language from which these men inferred that they were going to be paid some time or other was the diplomatic or clever language used by Mr. Westropp and yourself?—I did not. I am not capable of using such clever language, as I did not think it was possible.

32,509. By whom was the language used then?—There was no language used.

32,510. Have not you one minute ago said that you confessed to have told Allan that after the meeting was over the men understood from the language used at that meeting that they were to expect money?—A week after.

32,511. Whether a week or not after does not signify. I ask you whose language you are referring to, yours or Mr. Westropp's?—I am not referring to anyone's language.

32,512. You say the men inferred from language used at that meeting addressed to them that there was going to be money?—From the language used that morning.

32,513. By whom?—I cannot say.

(Mr. Price.) You were the chief speaker.

32,514. (Mr. Anstey.) You wanted to inflict on us some speech of your own, and you have told us something about a speech by Mr. Westropp; were there any other speakers there?—There was Mr. Westropp, Mr. Gray, and myself.

32,515. (Mr. Price.) Then it would have been either Mr. Westropp, Mr. Gray, or yourself, or all three, or two of the three from whose language the men understood that?—I did not consider so.

32,516. But there was no other speaker?—The Liberals spoke a good deal two days afterwards.

32,517. You said, at that meeting the language used; do not equivocate and palter with the truth?—They inferred it from the language of the Liberals.

32,518. (Mr. Anstey.) That is not your language.—From the language the Liberals pretended to say had been used at the meeting.

32,519. You said nothing of the sort. The object of your being recalled is to answer the questions put to you as to what you told Allan, and you deny a portion of what he says you told him; but you admit the rest. You say, you told Allan from the language, not saying whose, at that meeting however, the people inferred so and so, and had been persuaded so to think by the interpretation put on that language by the Liberals. My question was to you immediately, "By whom was it used; by Mr. Westropp? Cer-"tainly not. By yourself? Certainly not; I am "not capable of it." I ask you whether, if not you, was there not but one other speaker, and that a very poor speaker, according to Mr. Trevor, Mr. Gray, and now you say you did not know by whom the language was used, or to whom you referred when you made mention of it. You are paltering with the truth.—I should like to make one other remark, and that bearing out what I say. After the election was over we had determined to petition, and Mr. John Smith sent for a man who had been paid, who had polled for the Conservative party, who had an I. O .U.

32,520. Were you present?—I have his evidence down.

32,521. Were you present at the conversation?—I was not, but I can produce the witness.

32,522. We must call him; we cannot take it second-hand.—It merely amounts to this, if I call him you will hear him I suppose.

32,523. (Mr. Anstey.) If you will state to our secretary what he will say?—I shall be very pleased, because I should like to clear my character.

JOHN TRUMAN recalled. J. Truman.

(Mr. Price.) Now we have had evidence this morning from several witnesses which implicates you very seriously about the question of this money. I do not dare to say how many; but certainly a great proportion of those whom you vouched to having paid yourself, or through Newton, or through Jarman. You say 40*l.* through Jarman and 50*l.* Newton, and you say you paid yourself a very great part of this money, and they denied that they got a farthing from you.

32,524. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Harden goes further, and says you took from his list to make up yours?—I should like to demand Harden's book. He took charge of my book after the polling day was over.

32,525. (Mr. Price.) Your vouching that does not advance the thing one atom. You have vouched to certain men having been paid 10*l.*?—Yes.

32,526. You gave the names?—There is one I did not name, Sellick; and you have not called on Morrish and those men, and there is another man, if you will allow me to call the witness.

32,527. Sellick has been called?—He will say I gave him 10*l.* if you will allow him to be recalled. Parties were with me in Harden's absence.

32,528. (Mr. Coleridge.) These men have sworn distinctly that they did get the money, but not from you?—Who?

32,529. Several of them to-day; and if you kept the money Harden spent it, and if you spent it Harden kept it. There is no doubt about that, that the two cannot make up the accounts?—I never kept a penny. Harden has been down to every party since Friday to get them to say he paid them instead of me. He has been to the house of nearly everyone here to-day to get them up, and if you will allow me I will call Mr. James Morrish, on the Quay.

32,530. (Mr. Price.) How do you get over the case of the Mogridges?—I paid both in Harden's house, and Brooks will tell you that I paid him the money.

32,531. He says you did not?—I did pay him. Of course there is oath against oath, but I did pay him.

THIRTIETH DAY.
J. Truman.
28 Sept. 1869.

32,532. (Mr. Coleridge.) These men have no object, you have an object in concealing it. They have none because they own they were paid, the only thing is by different persons; therefore it is for you to clear yourself, and not them.—I demand Harden's book and my own, he had the two and you will see my list.

32,533. Just at the time you were accused of having embezzled these sums, July 28th, I see cash, July 24*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*, and August 4th, 25*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.*; can you explain those items, the two first credits there?—That is money I put into the bank for my customers' accounts.

32,534. Do you mean to say that is no part of the money you received for the purposes of bribery?—Not a penny piece.

S. R. K. Bransby.

Samuel Robert Knevett Bransby sworn.

32,535. (Mr. Price.) Were you a waiter at the "Clarence" Hotel?—No.

32,536. Were you there at Vanderbyl's first election in 1866?—The first election.

32,537. Did you see any voters there bottled up in the coffee room?—They were not at all.

32,538. Were they in the coffee room?—They were in a room behind. I went in to get some names that had not polled, and some one asked me to stand by the door to keep hostile persons from going in there. Anybody could get out if they chose.

32,539. Did you stand there to keep people from going in?—Yes.

32,540. How did you know what people?—Because I know the generality of the Radicals. I know most people in Bridgwater.

32,541. You were to keep the Radicals from going to them?—Yes; if they wanted to, of course, I should call some one else, I could not do it myself.

32,542. (Mr. Anstey.) You were to prevent any communication with the opposite party?—Yes.

32,543. (Mr. Price.) How were the men amused inside, or reconciled?—With conversation, a quiet pipe and a glass, or anything like that.

32,544. Had everybody a pipe in his mouth?—I do not know that they were all smoking.

32,545. All drinking?—Yes.

32,546. They were all employed in a friendly way?—No; some were thinking more serious, thinking what money they could get, not all drinking.

32,547. Were they any of them talking about money?—They would say what is going, what is the good of keeping us here, or something like that; we should like to know what is going on the other side.

32,548. (Mr. Anstey.) In the way of money you mean?—Yes, in the way of money.

32,549. Some were saying that, and some not, but all were drinking?—No, I did not say all.

32,550. And some drunk?—I suppose they were.

32,551. Some were drunk at that time?—Yes, getting merry. I do not know whether they were drunk or not.

32,552. How many were there altogether?—I saw about 30.

Adjourned to Thursday next, at half-past 10.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY.

30th September 1869.

PRESENT:

Edwin Plumer Price, Esq., Q.C.
Thomas Chisholm Anstey, Esq.
Charles Edward Coleridge, Esq.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY.
Mrs. M. Smith.
30 Sept. 1869.

Mrs. Maria Smith sworn.

32,553. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember some question about some papers which was raised soon after the transaction by which Mr. Boyle purchased the business of Smith and Son, I think it was, or the business of Mr. Bealy Smith here in Bridgwater?—All my husband's private papers were sent to our house.

32,554. Just about the beginning of last year, do you remember some question being raised as to what was to be done with the papers that related to the election of 1865, and, I think, subsequent elections, but one of them?—No, I do not remember any question.

32,555. Do you remember anyone advising that those papers should be burnt?—I asked my husband what I should do with the papers, and he said as far as he knew there was no paper of any value there.

32,556. Did you ask him what you should do with the papers relating to election business?—I told him that they were papers which were sent up to our house after the disposal of his business and my son entirely leaving it, and I asked him what I should do with the papers, and he said, "As far as I know, there "is nothing at all of importance."

32,557. He said so?—Yes; "and you can use "them for anything."

32,558. What?—"For what you like," so I tore them up, and some went into my kitchen to light fires and so were burnt.

32,559. When?—Not till after the petition.

32,560. The last petition?—Yes.

32,561. Therefore it would be about the beginning of the present year?—I do not remember when the petition was, but it was a day or so afterwards.

32,562. The petition was in February?—February.

32,563. Were there a great number of papers, briefs and so on?—They seemed to me poll sheets and briefs, and there were some letters and different papers.

32,564. Do you remember whether any related to the year 1866 or 1865?—I cannot tell. I never read any of them.

32,565. What we want particularly to know is what has become of the papers used by the firm in 1866?—That was after my husband had left it; he left it in 1865.

32,566. But the firm of Smith and Son appears to have been the agents before the House of Commons at the trial of the petition against Mr. Kinglake, the cross petition, and also in support of the seat of Mr. Westropp against the petition of Kinglake and Shelley?—My husband was taken ill before the petition.

32,567. But the papers were prepared in that office; who was the managing clerk then when he was taken ill, do you remember?—I do not know whether Mr. Chapman or Mr. Boys.

32,568. But both were in the employment of the firm?—Both, I believe.

32,569. Those are the papers we particularly want, the briefs that were prepared for counsel, and held by counsel before the Committee of the House of Commons in 1866 ?—I do not know, but I suppose those papers would be what were sent to me.

32,570. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not there a young Mr. Neal in the office at the time, an articled clerk ?—He was then an articled clerk, he had not left then; he was an articled clerk when my husband left the office, but afterwards his articles were transferred.

32,571. (Mr. Anstey.) If those papers I spoke of were amongst the papers about which you spoke to Mr. Smith, then they have all been destroyed ?—All been destroyed.

32,572. Was anything said to you by Mr. Smith or by anybody about its not being safe to keep those papers ?—No, the only person—I remember saying to Mr. Boyle, the gentleman here, "I shall destroy these "papers;" and he said, "Well, I would not do any-"thing until after the petition in case they should be "wanted, and I do not know but what they will;" and Mr. Westropp came down, and my husband said, "Ask Mr. Westropp."

32,573. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not Mr. Boyle tell you some time after the petition Mr. Justice Blackburn had reported corrupt practices had extensively prevailed in Bridgwater ?—No, I had not seen Mr. Boyle.

32,574. It was before the petition he told you this ?—Before the petition and after the petition. I thought that everything was at an end of course, and there was not a paper destroyed, and my husband said, "Mr. Westropp is down here, ask him," and he said, "I do not know, there is a packet of letters I should "be very glad to get if they are there, because they "relate very much to family matters;" and there was a packet, and I sent them to Mr. Westropp. I did not read those letters.

32,575. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any of them appear to be old briefs ?—No, at least I did not know they were briefs. They were large sheets of paper written on. I should have told you that they were copies of the blue book, if asked.

32,576. Those went up to town ?—Then I do not know, because I did not read them.

32,577. If there were any other papers besides those which you asked your husband about, where should we be likely to hear of them ?—I do not know, because my husband's things were all kept at the office except his own deeds. There was a muniment room at the office for everything.

32,578. They were moved to the house, I understand ?—They were moved. There was a lot of papers, many of my husband's private deeds, there, and they were moved to the house afterwards, and these papers came with them. My son told me he had sent them, and he said, "They are my father's "private property, you can do as you like." He did not advise me to burn them or anything. He said I could do as I liked.

32,579. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know where Mr. Bealy Smith is now ?—I have a letter in my pocket which can tell you.

32,580. From where ?—From Melbourne, which you can see; but I should not like it to appear in print.

32,581. No; if you merely show us the postmark and say it is his handwriting, that will do.—This is the letter (handing it in).

32,582. When did you receive this ?—It was sent to me at Exmouth a day or two after it came to Bridgwater.

32,583. I see it is addressed to "Mrs. Smith, Bin-"ford House, Bridgwater," England, and on it is "Collingwood, June 30th, Victoria." Will you swear that that letter is in Mr. Bealy Smith's handwriting ?—Yes.

32,584. (Mr. Anstey.) Does that inform you that he is on his way home to England, or about to leave ?—Perhaps it would be more satisfactory to you to read it. The date is the 30th June 1869, Melbourne, and this is all he says,—

32,585. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does he say anything about election inquiries in it ?—The only thing he says, after speaking of other matters is, "I should "like to hear something of the election petition and "Commission."

32,586. And so should we of him on the Commission.—He says he is still in Melbourne, and goes on. "I have not yet got employment; I have sought it, "and not yet got it. I do not know whether to go "to the diggings, go to Sydney, return to England, "or stay here."

32,587. (Mr. Anstey.) That is the last letter you had ?—That is the last letter I have had. That is the 30th June; there is the postmark.

32,588. Have you had no telegram from him ?—No, and I have not replied to the letter.

32,589. Can you tell me whether your husband has been looking at some land at Horsey Slimes lately ?—Yes.

32,590. How lately ?—I cannot tell you, I am sure, but he was driving out, and got out of the carriage to look at some land; a field by the side of the road.

32.591. Which he was going to purchase ?—He thought of doing it, but did not do so.

32,592. How long ago was it ?—It might be two, three, or four months.

32,593. Weeks ?—Months, or it might not be so long. I have not borne it in my mind at all.

32,594. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he any worse now than he was then ?—No, certainly not.

32,595. Do you mean that in your opinion it would be impossible for us to examine him quietly in his room in the same way as we are now examining ?—I believe it would produce his death, because he is naturally a very excitable man, and was made a scapegoat of in his earlier days in politics, and it is a thing above all others that excites him. I believe, and my medical friends tell me, that if I permitted it I must expect my husband to have another attack of paralysis on the spot, which would kill him.

32,596. Was he worse after the interview the other day ?—He was wearied and excitable, and said the next day that he felt exceeding wearied from it.

32,597. Has he got over it now ?—He has got over it now.

32,598. It had no worse effect than wearying him ?—Dr. Farmer wisely stopped, because he became excited, and Dr. Farmer said, "Now we will "stop."

32,599. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing that we did the same, and stopped whenever he became excited ?—Ah! the mischief would be done then.

32,600. But it was not on that occasion ?—No, but that was a different thing; there was only Mr. Purcell and Dr. Farmer, different to having a lot of people. I believe it would produce a second attack of paralysis, and all my medical friends have told me so. A medical friend I had staying with me some little time back has written to tell me so.

(Mr. Anstey.) The disappearance of these papers, and our want of any means to find out the contents of those papers make it very desirable that we should have more information.

32,601. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the object of Mr. Bealy Smith going away; was it to get out of the election petition inquiry ?—Decidedly not; as far as I know it was his health.

32,602. (Mr. Anstey.) How far is Horsey Slimes from here ?—I should think a mile or a mile and a half.

32,603. What road is it upon ?—The Burnham Road.

32,604. I think if you were to use your influence with your husband and satisfy him, he would have nothing to apprehend in the way of excitement, and we need not have so many people here as there are to-day, if that is considered an object ?—You must recollect that he is all I have in the world, and all the doctors have told me not to. How could I do it ? You could not ask me to do it.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY.

Mrs. M. Smith.

30 Sept. 1869.

32,605. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think what we could ask you is not to go to the trouble of sending up a physician from Exeter, but it would have the same effect if a certificate in writing were sent to us, in addition to his ordinary attendant, Dr. Farmer. I suppose some one else has seen him besides Dr. Farmer since at Exeter ?—No, no one has seen him.

32,606. (Mr. Anstey.) Who advised him to leave this place ?—Now ?

32,607. Yes.—Dr. Farmer said the excitement from hearing so much about it would tell upon his health, and it was advisable for us to go away at a distance where he could be seen if requisite.

32,608. Did Dr. Farmer tell you previously to his advising you that we had been putting questions to him, Dr. Farmer, on the subject of your husband's state of health ?—I could not tell you that, as Dr. Farmer came one morning, and I do not know whether he had seen him. I cannot remember.

32,609–10. Did he go away immediately after that ?—Oh, no, not for some four days, because I was not ready to go away. We did not read any papers to him after that, because we wished him to be quiet there, and left our address, so that you should know we were simply going out of the excitement.

32,611. You knew that Dr. Farmer was examined before us ?—Quite.

32,612. Cannot you remember that conversation which he had with you was after the time you heard he had been examined before us ?—He was in his chair in the garden, I know, when the Doctor called.

Dr. Farmer.

DR. FARMER recalled.

32,613. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that after we had examined you in the Town Hall on the subject of Mr. Smith's health ?—Yes, it was.

32,614. May I ask why you did not communicate to us that you were going to give him that advice, your responsibility for which to us must have suggested itself to you ?—Yes, I will tell you. You will recollect that I appeared for Mr. Cook, and then I spoke as to the state of Mr. Smith's health, and I gave my evidence as to his state, and I offered to put in certificates from Dr. Russell Reynolds and Mr. Orton, and the Chairman intimated that my oath was sufficient, and he did not require any corroborative evidence, and then, knowing the constant excitement which Mr. Smith was in with this Commission here, and also the state of mind Mrs. Smith was put in by persons going down to the house with all sorts of wild statements, which was making her ill as well as him, I said, "Now "then, I have given evidence before the Commis- "sioners as to the state of Mr. Smith, and they are "satisfied, and therefore I will advise you to go a "short distance from Bridgwater, so as just to get out "of the neighbourhood." It was not by any means running away from Bridgwater.

32,615. Did you not also tell Mrs. Smith when we discharged you for the time we told you that we should consider whether we would ourselves go down to the house and see the inmates there, or perhaps send our secretary ?—I do not recollect you intimating that, because the Chairman said it was sufficient.

32,616–17. It was sufficient for the purpose of the particular inquiry, namely, that he was not fit to come ?—No; the question was asked whether you could come down to his house.

The shorthand notes speak for themselves.

32,618. (Mr. Coleridge.) I understood you to say the question was asked you whether we should go down to his house ?—Yes, which I said I could not say he could bear.

32,619. (Mr. Anstey.) Then recollect that we put this question to you—supposing we have him, and merely want to know such and such things, and ask them, will not he be able to answer them, and your answer was, "If they were put nicely and quietly "in his house I do not say that he might not; the "difficulty would be to bring him here to a public "place to have those questions put."—I do not think that is the way I expressed myself. I expressed myself that if myself and the Secretary were to inquire, which was the plan adopted afterwards.

32,620. The shorthand notes will speak for themselves.—Yes, but I think you will not find that.

32,621. But I have no hesitation in saying that the version I have given is substantially correct, and I will tell you why, because I have had a strong opinion all through in favour of bringing Mr. Smith into the hall, and in consenting to let it stand over to be considered on that footing I felt at the time I was making a great sacrifice; therefore I am perfectly sure I am correctly stating from memory what will appear more clearly in the shorthand notes ?—I will not state because I do not remember.

32,622. May I ask why you did not come back and inform us what had been done before it was too late, and take our opinion on it ?—Because Mr. Smith would have been back if there was such a necessity as that, that you would not take my evidence; he was not at such a distance but he could come back from his house if necessary. I recommended Clevedon or Burnham. There was no such object as running away that I advised him; it was merely for his own sake and hers.

32,623. Then are we to understand that though at Exeter his friends undertake that he shall return to Bridgwater if we want him; I do not say that we do ?—That his friends would do it. I have no authority over Mr. Smith and his friends any more than as his medical adviser.

32,624. I want you to explain your last answer. You stated that the reason of your advising him to go away was that there was no harm done, because he could easily return ?—If there was no other way of doing it I should relieve myself of all responsibility, and say I will not hold myself responsible for the issue.

32,625. Supposing we determine that there is no other way to do it, and that he ought to come, is this an undertaking that he shall come ?—Not from me. I shall relieve myself of all responsibility, because I would not recommend a man to drop dead under my sanction; therefore if it is considered that he should do such a thing there must be a certificate from some eminent medical man which would relieve me from the responsibility, for I certainly would not bear it.

32,626. Do not you feel that you are responsible for his having gone away ?—No.

32,627. Mrs. Smith gives us her reason for objecting to his being examined, even in this quiet way, that she has been told by her medical man not to consent ?—Exactly; and even a gentleman at Weston-super-Mare volunteered to do it.

32,628. Then I put my question. Do not you see at present that you are responsible for the steps she and his friends have taken, as she says entirely upon the medical advice she got ?—She was very anxious for him to get away out of this, and I thought at the time it would be well to, and I recommended Burnham or Clevedon. I did not know where he had gone until I applied to Mr. Boyle for the address, and I advised somewhere near where communication could be carried on easily; therefore there was no desire to shirk responsibility; I do not desire to do it. I am quite willing to assist the Commissioners, but you cannot expect me to be answerable for his life.

32,629. I think you are answerable for taking on yourself a step without consulting the Commissioners ?—A man might go and live out of town, and come backwards and forwards, and still be within reach. I did not order him away any distance.

Mrs. Maria Smith recalled. Mrs. M. Smith.

(The witness.) Dr. Farmer told us we should go to Burnham, but I could not go to Burnham.

32,630. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I ask you if you are told that it is absolutely necessary he should be here to see some one at his own house, if it is more convenient, the three of us and nobody else, whether you will undertake that he shall come?—I could not, because I believe it would be his death, and I never could. You could not ask me to do such a thing.

32,631. Well, I do ask you whether you will give that undertaking—whether we act upon it or not is another thing, but it is a serious matter that there should be an abstraction of papers, and it is not cleared up to my mind at all?—I have told you the truth.

You have told us what you know, but not more than you know, I presume.

Dr. Farmer recalled. Dr. Farmer.

(The witness.) I think any detriment to him will not to any great extent arise, but from any cross examination.

32,632. (Mr. Anstey.) Please not to use that word. We do not cross-examine.—I mean the other day he was allowed to give his examination in his own way. I could not put a question to him without putting him out, and he was obliged to give it in his own way straightforward, and Mr. Purcell took down what he wanted from him.

32,633. If he comes here you may rely on it that we shall examine him in the most suitable way for an invalid, such as he is described to be. You may perfectly set your mind at rest on that point, and there will not be any difficulty at all about that; but the question now is, supposing we, after this meeting is over, were to determine on a future day that it was desirable for us to see him to ask a few questions, whether he will be here to answer them, that is to say, at Bridgwater, at his own house if necessary?—I think if it was very judiciously done, and without at all perturbing him.

32,634. That is all I say?—If you were to allow him to give his own statement in his own way, and when his medical adviser or advisers think he has said enough, and that it becomes a detriment to him, it should be desisted from.

32,635. You may take all that for granted?—Yes; then I think that might be done.

Mrs. Maria Smith recalled. Mrs. M. Smith.

32,636. (Mr. Anstey.) Will it be done?—I can never sanction it, because I know it would be my husband's death.

32,637. You hear what Dr. Farmer says?—I will never sanction it. If you wish other certificates I will have other medical men to tell me, but to sign his death warrant I will not do it.

32,638. Do you know what conclusion we shall come to if you do not?—I have not all the papers. Mr. Lilly has some of the papers.

32,639. You did not tell me that just now?—You did not give me time. You went on to another subject.

32,640. What papers has he?—My son wrote a letter to Mr. Lilly during the time he was managing his sale. Mr. Lilly read that letter to me about one or two letters that concerned me, and he said "You "have some political papers which I wish handed "over to mamma." I have asked Mr. Lilly for them, and I have never had them. He admitted to me that he had them.

32,641. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that Mr. Lilly, the auctioneer?—Yes, Mr. Lilly, the auctioneer. Those may be very important papers.

32,642. (Mr. Anstey.) Has any other person any papers?—Not to my knowledge. I should not have known that, but that my son wrote to Mr. Lilley and he told me so.

32,643. I must ask you, with reference to your refusal to sanction your husband's removal if it is wanted—it may not be—notwithstanding what his medical adviser has just said, subject to the conditions which he has named— are you aware what conclusions we shall be obliged to come to if you persist in that refusal, supposing the case arises?—If my husband is wanted, and the doctors agree to it, I will. You seem to think that Dr. Farmer sent him away, and I will have other medical men from any distance, and if they agree that it will not harm him, I will consent, but if they say it will, you cannot ask me to consent.

Mr. Robert Pople sworn. Mr. R. Pople.

32,644. (Mr. Coleridge.) What have you come to speak to?—The election of 1859.

32,645. You bribed some one, I believe?—I bribed four.

32,646. Who were those four?—Two men named Richards; one a baker, another a shipbuilder or carpenter.

32,647. What did you give them?—10*l.* each.

32,648. Whom did you get it from?—Murlis.

32,649. Whom were they to vote for?—Westropp and Padwick.

32,650. Whom else did you bribe?—Joseph Gosling and William Board.

32,651. Whom did you get it from?—Murlis.

32,652. Was that 10*l.* each?—Yes.

32,653. What did you get yourself for your trouble?—Nothing.

32,654. Had you anything to do with the subsequent election?—No.

32,655. Or the prior one?—I came up in 1865 and voted for Westropp.

32,656. Did you bribe anybody on that occasion?—No.

32,657. Did you get anything?—Nothing whatever.

32,658. Any expenses?—I paid my own expenses up and back, and never had a farthing in any shape or form. I made out a list of a great many voters. Murlis asked me if I would do a little writing for him, and I simply made out a list of 70 or 80, which he will hand in to you.

32,659. Of the persons you thought were bribable?—That were bribed. I copied it out of the little memorandum book he gave me.

32,660. In what year?—1859.

32,661. What are you?—A proprietor of the "New London Inn," at Exeter.

32,662. Were you the proprietor of an hotel here at that time?—In 1859, no.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Friday, 1st October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. M. Spofforth.

1 Oct. 1869.

Mr. MARKHAM SPOFFORTH sworn.

32,664. (Mr. Price.) You are a member of the firm of Baxter, Rose, and Norton?—Yes.

32,665. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you the conduct of the election petition which was tried before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No, I had not.

32,666. No connexion with it?—None whatever.

32,667. Or with the late election?—Or with the late election.

32,668. In any way?—In any way.

32,669. Do you remember the second election of 1866 for this borough, at which Mr. Patton, then Lord Advocate, was defeated, and Mr. Vanderbyl was returned?—I remember it.

32,670. Were you consulted on the subject of that election?—Not at all.

32,671. Had you anything to do with Mr. Patton's coming down the second time?—Not at all the second time.

32,672. Had you nothing at all to do with the second election of 1866?—Nothing whatever.

32,673. Now, we will go back to the first election of 1866, when Mr. Patton, a stranger to the town, came down for the first time to this borough?—Yes.

32,674. Your name has been mentioned in connexion with that?—Quite so. Do you wish me to tell in detail what I know?

32,675. Tell us what you know about that?

32,676. (Mr. Price.) Tell us how it was that Mr. Patton came down here?

32,677. If I remember there had been an election at which Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake were returned. A petition was presented against Mr. Westropp, and a cross petition, as it is usually called, was presented against Mr. Kinglake. The two petitions were fought, and Mr. Westropp only was unseated. I do not know that it had been arranged, but on Mr. Westropp being unseated the local people who were up in town desired to have a candidate.

32,677*a*. Tell us who they were as near as you can remember—Mr. Trevor?—I should say Mr. Trevor. I am not sure about Mr. Trevor, but Mr. Bealy Smith was the person I was in communication with. It was after the petition.

32,678. Mr. Bealy Smith had the conduct of the petition?—He had the conduct of the petition, and I forget what the unfortunate gentleman's office was then, whether he was solicitor general or not.

32,679. Mr. Patton was not then in office, was he?—I think he was; I am not sure, but I think he was solicitor general without a seat in parliament, and he desired to have a seat in parliament, and I remember going down with these Bridgwater gentlemen to the lobby of the House of Commons, where he was sent for I think because he had a room in the House of Lords. He was not in the Commons. He was sent for and introduced to the deputation, and the arrangements were made between them and Mr. Patton.

32,680. You were aware that he wanted a seat then, of course?—Yes, I was informed so. I think I had better, whilst on this subject, say that I have but a slight recollection of him, poor man; but I have just this remembrance, that he was rather an oldish thin man, he looked not in good health, and I said to him, "If you go down to Bridgwater you must take "some friend with you who will protect you from "importunity, and take care that you do not get into any scrape," or something to that effect.

32,681. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you had a pretty good notion of the character of Bridgwater at that time?—Only what public rumour told me, that it was a corrupt place.

32,682. And consequently a rather dangerous place to send a government candidate to, was not it?—Not if the government candidate was careful. Of course I was not responsible for that. It was my duty to send down the best candidate I could find, and he was the person, which is a subject I can never cease to regret, in consequence of the fatal termination of it.

32,683. (Mr. Price.) Now, will you continue what was said?—It was all that passed at that time.

32,684. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know that Mr. Patton did go down?—Of course I saw by the public papers.

32,685. He was not brought down by any of your firm?—Certainly not.

32,686. Had he any assistance, what is perfectly patent to all the world, I do not say assistance from the Carlton Club, because that word is much travestied, but from the Conservative party?—None whatever.

32,687. How did he raise the money then?—I do not know.

32,688. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in the way of evidence that his means were not supposed to be large, and the sum raised was very large; have you any notion how it was?—I have no notion what sum was spent.

32,689. (Mr. Price.) We are told that the two elections cost 4,500*l.*; 1,900*l.*, as far as we can make out, was actually paid in bribery at the first election; then there were the legitimate expenses and other incidental matters, and therefore it probably came up to a little over 2,000*l.* at that time. Then 1,900*l.* was spent on the second occasion in direct bribery, when the same men almost distributed the money and received it; then there would be about the same amount of legitimate expenses, and he must have spent roughly at least 4,500*l.* or probably 5,000*l.* on the two elections?—Yes, but probably some part of that money, which seems a very large sum, would go for the expenses of the petition.

32,690. I do not know what that would be, we have no evidence of that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) None of that went so.

32,691. (Mr. Price.) And 1,900*l.* is distinctly proved to have been paid in actual bribery in 10*l.* notes?—I did not know that,

32,692. (Mr. Anstey.) Besides Mr. Patton, was neither the sitting member who was petitioned against, nor the petitioner, against the other?—No, but I believe he paid the whole or part of the expenses of the petition against Mr. Kinglake.

32,693. Mr. Patton did?—I think so.

32,694. You recollect the election was in 1865, and the petition was tried in 1866. At that time Mr. Patton was entirely unconnected with Bridgwater ?—Well, that was my impression.

32,695. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was a petition against Mr. Vanderbyl, but it was not by Mr. Patton ?

(Mr. Anstey.) You will remember that Mr. Westropp was one of the sitting members in 1865, and there was a cross petition against the other, Mr. Kinglake; but neither the seat which was defended, nor the seat which was attacked, could Mr. Patton in 1865, nor in 1866, until Mr. Westropp was unseated, have had anything to do with ?—No, but I have some recollection; I forget who were the petitioners.

32,696. The petitioners were Bridgwater people ?—I have some recollection that we paid the expenses of one of those petitions; in fact, I have no doubt about it.

32,697. Mr. Westropp, who was unseated for the crime of bribery by his agents, was unqualified to stand again; we have it in evidence it was in question who was to be chosen again in his stead by the party as candidate, and after some consideration Mr. Patton was fixed upon. Do you mean when Mr. Patton was fixed upon, he made an arrangement to pay some of the expenses of the past election ?—I do not know that he could do it then; in fact, he could not do it then, for I was present and it did not take place. I have detailed word for word what did take place.

32,698. But would it be through the London solicitors ?—We should be for the petition.

32,699. (Mr. Anstey.) Was this when he was selected ?—Yes; I merely introduced him to the Bridgwater deputation, and left him to talk to them. I just took him on one side and gave him that caution.

32,700. What caution ?—That if he came down he had better be represented by some confidential friend, so that people might not come to him and ask him; you know it is usual, when a candidate goes down, to ask him for money.

32,701. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Pitman that confidential friend ?—I was going to add that I subsequently heard that he selected Mr. Pitman, who is a man, I believe, of high standing in the profession in Edinburgh.

32,702. (Mr. Price.) A solicitor, or a writer to the signet ?—He is a writer to the signet.

32,703. (Mr. Coleridge.) A manager of Scotch elections, or only a solicitor ?—Well, there is no management in Scotch elections.

32,704. It was more the other side ?—Yes, much more the other side.

32,705. (Mr. Price.) It does come to this; quite independent of what he paid in respect of the petition, it might be by arrangement afterwards, that Mr. Westropp, when he got seated—I do not know how that may have been, but it is quite certain that he spent in the borough 1,900*l.* in actual bribery the first time in 10*l.* notes, for there have been men who have come here and proved the receipt of the money, who discharged themselves by giving in names. There is no discredit thrown on them, and there is just about, as near as possible, a similar sum at the second election. Those two sums added on to the other expenses which a witness has told us about, would make about 4,500*l.* for the two elections spent in this town ?—I have no knowledge of it, no knowledge of the sum before, and no notion where it came from, but I am quite certain that it came from no party source.

32,706. He had an elder brother and a second brother, do you know whether in a position in life that they could be likely to assist him ?—I do not know.

32,707. The solicitor general in Scotland must have had a good income ?—I heard from a friend of his in London yesterday that the succession to the property was almost as much the cause of this fearful act as the coming before your honourable court.

32,708. Will you repeat that ?—I heard that the accession to the property was an accumulation of the fear that he had, if it might be called fear. I do not know that he was at all cognizant of it in the appearing before this court.

32,709. (Mr. Anstey.) I have been informed to-day, (you will say whether you know anything about it, that when the bill for the illegal expenses came to Mr. Patton after the two elections, or after the first, I do not know which, that he expressed great disgust at what had been done, but paid the bill. Do you know anything about that ?—No, I do not.

32,710. You said just now, when you saw him and introduced him to the deputation you gave a word of warning ?—Yes.

32,711. And you said you advised him to put it into the hands of a confidential friend who could speak to the electors or the people who came to him—I think it was about money ?—No, excuse me; I put it in another way. I said, "Be careful that no one speaks to you."

32,712. I will put it negatively if you like. It was, of course, clearly in your thought that the place here was a corrupt place ?—It was, probably.

32,713. And that people in this corrupt place might speak to him about money not wanted for legitimate purposes ?—Your experience as a member of parliament will tell you that when going to canvass, the commonest voter may tell you, without intending anything which may cause you the annoyance of refusal, that it is better to have some one with you to take that from you.

32,714. If you ask for my experience, I am bound to tell you it is just the reverse, if you mean in my own case, for I, for prudence sake, disqualified every person about me from speaking to anyone on any subject connected with the election, and was my own agent, in order that I might have the satisfaction of telling every voter, from word of mouth, "You will "get no money from me, and if any promise is made "in my name, I do not intend to keep it, and it will "not be kept"?—That may be a good plan.

32,715. But I ask you, did Mr. Patton so understand it that the danger would be in his being spoken to about money being wanted for illegal purposes, and therefore he had better not allow anyone to speak to him. I do not mean illegal purposes such as appear to have occurred, but in order that when he was canvassing no person might afterwards say Mr. Patton said so and so ?—Yes.

32,716. (Mr. Coleridge.) That there should always be two present ?—Yes.

32,717. (Mr. Anstey.) It was always a corrupt place, and you had heard of its character ?—Yes.

32,718. All the world knew that ?—Yes.

32,719. Was not it perfectly understood between Mr. Patton and you, when you introduced him to the Bridgwater deputation, that that was the danger, a danger consisting in the corrupt practices of the place ?—Yes, but I did not think so seriously of it as you appear now to think I did. The deputation said, "Now that Mr. Westropp is unseated, the petition "having been unpopular, Mr. Patton will be "returned." I think they said without any corrupt practice whatever they meant that it would be a pure election, and, if I remember, the sum named to Mr. Patton was a very small one. I cannot say how much it was, either 600*l.* or 1,200*l.*

32,720. Mr. Patton was of course perfectly well aware what all the world knew, that there had been one or two discussions in the House of Commons about the sudden termination of the inquiry, and only seven out of 110 cases of bribery having been gone into ?—I do not remember that.

32,721. Do not you remember Sir Harry Verney attempting to put a question to the chairman of the committee, which the Speaker ruled could not be put, as to why the committee, having had 110 cases to deal with, stopped, after bringing home bribery in so few ?—Yes, I remember it now; you are quite right.

32,722. And Sir Harry Verney moved an amendment to Colonel Taylor's motion for a writ, that no writ issue, but that an address should go to the Crown?—I think it was so.

32,723. That of course was known to Mr. Patton at the time of the conversation you speak of?—I think not, because the conversation took place immediately after Mr. Westropp was unseated, before we left the House of Commons.

32,724. After the conversation between you, do you know whether Mr. Patton was aware of it?—I do not know, but being a public man no doubt he would read the debate.

32,725. (Mr. Coleridge.) You stated the sum was a very small one, 600*l.* or 1,200*l.*; there was then a constituency of 500; do you mean that 1,200*l.* could possibly be spent legitimately amongst a constituency of that sort?—Well, I should think it was quite possible.

32,726. Legitimately?—Legitimately.

32,727. By buying the lawyers?—No, I do not know that.

32,728. Except by large fees to them how could it be done?—They certainly have been raised at present, and perhaps deservedly so, for they have to neglect their business, which is brought to a standstill, and election matters put things on the wrong side, so that they ought to be paid a better sum.

32,729. It would nearly give 50*l.* to each of the lawyers on both sides?—Well, they usually ask 100*l.*

32,730. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is not so here. Look at that (handing a written name to the witness), and tell us whether you know that man?—No, I do not.

32,731. (Mr. Anstey.) A sum of money was brought into this borough or raised for the purpose of illegal expenses in this borough, and it is stated that the person who brought it was connected with your firm?—It is not the case.

32,732. (Mr. Coleridge.) Assuming that that name you have seen is the name of the person, is he in any way connected with your firm?—Certainly not.

32,733. Or ever employed through Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, and Leech, by your firm?—Certainly not, to my knowledge.

32,734. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you conduct the defence of Mr. Westropp's seat, or the petition against Mr. Kinglake, or both?—Both.

32,735. It is said that the person who had the charge of the money, and who distributed it at all events here, and we find it was distributed in bribery, was employed or was employing himself in the business of the defence of Mr. Westropp's seat, and the petition against Mr. Kinglake?—Not to my knowledge. Let me look at that name again.

(Mr. Anstey.) There may be an alias.

(Mr. Coleridge.) This is the real name.

32,736. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard of any such gentleman?—When I was getting up the evidence for the petition of defence, it was necessary for me to go as far into particulars as I could, for the sake of my client.

32,737. Knowing him, perhaps, I ask you again, can you give the Commission any information about the person who was employed to distribute the money?—None whatever. I never knew there was one.

32,738. Have you heard since?—I have not.

32,739. (Mr. Price.) Have you not read it in the paper? We have it here in evidence that a man came down three times, and the witness said that his impression was that he knew Mr. Spofforth?—Yes; some witness stated that without any justification whatever. I was going to tell you that many years ago a person accosted me in the street, and said, "I "think I have the pleasure of seeing Mr. Spofforth?" I said, "You have; I do not know you." He said, "I have been down on electioneering matters," and I said, "What is your name?" and he mentioned that name which you have handed to me, and I said then, "I wish you good morning; I cannot speak to you "on the subject." And I have never spoken to the man since.

32,740. Did you know afterwards that he was in the employment of Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, and Leech?—No, I did not, and I have never employed him directly or indirectly in any shape or way, in electioneering or otherwise.

32,741. Did you see him about, because it has been said by one of the witnesses that he said, "You will "see me about in the House of Commons while the "election petition is going on, but you must not "know me"?—No, I have never seen him about.

32,742. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before you go further, I will ask you, is it not usual when a gentleman goes down to be elected who is actually in office, for the party to assist him in a fair way, not to any extraordinary extent?—No.

32,743. The fact of a man being in office rather disqualifies him from accepting assistance from his party?—A person going to accept office would not ask for it.

32,744. Did you ask him to go to Colonel Taylor or Mr. Noel, who I suppose were whips at the time?—Colonel Taylor.

32,745. When the deputation came did you direct Mr. Patton to see Colonel Taylor?—No, not at all.

32,746. Nor Mr. Montague Corry?—Mr. Montague Corry was not in political life; this was in 1865.

32,747. In fact Mr. Patton was to fight his battle on his own hook?—On his own hook, and I took no part whatever.

32,748. Without having any assistance from the party?—Without having any assistance from the party, or any other source whatsoever.

32,749. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you been consulted with respect to the choice of a candidate at any previous election?—No, I think not; indeed I am sure not.

32,750. (Mr. Price.) Cannot you tell us how Mr. Westropp was introduced here?—I do not know.

32,751. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did Mr. Rose give up the charge of your department?—I think it would be immediately before the election you are now inquiring about. If the Commissioners will permit me, I will take the liberty of stating that I used to act under my senior partner, Mr. Rose, and when I took the full management of matters, Mr. Rose charged me, which I had fully made up my mind to do before he mentioned it, never to sully my hands by corrupt practices, and I have never done so, directly or indirectly.

32,752. But you have been the medium without doubt, I suppose, of advancing money to people to assist them in their seats legitimately. It has been part of your functions to ascertain how far a gentleman who is going to fight a seat on the Conservative side should have assistance?—In certain instances.

32,753. And Colonel Taylor would be the ultimate court of appeal as to that, and you would manage the matter?—I will explain. In certain instances where there is a local borough, and probably a suitable candidate could not be found with sufficient means of his own, money has been subscribed to assist him for the legitimate purposes of the election.

32,754. You know nothing but of the legitimate expenses, but what became of the money you would not know?—It would be given to the candidate himself, or his agent, for legal expenses as permitted by the Act of Parliament.

32,755. In these days of dignities I may ask you to read where I have marked, and tell me whether those are pretty well the functions of your position (handing a copy of the Law Times to the witness)?—Well, there is nothing lucrative about the office. I can answer that.

32,756. That is one point you traverse. Now go on to the next paragraph; is that a pretty fair description of your duties?—No, I do not keep a noted up register as to the character of the constituencies. When an election is likely to take place I write down to the leading local solicitor, or agent, or leading Conservative of the place, to ask whether there is a good chance, and he replies to that, but I keep no register.

32,757. With the exception of the lucrative part, and the register, you pretty well agree with the rest of that?—Yes.

32,758. "Sir William Drake was a member of the "firm of Dalrymple and Company, solicitors. On the "death of Mr. Coppock of Reform Club renown, Mr. "Drake succeeded him in the lucrative office of elec- "tion manager for the Liberal party. This office of "election manager is very important. He does for "the whole party at head quarters what the local "managers do for their parties in the several boroughs; "he is the wire puller of his party. For this purpose "he has a carefully compiled and closely noted up "register of every constituency in the United King- "dom. It is his duty to ascertain and keep on record "the past history and present condition and peculiar "character of every constituency, including the cost "of a contest, the chance of success, the influences on "both sides if the electors are to be bought, and at "what prices"?—No, I beg to deny that entirely.

32,759. I was going to ask you whether you ex- cepted that part?—I did not read that; I deny it entirely.

32,760. "And in fact to preserve duly posted up in "a ledger for ready reference all the information "necessary, not merely for candidates, but to enable "ministers in esse or in posse to ascertain the pro- "bable results of an election, come when it may." With those two exceptions you accept the rest?—The rest is pretty accurate.

32,761. Would you be accurate in saying that it was not lucrative, taking the Law List and judging of the number of county court treasurerships Mr. Rose has held on one side, and Sir William Drake on the other? —I am sorry to say these are times when that is no longer continued.

32,762. But it has been so?—Yes.

32,763. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Coppock had an immense number of them?—Yes; but, poor man, he died a few months afterwards, and he was never properly re- warded.

32,764. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had Mr. Joseph Parkes one of those?—Yes, I believe he had one.

32,765. (Mr. Anstey.) After Mr. Westropp was unseated, and the committee had reported that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed, you are aware in the ordinary course of things it became the duty of the chairman, Mr. Baxter, or the attorney general or someone else, to move an address to the Queen, under the Act of the 15th and 16th Victoria?—Yes.

32,766. But instead of that a new writ was moved for?—Yes.

32,767. And that new writ was moved for not by the leader of the House or the Treasury Secretary, but by Colonel Taylor, who was the opposition whip, as it is vulgarly called?—Yes.

32,768. I wish to ask you, was that done through any arrangement between the two hostile parties?— It was. It is usual when a seat is vacated by a Con- servative for the representative in the House of that party to move the writ.

32,769. I am aware of that, but the other part of my question is the more important. Of course the motion not being made for the address, the other motion followed as a matter of course, namely for the writ?—Quite so.

32,770. It is in reference to the not making of the motion for the address that I wish to ask whether an arrangement was come to between the two sides of the House?—Not that I am aware of, but I should certainly say not.

32,771. You are aware that when the writ was moved for, and the amendment of which notice had been given by Sir Harry Verney was moved also, and the division took place, this curious result followed— the minority who were for the address consisted of none but Liberals, and the majority who were for the writ consisted of the leading members of the adminis- tration and their supporters?—Yes.

32,772. And the whole force of the Conservative party?—Yes.

32,773. Can you throw any light upon that?—I have no doubt that the only motive there could be was that the Conservative party thought they would win the seat.

32,774. But why was it the others voted with them, giving thereby a majority in the House in which Conservatives were certainly in a large majority?— I cannot account for it.

32,775. (Mr. Price.) It might be to save the borough, perhaps. This is called a Liberal borough, and they thought perhaps by a fluke a Conservative had got in?—It might be so, but it did not occur to me.

32,776. You do not know it?—I do not know it.

32,777. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do not you know that there was a great talk in 1865 about not having a com- mission as to this place?—I thought that the decision of the committee was an extraordinary one, because we thought there was quite as strong evidence to unseat Mr. Kinglake as Mr. Westropp, in fact a little stronger.

32,778. (Mr. Anstey.) You thought so?—I did in- deed.

32,779. Then why was not the petition pressed against Mr. Kinglake?—It was pressed.

32,780. You know that a very important witness, hostile no doubt to you, but who must have answered yes or no, was subpœnaed by the other side, and ex- amined by neither side—the famous Henry Chapman Bussell?—In all probability the leading counsel knowing his character would say, "It is impossible to "get anything which would be damaging to his own "side from him," and therefore he would not call him.

32,781. But he was not called on his own side?— Probably he would not be if he had been the instru- ment of corruption.

32,782. I do not know whether you remember all those incidents, but there was a case of bribery brought home with difficulty to Mr. Westropp, there being some conflicting evidence, that was the case of Hay- ward and another, Cooze?—I do not remember that.

32,783. Now Bussell was unquestionably guilty of extensive treating?—Yes.

32,784. And his name is down on the brief on your side as a personal witness to both those cases of Hay- ward and Cooze?—Yes.

32,785. When you saw that they did not call Bussell to disprove the evidence of your witnesses, in the case of Hayward and Cooze, did not it occur to you, with your information as to his having been largely engaged in the treating business, and it was that which you brought up against Mr. Kinglake, that this might be the reason why they did not call him?—No doubt.

32,786. In which case he was a good witness for you?—Excuse me, if they called him we should have the privilege of cross-examining; but if we put him into the box we cannot cross-examine our own wit- ness, therefore counsel are obliged to make it subject of comment.

32,787. The case against Mr. Westropp had been closed; the committee was satisfied Mr. Westropp had been guilty of bribery?—Yes.

32,788. Therefore it could do you no further harm? —I understand you now.

32,789. He was to be a witness against you?—Yes. I understand now.

32,790. And by taking a circuitous course in those two cases which directly you had not proved, sup- posing he had been called according to their instruc- tions and your instructions, he would, instead of negativing the evidence of your witnesses, he would, so they appear to have thought, have corroborated them, and therefore they did not call him to contradict, and then your turn came to prove treating against Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

32,791. Did not it occur to you that the man who was not depended on by the other side lest he should tell the truth was a good witness therefore for you?— No, because we did not expect he would tell the truth in either case, perhaps. It would have been a risky thing when endeavouring to prove treating to put in a man who must be a clever man from the position he has occupied here, because they generally employ sharp people, and he would not be likely to have said anything which would have damaged Mr. Kinglake. That is why we did not call him.

32,792. The only point you could have got out of him was a point in which failure would only have left you where you were, namely, that his house had been open as you stated in your brief for the purpose of treating—that is all?—Yes.

32,793. Therefore if he had stated it was not, it would only have left you where you were?—No, because he would have knocked down all the previous evidence we had given.

32,794. No; his name was set down in your brief only to prove that his was one of the four houses open for the Liberals?—I do not remember the circumstance, and perhaps we had another committee sitting at the same time, and I was moving from room to room.

32,795. I put it generally to you, do you happen to recollect Mr. Westropp's seat being certainly now lost by the kind of intimation made from the chair that it was unnecessary to go further, agency being to their minds sufficiently established, and the case proved, and then calling for Mr. Axford's petition against Mr. Kinglake to be read?—I remember that.

32,796. And when the intimation was made that that seat was lost, did it occur to you or your party that the best thing would be to let the other petition go?—Certainly not; we did our best to unseat Mr. Kinglake, and we thought we had done sufficient.

32,797. There was a strong body of evidence on that point, which was wrung from witnesses given very unwillingly, which led me to ask why it was not given on the trial of the petition?—I think the only possible explanation could be that they were adverse witnesses, and we dared not put them in the box.

32,798. No other reason?—No other reason, there could not be any, because our instructions were to unseat Mr. Kinglake if possible, and we thought we had done it, that the case was sufficiently strong.

32,799. Did Mr. Kinglake's party propose a compromise at any stage of that inquiry?—Not to me.

32,800. You did not hear of any?—I did not.

32,801. Did you know Mr. Westropp before he came down here?—No, I think not. I do not think I knew Mr. Westropp until after his first contest here, and then I occasionally met him in London.

32,802. What are the names of your clerks who represented you when you could not attend yourself to this petition?—I never have clerks representing me.

32,803. You always go in person?—Yes, I always go myself.

32,804. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the name of the clerk who was attending judges chambers for you?—That is Mr. Buck, the head of the common-law department; but I may say that we have generally 150 to 200 clerks in the office, and I cannot speak to all their names, but no one interferes with elections.

32,805. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, & Co. have anything to do with the election?—Nothing whatever. I never heard their names mentioned in electioneering matters before.

32,806. (Mr. Coleridge.) Here is the name (handing the Law List to the witness).—Is he a solicitor?

32,807. You see it is 1868; it may have been after the election that he became solicitor, but he was a clerk at Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, & Leech's?—I was not aware of it.

32,808. When he spoke to you in the street did he say anything about being connected with Bridgwater?—He did not. I have an instinctive dread of agents, and do not enter into a conversation with one I do not know.

32,809. Do you know whether he was generally a man of that sort?—It must have been 12 or 14 years ago, long before this occurred, and I never employed him or spoke to him.

32,810. And I suppose he was connected with every election?—I do not know.

32,811. (Mr. Price.) We had it in evidence that he boasted of having done work at Windsor, Totnes, and Liskeard, though it did not come from a witness we very much cared about?—I had nothing to do with him at either of the places.

32,812. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything about the compromise at the last election that was attempted in 1868, when there was a hard attempt to get one of the seats here for the Conservative party on the withdrawal of the petition?—I do not.

32,813. Did not you know anything that took place when it came as far at last as an offer from the Liberals to give up both seats, only there was a squabble about the time that they should give them up at?—No; I took no part at all at the last election.

32,814. You had nothing to do with that inquiry?—Not at all.

32,815. Was Mr. Patton assisted with money at either of his elections?—Neither of them.

32,816. Neither in the first instance or the second?—Neither of them.

32,817. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any conversation with Mr. Patton after either of the two elections?—I do not think I ever saw him but twice. I remember seeing him twice, and I think both times in the lobby of the House of Commons, but I would not be sure; it is a long time since.

32,818. Did you hear him say anything at all about his experience of the borough?—No.

32,819. Or what had happened here at the election?—I did not.

32,820. Nor what he had to pay?—I never heard anything afterwards.

32,821. Nothing on the subject of money?—No.

32,822. (Mr. Coleridge.) And as far as I understand, whatever Mr. Patton spent on those elections, and wherever he got it from, he was not assisted by the party, either directly or indirectly?—Neither directly nor indirectly.

32,823. And if Colonel Taylor or Mr. Noel had seen him would you have known of it?—Certainly, I should say so.

32,824. If it had been determined that he should have 500*l.*, would you have paid it to his account; would it have gone through you, and would you have known of the fact?—I should think so.

32,825. The cheque would be given by you directly?—It would be given by myself.

32,826. But it would be drawn by you, would not it, not Colonel Taylor?—No.

32,827. Did you ever hear Mr. Patton complain of what it had cost him, or say that he had been fleeced down here?—I never saw Mr. Patton but twice. I would not say that he did not complain of the expense, I think it very likely he did, but I do not remember what he said.

32,828. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you had any correspondence with him?—No, I have never written to him.

32,829. (Mr. Price.) Did you know Mr. Pitman at all; were you in communication with him?—Not before that time I think.

32,830. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you had any correspondence or communication with anybody, not any formal correspondence, about Mr. Patton being, examined before this Commission?—No, none at all.

32,831. I thought you said you regretted the unhappy termination, and I thought by that you might know something?—No, I only regret that he should have committed so foolish and lamentable an act.

32,832. I thought you connected that in some way with this Commission?—I hope that was not so.

32,833. It was only your surmise?—Only my surmise. I hope and trust it was not so.

32,834. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1859 you were acting, if I recollect right, under Mr. Rose, were you not, at the election in 1859, when we had a commission at Gloucester?—I think I was.

32,835. Do you know anything of the circumstances under which Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp came here?—None whatever.

32,836. I suppose Mr. Padwick found his own money?—No doubt.

32,837. Had he been on the list for a seat?—No, not that I am aware of.

32,838. It was his own doing?—I should think so. I am not aware.

32,839. (Mr. Price.) Do you know what politics he was?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Because it was said that he intended to come down on the other side the next time he came.

32,840. (Mr. Anstey) Do you know the name of Wellington Guernsey?—I do not.

32,841. Or the name of Edwards?—I never heard of it; "Edwards" is a common name.

32,842. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Francis Edwards of Delahay Street?—I have seen him.

32,843. He came down here once just for a day?—Yes.

32,844. (Mr. Price.) There is no further information you can give?—If anything more occurs to me I shall be most happy to appear before you in London.

Mr. James Trevor sworn. Mr. J. Trevor.

32,845. (Mr. Price.) You are partner with your brother, Mr. John Trevor?—I am, as solicitors practising here.

32 846. Then be good enough to read any statement which you have there, the same as your brother and other professional men have done, and we shall be obliged to you?—I have no written statement.

32,847. But refer to your notes and give a history of the different elections you have been concerned in?—I think I had better begin with the first election. The first election I had anything to do with was that of 1835.

32,848. How old were you then?—About 16 or 17. I was then an articled clerk to my father, and acted as check clerk at the hustings. Tynte and Leader were then returned, and Broadwood and Martin were the unsuccessful Conservative candidates. I knew nothing about it. What I had to do was mere copying of any kind I was ordered to do by my father; but the common report at the time was, and no doubt it was true, that Broadwood and Martin spent 4,000*l.*, and Leader spent for himself and Tynte somewhere between 7,000*l.* and 10,000*l.*; the thing was very commonly done at that time. I recollect a man named Baker who was said to have been paid 40*l.* or 50*l.* On his way to the poll he came up with blue ribbons in his coat, and was hooted by the Liberal party for turning from their party; but when he was asked who he voted for he said, "Tynte and Leader," and tore down the blue ribbons, trampled on them, and put orange and purple ribbons in his coat in their place. A gentleman who had brought him up to poll on the Conservative side felt himself thoroughly done, and sank down at his side as if he had been shot.

32,849. (Mr. Anstey.) They did not attempt to conceal their malpractices?—No, there was not the least appearance of concealment. I saw a man come out of a Liberal house and shake up the money.

32,850. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came there to be no petition in those days?—Because both sides were dirty. By-the-by, I think there was a petition, there generally was at each election, but they were bought off.

32,851. Never tried out?—Bought off.

32,852. (Mr. Anstey.) Not in 1835?—I do not think there was in 1835.

32,853. I cannot find any trace of it in the Journals. The next election was in May 1837, when Leader accepted the Chiltern Hundreds to stand for Westminster in opposition to Sir Francis Burdett. I had nothing to do with it then except that I was in the same position as check clerk; I think, as near as I can recollect, I merely acted under my father's orders. At that election Broadwood and Sheridan were the two candidates. Broadwood spent a good deal of money there. That was the time that Mr. Croucher came down and paid the money for him. It was at that election, I think, that Mr. Richard Smith got into the scrape which ended by his having a qui tam action brought against him. I recollect that election; the men who came to vote for Broadwood, the lower class, had cards in their hats with "All right" printed on them, and the men of the lower class who voted for Sheridan, who I believe had not been paid, had cards with "Honest voters" printed upon them in their hats. There was a petition then which was presented against the return of Mr. Broadwood, and was set down for hearing; but the King was dying, and Mr. Broadwood was advised to give up his seat, leaving it to some of the electors to defend it for him. That would go to a little time, I think some two or three weeks, and of course the prayer of our party was that it might please God to take the King in the meantime, which happened, and so the petition ended.

32,854. (Mr. Anstey.) You are aware that Mr. Broadwood withdrew from the defence some weeks before?—He withdrew at the last moment allowed by the standing orders of the House of Commons, and there was further time allowed for the electors to come in and defend the seat.

32,855. That is the usual practice?—Yes, that was the object, to gain time.

32,856. But at that time the King was still alive?—The King died in the interval between Mr. Broadwood retiring from the seat and the time allowed for the electors to come in and defend.

32,857. It was not until some days after the King died that this petition praying for leave to defend was presented? My impression was the other way, but I suppose you are right. My memory is the only thing to serve me. I have no record of any kind to refresh me.

32,858. Of course it was known perfectly well to those who presented the petition for leave to defend that the only effect would be to prevent Mr. Sheridan sitting a few days?—It was to gain time.

32,859. I will give you the dates. Mr. Broadwood's letter to the Speaker, written the day before the last day, namely, the 5th June, declared that it was not his intention to defend his election or return. That is volume 92 of the Journals, folios 396 B and 397 B, and then the usual order giving time to any person who chose to come in was made on the same occasion, deferring further consideration until the 11th July following. On the 20th June, that is, 15 days after Mr. Broadwood's letter had been sent, the King died. Then eight days after that, the 28th June, when they must have known there was no use in it, because a dissolution would necessarily follow on the demise of the Crown, then the petition praying for leave to defend took place, and then they fixed the hearing of that second petition for the 25th July, and on the 17th July, in the interval, the expected dissolution takes place?—That is it. I recollect the thing was done to gain time, hoping that the dissolution would come and prevent exposure.

32,860. And to prevent his getting in for a few days?—We did not care a fig about that; the thing was to prevent exposure—to prevent our party being exposed. They did not care whether Mr. Sheridan got in or not.

32,861. There would have been no exposure if you had submitted to letting him take his seat on the 2nd July?—Well, that was my idea of it, at all events I was told so at the time. I had no management. Of course I was too young to know anything about it, but I was told that it was to prevent exposure. A great many of our friends had got into a scrape then, and a great many were obliged to run away to prevent being served with a Speaker's warrant. Then the next election was the general election in July 1837, in which Broadwood and Courtenay were the Conservative candidates, and Sir Thomas Lethbridge and Sheridan were the Liberal candidates. Sir Thomas Lethbridge and Mr. Sheridan went to the nomination, and a poll was demanded either on one side or the other; but on the night of the nomination they went away late at night, so that in point of fact there was no contest. There was obliged to be a poll, but hardly anyone voted for Lethbridge and Sheridan, and Broadwood and Courtenay were returned by a very large majority indeed. After that election Lethbridge unwisely printed a libel in the "Taunton Courier;" and I think one of the London papers, the "Morning Chronicle" on my father and Mr. Ruscombe Poole, alleging that they had got 300 men bottled up in a large room in the "Clarence" hotel, and that they were removing them, and that that was the reason which induced them to leave Bridgwater and go out of the contest. My father brought an action for libel against Sir Thomas Lethbridge, which went down to the assizes but was not tried. Sir Thomas Lethbridge knocked under and agreed to pay all the costs, and admitted that he had been misinformed. Mr. Ruscombe Poole did not bring an action, but I believe Mr. Gabriel Poole saw Sir Thomas Lethbridge, and threatened to thrash him for his impudence, or something of that kind. Whether there was bribery on our side or not I do not know, but I suppose there must have been, I should think so.

32,862. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember one significant fact, that the large majority against Sir Thomas Lethbridge represented within a few units the number of electors who had signed the requisition to him praying him to come forward?—Well, I recollect that being mentioned the other day.

32,863. Well, that being so, it is scarcely conceivable that such a case could take place without there were weighty reasons?—Anybody will sign anything here to get an opposition. That is the thing wanted. People would get 200 or 300 voters to sign a requisition for two parties to come forward.

32,864. And promise to support each?—Yes, promise either or both.

32,865. That is only, I repeat, for weighty reasons?—Yes, no doubt for getting money.

32,866. That is what I mean?—Yes, but I am not clear now whether there was any spent at that election on our side or not, I do not know; it was soon after the former election, and Broadwood may have spent so much that it is possible the money he spent then did service at both elections. I do not know.

32,867. What number had you on the register then?—400 or 500, I suppose.

32,868. Supposing 200 of those signed a requisition to Sir Thomas Lethbridge asking him to come forward, and not allow the borough to fall into Tory hands, and promising support, and exactly that number of persons voted against him, thereby putting him in a minority, it could not but be bought by bribes, could it?—Well, leading men of the Liberal party did not vote at all. When they found that their candidates had run away they treated it as given up.

32,869. They did vote for Broadwood?—Not the leading men of their party.

32,870. But this number of persons?—Well, a good many did, no doubt; when they found they could not get money on one side they voted on the other.

32,871. Do you know that the leading men took, perhaps as much as any of them, in your experience?—No, not leading men. I know respectable tradesmen received bribes.

32,872. I put it so. I mean that?—Yes; men who are worth thousands of pounds.

32,873. (Mr. Price.) Men in a certain position in the town?—Men in a certain position in the town in those days.

32,874. (Mr. Coleridge.) Men you say worth thousands?—Yes; in those days, when the bribes were 40*l.* or 50*l.*, the temptation was too great. Mr. Hallett no doubt did. I am only telling you what one has been educated to believe. In the year 1841 we had another election, at which Broadwood and Forman were the Conservative candidates, and Drew and Robinson were the Liberal candidates, and they were beaten. They all went to the poll then. My impression is that money was spent on both sides. Then I recollect seeing one of the Liberal agents after the election when Drew and Robinson had been beaten; and I said, "Who is your friend, Mr. Robinson; I never saw him before"? and he said, "I do not care a fig who he is, I have taken care of myself," and put his hand in his pocket and slapped a handful of gold down on the table.

32,875. Who is that?—Mr. Thomas Ford. He was very tipsy at the time, or he would not have done so.

32,876. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the solicitor?—Yes, he was tipsy; he would not have done it otherwise. It was at the bar of the "Clarence."

32,877. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean he would not have told of it, not that he would not have taken it?—That he would not have told of it. Whether it was his fee or not I do not know, but he took it out of his pocket and slapped it down on the table, and said, "I do not know and I do not care. I have taken care of myself."

32,878. (Mr. Price.) It might be in vino veritas?—It sounded very much like it. Whether it was his fee or not I do not know; he did not explain it, so I do not know. There was a great joke against him afterwards. It was done at the bar of the "Clarence" here in the evening.

32,879. Mr. Robinson had money, no doubt; he had a large fortune whilst at Oxford. What was the date of that?—1841.

32,880. He took his degree in 1839, and had just come of age about that time, so that he was 22 or 23, and was an ambitious man desiring to get into Parliament, and no doubt spent money?—I do not think that Mr. Drew spent anything; Mr. Robinson must have found the money.

32,881. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was Mr. Drew of the Grange?—Yes, I had nothing to do with that at all; in fact I had nothing to do with any of these elections, except acting under my father's orders as check clerk, and what a young man in an attorney's office ought fairly and legitimately to have done. At the next election, in 1847, when Broadwood and Tynte were returned, and Mr. Gazelee came at the last moment, I know there was an arrangement made between Broadwood and Tynte that they should both be returned. I negotiated the thing through Mr. Benjamin Lovibond at Bridgwater, and my brother through Colonel Tynte at Cefn Mably, and London; and we were the chief negotiators of the matter, and it was an arrangement that the malcontents of the Liberal party should be sold, and Broadwood and Tynte returned by the united strength of both parties, as far as we could possibly control it.

32,882. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many did Gazelee poll?—A good many, it was a strong party, but whether money was spent on that occasion I do not know. My impression is that Colonel Tynte was never returned without spending money. I think there was a gratuitous expenditure of money on his part; it was unnecessary for him to have done it, but I cannot help thinking that on that occasion he did spend money.

32,883. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish to call your attention to the statements in that petition which was presented some few years afterwards by the Conservative gentlemen and Liberal gentlemen, in which they say of the election of 1847, that the compromise of which you speak was come to in order to prevent bribery, but that it was found it could not be carried out, owing to the arrival at the last moment of a third candidate, and therefore it was found necessary to resort to bribery again?—I think that is very likely, that is my opinion about the election. My brother and I have often disagreed about that; he thinks that there was no money spent, and I have always told him that I believe there was, and I still feel so. Mr. Broadwood did not spend any, I feel clear; whether he paid anything afterwards to Colonel Tynte I would not pretend to say, but I think not. Then the next election was 1852, when Mr. Follett, Mr. Mansell, Colonel Tynte, and Lord Henley and Mr. Kinglake were candidates.

32,884. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Henry Lovibond says, with regard to that last election of Broadwood, the only reason he did not spend money—he gave us that gratuitously—was because he said he had made a composition with his creditors?—The composition came afterwards, but I think he was in difficulty at the time. I think one reason he would not spend money was because he had not got it.

32,885. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going on to the election of 1852?—Yes; at that election there is no doubt whatever that Colonel Tynte bribed for himself and Mr. Follett. I told Mr. Gooding, who was acting for Colonel Tynte, "We shall be satisfied if we get Mr. "Follett in; but mind if Follett is not returned look "out, we shall petition against you for certain." I knew very well that Colonel Tynte intended to win his election, and I thought if he did he might as well have one of our men as our representative, and I mentioned it to Mr. Gooding in that way that Mr. Follett should be returned, and he was. Mr. Follett did not spend any money, I am quite clear From first to last I am satisfied in my own mind Mr. Follett never spent any money in bribery at all. I did not know it until this Commission inquiry was going on, but it would seem that some little money was spent in treating, I suspect it was not a very large amount, and was done entirely without Mr. Follett's sanction, he never would hear of it. His position, he said, he should lose entirely, and nothing would induce him to resort to corrupt practices, and the bribery by Colonel Tynte was quite unknown to him.

32,886. Now we come to the election of 1857?—The election of 1857, when Follett was beaten by Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake; Mr. Follett did not spend any money at all then; I recollect his being asked by several of our people, his brother Robert who was here was asked too, and he was very firm about it indeed, and said that nothing should induce him to spend money.

32,887. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you said he did not spend money, did you include lawyers' fees, or what did it cost?—I do not know.

32,888. 500*l.* or 600*l.*?—I do not know; I had nothing to do with those accounts; but there was nothing illegal at all events that would come within the strict meaning trammels of the law; a little of it there might be.

32,889. When you talk of not spending money what did it mean in Bridgwater, 500*l.* or 600*l.*?—I should think not more.

32,890. As much?—I think not, not more. I do not know, I had nothing to do with making up the accounts, so I cannot tell whether Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake spent any money. I am told by their friends that they did not.

32,891. (Mr. Anstey.) But we have had it in evidence that they did?—It was not very much at all events, I apprehend; there was some, I daresay.

32,892. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, 1859, when Padwick and Westropp and Tynte and Kinglake stood?—We knew nothing of who was coming here until Mr. Richard Smith brought down Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp; I knew nothing of either gentleman before until they came down.

32,893. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you never heard of Mr. Padwick?—I had never heard of him then; I never heard his name; it is 10 years ago.

32,894. (Mr. Price.) He was not then the man of celebrity he is now?—No; I think he then used to race under another name.

32,895. (Mr. Coleridge.) That of "Howard," was not it?—Howard. It transpired who he was, and some of our people did not like it at all. I recollect we had great difficulty in getting some respectable men to vote for him; Mr. Anstice I recollect having a long talk with before I could induce him to go with us, and so Mr. Gabriel Poole would not vote with him, but voted a plumper for Mr. Westropp. At all events they went to the poll, and then there was a lot of money spent on both sides, I should say a lot of money; Mr. Padwick spent a deal, no doubt; Mr. Westropp only a small sum. I think he must have run second with very little prospect of success. I think I heard that he only spent 200*l.*, I am not clear.

32,896. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Westropp?—Mr. Westropp at that election. I am not certain about it, but I do not believe he did. I was their agent for election expenses. I have no papers to refer to, and I do not know, but my impression is that there were no expenses except what I returned to the mayor, and I may say at once there was not a shilling to any election agent or in any way that I did not return to the mayor. I returned every farthing that I ever paid; other bills were sent in to me for banners and colours and other things, and I rejected them.

32,897. (Mr. Price.) What did you put down for personal expenses?—I will get that from the candidates themselves by writing to them.

32,898. The curious part is that we are told that Westropp and Gray left a bill unpaid at this hotel for dinners and accommodation, and so forth, and one would have thought that that would have gone into the personal expenses?—Once I wrote and asked them, before I made my return, to send me an account of the personal expenses. I had nothing to do with paying them, of course, and whatever they sent to me I sent to the mayor as the amount without inquiry. I did know it consisted chiefly of Mr. Leaker's bill here, which they have not paid because the ostlers and the postboys have bullied me about it.

32,899. (Mr. Price.) Had you no vouchers?—No, I have no vouchers; they were expenses merely sent in by the candidates themselves.

32,900. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was old Mr. Smith's position at this election? Did you look on him as a head man or not?—Then he was clearly, at that election in 1859, head man, everything went through him.

32,901. Was that the first time he had become a head man?—Well, I think he was in Mr. Follett's time. I think he may have been considered a head man in Follett's time, not in Broadwood's time; but he brought Follett here. I think he went to London and got introduced to him somehow, and he brought indirectly Mr. Mansell here, who was recommended by Lord Cavan to Mr. Smith, and introduced in that way.

32,902. (Mr. Anstey.) You say that at the election of 1859 Mr. Padwick spent all the money, and Mr. Westropp did not spend above 200*l.* You do not mean to say, I suppose, that Mr. Padwick's money, which we have it in evidence was spent on illegal purposes, was not laid out for Mr. Westropp and himself?—For both, undoubtedly.

32,903. Because I see Mr. Westropp in his evidence before the Commons Committee in 1866, speaking of his going down in 1859, on being asked if he was defeated by 80 at that election, says, "That was so; "but it was always considered that the majority by "which the gentleman who was running with me," that is Mr. Padwick, "was defeated was mine also, and in fact it was only 41." Therefore you see Mr. Westropp in 1866 positively states that in 1859 Padwick and Westropp were one?—No doubt at all about it; only you should bear in mind, sir, that many of our party, of the respectable men, would always vote for a Tynte, so there was a great difference between first and second men with our party. I may mention Mr. Nicks, who was never paid a shilling I suppose in his life, and who would always vote so, and Mr. Sadler.

32,904. Is not it a fact that Mr. Westropp some time after 1859 thought he had been retreating, and there was some difficulty about getting him to stand again in 1865?—I never heard that. He nursed the borough all the time, and paid his money still between 1859 and 1865.

32,905. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do you put it at?—He told me 300*l.* a year several times, because I expostulated with him, and told him that he might as well throw it into the river, it was perfectly useless.

32,906. (Mr. Price.) Used he to distribute it himself, or had he any almoner?—I think Mr. Smith was that. Of course if asked by letter he would send direct, but he used to stay at Mr. Smith's house; a great personal friendship sprung up between them.

32,907. (Mr. Anstey.) Now come to 1865?—That is the election about which you have heard so much, when Mr. Westropp was unseated, and no doubt very properly.

32,908. (Mr. Price.) We need not take you through that unless there is anything further to add?—I was agent for the election expenses then, and returned what was paid, and I never paid a shilling except what was in that return. I had nothing to do with it at all.

32,909. Mr. Westropp stated that he had two agents, one was his election agent, Mr. James Trevor, and the other was his professional agent, Mr. Smith, junior, whose duties he defines to be to consult with him on the general politics of the election. Then you had nothing to do with the general politics of the election?—No.

32,910. Only the dry functions?—The dry legal part, that is all.

32,911. I thought it right to ask you the question?—No, I had nothing whatever to do with it. I do not set up any great profession of purity; no doubt there are those of both parties who do not touch corrupt practices themselves, yet wink at others doing it. We arrived at a conclusion that corrupt practices were mala prohibita and not mala in se, and we did not enter into it because it was simply that we were afraid, that is the real truth of the matter.

32,912. Do you remember going with Mr. Smith by the mail train on the day his canvass was closed?—I did not go.

32,913. Was it your brother?—It is possible, I do not recollect. If you will tell me the date, I have his memorandum here.

32,914. I will give you the general date, the day he closed his canvass?—That would be 1865.

32,915. Refresh your memory; he was twice here?—I see; it is "Wednesday the 5th of July. Went "with R. Smith or B. Smith, I do not know which, "to London, by the 6.37 train. Saw Mr. Spofforth. "Home by express, 9 p.m., next day." I know what that was about; that was to try and get the name of a candidate, because I see they negotiated with a gentleman of the name of Hancock.

32,916. Before your brother and Mr. Smith returned Mr. Westropp had left Bridgwater, had not he, for London?—I do not know. I should say not, for there is no memorandum of it here.

32,917. Did he not go to London to see Mr. Edwards?—No, I expect not; I never heard so.

32,918. Soon after his return, that is to say, he returned on the Friday; you have Weduesday there as the day he went up?—Wednesday the 5th my brother went up and saw Mr. Spofforth.

32,919. You do not recollect Mr. Westropp going up on Thursday the 6th?—No.

32,920. Have you any recollection of his coming back on Friday the 7th?—No, not the slightest recollection.

32,921. Do you remember on Friday the 7th, or Saturday the 8th, a placard being issued stating that a Mr. Edwards was going to address the electors?—No, I was not in Bridgwater. I recollect the first thing I heard of Mr. Edwards was that he had been here and left.

32,922. (Mr. Coleridge.) You live eight miles out of Bridgwater?—I live eight miles out of Bridgwater.

32,923. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not know who ordered those placards?—I do not know anything of that; I never heard of them before.

32,924. Then subsequently to that, some days were there flags with Edwards and Westropp and Westropp and Edwards upon them?—I have no recollection of it at all. If you will allow me to say, all I recollect with reference to Mr. Edwards is that coming in from Stowey one day I was told that Mr. Edwards had been here and had turned funky and had gone away.

32,925. Mr. Westropp seems to deny that. He is asked about it, and he says, "It was not fear but family reasons which prevented Mr. Edwards remaining"?—When I say fear, I know his brother, who was a magistrate of the county, who lives at Rington, advised him not to; our character was too well known.

32,926. Do you remember a telegram to this effect, "Family reasons prevent me standing for the borough"?—Yes, I think I have heard of that. I never saw the telegram.

32,927. Do you know anything more about Mr. Edwards?—I do not.

32,928. Or his friend, Mr. Wellington Guernsey?—No, I never heard his name until I heard you mention it the other day.

32,929. Then the election took place?—Then the election took place, and of course it was very notorious that Mr. Westropp had spent a lot of money in bribery. I knew nothing whatever of it except that I had no doubt about it. I had nothing to do with it, the whole had been arranged, I suspect, beforehand some time. Mr. Bealy Smith and Mr. Westropp were great friends, and were in constant communication together.

32,930. I must ask you the same as I did your brother, whether you confirm Mr. Westropp's account which he gives of himself. He wished the House of Commons Committee to believe, and he seems to have succeeded in making them believe, that he was entirely passive throughout the whole election. I will give you his words. "I have never taken the trouble of looking at "the resolution appointing the committee; there was "no one named, nor did I in any way connect myself "with that or any other committee; on the contrary, "I studiously avoided going into any place or meeting, "or the committee, or in any way connected with the "election. In point of fact, I am not aware that I "had any committee, not the slightest. I am not "aware of any person acting for me except the election agent and the professional agent. I had no "particular persons to go about with me. I very "often found a difficulty in finding any of the gentlemen, whom I may call the blue party, to go with "me. I had no committee meeting in Mary Street, I "did not even know where it was. I do not know "that such a room was engaged. I had nothing to do "with the flags. I saw a variety of placards, but I "cannot say that I paid more attention to one than the "other. I never asked who the members of the committee were, for I never interfered with any of the "concerns of the election. It never occurred to my "mind who the committees might be for, I never "troubled my head in the least degree about it." Now, if all this or anything like this be true, there never was such a helpless tool in the hands of designing people in the constituency as Mr. Westropp, and I ask you, do you confirm his account of himself?—I should say he wilfully shut his eyes to it all; he thought he had best not know. With regard to the committee, I recollect there were committee rooms said to be Mr. Westropp's committee rooms, but I think it was quite nominal. I do not think there was any committee in reality, I never heard of any, it was just a rendezvous where people might go.

32,931. (Mr. Price.) You are an old inhabitant. Do you recollect that as a Bridgwater name at any time (handing a piece of paper written on)?—Yes.

32,932. Is there anyone alive of that name in the place now?—I think it is possible that some of the party may be along the lower classes.

32,933. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to state about the election of 1865?—No; I do not recollect anything at all.

32,934. (Mr. Price.) You recognize the name?—The name of course is very familiar to me.

32,935. (Mr. Coleridge.) And was held by a person in a certain office ?—Yes, of the lower class. I recollect a remarkable thing with reference to the name. Shall I tell it ?

32,936. Yes.

32,937. (Mr. Price.) You need not mention the name ?—I recollect, in 1852 I think it was, when Follett and Tynte were returned. We suspected that Colonel Tynte was playing us false, that he was going to get in Lord Henley or Mr. Kinglake, and I went and complained to Mr. Gooding, whom I knew very well. He is a personal friend of mine, and we complained to Colonel Tynte too, and said, "You are playing "us false; you are not going to return Mr. Follett, "and if you don't do so, if he is not returned, mind, "look out, you must take the consequences." I was then inspector of one of the booths, and after I had seen them I went back to my booth to attend to the work, and was called out of the booth by a man of the name of Haslam, employed to bribe by Colonel Tynte, who said, "Mr. Trevor, we are not playing you false, don't you believe it;" and to this man to whom you allude he said, "You take that; you are to go up and vote for Tynte and Follett, mind." I said, "No, "Haslam, I will have nothing to do with that; go "along, I will have nothing to say to that." I went back to my booth, and the man went up and voted for Tynte and Follett, and he received 10*l.*, I think it was, I did not see it; it was in some packet.

32,938. (Mr. Price.) Do you know any man of that name being in employment in the town within the last 10 years ?—No.

32,939. (Mr. Coleridge.) A son of that man ?—I think he was a lawyer's clerk. I may recollect it by-and-by; I will turn it over in my mind.

32,940. (Mr. Price.) If it has passed out of your recollection it is quite possible it has passed out of the recollection, if ever it was in the knowledge, of men like Robert Bussell and those men ?—He is more in their station of life, and they would know the name better than I should.

32,941. (Mr. Coleridge.) What age would the old man be if alive ?—70.

32,942. And what age the lawyer's clerk, his son ?—30 or 35. There are gentlemen in the room can tell you better than I can; but I am not clear now; I fancy he had a son a lawyer's clerk.

32,943. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you anything to do with the election trial ?—No, nothing whatever. I have never read the blue book even. I did not go to London, and was not consulted once about it.

32,944. The 1865 election ?—The 1865 election, Mr. Bealy Smith had the management of; he wanted assistance, and got Mr. Ruddock to go to London to assist him in it; but I was not consulted or my brother. We had nothing to do with it.

32,945. Do you remember Mr. Patton coming down here after Mr. Westropp was unseated ?—Yes.

32,946. Had you anything to do with his coming down ?—No, Mr. Spofforth made a mistake about that. I should suspect it was Mr. Ruddock, because it was when the petition was over.

32,947. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Spofforth said he was not quite sure about you ?—No, it was a mistake.

32,948. He said the heads of the party, but he was not quite sure ?—No, it was not me. I never heard anything of Mr. Patton until I saw him in Bridgwater.

32,949. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see him much during that contest ?—Yes.

32,950. Did anything transpire which leads you to suppose that he was aware that money was about to be spent, or had been spent, or was being spent profusely ?—I am quite as certain he knew nothing about it as I am of any fact I do not actually know. I recollect the morning of his second nomination.

32,951. (Mr. Price.) Were you introduced to his man who came down here, Mr. Pitman ?—Yes, I was going to say about Mr. Pitman.

32,952. Just give us the history ?—At the second election Mr. Pitman came down here. He was telegraphed for. We did not expect opposition, and when the opposition arose Mr. Pitman was telegraphed to come down.

32,953. Was he here on the first election ?—No doubt he was in communication with Mr. Smith a good deal.

32,954. Not with you ?—Not with me; all the money arrangements.

32,955. (Mr. Anstey.) You were saying that Mr. Pitman came down at the second election ?—He came down on the morning of the nomination by the mail train, and I shook hands with him on the hustings, and we did not care about hearing the speeches, so we chatted together. I said, "What does the Lord Advo-"cate say about the last election ?" He said, "He "has not the remotest notion of what took place more "than a child unborn. He would be perfectly horri-"fied at the idea of the thing."

32,956. Mr. Pitman told you ?—Yes.

32,957. (Mr. Price.) I can't understand how such a thing as that was kept secret. There was only a month between the two ?—Only they took care not to let him know it. A man about to be appointed Lord Advocate——

32,958. (Mr. Anstey.) When did he first know it ?—I was going to say, on the day of the polling, towards the afternoon, I was with him upstairs in his private room here, and we felt ourselves beaten. It was the second election. Frederick Temblett, whom you have had as a witness here, burst into the room and said, "We can save the election for 200*l.* If you will only give the word I will find the money."

32,959. (Mr. Coleridge.) He said this to Mr. Patton ?—Yes, and Mr. Patton was horrified. "Money," he said, "I wonder at your putting to me such a sub-"ject; I don't know what you mean." And Temblett pressed it, and said, "We must not lose the election, sir. "For God's sake don't let us lose it. There is money "spent on the other side;" and Mr. Patton went in and shut himself in his bedroom, and it did not appear to me to be done in the way a man pretending innocence would have done it, I think it was a genuine innocence as ever I saw in my life. I think he came here from Scotland without the slightest idea of our practices.

32,960. Did you hear him make his farewell speech ?—I did.

32,961. In the closing speech of which he announced something like a petition ?—Yes, he did. It was contrary to my advice. I knew, of course, I had moral knowledge, though not certainly legal, that we had been bribing, therefore I knew that a petition on his part would be a perfect absurdity. He said, "I shall go on "the hustings and threaten a petition, and carry out "my threat." I said, "Mr. Patton, if you take my "advice you will do nothing of the kind. Let it pass. "There will be plenty of time to do it afterwards if it "is considered desirable;" but he would go as he said he would.

32,962. He never acted on that ?—No; we had a meeting afterwards among ourselves, and I said, "We will never petition unless we go with clean hands."

32,963. Did you communicate that to Mr. Patton ?—No, never at all.

32,964. Did he take any steps to carry out his measures ?—No; I have no doubt he was kept back by his friends.

32,965. In London ?—No doubt.

32,966. (Mr. Price.) How soon after that was he made Lord Justice Clerk ?—It must have been a very short time; two or three months I should think.

32,967. (Mr. Anstey.) At the time Sir Duncan McNeil was made Lord Colonsay ?—Yes, very shortly, a few months; but if Mr. Patton was not innocent of our corrupt practices here, I am very much mistaken. I do not say he did not find them out afterwards to his cost.

32,968. Do you know what he said when he paid the bill ?—No, I heard what you said just now, but I never heard of it before.

32,969. Which of his friends was it who raised the money ?—It is only my suspicion, but I was always

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

1 Oct. 1869.

under the impression that his brother who died the other day was wealthy, and that the money came from him. I gather that they were very proud of his position.

32,970. He was very tenderly attached to his brother, I believe?—I have always understood so. Mr. Pitman, who was a very nice gentlemanly man, always spoke in very high terms of him, and said he was the most high-minded man he had ever had to do with.

32,971. Who else besides Mr. Pitman had he here?—I think it was the second election, the first Mr. Westropp was here.

32,972. But the second election?—I think at one of the elections, I am not sure which, Mrs. Patton was here, and her sister, Mrs. Gillespie, and I think young Mr. Gillespie, as near as I can recollect.

32,973. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Major Malcolm here?—I do not think he was, but I would not say he was not.

32,974. How came Mr. Patton, who had this very great horror of corruption and profuse expenditure at elections, to trust himself to such a man as Mr. Westropp, who had just been found guilty by the House of Commons?—Because Mr. Westropp was a popular man here, wonderfully popular. When he came down after being so badly treated and turned out for bribery, there were banners all through the town, and such a reception as I never saw in my life to any man; and I have no doubt we were under the impression, and a very strong one, that the strength of his popularity would have carried anyone at that time without money.

32,975. But it was also known to those who took the trouble to read Mr. Westropp's own evidence given before the House of Commons in 1866, that his seat had been obtained by the nursing and nourishing system which was followed for so many years, as he admitted?—Partly, no doubt.

32,976. But he admitted it himself?—He was very popular with the lower classes, and was "Hail, fellow, well met."

32,977. If Mr. Patton read the evidence which Mr. Westropp gave himself, and his own mode of manipulating the borough, how chanced it that he put himself under such a man?—Because he thought that his prestige would secure his return, I suppose.

32,978. That would not make the election a pure election. I am speaking with reference to purity?—It is refining the thing rather, to say because a man had bribed to obtain popularity, that therefore his popularity was not to bring another man in. I do not think there would be anything corrupt about that, would there? I fancy not.

32,979. It would be a subject of remark.

32,980. (Mr. Price.) You cannot touch pitch without being defiled. Mr. Patton seems to have had some suspicion, because the money, though nothing like the sum afterwards spent, I think we have evidence that the money he was prepared to spend was placed in the names of trustees, one of whom I think was Major Malcolm?—I do not know anything about that.

32,981. As if he were taking precautions against some hidden danger?—He was a child in election matters. I daresay he was very clever as a Scotch lawyer, but I should say he had about as good an idea of election matters as I have of Scotch law, not so much so.

32,982. Do you know who put it into his head to come to Bridgwater at all?—No, I never did; it came from the party in London.

32,983. Not from Mr. Westropp?—No; Mr. Spofforth, or some of his London friends.

32,984. Do you know nothing more about either the first or second election of 1866?—I had nothing to do with money, but of course I heard money was spent, and in fact I recollect hearing at the time of that first election that money was clubbed at the "Clarence." I do not know who it came from, but I heard that money was running short, and some was found in that way.

32,985. Then as to 1868?—In 1868 my position was a little altered. Mr. Bealy Smith had fallen into ill health, and I consented to take the nominal leadership of the party in conjunction with Mr. Brice. Mr. Brice had the chief part of the work, but I lent my counsel and assistance in the matter. Mr. Brice would not undertake it unless I joined him; we were personal friends, and I agreed to do that.

32,986. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know anything of Mr. Gray before he came down?—No, I had nothing at all to do with it. I never heard of his name.

32,987. All you know was that he was brought down by Mr. Westropp?—No, he was not, I apprehend. He was brought down by Mr. William Toogood, parliamentary agent, and introduced to Mr. Lilly the auctioneer; he saw Mr. Lilly, not me. He was not in Bridgwater but one or two hours, and in consequence of what he heard from them he went to see Mr. Westropp in London, but he was not a nominee of Mr. Westropp; I am certain Mr. Toogood got acquainted with him at the Conservative Club.

32,988. Considering that Mr. Westropp went on nursing and nourishing the borough during the whole of the interval between 1865 and 1868?—He did not, he gave it up. He put out an address saying that his connexion with the borough must cease.

32,989. Did not he go on?—He cast off the borough entirely, I apprehend.

32,990. Having tried nursing he tried a system of depletion?

32,991. (Mr. Price.) Starving?—I suppose he had depleted himself sufficiently.

32,992. (Mr. Anstey.) Then he came back again?—I was going to explain that. Whether he was requested by the committee of this 5th May dinner or no I do not know, but he came, and then it was not known he was coming forward. As the general election came near I was asked to go to London and see what his real views with respect to Bridgwater were. I went to London in July, and saw him at the Union Club, and told him I came to see what his views with regard to his candidature were, and I should like to know, I said, and he said, "If I get a sufficiently respectable requi-"sition I am willing to come forward again, but on "strictly purity principles. I have spent a very large "sum of money in Bridgwater; I have spent 7,400*l.* "in Bridgwater, and I think I have some claim on "the borough;" and I said, "Well, yes, Mr. West-"ropp, no doubt you are a popular man, but you must "not expect your popularity is going to outweigh the "Liberal money; if they spend money on the other "side you will be beaten;" and he said, "Well, I do not "think it. I have reason to know that the other side "will not oppose me very vigorously; in fact I have "written promises from one of the men, an in-"fluential man on the other side, not to oppose me." I asked him, "Who is it, Mr. Westropp?" and he said, "I am not at liberty to tell you." I said, "I "think you ought. I think it is due to me in my "position to know, and then I shall be able to judge "whether the thing may be relied on." He said, "I am not at liberty to tell you, and I cannot do it "now;" so I was rather aggrieved at the time.

32,993. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know now?—Mr. John Smith.

32,994. (Mr. Anstey.) What else did he say?—Nothing should induce him. The most money he would spend would be 500*l.*, and he would pay the legal expenses to the lawyers, but he would not pay anything beyond. He had been advised by his brother-in-law, Mr. Dobbs, who is a judge of the Encumbered Estates Court in Ireland, and in whom he had the greatest confidence, and he had quite determined he would not.

32,995. Was anything said about Mr. Gray?—This was some months before Mr. Gray was known.

32,996. Was it before the dinner?—No, after the 5th May dinner. This was about the beginning of July. I said to him, "Shall we go and see Mr.

" Spofforth, and hear what he says about getting " another man ;" and he said, " Yes, we will." On the following day we went and saw Mr. Spofforth, but he said, " Your character is most deuced bad in " Bridgwater ; I cannot recommend another man to " come with you ; you must do the best you can with " Mr. Westropp if he is willing to come forward ; you " are bound to him, and you must make the most you " can with him. Make a compromise with the other " side if you can." We said, " Cannot you find " anybody ?" and he said, " The only person is Mr. " Treby, the member for Lyme, and I will give you " a letter," which he did, and I took it to Mr. Treby at the House of Commons, but he would not hear of us at all ; he said he would give his answer to Mr. Spofforth, which he did, but did not entertain the thing at all. He would not go into it. We saw another gentleman, Mr. Thurston, I think, was recommended by the editor of the " Standard." As near as I can recollect he would not hear of it. He found out on inquiry that our character was bad, and he would not say anything at all.

32,997. How soon after was Mr. Gray fixed upon ?—I should tell you that while in London I went down to the House and saw Mr. Vanderbyl. I asked him whether he would enter into a negotiation for a coalition, one and one. He said he should like it of all things, it was the very thing he should like of all others, for his position in the House of Commons was not valuable as people thought it was ; it was very difficult to make arrangements. He was in the hands of Mr. Lovibond ; he was going to Pightley for a few days, and would see Mr. Lovibond to see whether anything could be done, to talk it over with him ; and I said, " Mind, there is one thing, if we are to have a fight you will have to pay Mr. Kinglake's solicitor ;" and he said he would be hanged if he would. We had some unimportant conversation with him, and never heard anything more about it. This was in July, and I came down in August.

32,998. You have heard Mr. Lovibond, in what I may call his examination, which was broken off by us, or rather by himself, state that at some period in the summer of 1868 to his astonishment he received a proposal from Mr. Vanderbyl to throw over his own agents, Messrs. Reed and Cook, and to cleave unto Mr. Lovibond, if Mr. Lovibond would throw over Mr. Kinglake, and he declined to do it ; was that, do you suppose, in consequence of your proposition to him of a coalition ?—I think very likely, for this reason, that Mr. Lovibond told me that Mr. Vanderbyl had suggested to him to offer me a retainer for himself, and Mr. Lovibond pooh-poohed it, and said it was perfectly useless to make me that offer of such nonsense.

32,999. Had you at this time, while in London, heard of the converse proposal having been made through Mr. Lovibond, that is, by Mr. Kinglake for a coalition which would squeeze out Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No, I never heard anything of that at all. In the month of August, on my way to Wells assizes, I fell in with Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Brice and I had talked the matter over, and it was arranged that I should see Mr. Lovibond and try to come to some terms. I saw him, and proposed first of all that there should be one and one. I said we had got so notorious for bribery that something or other must be done. I had come into the thing as the leader of our party. I arranged with Mr. Brice that I should see Mr. Lovibond, and endeavour to effect an arrangement for breaking down the system which had been pursued here for so many years, if possible. I saw him on the 4th of August, and we were both going to Wells assizes. I then asked him whether it was not possible to make an arrangement for one and one, and he said no, that they had both seats, two men, they could not get rid of either. I then asked him if he could make no arrangement to get rid of bribery, to fight a pure election on both sides. He said, " Well, I think we lawyers can trust " each other, but I do not think we can trust the out- " siders on either side." I then said, " I cannot help " thinking myself that we may fix upon 8 or 10 or 10 " or 12 leading men on each side, who, if they signed " a paper pledging themselves not to countenance " corrupt practices, and to retire from their party if " they found they were resorted to, we may trust them." Mr. Lovibond said, " Well, I do not know, if I think the thing is possible I will see you again."

33,000. (Mr. Anstey.) When was that ?—That was on the 4th of August. I did not see Mr. Lovibond again on that subject. He never mentioned the subject to me again, and so it passed. Mr. Gray came down here, I think, in the month of September at first ; I do not know when, some time in the month of September ; I did not see him. I was not in Bridgwater. I had heard when I came into Bridgwater that he had been down and making inquiries of Mr. Lilly, and one or two other of my friends. I rather think my brother saw him, I am not sure, and that he had gone away with the intention of conferring with Mr. Westropp. On the 3rd October Mr. Toogood called upon me and my brother, and we had a talk with him and Mr. Ruddock and Mr. Lilly on the subject of Mr. Gray's coming. I do not think there was anything very material that took place, but I think Mr. Toogood said that he would come, but he would not spend any money in corrupt practices. He had determined upon that, that nothing should induce him to spend money. It was not for the sake of saving his money that he did not wish to be mixed up with anything of the kind.

33,001. Mr. Gray did not ?—Mr. Gray did not. I do not think Mr. Westropp had been down here up to that time. I am not positive, but I recollect some time during the month of September Mr. Ruddock and Mr. Lilly went to Bristol, I think, to see Mr. Westropp, at his wish, to confer with him upon the election. They had had his confidence previously more than Mr. Brice and I had, and I think he was rather anxious to confer with them upon the subject, and they went to Bristol. I do not know exactly what took place, but they said when they returned that Mr. Westropp was still determined to come, and still determined to fight the thing purely. He did not deviate from that at all. On the 10th October Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray arrived.

33,002. On the 6th October they published their address ?—I suppose it was before they came. They came on Saturday the 10th, by the afternoon train. I dined with them here, I think at the " Clarence," and in the evening there was a meeting at the Town Hall. I never heard of any diversity of opinion among our own people. I believe we were perfectly unanimous in giving both those gentlemen our support. I remember being put forward to speak on that occasion to propose a vote of confidence in them, and while I was speaking a row took place, occasioned entirely by the intrusion of the opposite party. I remember Honyball kicked up a great row in the balcony, and he was kicked downstairs out of the place, and after a time that ceased, and Mr. Parker, who was in the chair, put it to the meeting whether these gentlemen should be accepted, and it was carried, I believe, unanimously by our own party ; but our political opponents, who had endeavoured to take upthe hall, of course voted the other way ; but the resolution was carried, and their candidature was accepted.

33,003. Did the chairman say, " I have a difficulty in knowing which side has the most " ?—I do not recollect it ; but I know there were a great many hands held up the other way, but it was not by our friends. It was our political opponents that held up their hands against them, we were unanimous about it. I do not know that there is anything during the canvass that I should particularly allude to. Of course there was the usual dining out, and gentlemen came and dined together ; and there was one at Stowey, and there was the celebrated dinner at Mr. Axford's, where the dishes were decorated with Westropp and Gray flags. I recollect a very short time before the election I was staying at Mr. Brice's house, and I recollect Mr. Brice went to London to see Mr. Gray's lawyers, to ask them to come down; we thought it better that they should come down, and they sent down their managing clerk. I do not think there was anything particular. He stayed here a day or two, and I recollect he took up a letter from Mr. Gray, but nothing came of that at all; I do not think it had anything to do except with the usual conduct of the election; to the best of my knowledge it had not. I do not know what the letter was about. The only other thing which perhaps I ought to allude to would be on the Sunday.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

1 Oct. 1869.

33,004. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it not Mr. Ruddock and Mr. J. R. Smith, and not Mr. Lilly, who went to Bristol?—Yes, it was Mr. Ruddock; it was not Mr. Lilly.

33,005. You said Mr. Lilly?—That is my mistake. I intended to have said Mr. Ruddock, because Mr. Ruddock had had to do with Mr. Westropp all through the petition, and had got his confidence entirely. I recollect on the Sunday that that offer of a compromise coming from Mr. Fennelly, and Mr. Westropp consulting Mr. Brice and myself about it. What has been stated about that is substantially correct, I believe, and as far as I know; and Mr. Westropp told us that Mr. Fennelly had offered to meet us half way. I said to Mr. Westropp, "I suppose he means you are to bribe one half and he is to bribe the other."

33,006. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Mr. Westropp say?—Mr. Westropp said, "I do not know what he meant," and he said, "It did not occur to me in that way."

33,007. Through the unfortunate absence of Mr. Purcell, our secretary, I have to quote from memory from the brief. I wish I had the brief here?—There must be two or three copies of that in your box.

33,008. It ought to have been here on the table along with the other papers, and kept there. The words are these, I think. I have read them over a great many times; he proposed to Mr. Westropp, in the name of Mr. Vanderbyl, that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp should coalesce, because Mr. Vanderbyl had had a row with his agent?—Yes, I recollect he said that. It was a row with Reed and Cook two or three days before.

33,009. And that if Mr. Westropp would agree to the coalition he would meet Mr. Westropp half way. Was what Mr. Westropp understood that he proposed to join with him in bribery?—My impression is that it was I that suggested that.

33,010. I hope we shall get that brief, then I will read it to you perfectly?—I daresay your recollection of it is quite right. I am not clear, but I think I said to Mr. Westropp, "What did he mean by that?" Mr. Westropp said, "I do not know." I said, "I suppose the meaning must be that you were to bribe one half and he the other half." Mr. Westropp said, "What shall we do about it?" I said, "You had better go back and say that any proposition "of the kind must be made to us by the legal agents, "Messrs. Reed and Cook." And I said, "I daresay "you will be sold. They will turn round upon you at "the last moment, and you will find yourself sold."

33,011. Did Mr. Westropp tell you anything more of what Mr. Fennelly had said on the subject of expenditure?—I do not think anything was said about expenditure at all. It was only by inference. There was nothing directly said about expenditure. It was only an interpretation put upon Mr. Fennelly's words.

33,012. Was anything said about saving expenditure?—I do not think there was. I did not hear anything about expenditure at all directly. It was only by inference that that was construed into expenditure.

33,013. Did he receive any formal proposition from the other side?—No, I never heard a word of it.

33,014. Do you recollect what time in the day it was when Mr. Westropp told you this?—The meeting at Mr. Hennett's house was at nine in the evening. He showed us the letter which he had received from Hennett and Spink, dating from the "Globe" hotel, asking him to come to Hennett's house at nine o'clock. He went there at nine, and must have stayed about an hour; and then he came back to Mr. Brice's house and saw Mr. Brice and me. The two houses are very near together. He said, "What are we to do?" I said, "Go back and send Reed and Cook to us."

33,015. Was that Saturday or Sunday?—Sunday.

33,016. Was he aware (Mr. Westropp I mean) that at that very time Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Kinglake's friends were trying on their side to get Mr. Vanderbyl to retire and have a compromise with you?—Well, I think Mr. Fennelly told him so. I think Mr. Fennelly told him. I am not certain about that; but we heard of it; and I am pretty sure it came from Mr. Fennelly. Mr. Fennelly had said that a deputation had waited upon Mr. Vanderbyl and asked him to resign; or whether we heard that the next morning about Mr Kinglake I do not know. I recollect hearing it very well.

33,017. Did it occur to you or to him, that is to say, was it mentioned between you and him, that little dependence could be placed upon either Vanderbyl or Kinglake, as each was endeavouring to betray the other?—I did not hear anything about a compromise with Kinglake at all.

33,018. I think you said that Mr. Westropp had told you that Mr. Fennelly had told him so?—No, I do not recollect that. I do not think he did.

33,019. (Mr. Price.) I do not see how it could have been worked half and half. Do you suppose that if Mr. Vanderbyl had bribed he could have made it an understanding with his men that they should give the other half of their votes to Mr. Westropp?—That they should vote for Vanderbyl and Westropp in the same way that men had before voted for Tynte and Follett.

33,020. They could control the bribe agents?—Oh yes, no doubt. The great majority would, no doubt. I do not mean to say that all would.

33,021. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Gray was prepared to agree to anything?—Oh no. Mr. Gray had not been consulted about it, because I said to Mr. Westropp, "You must not make an arrangement of this kind without Mr. Gray;" and he said, "Oh no; I will do nothing without Mr. Gray's sanction."

33,022. When Mr. Gray was consulted about it what did——?—He was not consulted about it. The thing fell through.

33,023. Mr. Westropp seem to have taken it for granted that Mr. Gray would consent?—Oh no, my words were, "Hear all and say little. There is no "harm in seeing what they have got to say for them-"selves. They proposed the interview. You go to "it and hear all you can and come back to us."

33,024. It is a fact that Mr. Gray at that election was quite preparad to let his own chance go?—Mr. Gray was quite willing to do anything in the world that was thought the best for the party; but my belief is that if the arrangement had been carried out Mr. Gray would have been the gentleman to have the seat and not Mr. Westropp.

33,025. Why so?—Because Mr. Westropp was tired of the thing, and he had got into bad health.

33,026. This was on the Sunday?—No, when we were endeavouring to compromise the petition. Mr. Westropp said his health was not good; and I fancied also that the money was getting short.

33,027. Then this election went on?—The election went on. Then Mr. Brice and I did not hear anything the next morning from Reed and Cook, and we both made up our minds that they would go in and spend money when they found they could not compromise. We both agreed upon that, and the nomination took place; and in the evening we saw two or three of the men that I suppose were mixed up in bribery practices. That was, I think, in the next room, where you were sitting yesterday; and they wanted to know whether any money was to be spent, and we said no, decidedly not, it was quite determined that no money should be spent.

33,028. (Mr. Anstey.) I will read you the words now, Mr. Trevor, from the brief. "Mr. Vanderbyl must have felt aggrieved at this," that is to say, at having to submit to be squeezed out in order to bring about a coalition between Kinglake and Westropp. "Mr. Vanderbyl must have felt aggrieved at this, for "on Sunday, the day before the nomination, he sent "his confidential friend, Mr. Fennelly, to Mr. West-"ropp, asking him to coalesce with Mr. Vanderbyl, "stating that Mr. Vaderbyl had put himself in his "hands, and had had a row with his agents, Messrs. "Reed and Cook. He at the same time offered Mr. "Westropp to meet him half way, from which Mr. "Westropp inferred that he would join him in bribery. "This Mr. Fennelly was formerly a clerk in the "National Bank, of which Mr. Vanderbyl has, until "since the election, been a director. Within the last "two or three years Mr. Fennelly has become a "partner in the firm of Fennelly, Redfern, and Co., "provision merchants, Tooley Street, with which "firm Mr. Vanderbyl is supposed to be intimately "connected." That is the whole passage?—Yes. That was general instructions to counsel. I still think that the suggestion emanated from my mind that what he must have meant was that they should join in bribery. I think so. I would not be positive, but I think so.

33,029. What were the words which Mr. Westropp reported him to have used about "half way"?—Either "I will meet you half way," or "We will meet you half way," I do not know which. "We will meet you," I think.

33,030. On the Monday after the nomination?—On the Monday after the nomination Mr. Brice and I were here, and Mr. Batten, and one or two others came and they requested to see us, and they were shown up. They said, "We have come to know whether any money is going or not." Mr. Brice said, "It is no "use disguising the fact any longer. There won't be "a shilling." Before we had kept quiet, because we knew it would fly all over the town, and our opponents would know we were fighting a sham fight.

33,031. Down to late on Monday?—No, 6 or 7o'clock.

33,032. That would be late in the month of November?—Oh yes, it had been dark some little time. Then I went back to Mr. Brice's house. I had determined not to go out again. I had inflammation in my eyes, and I thought it was best to be indoors. But I was sent for and told that there was a great row at the "Clarence," and that Messrs. Westropp and Gray were asked to resign. We found about 20 in the private room. They were very angry at what had been said, and they said they would not be made fools of.

33,033. (Mr. Price.) Who was there?—Dr. Farmer, Mr. Heard. Mr. Heard was very strong about it. Now Mr. Heard had got, I think, some pique against the other party in consequence of some previous prosecution.

33,034. (Mr. Anstey.) They obtained a rule for a criminal information. Was Dr. Farmer very strong?—I do not recollect whether he said anything. Mr. Parker was present, Mr. Ruddock, Mr. Lilly, Mr. Joe Smith, I think.

33,035. What did Mr. Parker say?—He said very little. He was not a man who would be likely to say much upon that subject. He would not find fault and say we were wrong.

33,036. He was the gentleman that proposed Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

33,037. Would he be against or for spending money?—No, he would be one of the men who think malum prohibitum, malum in se. Nothing would induce him to touch bribery.

33,038. Mr. J. R. Smith was also there?—I say with regard to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, I doubt very much whether you will find he has ever been a bribe agent.

33,039. What did he say on the occasion?—I think he wanted them to resign, that is, I fancy so.

33,040. Because they would not spend money?—I do not know. There was a great row. Mr. Moore, the draper, was there kicking up a great row, very tipsy. I knew Mr. Smith had quite determined.

33,041. Were they asked to resign because they would not spend money?—No; Mr. Smith had quite determined that no money should be spent.

33,042. (Mr. Price.) What were they angry about?—Because there was no money.

33,043. (Mr. Anstey.) You say Mr. Smith wanted them to resign?—Yes; he thought it would be best when he found our men so angry, and they were so split up and divided. He thought the best thing would be for them to resign and have no more bother about it. I know perfectly well that Mr. Smith at that time had quite determined that he would have nothing to do with corruption at that election.

33,044. How do you know?—He told me. He said, "I have just read the new Act of Parliament, and it "is too risky a thing for me to have anything to do "with it."

33,045. When did he say that?—I think when he was mayor. The Acts of Parliament came to him as mayor. He told me that he had been studying the Act of Parliament, and had arrived at the conclusion that it was a most stringent Act of Parliament.

33,046. He must have known that it was an offence at common law, and forbidden by a number of old statutes?—Yes, but the tribunal was different. I think his chief thing was the tribunal, that it was shifted from the House of Commons to a judge of nisi prius. That is what operated on his mind and the minds of many.

33,047. It was more easily found out?—Yes.

33,048. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or less easily concealed?—The terror of a judge coming down upon the spot and bringing everybody up before him was too great to be encountered.

33,049. It was less easily concealed?—Less easily concealed, no doubt. If you go before a committee of the House of Commons you have a hope that your own political friends will be struck upon the committee.

33,050. (Mr. Anstey.) All these things constituted bribery at common law?—No doubt there was not such additional stringency in the Act of Parliament, except in discovering the offence.

33,051. It appears to me that the Act of Parliament in limiting the prosecution to one year has done great mischief in the opposite direction?—I think we arrived at a wrong conclusion about the Act of Parliament, but this is the conclusion that Mr. Smith and many others had arrived at, that it was a most stringent law.

33,052. (Mr. Price.) I think if there is a benefit derived from the new tribunal, as far as my experience goes, the locality of the tribunal is the great benefit derivable from it?—When we had a judge accustomed to sit at nisi prius down here on the spot, there would be very little hope of being able to disguise the corrupt practices. That operated, I am sure, on Mr. Smith's mind and on the minds of many others.

33,053. The witnesses did go away in this case, and no doubt in others, yet at the same time there is not the same power of getting witnesses out of the way as there used to be under the old system?—No.

(The witness.) Well, then, I spoke very strongly against their resigning, and I believe I quite insisted on their going to the poll; they had incurred every expense which they need incur, and we would go to the poll and make the best fight we could, and see what our opponents were going to do; and it was put to the vote and I think carried by a majority that they should go to the poll. They went to the poll the next day.

33,054–5. Do you think it oozed out on the other side?—No doubt it did.

33,056. And it would have some effect probably on their tactics?—It would have this effect, that they did not begin to bribe in the morning. When they found we were not going to they did not.

33,057. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear anything that

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

1 Oct. 1869.

happened before the poll that morning?—No, I did not hear anything till afterwards.

33,058. Were you present the night before when Mr. Cooper asked the question at the "Clarence" of the party what they were going to do?—I think it is very likely that Mr. Cooper was at the meeting. My impression is that he was there.

33,059. Do you recollect Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp being asked to leave the room while you were discussing the question whether money should be spent or not?—I do not recollect.

33,060. And then their being readmitted?—I have got a very indistinct recollection of something of the kind, but I should not like to say. It is so very indistinct that I do not recollect.

33,061. (Mr. Price.) "Sugar." Mr. Smith said this about M.D. and sugaring the plums. Is that consistent with your notion of Mr. Smith's determining to have a pure election?—Perfectly.

33,062. Tell me how?—I reconcile it in this way, that what Mr. Smith said to the men was, "Don't "leave your party upon the promises on the other "side. You have the money down before you leave "your party."

33,063. (Mr. Anstey.) Two witnesses say there were no such qualifying words?—Oh, I know Mr. Smith too well. He was too clever a man to go and blare his corrupt practices before two or three hundred people. He is not a man to do that.

33,064. Is not it a fact with reference to that family, I must call it that notorious family, of which Mr. J. R. Smith, pawnbroker, Mr. Bealy Smith, who has fled to Australia—— ?—No. If you will allow me to say, I do not think that. I think the man's mind went, and I think he went to Australia entirely independent——

33,065. Mrs. Smith was asked yesterday whether his going away had anything to do with his apprehension of the proceedings, and she said, "Yes"?—I very much question it. I am surprised to hear it, and I think she is under a wrong impression.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I think she said his head went first.

(The witness.) Depend upon it it had nothing to do with this inquiry.

33,066. (Mr. Anstey.) Put it so. Is the Mr. Smith the pawnbroker and the Mr. Smith who took, as your brother said, the command of the Conservative party in 1852, because he was less scrupulous about money matters than your firm, and, finally, Mr. Smith who is in Exeter or Teignmouth, and who can drive about and go and see land, make bargains about land, and vote at elections, but cannot come to be examined before us touching his former practices—putting all those things together, and bearing in mind also that that invalid makes no scruple, as we are told by our secretary, of saying that if the election were to come on again he would bribe for his party as he had done before—would you still say that the Smiths' were so characterized by prudence as to feel themselves restrained at the excitement of an election from giving the advice which two witnesses on oath have sworn that they did give to a number of Conservative operatives?—I am perfectly satisfied that Mr. Joseph Smith would not have gone into a public room and made that speech for two reasons. One is, because I know he had made up his mind to have nothing to do with corrupt practices at that election, and the other is, that he was a deal too clever to commit himself in that way before a lot of men who at any moment might come and prove it against him. Mr. Joseph Smith is nothing to me. I have nothing whatever to do with him.

33,067. Has he not the reputation of being a very imprudent speaker?—A very violent hot-tempered man, no doubt.

33,068. With regard to the duty of the rich to the poor, more especially with reference to the one and the other as members of a Christian congregation, and so forth?—I think he is a kind of man that would not spare anybody, friend or foe, if he took a notion into his head.

33,069. When he once begins to speak, is it not the fact that he cannot restrain himself?—I think he could restrain himself within such bounds as that. I feel sure of it. I was not at the meeting, and so of course I only give you my idea of it. Well, then, the day of polling—about the middle of the day I think it was—Mr. Brice came to me and said, "Well, they want "some money. I think money may be wanted by-"and-by, and it has been suggested that a little money "should be got together." He said, "What do you think of it?" I said, "I don't think it will do at all." I said, "Don't you hear of it." He said, "I thought it right to mention it to you," and I said, "I will go "at once and hear what Mr. Joseph Smith says. My "impression is that he won't entertain it." I saw Mr. Smith, and he immediately repudiated the whole thing altogether; he would be no party to it, he said, we should get ourselves and all our friends into a tremendous scrape. I said I was very glad to hear him express that opinion, because it was entirely my own. No money was got together, and I firmly believe that not one shilling was spent in bribery, and any promises made were entirely unauthorized.

33,070. I must have misunderstood Mrs. Smith. She said decidedly not.

33,071. (Mr. Price.) There was no prayer for the seat?—Oh yes there was.

33,072. Oh yes; but it was the question of the expense of the scrutiny that stopped you. I have been corrected about that before?—I should say that up to the day of polling we professional men intended to have our retainers. 700*l.* was deposited in my name by Westropp and Gray at Stuckey's bank, and it was intended that out of that sum the professional men should be paid their retainers.

33,073. (Mr. Coleridge.) What would those have been?—A single member of a firm, 50*l.*; two or more members of a firm, 75*l.*; a young man just commencing practice, 25*l.* That was the usual thing.

33,074. 75*l.* each member, or between the two?—Between the two. But on the day of polling (we did not poll in the morning, we did not intend to poll during the day,) but in the middle of the day, I forget the time, about 12 or 2 o'clock, I said to Mr. Brice, "They are polling up, and perhaps our votes will turn the election. I vote we give up our retainers." He said, "I quite agree with you." I went and fetched my brother and Mr. Boyle, and mentioned the subject to them. They all agreed with me that our votes, five or six, would very likely turn the election, and rather than lose the election we would rather lose our fees, and we went up in a body to Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray in their private room, and we told them, "We value your seats to-day more than we do our "retainers, therefore we beg you to understand that "we shall have no retainers whatever, and that our "services are entirely gratuitous;" and I turned round to Mr. Gabriel Poole (who happened to be in the room), and I said, "I shall be much obliged to you if you will recollect this conversation." We went up then and voted. In regard to that sum of 700*l.*, I paid the legal expenses of the election and bills that were brought it. There were some few brought in, I believe, for printing squibs, which I did not consider legal expenditure, at all events not an authorized expenditure, and I rejected that, and I think that was the only one I did reject.

33,075. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was done with the money that was to have been paid for your attendance?—I paid out of that, 80*l.*, somewhere about 80*l.*, towards the expenses of the petition. I paid Gurney's bill out of that, and the law stationer's bill, about 80*l.*, and the rest of the money is at the bank still.

33,076. Never been withdrawn?—It has never been withdrawn. I thought it best not, pending the inquiry into the petition.

33,077. How much is there there?—You have got the banker's pass book. 200*l.* or 300*l.*, I think.

33,078. You are doubtless aware that in the Registration Act all this is forbidden, voting by anybody who has been paid?—Yes; that is why we did not take the money.

33,079. It does not seem, as far as the Act goes, to void the election?—It is made a misdemeanor under the Act of Parliament.

33,080. A misdemeanor, and doubtless bad votes on a scrutiny?—It was the misdemeanor that we did not like the look of. I do not know that there is is anything else for me to inform you of.

33,081. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Mr. Kinglake at any meeting at which he was present?—Do you mean about a compromise?

33,082. Yes?—I saw him at the "Tavistock." Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Lovell Sealy were there the day the petition was presented, and Mr. Lovibond was there.

33,083. Were you aware then that Mr. Kinglake's bribery bill was partly defrayed out of moneys advanced by Sealy's bank?—No; it has been reported.

33,084. You had heard the report?—Yes; the very day of the election the information was brought to us that young Prior had taken 500 sovereigns across to Allan.

33,085. On the polling day?—On the polling day. I had not the least idea. It was brought here as a rumour. I never believed it for an instant. I could not have conceived that such an imprudence had been committed.

33,086. (Mr. Price.) How soon after did you hear it?—Some time in the evening. I went over to Taunton that same afternoon, to attend to the county election, and before I went away I heard it.

33,087. These things do get out, don't they?—It is a most remarkable thing that the things get out. We were told it was taken to Allan by young Prior, and that Allan had taken it to the "New Inn," and was bribing fellows in the bedroom.

33,088. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you talk to Prior about it?—No.

33,089. Nor to Mr. Sealy?—No, I never said a word to Mr. Sealy at all about it.

33,090. When Mr. Sealy came up with Mr. Kinglake?—When he came up to the "Tavistock" I just shook hands, and I said, "How d'ye do?" and I did not say anything more.

33,091. Was there anything in Mr. Sealy's manner when this conversation was going on which led you to think that Mr. Sealy was alarmed for himself and his partner?—No, nothing whatever. Of course I thought it was an unusual thing, his coming to the "Tavistock" with Mr. Kinglake and being there. That was the only thing that appeared to me to be unusual. He did not say a word about it. I think on that very day Mr. Lovibond was very anxious that Mr. Westropp should have an interview with Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. Westropp declined to have it, refused it altogether.

33,092. Did Mr. Kinglake say anything at all on the subject of expenditure?—I never said a word to Mr. Kinglake about it at all.

33,093. Did he say anything?—I never heard him say anything. I never had any conversation with Mr. Kinglake in my life.

33,094. Did anybody say anything at that meeting?—It was not a meeting. The room at the "Tavistock" is a very long room, and Mr. Westropp and I were at one end and the others at the other. I only saw them as I passed by.

33,095. (Mr. Price.) It was not a regular meeting?—No.

33,096. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is like three separate rooms?—Yes.

33,097. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake exchange any words?—No, Mr. Westropp would not have anything to say to him, and Mr. Lovibond requested him, and came up, and for half an hour tried to argue with Mr. Westropp to give way.

33,098. To consent to see Mr. Kinglake?—To consent not to present the petition.

33,099. And to speak to Mr. Kinglake?—And to speak to Mr. Kinglake, and he said, "No, I won't have "another word. I won't see him. Nothing shall "induce me to withhold the petition. I won't see "Mr. Kinglake at all."

33,100. Did Mr. Lovibond say anything in your hearing by which you could fairly understand that he was alive to the fact that bribery had been committed not for Mr. Vanderbyl merely, but for Mr. Kinglake?—No, just the reverse. Mr. Lovibond always assured me that he thanked God that he was not in the mess himself, but he was afraid it was more than he could say for some of his friends. My answer was, "I expect "Reed would know something about it, from his "anxiety in the matter," and Mr. Lovibond said, "I "should not wonder if he did."

33,101. (Mr. Price.) When do you mean to say that he said that?—When we were up at the "Tavistock."

33,102. (Mr. Anstey.) On that occasion?—Yes. I think it was on the Monday that the petition was presented, in the smoking room at the "Tavistock."

33,103. (Mr. Anstey.) He said, "I thank God that "I am not in the mess myself, but I am afraid that is "more than I can say of some of my friends."—Yes.

33,104. That meant Sealy and Prior, I suppose?—Oh no. My answer was, "I suspect Reed knows something about it, from his anxiety," and Mr. Lovibond said, "Well, yes; I should not wonder if he did."

33,105. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Mr. Lovibond had himself sent for this 500*l.* at the election?—So it seems now. I did not know it then.

33,106. He could not have meant, surely, that Mr. Reed had been bribing for Kinglake?—They were in copartnership.

33,107. Contrariwise, Mr. Lovibond was bribing for Vanderbyl?—Oh no. If a man was bribed at all he was to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

33,108. We have it in evidence that both paid money?—Oh yes, no doubt.

33,109. Then why do you suppose he meant Reed and Cook, and not rather, as I should imagine, his own particular friends, Sealy and Prior and Mogg?—Because I did not know anything about Sealy and Mogg, how far they were mixed up in the matter at all; but I knew that Mr. Reed had expressed very great anxiety to me to get the thing settled, and he said, "For God's sake, Trevor, get the thing settled somehow. I cannot allow it to go on." Therefore I did not want to ask them any questions about it, but I assumed from that that Mr. Reed must have been in the mess.

33,110. You assumed it then?—Yes.

33,111. Not what you suppose now, after all the evidence you have heard. Do you suppose that when Mr. Lovibond said, "I am not in the mess, but I am afraid some of my friends are," he meant Mr. Reed, who was not his friend at all?—Well, I suppose what he meant was to throw me off my guard, for me to fancy that he had nothing to do with it. That is what I thought he meant.

33,112. (Mr. Price.) Did you at that time say anything to him of the story we have heard about the 500*l.*?—No, I did not believe it. One hears so many rumours at elections. I thought it was one of the absurd rumours. I knew Mr. Lovibond was an acute, clever man, and I could not conceive he ever would have run such a risk.

33,113. Did you believe at that time, from what he said, that at all events, though bribery had been done, he had been in no way a principal party to it?—Well, I did not believe he had gone the length he had. I thought perhaps he might have known as much as Mr. Smith had known at the previous election.

33,114. That he could not have done such a thing as we have heard he did do?—I was perfectly astonished when I heard that come out in evidence. I should have thought Mr. Lovibond was a deal too acute to do anything of the kind.

33,115. You remained in ignorance of any part he

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

1 Oct. 1869.

had taken in the matter till you heard it in court?—Yes, I had no idea of it till I heard it in court. The only suspicion I had on the subject was that Mr. Reed some two or three times said, "When the petition "comes on, when the time comes for us lawyers to go "into the box, do, for goodness' sake, call Lovibond "before you call me."

33,116. (Mr. Anstey.) This disclosure which came out before us, this story not yet complete, about 500*l.*, excited great surprise in you?—It did.

33,117, And no doubt in others?—Our idea was that it had been clubbed by some of the people in the town in the same way as the other party had also clubbed before.

33,118. No doubt it has led to a great deal of conversation and discussion. Perhaps you have heard and can tell me the name of somebody, or mention some little incident or other, which if you will state to us we will follow up, and which being followed up may enable us to complete this incredible story as to the authority under which this 500*l.* was advanced?—No; I am assured by my friends on the other side, with whom I have talked on the matter, that Mr. Lovell Sealy really did not know anything about it at all. I am told so. Lately I have said, "Many of the "public seem to think that Mr. Prior has been screen-"ing Mr. Sealy," and they assured me they did not think anything of the kind, that Mr. Sealy, according to their impression, was purposely kept from knowing anything of the matter by Mr. Prior, and that Mr. Sealy did not know anything of it.

33,119. We have more evidence than that, you know, Mr. Trevor. We have evidence that Mr. Prior understood from Mr. Sealy's communication to him at the previous elections of 1866, that it was his, Prior's, duty not to let Mr. Sealy know, but to keep him ignorant?—Yes, Mr. Sealy did not know anything of the 500*l.* At their half-yearly balances it was returned "cash in hand."

33,120. At present, on Mr. Prior's evidence it looks very probable that Mr. Sealy's being kept in ignorance was in consequence of Mr. Sealy's understood wishes at the elections of 1866?—Oh, I think that is very likely.

33,121. Then you know the question still remains, under what authority was that money advanced? If you could give us the name of any person who is likely to know, and likely to be more communicative than Mr. Prior or Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Mogg, you will greatly further the ends of justice?—Of course I am sworn to tell you the whole truth, and if I could throw the slightest light upon it I would do so at once. I think the other clerks did not know anything about it.

33,122. (Mr. Price.) That is the only way the thing could have got about, but it is proved to us that no other clerk was in the bank at the time?—Young Mr. Prior took it down. The only thing would have been to see young Mr. Prior, the banker's son, walking down to Allan's house.

33,123. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any organized system of spies at that election on your side?—No, no organized system at all.

33,124. You had not paid people to watch the other side?—I do not know.

33,125. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know of any other person who heard this rumour besides yourself about the 500*l.*?—I should think Joe Smith, Lilly, Brice, Westropp, and Gray must all have heard it.

33,126. If we could get at the name of only one person who was the mouthpiece of the rumour and through whom you heard it, we could easily find out the name of the person who on the Liberal side had turned traitor, and then we should gain what we want to know?—I would not withhold it, I am sure, if I could throw the slightest light upon it.

33,127. At present you know the thing is simply incredible; the excuse or explanation offered is simply, to my mind incredible, whether told by Mr. Mogg or Mr. Prior or Mr. Lovibond?—I can only account for it by knowing that Mr. Prior was a strong politician, and that he knew that Mr. Sealy was a strong politician, and would have made any sacrifice to have got Mr. Kinglake returned, and would have paid the 500*l.* out of his own pocket if he could have done it.

38,128. That is certainly not the case, because it was concerted by Mr. Lovibond and Dr. Kinglake weeks before, and even over night?—Not the authority for the 500*l.*

33,129. The greater contained the less. The authority the night before was for 1,500*l.*?—Yes, I am aware of that.

33,130. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything more?—There is all this about the compromise. I can go into the whole of that if you wish it.

33,131. (Mr. Anstey.) About Mr. Reed. Mr. Reed says that so strong was his impression that Mr. Vanderbyl's statement was not true, that he leaned over to you just after giving his evidence?—No, it was just before he gave his evidence, when he was going back into court after lunch.

33,132. And said, "For God's sake, Trevor, don't cross-examine Vanderbyl." Is that so?—Yes, quite true. We were rushing into court; there was a great rush of people to go into court.

33,133. (Mr. Price.) What was the meaning of that?—Well, Mr. Reed had been in communication with me all through the thing to try to prevent an exposure up to the last moment. I was continually entreated not to expose them if I could help it.

33,134. (Mr. Anstey.) What did he say?—"Don't "call us. If you are going to call me let me know "beforehand. Give me a hint when you are going "to call me, and I shall run away. I shall never "stand the ordeal. I will go."

33,135. I mean with reference to the cross-examination?—That was going into court. We were, at all events, to do without it; they were, at all events, going to give in; and when we were going into court Mr. Reed was next to me—(it had oozed out that they were going to throw up the sponge and give in)—and when we were pushed into court Reed was next to me, and he whispered into my ear, "For God's sake don't cross-examine Vanderbyl."

33,136. You see Mr. Serjeant Parry is reported in this blue book, which is an official report, to have used these words, "I have therefore felt it my duty to "abstain from putting any questions to Mr. Kinglake "or Mr. Vanderbyl"?—Well, sir, I will tell you all about it.

33,137. The "therefore" refers to their having stated on oath, and "on the word of a gentleman," and upon "honour," that the fact was so and so?—Yes.

33,138. Well, now, was Mr. Serjeant Parry aware when he made that statement to Mr. Justice Blackburn that the request had been made on Mr. Vanderbyl's own behalf, if not on Mr. Kinglake's also, that no question should be put?—Oh, yes; directly I got into court I told Mr. Serjeant Parry what Mr. Reed had said to me.

33,139. What did he say?—Well, he considered for a moment, and said, "I don't know that we want to "expose them. All we want to do is to succeed upon "our petition."

33,140. After that was not it going too far to say, "My lord, it is impossible to doubt the word of a gen-"tleman like Mr. Kinglake. If even without being "upon his oath, he came forward and stated before "your lordship, and the high tribunal you represent, "upon his honour that a fact was so and so, I believe "there is no man in this country but would believe "him. I have therefore felt it my duty to abstain "from putting any questions to Mr. Kinglake or to "Mr. Vanderbyl"?—I can only tell you the facts as they exist.

33,141. The real reason was that they might not be exposed?—No doubt. At least I assumed so after what Mr. Reed had said to me, because I recollect very well, when Mr. Vanderbyl said what he did, whispering into Mr. Serjeant Parry's ear. I said, "That's a crammer."

33,142. (Mr. Price.) I suppose you mean that if

Mr. Kinglake had been cross-examined it might have altered the complexion of his statement a little?—My impression with regard to Mr. Kinglake was either that he did not know that the practices had been resorted to, or my impression was at the time that he went away from Bridgwater because he should not know. That was my idea, whether right or wrong. I was assured that he was perfectly innocent of the matter. We thought he went away in order not to know, and we thought it a strange thing for a gentleman who had represented Bridgwater in several parliaments to run away from his friends in the middle of the day. If you will allow me to make one explanation, I do not wish to throw dirt on Mr. Lovibond, but there are one or two things in his statement made the other day which I should like to mention. One is this: he says that I saw Mr. Fennelly, and that it was arranged with him that one seat should be given up. That is not so. Mr. Lovibond is mistaken about that. I never knew Mr. Fennelly by sight even until I saw him in the Town Hall the other day. I do remember his coming to the "Tavistock" to see Mr. Lovibond, when I was there; but Mr. Lovibond went to him at the other end of the coffee room, and I did not even see his face. The other point is that "Mr. Lovibond stated "that Mr. Trevor has obtained from Mr. Westropp a "written agreement that the petition was not to be "presented on these terms." That is not so. Mr. Lovibond is mistaken there. Mr. Westropp never did sign any agreement about it at all. When Mr. Lovibond made the proposition to me, I of course spoke to Mr. Westropp about it, and he entertained the thing, no doubt, and said, "Well, you had better "go down to Bridgwater and consult our friends; I "can do nothing. I am pledged to them, and I will "do nothing without their consent. You must go "down and see what you can do with it, and let "me know." I said, "Mr. Westropp, we will have "no misunderstanding; you will kindly sit down "and write what you consider to be the offer." Mr. Westropp then sat down and wrote in a few words what he considered to be the offer, which I was to bring down and consult our friends about. I believe you have got that among the papers. But he entered into no written agreement at all, nor did he pledge himself to accept the offer made. It was entirely conditional, anything he said, on having the consent of his friends at Bridgwater. I came down, and instead of conciliation there was a great row about it. They said they would have blood; nothing short of blood would satisfy them; they were determined to blow up the whole concern, whatever the consequences might be; and I told Mr. Lovibond that such was the result, and he must consider the negotiation at an end. Then I went home and was taken ill, and the next thing was that Mr. Lovibond and my brother came up, and Mr. Lovibond begged that some further efforts might be made to get the thing arranged. There certainly was never any breach of faith on Mr. Westropp's part about it. I believe Mr. Lovibond did not intend to misinterpret it.

33,143. (Mr. Price.) This has puzzled me very much during this inquiry: can you throw any light upon it. At this inquiry there are gentlemen on your side and on the other side, and they get a fee which, divided into years, only comes to 19*l.* a year. I want to know why it is that there should be a tremendous desire at all risks and penalties of every kind to get up a contest time after time, and lavish money in this imprudent manner; what can be the meaning of it; is it love of party, or what?—Yes, in a small circle like this——

33,144. Or is it love of politics? What does it lead to? Does it give a man influence?—I daresay a man gets a kind of influence here. But it is more the love of party. Everything comes to be divided into two parties, and it is the great desire of going with your party and serving your party. My brother and myself have frequently talked about giving up elections altogether; we have frequently threatened to do so, and determined to do so, but when the time came we were lugged into it. You cannot control yourself. You cannot get out of it.

33,145. Gentlemen like yourselves and Mr. Lovibond, are they controlled to any extent—(Mr. Lovibond, I think, takes a more active part in the matter)—are they controlled to any extent by the Bussells and Allans of the party?—No, I think it is more the other way; they control the Bussells and Allans.

33,146. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do people stick to you: I mean to say, were the whole or the greater part of your clients of the Conservative party, whereas Mr. Lovibond's would be of the other party, the Liberals?—No, my best clients are Nicholls, the drapers.

33,147. The other way?—Yes. I was under the impression that exclusive dealing which existed a great many years ago had been done away with, but I am told that amongst tradesmen and the middle classes it exists. It does not exist amongst the upper classes.

33,148. (Mr. Price.) Then it comes to this, that let people make, so far as one may judge, what efforts they may, a pure election is an impossibility in the place, either from tradition, or from the taint which there is in the blood on both sides?—I am very much afraid there is. What bears me out in that is, that the opposition in 1826, when Sir Colin Campbell came, was got up by the balance men of both parties.

33,149. But one way or other—either by one or the other—either by these balance men, or the lawyers, or the bribe agents, somehow or other there is a determination always to have a contest, as in the case of Sir Thomas Lethbridge, which must result in bribery?—It is hoped it will result in bribery when it begins. No doubt it was hoped on our side that there would be bribery.

33,150. (Mr. Anstey.) And in selecting candidates for municipal offices, public offices, and offices of trust in the gift of the local authorities, is it or is it not the fact that an active political agent is chosen, although his name may be synonymous with bribery?—Oh, I do not think that his being a bribery agent would prevent his being appointed. I do not think I was chosen on that ground, because I was a bribery agent; but if I had been the deepest bribery agent that ever existed it would not have prevented my being employed. I should not have been then the slow coach which I am described as being.

33,151. However it was meant, by Mr. Westropp, in giving his evidence; it has been considered by the committee to be a compliment to you so to be described, with reference to the subject matter?—I always felt it to be a compliment.

33,152. I meant it so when I quoted it, I assure you. But is it the fact that at this very moment a person who has been distinguished above other men, or who has not been surpassed by other men as a bribery agent in this borough, election after election, is going to be appointed to the water-bailiffship, in the gift of the corporation?—It was said so, that he would be appointed, and I daresay he would have been if it had not been for this inquiry, but I rather fancy your Commission has frightened a good many people here.

33,153. (Mr. Price.) So also with regard to the abominably impudent attempt of another to bribe by taking advantage of his position in the county court, actually to bribe a man who was going into the jury box?—It is very bad indeed.

33,154. The most infamous thing that ever was done?—A man that would do that would not scruple to bribe a juryman, I should say, for a verdict or anything. I think it is right I should say that although bribery has been either countenanced or winked at ever since I can recollect anything in the town, when a man makes an exhibition like Heal did he is despised by others, and would lose caste in both parties. A man that would take 200*l.* and stick to it and commit perjury would lose caste.

33,155. But is it not in evidence that after he had

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

1 Oct. 1869.

done that, when it was known to the whole world that he had committed perjury before the committee in 1866, and had then gone back to his former associates to bribe again, (and again, no doubt, to subtract money) —is it not a fact that after all that, notwithstanding the bankruptcy that had taken place in the interval, he was immediately placed at the head of a large establishment over which he still presides, not many miles from here, a place of trust and power? Is that so?—I do not know what the man is doing.

33,156. The evidence is that he is at the head of Symmons' works? — Mr. Symmons is a relation. You know you have to take care of your relations if they are ever such scamps.

33,157. (Mr. Anstey.) I have not, if you mean me?—I do not mean you, I mean the world at large.

33,158. (Mr. Anstey.) I should not think of doing so?—Well, it is so, generally speaking, that a man who has got the most scampish relations is bound to maintain them.

33,159. It is only a brother-in-law, you know?—Perhaps a brother-in-law has more influence. The wife's influence might be the greatest of the two. There is one thing occurs to me, there may be nothing, perhaps there is nothing, in it, but before the trial of the petition came on, either my brother or I had a letter from a Mr. Patch somewhere in London, saying he could throw some important light upon the election.

33,160. (Mr. Coleridge.) I happen to know a good deal of Mr. Patch. I have been on other commissions, and we have had exactly the same letters from him at every one of them?—At previous elections I think he has been concerned here for our party, I suspect for corrupt practices. I thought perhaps it might throw some light upon "the man in the moon." You will find among the papers a letter from him.

33,161. What year?—This year or last year just before the petition came on, either at the end of last year or the beginning of this, a letter from him to my brother, saying that if we would communicate with him he could throw great light upon Mr. Kinglake's and Mr. Vanderbyl's election, and I think we wrote and referred him to our agents.

33,162. (Mr. Price.) Have you any reason for supposing that he does know anything?—The only reason, I suppose, is that I fancy he had something to do with some of our previous elections. I have got an idea——

33,163. On which side?—Our side.

33,164. Then how did he know about Kinglake and Vanderbyl's?—I don't know. I thought it was to draw money. I thought the next thing would be, "I won't tell you unless I get 50*l.*"

33,165. (Mr. Anstey.) I think your brother or some other very respectable witness stated that Croucher was a man who was employed to do bribery work in different boroughs, now by the Liberals and now by the Tories, not particular?—My impression of Croucher is that he was a general bribery agent without regard to party.

33,166. And Mr. Patch also?—Yes, it is very possible. I thought it right to mention it. It never occurred to me till you had examined Mr. Spofforth, but you will find a letter of that sort.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes. It is right to mention it, but I think it is a general plan of his.

(The witness.) Now I think it right by way of caution to myself to say that there may have been conversations, or letters, or other things which I may have omitted, which I can explain if necessary; but I am sure there is nothing which can connect me with corrupt practices at all. I have now told you all.

33,167. (Mr. Price.) The only thing which we can gather is this, that persons like you who do not mix up with corrupt practices are obliged to wink at them?—Obliged to wink at them.

33,168. That makes it more difficult to know how to look in any lenient light upon any borough like yours. That is the only thing?—I may say generally there certainly is not as much treating, not so much drunkenness, in the borough as there was when I was a boy. I am quite certain about that. I think the Commission is rather under a misapprehension about that. It is not quite such a wet borough. I do not think at the last election there was hardly a drunken man, although the "Clarence" was overrun with people the whole time.

33,169. The poll clerk gave us evidence—— ?—No doubt in the latter part of the day they were drunken, those that were bottled up all day, when they were brought up, but there is not that excessive drinking which one hears of in other places.

33,170. I do not suppose there is quite?—We are more business-like here. It is more dry money.

F. C. Temblett.

FREDERICK CHARLES TEMBLETT recalled.

(Witness.) When I was examined the other day I was requested by the Commissioners to produce a list of the men whom I have bribed.

33,171. (Mr. Coleridge.) Read them out for the shorthand writer to take down?—George Bartram, Charles Bennett, Christopher Browning, Robert Bussell (gardener), William Charley, Thomas Claxton, Lawrence Dare, Charles Dyer, John Dyer, William Dyment (gardener)—there are two William Dyments—James Fryer, Henry Green, William Harwood, Henry Harwood, James Hayward, Charles Haste, William Hellard, Joseph Hobbs, William Hodges, John Humber, Charles Hook, John Hole, William Jarman, E. T. Lane, James Long, Francis Rich, George Sellick, Benjamin Stoodley, Charles Tottle, Joseph Tottle, Charles Trapnell, Thomas Vearncombe, John Webber, Henry James, Henry Score, James Watts, John Brawley, Job Langford—(I am not certain about that man)—Abraham Frost, George Holland, Robert Wills, Charles Osborne, William Locke, Eliab Cann, Richard Hooper, George Gwyther, Charles Oaten, J. Billing, John Fackrell, senior, John Mogridge, William Gatter, Richard Tooze, John Carter Reeves, William Bond-Sheppard, Charles Jeffries, Henry Jeffries, Hughes, William Webb, Thomas Martin, John Rogers, Thomas Crocker, Thomas Herbert, William Dibble, James Palmer—(that is not the same James Palmer as took the money from Bussell)—William Webber, William Temblett, John Stacey. Perhaps some of those men may say that they did not have the money from me, and, strictly speaking, they did not. They had it at the "Bull and Butcher," from "the man in the moon." I passed them in at the door.

33,172. (Mr. Anstey.) You passed it in?—I passed the men in. Some of those men I have only paid once, a great many of them. Some twice and some three times.

33,173. (Mr. Coleridge.) You cannot exactly separate them?—I cannot separate them.

Mr. J. Trevor.

Mr. JAMES TREVOR recalled.

(Witness.) There is one thing I have forgotten to say. After Mr. Westropp was unseated on petition, our fee of 70*l.*, about 70*l.* or 75*l.*, was paid to our account at Stuckey's bank in the name of Johnstone.

33,174. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean that the cheque was drawn by Johnstone?—The bankers have given us credit for 70*l.* or 75*l.*, or whatever the sum was.

33,175. (Mr. Anstey.) What, the bankers are Johnstone?—That is the name of the party who paid it in; the same as if it was handed in by "Anstey." How it came about I do not know. We found we had credit in our account in that name.

33,176. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the money paid in in cash, or through another bank?—In cash, I suppose.

JONAS BOTTOMLEY sworn.

33,177. (Mr. Price.) What is it you have to say? —I was subpœnaed as a witness to something in reference to the election.

33,178. Well, what election? Are you a voter of Bridgwater?—I was at that time.

33,179. The last election?—Not the last.

33,180. Which one?—1866, I think.

33,181. (Mr. Coleridge.) Vanderbyl's?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

(Mr. Anstey.) Your name is mentioned by Andrew Allan, and by another man who confounded your name with Winterbotham, as having received money at the election of Vanderbyl.

33,182. (Mr. Price.) When did you receive any money?—This was during the last election but one.

33,183. That is 1866?—1866.

33,184. (Mr. Coleridge.) Vanderbyl?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

(Mr. Price.) No, no, Patton and Vanderbyl in 1866.

33,185. (Mr. Coleridge.) The last election was 1868. Then Kinglake and Vanderbyl stood. Then the election before that was a single-handed election, with Vanderbyl on one side and Patton on the other. A month before that there was another election in 1866, in which Patton was on one side and Bagehot on the other. Vanderbyl and Kinglake was the last election?—It was the last election but one.

33,186. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Bottomley? —A schoolmaster.

33,187. What were you when you lived here?—Draper and schoolmaster.

33,188. Did you get any money at that election?—No. I had nothing to do with it.

33,189. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you vote?—At that election?

33,190. Yes?—When residing here?

33,191. Yes?—I did not vote at all.

33,192. Not in 1866?—Not in 1866.

33,193. Did you vote at the last election, in 1868? —At that election I was not here at all.

33,194. How many elections have you voted at altogether?—Two. At least I ought to have voted at one and did not; and when I went away——

33,195. What was the first election you ever voted at?—The last but one.

33,196. Have you only voted once in all your life? —Only once in my life.

33,197. Did you get anything for it?—I got 10*l.*

33,198. You told us just now you did not?—That was when I was at Tiverton.

33,199. Whom did you get it from?—Mr. Andrew Allan.

33,200. (Mr. Anstey.) From Dyment, was not it? —I received the money from Allan.

33,201. From Allan himself?—Yes.

33,202. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you vote for? —I voted, I think it was, for Kinglake.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He did not stand.

33,203. (Mr. Anstey.) He was not a candidate. He was already a member? — It must have been Vanderbyl then.

33,204. Did not Dyment offer you two guineas, which you refused? you came up from Tiverton?—Yes.

33,205. Did not he offer you two guineas and you refused it?—I do not know a person of the name of Dyment.

33,206. Did he nevertheless offer you two guineas? —No, he did not offer any.

33,207. Did somebody give you 10*l.*?—Allan gave me 10*l.* down at his house.

33,208. At a previous election, not the one immediately before, but the election of the year before (1865), had not you asked on the other side for a present from the Tories of 200*l.*?—No, never.

33,209. Now, Temblett says (and you will see whether he speaks the truth), that you mentioned to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith in the election of 1865, that though you abhorred bribery, you were quite willing to accept from Mr. Smith (that is, from Westropp, you know) a present of 200*l.*?—Never in the world. I asked him to lend me 200*l.*

33,210. (Mr. Price.) Asked whom?—Mr. Smith.

33,211. (Mr. Anstey.) And then you would undertake to vote for Westropp?—I asked at that time.

33,212. Did you ask him to lend you 200*l.* when he asked you to vote for Westropp?—I asked him to lend me 200*l.*

33,213. Was that when he was asking you to vote for Westropp?—I do not know that he did ask me to vote for Westropp. Mr. Westropp visited the shop at the time.

33,214. Was that request of 200*l.*, of the loan of 200*l.*, meant by you as the condition of your voting for Westropp?—Well, it must have been.

33,215. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know it was?—I cannot say positively whether it was. It was some little time before.

33,216. (Mr. Anstey.) On this occasion you were at Tiverton?—Yes.

33,217. And did not somebody fetch you to the poll?—Edgar Haviland.

33,218. And did not you talk a lot of rubbish to him about purity, and that you did not approve of bribery, but you thought a man ought to be paid handsomely for his expenses?—I do not remember that I said anything of the sort.

33,219. Did you?—I do not recollect saying anything of the kind.

33,220. Will you swear that you did not say you abhorred bribery, although you took 10*l.* half an hour afterwards? He has sworn so. It is oath against oath. We shall judge which is right?—I paid my expenses both ways.

33,221. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are not asked that. Did you not say to Haviland that you abhorred bribery, but you thought a man ought to be paid handsomely for his expenses?—I cannot call to mind that I did.

33,222. Will you swear you did not? Come! will you swear you did not?—It is very difficult to——

33,223. What were your expenses from Tiverton and back, return ticket, second class?—Some four or five shillings.

33,224. And were you not offered two guineas for it?—No, I do not recollect a single offer.

33,225. (Mr. Price.) Take care what you are about?—I will tell you the truth.

33,226. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not it William Dyment who fetched you from Tiverton?—Edgar Haviland.

33,227. Was not it William Dyment who fetched you from Tiverton, yes or no?—No, I do not remember that it was. I did not see any other person.

33,228. You have admitted that you received 10*l.* at that election and for your vote?—Yes.

33,229. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you voted more than once?—Only once.

33,230. You had a vote at the election before, of course?—And did not give it.

33,231. No, you did not give it, because you wanted to vote on the Conservative side if they would lend you 200*l.*, and you did not get the loan, and you did not vote?—They did not need my vote.

33,232. The Liberals needed it. Now, if you were willing to vote for Westropp in the first election of 1866, and you turned round a month after and took 10*l.* to vote for Vanderbyl, what is your reason for that. There is just about a month to change all your political convictions. Was it not because the Conservatives had refused you the 200*l.* upon loan that you turned round and took the 10*l.* to vote for the Liberals?—No, I do not remember. I certainly asked for the loan of 200*l.*

33,233. Did you get anything for not voting at the first election of 1866?—Not at all.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

J. Bottomley.

1 Oct. 1869.

33,234. Did you get anything for expenses ?—Not the least. Nothing whatever.

33,235. Did you come up from Tiverton ?—No.

33,236. Were you living here ?—Living here at the time.

33,237. (Mr. Price.) You are a schoolmaster ?—Yes.

33,238. Do you teach your scholars in the same indirect way that you are giving your evidence ?—I am striving to tell the truth as far as I can.

33,239. (Mr. Anstey.) You have been described by one witness as being, and by another as not being, a minister or preacher ?—Oh, never in my life.

33,240. Then you are not a minister ?—No.

33,241. (Mr. Coleridge). I am told that at the election when Patton and Bagehot were candidates, and when you said that if you got 200*l.* you would vote for Patton, that you voted for Bagehot. Have you not voted twice ?—I never voted for either of those.

33,242. Well, the poll book will show. Did you vote in the election before, 1865 ?—No, I have only voted once.

33,243. (Mr. Anstey.) If you had got the 200*l.* loan from Mr. Smith in 1865 would you have voted for Westropp. You can answer that question "yes" or "no." If you had got that 200*l.* loan from Mr. Smith which you asked him for would you then have voted for Westropp ?—Very likely I should.

33,244. Not having got it you did not vote for Westropp ?—It had not anything to do with it.

(Mr. Price.) Why did not you vote for Westropp ?

33,245. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you vote for Vanderbyl afterwards ; you changed your politics completely within a month ?—The fact was, when I went to ask for the loan of 200*l.* it was because at that time I was in a little strait.

33,246. Well, I daresay. And then you said you would vote for Westropp. Why did not you vote at all. Did you get anything from the other side not to vote ?—Not at all ; nothing whatever. I was not called upon.

33,247. You were brought up from Tiverton twice to vote, were not you ?—Once only.

33,248. You only voted once, but you came twice from Tiverton. Did not Edgar Haviland bring you one time, and did not Dyment bring you the other ?—I do not remember Dyment at all.

33,249. Did you come twice ?—I only remember coming once.

33,250. Where were you living in the beginning of 1866 ? When did you go to Tiverton ?—In 1865 I think it was.

34,251. What time in 1865 ?

33,252. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it before the election ?—It was before the election, it must have been.

33,253. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you were living at Tiverton during three elections that took place here. Is that not so ?—I think it was only two that I had to do with.

33,254. 1865, and two in 1866 which took place within a month of one another. Was it the first year you were at Tiverton that you went and said if they would give you 200*l.* you would vote for Westropp ?—I never made such a condition, never said so to anybody.

33,255. Was it in the first year you went to Tiverton that you asked for the 200*l.* ?—It was while I was here.

33,256. Before you went to Tiverton ?—Yes.

33,257. You cannot forget when you changed your abode.

(Mr. Anstey.) You want to go away, do you not ?—Yes.

33,258. Perhaps if you wait in Bridgwater for a short time you will remember better, in two or three days. I do not approve that you should go away when you have paid us such a poor compliment as to expect that we shall believe such evidence as you have given ?—I am not at all wishful to conceal anything whatever.

(Mr. Price.) The question is, whether you are perjuring yourself or not, whether you are or somebody else is ; therefore we must have it investigated properly.

(Mr. Anstey.) You will be here to-morrow morning, and Monday morning, and so on.

Mr. James Trevor recalled.

Mr. J. Trevor.

(Witness.) I find my bankers, Stuckey and Co., in this account (producing a pass book) give me credit for 73*l.* 18*s.* on the 15th of June 1866, in the name of Johnstone.

33,259. (Mr. Price.) Why that singular amount. Do they deduct income tax from your fee ?

33,260. (Mr. Anstey.) We had better have the entire entry ?—"1866, June 15th, Johnstone, 73*l.* 18*s.*"

33,261. Anything more ?—That is all that is entered. With regard to the singular amount, whether I had a small balance in hand as the agent of election expenses I do not know ; I think that is possible. I cannot account for it in any other way.

33,262. (Mr. Price.) Who are the private solicitors of Mr. Westropp, do you know ?—I should not think he had any at all. I never heard of any.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Not for the election ; but everybody, nearly, has got a solicitor.

33,263. (Mr. Price.) Who is the London solicitor ?—I do not think I can recollect at all. I do not know that I ever heard. I think he was very intimately connected with Mr. Smith. I question whether he would not have his private business as well as his election business for some time.

Andrew Allan recalled.

A. Allan.

33,264. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Allan, just repeat what you have told us about Bottomley ?—It was at Vanderbyl's first election only, and it was about half-past 1 or a quarter to 2 o'clock. I was upstairs, in an upstairs room. I came down into my own kitchen, and Bottomley was there. That was the first time I had seen him for the day. He wanted 30*l.* to vote for Vanderbyl. I said we did not need his vote, we had won the election. He said he had come from Tiverton, and I told him as he had come from Tiverton I would give him 10*l.* if he would vote for him.

33,265. Had you never paid him at other elections ?—No.

33,266. Do you know whether he had voted at other elections ?—No.

33,267. What did he want 30*l.* for ?—For his vote.

33,268. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect anything about 2*l.* for expenses ?—I have heard Dyment speak of it.

33,269. Was it Dyment or Edgar Haviland fetched him from Tiverton ?—I only know from the evidence.

Mr. J. R. Smith sworn.

Mr J. R. Smith.

33,270. (Mr. Price.) You are a justice of the peace here ?—I am.

33,271. And were formerly in business as a pawnbroker ?—I was.

33,272. We do not want to examine you at great length to-day, but what we immediately called you for is to give us some information if you can as to how this transaction at the bank of this 500*l.* through Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond became known at the "Clarence" on the day of the polling ?—It became known to me and Mr. Trevor and Mr. Brice through these means: a Mr. John Hayward, who was a timber merchant of Wellington below Taunton, had seen something between Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Sealy's bank which was also witnessed by Mr. Richard Slocombe the cabinetmaker, and that is how the information was conveyed to us.

33,273. How do you mean?—Dr. Kinglake was seen to go into the bank just previous to the time the bribery commenced with the Liberal party.

33,274. Are you quite sure about that?—The information was given by John Hayward to me, and I think you will find in the brief that Mr. Slocombe has given evidence to that effect.

33,275. Who is John Hayward?—He is a timber merchant at Wellington.

33,276. He informed you, Mr. Brice, and Mr. Trevor that he had seen, he Hayward had seen——?—He had seen Dr. Kinglake go into Mr. Sealy's bank.

33,277. On the day of the polling?—On the day of the polling, about 1 o'clock I think you will find.

33,278. (Mr. Coleridge.) That might be, he went away with the half-past 1 train?—It was about 1 o'clock, and then immediately afterwards great activity was observed in the opposite party, and the same Mr. John Hayward called Slocombe's attention to this fact.

33,279. As far as we have heard there was no money going up to quarter past 3 on that day?—That is the time fixed by the Liberal party, our party believes it was earlier. The two gentlemen will tell you.

33,280. (Mr. Anstey.) It also tallies exactly with the moment at which Honeyball said to Mr. Prior, "Never mind, sir, the battle is not lost yet"?—That was between 1 and 2. I do not think it was so late as that.

33,281. As this man is here I may as well ask you the question. Did this man who has just been examined ask you in 1865 for a loan of 200*l.* on condition of giving his vote to Westropp?—He was a tenant of mine, and he came in to pay his rent. I gave him the receipt for the rent, and I was about to leave the room, and he said, "Now, to business, Mr. Smith." I said, "Business, what business, Mr. Bottomley? I "thought I had finished with you," and he said, "I "am in want of some money, do you think any of "your friends could lend me, or supply me," I think the word was, "supply me with 200*l.* I cannot give "any security for it. I cannot pay any interest for it; "if I am ever able I will pay it back again."

33,282. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long before the election was this?—It was to pay his Midsummer rent, so it was between Midsummer and the July election. Mrs. Bottomley was present at the time.

33,283. Did she say anything?—He went on to say—I laughed at the idea—and he said, "Well, if you will not do it, I shall go to the other party," and I believe he did go to the other party.

33,284. And got 10*l.*?

33,285. (Mr. Anstey.) No, no, this is 1865. You had asked him for his vote?—No, never.

33,286. I mean in 1865?—No; he said that if any of our party would supply him with the money he would vote for Westropp. I never canvassed a tenant in my life.

33,287. I want to know about the connexion between the 200*l.* and his vote?—He connected it together in his way. He said if our party would supply him with 200*l.* he would vote for Westropp, and if not he should go to the other party. I advised him to go to them.

33,288. You are sure the rent had accrued due, it was not rent to fall due?—The rent was never paid in advance.

33,289. (Mr. Price.) This 200*l.* would not be for his rent?—His rent was 45*l.* a year.

33,290. (Mr. Anstey.) The advantageous point in a commercial point of view was this, that he had no security to offer for it, that he had no interest to pay, and he would only pay the principal upon a contingency, it was therefore as nearly as possible a gift of 200*l.*?—I looked upon it as that.

33,291. (Mr. Price.) We have heard the part you have taken in elections. I do not know whether you wish to make a statement, or whether we shall put questions to you. There is one very important question which I know impressed itself upon the minds of all of us, and especially upon the mind of one of my brother Commissioners, it is about this expression at the public meeting, "M.D.," and "sugar your plums?"—I will give you my version, and then I will ask you to call the gentlemen who were present.

33,292. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you give us the name of the Mr. Slocombe?—Richard Skinner Slocombe, who is here in this street.

33,293. The other is John Hayward?—John Hayward, timber merchant, Wellington.

33,294. (Mr. Price.) Just give the history of the meeting?—It was a meeting called the Conservative Working Men's Association. When I came in the meeting was in course of progress. I had during the day received through the post office an anonymous bill offering 100*l.* reward to the briber and the bribed, and on the fly leaf of the envelope was written, "Your attention is called to this," or "Read this," something to that effect; and I said, in the course of my observations, "I have received this paper to-day which "has emanated from the Liberal party. This is the "old dodge which they have adopted previous to "many elections. This is an old dodge which they "have adopted previously to the elections. I do not "believe in their boasted purity." Someone in the room said, "They are promising already." My observation then was, "Do not be deluded by promises "which will never be fulfilled; do not be induced to "forsake your party under any circumstances; but if by "any means you become traitors to the party, remember the American adage, M.D.;" and someone in the room said, "Money down." Those were the words.

33,295. It was not intended in any way to tell the supporters of your side that they were not to be gulled by promises from their own side, but to require money down?—Certainly not, in a room of 150 persons, a mixed assembly.

33,296. Well, that of course is a matter of argument; we are only asking the fact?—Certainly not; the words which I have repeated are word by word what was said, and I can give you the names of other gentlemen.

33,297. We have had it from two persons?—I was going to tell you with reference to those two men.

33,298. I do not think you need?—I was going to call your attention to their character. Mr. Henry Heard was present.

33,299. We have had it already given in your way by one, but still if you have got others?—Mr. Henry Heard was present; Mr. Batten was present.

33,300. Mr. Batten I think has told us?—And there was a person of the name of Lewis, who is a traveller for a brewery; he was present. And there was a poor man of the name of King, who has come to me and was prepared to give evidence on this subject. William King is a painter in West Street; I have never spoken to him before in my life; but since this has been on he has come to me and said he was prepared to give evidence upon this subject.

33,301. Now we will come on to the other elections?—The first election I voted at was about 1852.

33,302. (Mr. Coleridge.) Lord Henley's election?—It must be about 1852; I got into business in 1849.

33,303. There was an election in 1847, and one in 1852?—1852 I voted for Follett and Mansell, and took no other part in it.

33,304. (Mr. Anstey.) May I ask your age, Mr. Smith?—48; I was born in 1821. In 1857 I voted for Follett and Tynte, and took no part in that beyond that. In 1859 I nominated Mr. Westropp and voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Padwick, and in the course of that nomination there was an observation made use of by me; there was a great disturbance on the Cornhill; there was a flag exhibited, something in reference to Mr. Padwick, and Mr. Padwick was a perfect stranger to me; and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had been lecturing Mr. Padwick on legal morality; and when it came to my turn to nominate Mr. Westropp, I said that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was the last gentleman who should have made such remarks, for he himself had been convicted of having presented a forged petition to the House of Commons, and compelled to beg pardon. Immediately after the election, although the facts were true, some steps were taken to bring an action against me, which I think my brother settled.

33,305. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay to settle it?—Not a farthing. I did not know the action was about to be commenced until my brother told me afterwards, some time afterwards.

33,306. It was not commenced then?—That I cannot tell.

33,307. Were you ever served with a writ?—I was not. In 1865, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley came; I voted for Mr. Westropp and nominated him, and after the election I paid, by my nephew's directions, money for carrying the banners, and that money was refunded to me in similar way, I think in the same name as Mr. Trevor's, at all events by a sort of bank post bill payable to myself, made payable by a strange name.

33,308. What did you pay these men?—5s. a day. I had nothing to do with paying them. I was only the intermediate agent.

33,309. For how many days?—Two days they would be employed, the nomination and the election, in June 1866.

33,310. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember Joseph Stoodley at Pimms's, "Golden Anchor," at the election in 1865?—No, I do not remember, but I will speak to that point. One morning early I went into that neighbourhood; I would not swear I did not, I am not certain I did or did not see him; I went into the "Golden Anchor," not the "Golden Lion;" I went to see where the band was on the morning of the election, and I ran into the club room to see if the men were there, and they were not there; I was not an eighth of a minute. He might have been in the room, some eight or ten men were at breakfast.

33,311. And William Heal?—No.

33,312. And Cooksley?—I was not aware they were not there. I never spoke to anyone.

33,313. Stoodley identified you as being there that morning, when he was bribed there?—It is very likely Stoodley would know me and I should not know him.

33,314. That he saw you there about three-quarters of an hour before he polled?—The time I was there was before 8 o'clock, or about 8.

33,315. Mr. Westropp was about with you, was he not, during the canvass, and on the day of the poll?—In his single-handed election?

33,316. We are talking of the one of 1865?—In 1865; I do not think I ever canvassed a person then.

33,317. Did you accompany him?—On his canvass?

33,318. Yes?—I think not.

33,319. Never?—At the last election I called on four parties with him. I do not think I ever canvassed with Mr. Westropp or any other candidate in my life, with the exception of the last election. Mr. Westropp asked me to call at four places.

33,320. But you seconded him?—I did.

33,321. Was there an understanding between you and him that though you were to second, you were not to accompany him in his canvass?—No; I was busily occupied in business at the time, and I could not afford to give the time up to go canvassing.

33,322. Did you speak to voters on his behalf?—To the best of my belief never.

33,323. Not one?—No, to the best of my belief never.

33,324. Do you remember Crewes being examined before the House of Commons—a man called Crewes?—No, I do not know.

33,325. I do not suppose you do know him. He was a reporter to a newspaper—the "Bridgwater Mercury." Do you remember Mr. Lilly and Mr. Smith—(either the Mr. Smith who is away in Australia or the one who is away at Teignmouth)—and Mr. Boys and the man Stroud (who has also disappeared) being present on the night of the arrival of Mr. Westropp?—At the "Clarence?"

33,326. I do not know where, but you were all altogether?—At a meeting in this hotel.

33,327. Well, now, did you take any part in the proceedings?—Not at that meeting.

33,328. Go on then, if you please, with 1866. Or, by-the-by, before you come to the election of 1866, there is rather an important question about the proceedings of the election trial before the committee; what relation are you to the solicitor who had the conduct of that election petition, Mr. Richard or Mr. Bealy Smith?—Mr. Richard Smith is my brother. Mr. Bealy Smith is my nephew.

33,329. Now, have you been living in the same house with Mr. Richard Smith's wife who was examined here yesterday?—No, I never have been living in her house, and I have never spoken to her or my brother for 12 years.

33,330. You are not on speaking terms?—No, with neither of them.

33,331. Then it is useless to ask you whether they consulted you about some papers that related to the election petition of 1866?—I have never seen my brother's wife since my father's death.

33,332. Have you been consulted?—Never, by no one.

33,333. Have you heard anything of those papers?—I read about them in Mrs. Smith's evidence yesterday.

33,334. That is all you know?—Yes.

33,335. Mr. Lilly has been consulted by them?—I do not know.

33,336. Can you throw any light upon the fact which we have that those papers have disappeared?—Not the slightest.

33,337. Then go on?—There is one thing in connexion with that. Mr. William Heal stated in his evidence that he came to my house, and that his evidence was taken down by Mr. Thomas Boys. My nephew asked me if I would allow the use of my room for one of his clerks, to take down the evidence of a person who would not go to his office to give the evidence. I did not know who the party was.

33,338. Did not know who who was?—I did not know who Heal was.

33,339. I thought you said you were not on speaking terms?—That was with my brother. My nephew brought Heal to my house, and Heal dictated to him the evidence verbatim, and it was taken down by the clerk; and after it was taken down by the clerk he read it over to Heal, and Heal signed it.

33,340. Did you either say anything, or hear anything said, to the effect stated by Heal, "If you go "back from that statement before the House of "Commons we shall produce it and convict you"?—Not a word.

33,341. Did Heal appear in any way unwilling?—Not in the slightest degree.

33,342. Neither then nor at any subsequent time?—I never saw him after.

33,343. Now the 1866 election, Patton's?—I nominated Mr. Patton, or I think Mr. John Trevor nominated him, and I seconded him; and I voted for him. At about 11 o'clock in the day it was represented that the election was lost. The Liberal party had got up a large procession in the town, and boards were pasted all over with buff placards—"The cannons will fire at 4 o'clock;" and just previous to that a man had rushed into the "Clarence" hotel, saying that he had been bribed by the Liberal party with 10*l.* I think that man's name was Hooper. I went out on the balcony and said, "This is the case: this man has been bribed by 10*l.*;" and so certain were we that the election was lost that we went home. After I had been home some little time I was sent for, I should think; and when I came to this hotel I found Mr. Westropp here. He said, "Can you lend me some money?" I said, "I do not know; I will go home and see." On my way home I met a person by the name of George Chapel Harden. I said, "Harden, can you lend me any money?" He said, "Yes, I think I can;" and he gave me a purse with some money in it. I went indoors and found some more money, and put it into my pocket—I think 15*l.* more—and came back to this hotel. Mr. Westropp said, "We don't want it." Consequently it never left my pocket, and I took it home and paid it again the same evening to Mr. Harden, or the very first thing the next morning. I dined here that evening in this room, with Mr. Westropp, Mr. Patton, and the leaders of the party. After dinner Mr. Westropp said to me, "I wish you would give this to Moore," giving me a small parcel, which I took to Moore, the draper, the next morning.

33,344. How do you spell his name?—I think it is Moore. It was a parcel which I took to him the next morning. I found that it had become patent to everybody that the money was borrowed. At the time I was asked for the money my impression was that the money was wanted by Mr. Patton and Mr. Westropp, to go away. When I was asked for it nothing was said to me what it was wanted for, but I found out when Mr. Westropp gave me this parcel and said, "Give this to Moore." I was perfectly certain that money had been borrowed from other parties besides myself, and I began to fear what was the fact about it.

33,345. How had it become patent to everbody that it was borrowed?—It was talked of, and there seemed no secret made of it. The next morning everybody knew that 300*l.* had been raised amongst the people in the town.

33,346. Did you see the man to whom the money was given for distribution?—No.

33,347. Never? — Never. I shall come by-and-by to a gentleman who called upon me, if you will allow me.

33,348. Well, after that election? — After that election Mr. Bealy Smith sent into my house by one of his clerks some money, asking if I would allow one of my young people to pay some bills, which she did; and the bills were sent back to Mr. Bealy Smith immediately. I should say that would be three weeks or a month afterwards, and amongst those bills I find now (which I was not aware of until this Commission commenced) that there was some money paid that had been borrowed. First of all there was a sum to Mr. Hodges, and there was a sum to Mr. Tout, and a sum to Mr. Buffet the tailor, and to Mr. Cooper.

33,349. Was it that Mr. Cooper who was examined before us the other day?—Yes.

33,350. Who said that he had been to the "Clarence" at the last election?—I have not come to that yet.

33,351. No, no; but is it the same man?—It is the same person. And there was also paid some bills for the carrying of colours at the same time. Mr. Bealy Smith sent the money in, and I think his clerk will be able to establish the truth of that. At the next election of Patton, Mr. Vanderbyl was a candidate. I then seconded Mr. Patton and voted for him. I knew nothing as to that until after the election. A day or two after the election Mr. Batten called upon me and said, "You must pay me this money," producing a bill. I said, "No, I have given no orders. I shall not pay it." Then he said, "Mr. Bealy Smith has sent me to you." My answer was, "I shall not pay it until I have seen Mr. Bealy Smith." I went into his office and asked him if I was to pay it, and he said, "Yes;" and I paid it. Mr. Batten gave me a receipt signed by two of his firm. And there was also paid at that election something for the carrying of colours, through a young person in my shop; also some few small public-house bills.

33,352. You were going to say when I asked you about the stranger, the man who distributed the money, that you should come to that?—Now I am coming to it. This election took place on the 12th of July 1866. Somewhere about the 9th or 10th of August—I can fix the day, because my sons went back to school the next day—somewhere about the 9th or 10th of August, that is a month afterwards, a gentleman called at my private residence while I was at dinner, and asked to see Mr. Smith. He was shown into the room, and he said, "I am come down from "London in reference to the last election. The parties "are not satisfied with what has taken place." And I said, "You must have made some mistake, it must be Mr. Bealy Smith you want;" and he said, "Will you answer me a couple of questions?" I said, "It depends entirely on what they are." The first question he put to me was this: "What do you think of Mr. Waddon?" I said, "I believe him to be as honourable a man as there is in Bridgwater." Then he said, "What do you think of Mr. Newton?" That is the butcher that is in America, and I said, "I should "rather not have anything further to say, and unless "you get me some introduction, I shall say no more "to you." I went back to my dinner table, and I was much struck with the conversation. I was not with him five minutes. I said to my son, "I wish you would look after this man," and I said so to my wife. He had to pass the dining-room window, and they looked after him. Now if that is the mysterious stranger that is all I know about him.

33,353. You believe it was?—From the evidence given before the Commission, I should think it was the gentleman.

33,354. I do not understand what you understood to be his object in asking these questions?—That things had gone wrong in money matters at the last election, and that he was come down to put the matter straight.

33,355. What was the object of asking you about the character of these two persons?—I cannot tell.

33,356. Were they persons with whom you understood him to be in communication?—No, I knew nothing of him.

33,357. No, but from what he said, did you understand that he was communicating with those persons?—No.

33,358. Or on his guard against them?—It seemed to me as if he wanted to find out whether these were likely men to have done right with what had been trusted to them.

33,359. Did you know that Waddon and Newton were men who had been trusted?—I did not know that Waddon had.

33,360. Did you know that Newton had?—Before this gentleman had called on me it was talked of very commonly in Bridgwater that Newton had abstracted monies; it was talked of.

33,361. Well, that is all you know about the supposed stranger?—That is all I know about the supposed stranger.

33,362. Had you ever seen his face before?—Never in my life, that I am aware of.

33,363. You could not recollect having seen him as a boy?—No. I will give you a description of the man. He was a very gentlemanly man in appearance, with a nice moustache, very nice head of hair, nice whiskers, and he wore jewellery. I noticed that particularly, it was my forte; I had been in the business for years. He had a nice diamond pin in his tie.

33,364. Do you mean they were very rich, or in good taste?—Well, he was dressed gentlemanly.

33,365. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have never seen him since?—Not that I am aware of.

33,366. (Mr. Price.) Did he seem to know you, or anything about you?—Well, I cannot tell. He knew me as Mr. Smith, because he came to my private residence.

33,367. He came first of all and asked for Mr. Smith?—Yes.

33,368. And when you saw him did he speak to

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. R. Smith.

1 Oct. 1869.

you at once as if he knew you to be Mr. Smith?—He said, "It is Mr. Smith, I presume."

33,369. You said, "You must mean Mr. Bealy Smith"?—I said, "You must mean Mr. Bealy Smith."

33,370. (Mr. Price.) What did he say?—He said, "Will you answer me a couple of questions?"

33,371. (Mr. Anstey.) He did not acknowledge?—He did not acknowledge anything, and it is only of late that I have talked this matter over; I have kept this matter secret. This man has been to my house on many occasions. My son was present; I called his attention. He was going to call the very next day.

33,372. Was it about dinner time?—It was half-past 1 in the day.

33,373. Had you heard that day that a mysterious man had come to Bridgwater?—I had heard it from the evidence given before you.

33,374. Not until that?—Not until that.

33,375. Now the next election?—The next election would be the last?

33,376. Yes?—My first connexion with that election was this, that Mr. James Trevor and Mr. Brice asked me if I would see Mr. Westropp; Mr. Westropp had expressed a wish to see me. I went there; Mr. Ruddock preceded me. I had some business to attend to in the morning, and I did not get up until the express. I found Mr. Westropp; I knew him very well indeed. He said, "I want to ask you as a friend what you think my chances are at Bridgwater?" and my answer was this, "If you come down to Bridg-"water, and there is an honest election fought, I "believe you will succeed, and you may succeed in "drawing in a friend with you; but mind, your popu-"larity will not stand, sir, against another man's "money." His answer was—Mr. Ruddock was present—his answer was this: "Nothing on earth shall "tempt me; nothing on earth shall tempt me to spend "one shilling beyond legitimate expenses, neither "will I come with any other gentleman that will."

33,377. By that answer of his it is quite clear that he understood you to mean when you said that his "popularity would not stand against another man's money," that if he wished to succeed he must have money too?—No.

33,378. What then?—What I said first to him was this, "If you come down to Bridgwater, and both parties fight a pure election, you will win."

33,379. I know, but then when you said, "Your "popularity will not stand, sir, against another man's "money," did you not mean that if he was to succeed, and they were bribing on the Liberal side, he also must bribe?—No. I gave him to understand this, that if the other party bribed he would have no chance, because he had said to me beforehand, "Nothing shall tempt me to spend a single shilling "beyond the legitimate expenses."

33,380. I put it so. You led him to understand this, that if he fought a pure election, and the other side began to bribe, his popularity would not avail—would not save his election?—It is pretty clear what he must have understood. It is patent to all the world, to everybody in Bridgwater, that no matter who the man is, if he came down the night before the election, and brought plenty of money, he would win?

33,382. That is, supposing the other side is pure?—Supposing the other side is pure.

33,383. But supposing the other side is impure, it is a different question?—Then it is who gives the most money. I saw nothing more of Mr. Westropp until he came with Mr. Gray; I knew nothing of Mr. Gray until he came as a candidate, and called upon me. At the election Mr. Westropp was nominated by Mr. Parker, and Mr. Gray asked me if I would nominate him, which I did, and I voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray. The night before the nomination I was present when the occurrence took place in this hotel, which Mr. Trevor has described to you to-day. I was sent for from my home; I had gone home because through the election the legal gentlemen, Mr. Brice and Mr. Trevor, said that the election would be void if one single shilling was spent in bribery. I had gone home, and it had gone out that no money would be spent; and I should think about half-past 8 I was sent for to go the "Clarence," and when I came here I found they were in a great state of excitement. They were dissatisfied that no money was going to be spent, and said something ought to be spent. They said the other party was spending—that was the observation—that as the other party were spending, it was quite certain to every one that the election could not be won, unless Mr. Westropp was prepared to spend money. They were told by myself, in very strong language, and Mr. Trevor and Mr. Ruddock who was present—Mr. George Bond was in the chair—that the gentlemen had determined from first to last not to spend a single shilling. There was then a talk of retiring. It was said, "It is no good to fight; the other party "is spending; we shall have no chance. We must "go home and go to-bed." Then there was some talk that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray should retire; and I thought myself that if the gentlemen who had taken an active part resisted, or refused to take any active part the next morning, it would be only making fools of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray to go to the poll, and that it would be wise for them to retire. That was my idea, rather than make a foolish display at the poll on the next morning. I left this room, this adjoining room, and went home with Mr. Lilly. The next morning at 8 o'clock, I went and voted, and I did not go out of doors till I was sent for. Mr. James Trevor first of all came to me. I had left word; first of all, I may be allowed to say, I had made up my mind as a public man—I have been a very public man in Bridgwater in all matters—I had made up my mind that nothing should induce me in any shape or form to put myself in a position in which a person should say that I was contaminated by anything like countenancing or having to do with bribery. Mr. Patton's election, when the money was drawn together, had so frightened and annoyed me, that I thought probably the next day, in the height of excitement, if they ran close, there might be some effort to raise the money in the same way; and I voted at 8 o'clock, and I gave word to my servant to say, "I shall not be at home, come who may, during the day." Mr. James Trevor came to my house, and he was told so, and he left without seeing me. He came back to this hotel, and sent for me by my son, who was the only one who could approach me, because I had given word I could not see anybody. I came over to the hotel. Mr. Trevor said, that there had been a great talk that money ought to be raised to win this election, that certain gentlemen fancied the election might be won by a certain sum of money, and that 500*l.* would be a matter that would make the election safe beyond all doubt. I said to Mr. Trevor, "If 5*d.* will save this election, I will "neither lend, nor be the means of lending it. My "own liberty is at stake; my position and my home "is imperilled by that act, and I would rather lose "1,000*l.* than spend a single shilling."

33,384. You were, or had been the mayor?—I had just ceased to be. Mr. Trevor said, "I am pleased "to hear you still so firm to strengthen myself." I left him, and went home, and did not come out again until 7 o'clock in the evening. Then in reference to the petition. On the Sunday previous to the petition being presented on the Monday, Mr. Carslake called on me immediately after I had come from church, and asked me if I would see some few of my friends, and induce them to prevent the petition from being presented; and after talking over why it should be this, that, and the other, I consented that I would invite half a dozen of the leaders of the party to my house that evening, and talk the matter over. When Mr. Carslake had left the house, a ring came to my back door, to say that I was wanted at Mr. Brice's. When I got to Mr. Brice's I found that Mr. Cook had seen Dr. Farmer, that Mr. Reed had seen Mr. Lilly, that Mr. Lovibond had been to Stowey and fetched Mr. Trevor, and consequently, we were all brought together at Mr. Brice's rooms. The subject was talked over. The Liberal party were prepared to give up one, or even two of the seats, and Mr. Trevor said, "I am poorly, "Smith, I cannot afford to lose a night's rest; I will "go on to London by the 6 o'clock train. You invite "a few of your friends, or a few of the friends of the "party to your house, and come up by the mail train, "and let us know next morning the result." I invited 12 parties to my house; but previous to the meeting at my house, the Liberal lawyers, and the Conservative lawyers had gone through the town in a fly together, and it had raised a perfect commotion in the town, that these gentlemen were going to London to sell their parties, and settle the petition. I invited 12, but instead of 12, 150 came. I had to barricade my door to keep them out.

33,385. I think we had that; that they cried "No surrender."—I will come to that.

33,386. I do not think it is material to the point?—I went to London. After the meeting at my house was over, Mr. John Trevor and Mr. Ruddock came, and talked with me for half an hour; and Mr. John Trevor said, 'Go up and tell my brother the result of this excitement."

33,387. When you went up to London you did not see either Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Westropp?—I saw Mr. Westropp.

33,388. I mean Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

33,389. Therefore we will not trouble you about that?—I went to London and made an arrangement to meet——

(Mr. Price.) We have examined before about that.

33,390. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to mention something about your nephew and your position towards him?—My position towards my nephew has been of this character, that since my brother has been married a second time there has not been that friendship——

33,391. (Mr. Price.) We do not want to go into any private affair?—That was all.

33,392. (Mr. Anstey.) But did he go to your house and talk about electioneering matters?—He never came to my house in his life.

33,393. Not your nephew?—Not my present house, nor my place of business.

33,394. But he took your rooms?—No; his clerk brought a message. His clerk came and asked if I would give up the rooms.

33,395. Have you heard from him since he went to Australia?—Never.

33,396. Nor of him, except through his mother?—I heard from his mother yesterday.

33,397. That was all?—That was all.

33,398. Did I understand you aright; I did not want to interrupt you at the time, did I understand you to say that you always held bribery in horror?—Well, I never had anything to do with bribery.

33,399. Surely you do not deny taking part if not in the distribution at least in the gathering together of bribery funds?—I did unfortunately that one time.

33,400. Only that once?—Only that once in my life.

33,401. Did not you in 1865 take part in raising the funds or in distributing the funds?—Oh no, except paying some bills. They were paid through the young men in my employ.

33,402. Indirectly therefore you had.

33,403. (Mr. Price.) You paid back the money subscribed?—A portion of it. You will find that portion of it—I have taken the trouble to ascertain the amount—is about 60*l.* or 70*l.*

33,404. (Mr. Anstey.) You are aware, of course, that Mr. Westropp's return was procured in 1865 by very extensive bribery?—There is no doubt about it now.

33,405. And also Mr. Patton's in 1866?—No doubt of it.

33,406. And Mr. Vanderbyl's in 1866?—No doubt of it.

33,407. Notwithstanding that money was spent on the other side?—No doubt the town was deluged at that election with money.

33,408. And you had some part in the raising of funds on how many of those occasions?—At Mr. Patton's first election.

33,409. Only that?—Never besides.

33,410. Whence came Mr. Westropp's money in 1865?—I have not the slightest idea.

33,411. Do you know we have asked about his banker, and the answer has been made by more than one witness that he probably required no banker, because he had great financial confidence in Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—Not me; that is a mistake.

33,412. Mr. Westropp had?—That is mistake. He had no financial confidence in me.

33,413. Did he never lodge money with you?—Never a single shilling.

33,414. Did he never draw money out of your hands?—Never a farthing.

33,415. Or procure money on your credit?—Never a farthing.

33,416. Then where did he bank, or how?—In London. His bankers failed about the time he was here.

(Mr. James Trevor.) Bainbridge.

(The witness.) Bainbridge. I know it was Bainbridge for the reason that while I was churchwarden at Trinity he sent me a cheque for 5*l.* on that bank towards raising a new organ.

33,417. (Mr. Anstey.) On Bainbridge's?—Yes.

33,418. After they had failed?—No; but some time during his connexion with Bainbridge's.

33,419. Was that a bank of issue or a London bank?—A London bank.

33,420. Then it was not a bank of issue?—No, a London bank.

33,421. They had not failed at the time of the election?—No, I think I heard of it somewhere about Mr. Patton's election.

33,422. Then where did he bank at the time that he raised money from you, or through you, at Mr. Patton's first election?—I have not the slightest recollection.

33,423. Do you think he has a banker at all?—I never had the distribution of his funds.

33,424. Have you any idea whether he was like Mr. Gray, a moneyed man or not?—I have heard gentlemen say so.

33,425. You do not know?—I know nothing of him more than his being brought to the town.

33,426. Do you know whether Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray drew cheques at the last election or since?—I do not know. I have had nothing to do with finances in any shape or form, beyond that unfortunate——

33,427. Then it is quite a mistake to suppose you could supply the place of a banker to him?—Oh no, I wish I could.

33,428. Or give us the information which a banker could give?—I cannot give any more in that direction.

33,429. (Mr. Price.) Did you make any advances?—Never a shilling beyond this money which was never used. I took it from my pocket, and it was paid back the next morning.

33,430. Is there anything further that you can give us any information about?—There may be little things which I may have forgotten. I did not know that I was going to be examined.

33,431. When Mr. Westropp was first mentioned in the borough, who was his godfather?—I should say my brother. I should say my brother was the leader of the party.

33,432. Your brother the lawyer?—My brother Richard Smith, the lawyer. I have met my brother once since his illness, in the street, and I shook hands with him in the street, and he scarcely knew me.

33,433. (Mr. Anstey.) How long ago?—A year and a half. It was a most painful meeting to me. It is most painful to me that my brother in his illness is severed from me; not only from me, but every branch of his family; and the only observation I made was, "Well, Richard, I am pleased to shake hands with you once more," and he looked very vacantly at me and said, "I have been an injured man.

33,434. There was embarrassment on both sides, no doubt?—Where?

33,435. On his side embarrassed feelings in consequence of the long separation?—Well, sir, the separations are not his.

33,436. What?—The alienations from his family are not his.

33,437. Never mind that. But it is a matter of fact that at the moment you met him there had been a long severance of friendship and connexion?—Yes.

33,438. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is no alienation between him and his son, Mr. Bealy Smith?—There was, unfortunately, if the tale could be told.

33,439. But it is not so now; they are on good terms now?—I question whether it is not a sort of semi-good terms, from what I hear.

33,440. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence, Mr. Smith—I do not want to pain you, if it does pain you, by referring to it—but we have it in evidence, that your brother after judgment had been obtained against him in the qui tam action in 1838, rather than pay the penalty and costs, went to the Fleet and passed through the Insolvent Court?—He paid the costs after that. My father paid the costs after that, and I think you will find that judgment was not entered against him.

33,441. We have it in evidence that he took that course, and that he objected to pay the penalty; is that so?—It is, according to my information and knowledge; but I was a young man, much younger than him.

33,442. What has become of the plaintiff Webb, to whom that money is due?—Dead.

33,443. What was he?—He drove a little omnibus between this and Taunton; and immediately after this he was taken into the employ of Mr. John Browne as foreman in his brickyard. He was taken up and adopted by Mr. John Browne as foreman.

33,444. Do you know what your brother's reason was for not allowing his father to pay the penalty?—I have no idea.

33,445. But you say the costs were afterwards paid?—I am told the costs were afterwards paid,

33,446. To the attorney?—To Mr. Benjamin Lovibond; or at all events the compromised costs.

33,447. But you cannot throw any light upon the reason that induced your brother to refuse?—Not the slightest. There was another circumstance which has occurred in the evidence, which I had forgotten, and which I intended to put straight.

33,448. (Mr. Price.) Be quick about it then?—I had forgotten it. Something has been said; I intended to have brought my notes, but I did not think I was going to be examined.

(Mr. Price.) Well, we will have it another time.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at half-past 10, at the "Clarence" hotel.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Saturday, 2nd October 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. B. H. Tromp.

2 Oct. 1869.

Mr. BENJAMIN HUMPHREYS TROMP sworn.

33,449. (Mr. Price.) I will ask you a few formal questions. What are you?—A solicitor.

33,450. Where are you in practice?—In London.

33,451. Are you in partnership?—No.

33,452. By yourself?—Quite alone.

33,453. How long have you practised in London? I took out my certificate last year.

33,454. Before that what were you?—A clerk.

33,455. In whose office?—In the office of some gentlemen in London.

33,456. You had better give their names?—Well, as I am still partly engaged with them, and they know nothing whatever of my coming to Bridgwater, and matters connected with elections, I should very much prefer, if you will allow me, not to disclose their names. Your Secretary served me at their office on Monday last, and he can inform you.

33,457. It is only of importance, it strikes me, with regard to a cheque or the payment of some money when the name of a gentleman of the firm we suppose you to belong to was used; it may not be the same individual who signed that cheque?—If you will name that firm I will at once state.

33,458. Johnstone, Farquhar, and Leech?—Yes.

33,459. It has been proved to us by one of the lawyers, Mr. James Trevor, that there was a cheque with the name of Johnstone in it?—Johnson?

33,460. Yes?—I am quite sure that that cheque never came from Johnstone, Farquhar, and Leech.

33,461. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was not a cheque of Johnson's, but merely some money paid into the bank, and Johnson's name was used in paying it in, and it appears so in Mr. Trevor's pass book?—I never paid any money into the bank in the name of Johnson or Johnstone, or any monies connected with this election. I declare to you that up to this hour I am positive that, with the exception of the late Mr. Farquhar, with whom I was intimately acquainted, Mr. Johnstone has been dead, and Mr. Leech is the surviving partner. No member of that firm knows anything of my having been down.

33,462. (Mr. Anstey.) This was in 1865 or 1866?—In 1865 Mr. Johnstone was living; he knew I came down, no other member of the firm knew.

33,463. (Mr. Price.) Before going further, I must ask is Harden or Temblett here?

(Mr. Temblett.) Yes.

F. C. TEMBLETT recalled.

33,464. (Mr. Price.) Is this the gentleman?—That is the gentleman. I am only surprised to find that he was ever connected with the town.

33,465. But that is the gentleman?—Yes.

33,466. (Mr. Anstey.) You handed in after the Commission rose yesterday a letter you found among some papers?—Yes.

33,467. Whose papers did you find that letter among?—I found that letter among my own papers.

33,468. Whose signature is "W. T."?—I cannot say.

33,469. From whom do you suppose it to come?—I should think it came from this gentleman.

Mr. B. H. TROMP recalled.

33,470. Is that your handwriting (handing the letter to the witness)?—It is not my usual handwriting.

33,471. But did you write that letter?—I did. Will you allow me to read it?

33,472. Certainly. (The witness read the letter.)

33,473. (Mr. Price.) Are you a native of Bridgwater?—Yes.

33,474. Did you serve your articles in Bridgwater?—No.

33,474*a*. Were you a clerk in Bridgwater in an attorney's office?—I was.

33,475. How many years ago?—I left Bridgwater 21 years ago.

33,476. Whose office were you in while you were here?—Mr. Alfred Copp's.

33,477. How old were you when you left Bridgwater?—Eighteen years; I am now 41.

33,478. Had you been intimate with Mr. Smith?—I had been in the office of Mr. Richard Smith, who is now ill, about six or nine months before I went to Mr. Copp's.

33,479. That was your first situation then?—Almost the first.

33,480. Who did you serve your articles with?—Messrs. Johnstone, Farquhar and Leech.

33,481. You were a salaried clerk at Mr. Smith's I suppose?—Yes.

33,482. And also at Mr. Copps?—Yes, certainly.

33,483. And then, when you left here, you served your articles?—When I left Bridgwater I entered the office of a firm of solicitors in London, with whom I remained no less than 13 years, and I left them to go to Messrs. Johnstone, Farquhar, and Leech's, as managing parliamentary clerk.

33,484. Who were the firm you were with before that?—Messrs. Harrison, of Walbrook, in the city of London.

33,485. Do you know anybody of the name of Gurney in Walbrook?—I do not.

33,486. Is there such an attorney in Walbrook as John Gurney?—I am not aware of it.

33,487. Was there any person of that name in this office your are speaking of?—No.

33,488. Do you know any clerk of that name?—I never knew a gentleman of the name of John Gurney in my life.

33,489. You say you left Bridgwater when you were 18?—I did.

33,490. And went to those people in Walbrook?—Yes.

33,491. And from them you went to Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, and Leech?—Yes.

33,492. To be their parliamentary clerk?—As managing parliamentary clerk.

33,493. Did you manage their parliamentary business?—Partly; but my special department was connected with railways, in getting up books of reference, depositing plans, preparing briefs, and attending committees, and other matters of that nature.

33,494. As a rule, I believe Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, and Leech have nothing to do with parliamentary business, except private bill business?—None whatever.

33,495. (Mr. Coleridge.) And the Great Northern Railway?—Yes; they never had election business of any sort or description, I am quite sure.

33,496. (Mr. Price.) When were you first put in communication with anybody in this borough as to coming down here with regard to money?—After I left Bridgwater I continued to keep up an intimacy with Mr. Richard Smith, who frequently called on me.

33,497. That takes us back how long?—To 17 or 18 years ago.

33,498. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you down in 1852, Lord Henley's election?—I had nothing to do with that whatever. I did not come down for nine years after I left the town. I have only been down three times in my life, except when I came to these elections, and then I seldom went out in the day. I found I was not recognized, and I did not tell anybody.

33,499. (Mr. Anstey.) Were not you recognized by anybody?—Not by any soul in the town.

33,500. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the old widow with whom you lodged a person whom you had known before?—Who is she?

33,501. Mrs. Harden?—I remember her as Miss Foster 25 years ago.

33,502. Did she recognize you?—I believe not.

33,503. (Mr. Price.) You had gone away quite a boy?—I had gone away quite a boy; and why none of these persons knew me was simply this fact, that I had never associated with any of them before I left the town. Although I was a clerk in this town, I kept myself absolutely and entirely aloof from the men of that particular class with whom I afterwards came in contact, and I was not at all surprised that they did not know me.

33,504. (Mr. Anstey.) Not being recognized by anyone, did you at any time mention to anyone in Bridgwater who you were?—Never.

33,505. You never disclosed your identity?—Never.

33,506. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Richard Smith was the only person with whom you kept up acquaintance?—And Mr. Richard Bealy Smith, his son, whom, of course I shall have a great deal to say about by-and-by.

33,507. (Mr. Anstey.) They did know you?—Yes, of course; it was through them I came.

33,508. (Mr. Price.) You were going to say you kept up a communication with Mr. Richard Smith. Having kept it up, tell us what was the first communication respecting election matters here which you had with him?—Shortly after Mr. Westropp's first election, when, I believe, he came down with Mr. Padwick.

33,509. In 1859?—Young Mr. Smith, I think, came to London, and I asked him to my house to a dance, and he came, and oddly enough brought his father. They remained till 12 or 1 in the morning, and the next day I saw young Mr. Smith in London, and he said they were very much dissatisfied with the way in which matters had been worked at this election, and he wanted to know if I would consent, if Mr. Westropp stood again, to come down for it and do what I could to secure his election. I declined it.

33,510. Let me stop to ask you there, had you ever been engaged before that time in any other office in similar transactions?—No.

33,511. In other places?—No; by any other office, certainly not.

33,512. Do not put it upon an office. Before Mr. Smith first proposed to you to come down to assist Mr. Westropp if he came down again, had you ever been employed in any other election in a similar kind of way?—Yes, once only.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. B. H. Tromp.

2 Oct. 1869.

33,513. Where was that?—I really do not think I am bound to tell. It was only at one town, and I do not consider it a matter pertinent to this inquiry.

33,514. (Mr. Coleridge.) The reason we have asked it is, that it has been said by a witness who saw you when you were here, that you boasted of having been to Totnes and Windsor?—You having mentioned that, I will take this opportunity of saying the evidence given by Robert Bussell upon that point is simply untrue from beginning to end. I never saw Liskeard in my life. I was never at Totnes till this summer, and I never went to Windsor upon business of any sort or description. The whole story told by Bussell is a lie from beginning to end. He is the last man in the world to whom I should tell anything; the word "blab" is written upon every feature in his face.

33,515. (Mr. Price.) If we do not ask you now, it is that it may not be necessary, not that you have any privilege about it.—I would ask you to reserve that question, whether I am bound to tell it. I have never been but to one town.

33,516. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have a right to put it to you to test your credit.—In what way?

33,517. In any way. We may ask any question of a witness to test his credit, and we have power to cross-examine you.—If I am satisfied by-and-by that I am legally bound to answer that question, as to what other town I have been engaged in on elections I will do so, but I do not want to open up questions as to any other town.

33,518. I do not think it necessary to have your answer at present, but I do not think you have any privilege if put in that way, to test your credit?—You will find you have no reason to disbelieve that.

(Mr. Anstey.) You must not suppose me or any of us to have the least doubt about your liability to answer questions. You simply understand that we do not press it now.

33,519. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything in the world to do with bringing down Mr. Padwick's money?—No, nothing. I never saw or heard anything about Mr. Padwick's election.

33,520. (Mr. Anstey.) When Mr. Smith expressed dissatisfaction with the manner of conducting elections hitherto, did he mention a bribe agent of the name of Croucher?—He did not.

33,521. (Mr. Price.) He gave you to understand, I suppose, what you really were wanted for that part of the election?—Certainly.

33,522. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you known that sort of thing was going on when you were at Mr. Smith's office?—I had been in the town during elections, and was perfectly aware, from my earliest childhood, of no fight without bribery. I had not seen money pass.

33,523. Had you ever seen anything of it in Mr. Smith's office?—No, I had not.

33,524. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not finished the conversation. You got down to your reply?—I told him I would much rather not come down to Bridgwater. I felt certain that I should be recognized, and people would wonder why I was staying at Bridgwater, and it would not do; and the matter passed off. I saw him again at London by appointment at the "Golden Cross" hotel, Charing Cross, and he said, "I want to know, yes or no, whether you will or not go down to Bridgwater?" I said, "Tell me something about the borough, for I have "left it so long that I do not know what the con-"stituency is to a hundred;" and he told me about 640. This was in the very early summer of 1865, two or three months before the first election, and he said, "Out of that number we shall have at least to bribe, in order to win this election, nearly 200." I was perfectly startled, for I had heard of instances of corruption in other boroughs, but never a case in which so large a majority were requiring money, and 200 was about the number fixed.

33,525. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that the old or the young man?—The young man, Mr. Bealy Smith. Then we went through the list, and he said, "I do "not know whether Mr. Westropp will or not con-"test this election, it is impossible to say; but if so "I must see you again." And after that some interviews took place between us in town. I never came down here before that election; and I said, if obliged to come at all—for I promised him that I would if I could possibly see my way to it—I said at once to him, "Look here, I will not come down unless I get a fee "of 200 guineas for my expenses." He said, "I am "quite sure you will not get that; we never can "stand that." "Very well," I said, "those are my "terms, and I do not go for a shilling under."

33,526. What year was this in?—1865, when Mr. Westropp came down and fought a single-handed contest with Shelley and Kinglake. Shortly after that I got a letter from Mr. Smith, saying that a lady would call on me at my residence in London, I then lived in Kensington Gardens Square, Bayswater, and I might treat her with perfect confidence, and she would tell me whether the party would or not pay the large fee which I had demanded. This lady came by appointment to my house. I saw her, and declined to go on unless the money was forthcoming to pay, at all events promised. I was quite willing, if it was honourably understood that I was to have it, to do it. She came several times, and at last agreed that it should be paid. I said, "I should be glad to know who you are." She said, "I cannot tell you indeed, I must decline to tell you; you must not ask." And she never gave any name on coming to my house.

33,527. Have you ever seen her since?—Yes, I have seen her since that.

33,528. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you found out her name?—I have not.

33,529. Where did she come from, London?—I believe from London, because the letters she used to write, which were just a couple of lines—"The lady will be with you to-morrow at 7 o'clock." That letter was posted in London.

33,530. Did you know the object of employing a lady?—No, I never knew. I said to her, "Where is "this money coming from?" To which she said, "I "cannot tell you where it is coming from, but at all "events we are going to take care that Mr. Westropp "knows nothing whatever about it." Then I arranged with her that she was to get the money to be got together in gold—1,500*l.* was the limit. I said, "If there "is anything like a contest it will not win the election; "still, if you do not feel inclined to go beyond that, "I must do the best I can with it;" and it was arranged that I should have the election money accordingly. I went to Weston-super-Mare, and took lodgings there with my wife and child; and on the Sunday morning, by appointment previously made in London, I went to the hotel at Weston-super-Mare, taking with me a small black bag, and there saw the lady whom I had frequently seen in London, with another lady whom I have never seen since; and on the sofa in the room were certain packets which I knew to be gold. I took them up, placed them in the bag without saying a word, walked back to my lodgings, and on the same day I drove into the town from Weston, and took up the same lodgings which had been taken for me by a man I had sent down three days before, at Mr. Harden's, near the river.

33,531. Who was the man you employed?—One of the assistants whom I employed.

33,532. (Mr. Price.) Was it a man of the name of "Tom"?—Thomas Barrett.

33,533. Where is he employed now?—He is in London.

33,534. Whereabouts in London?—I will undertake to produce him if you like. Then immediately on coming into the town I placed myself in communication with Harden, a baker, who lived near the church, and there I met the persons who were to be the team, as it was expressed, to carry out the plan.

33,535. (Mr. Price.) Their names had been supplied to you?—Oh yes; and my orders from Mr. Bealey Smith were, that I was to have no communication whatever except with those persons whose names were mentioned on the paper which he handed to me.

33,536. Who else was named besides Harden?—I met Frederick Harden, baker, Frederick Jarman, Mr. Temblett, who is here now. I think the first meeting there were only those three present.

33,537. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did none of them recognize you in the slightest?—I am quite sure they did not, for I was particularly anxious to see whether they did or not.

33,538. Were you disguised at all?—Not in the least; I did not dress as I usually did in London, but coarser perhaps; I wore a billycock hat, but made no attempt to disguise myself.

33,539. You had grown all that hair since you left Bridgwater?—I had a large beard and moustache when I came, otherwise there was very little difference. We sat down night after night before the election came on, and so arranged the matter that I succeeded in dividing the town into sections, and I was to entrust each of those men with a certain sum of money, they undertaking to poll the names of the persons which were to be placed on a piece of paper which they took possession of at the first election. Of course, night after night we met, and we went carefully through the lists, and when we came to a name, a peculiar feature of Bridgwater, I was told, "This man is all right, he is a good Conservative. "This man will go straight, and that man is right." But I discovered, very much to my surprise, that that meant money, and that they would not vote without it. There were 200 at least who would not go to poll if there was a chance of having a shilling without having the money first, and some men of considerable respectability. On that night I did distribute the money; I gave Temblett 300*l.* or 400*l.*, I cannot remember for I destroyed every paper, but accounts were rendered from time to time to Mr. Smith, with every detail and the names of the persons to whom paid.

33,540. (Mr. Price.) I will ask you shortly, having destroyed your papers have you sufficient recollection to be able to say that the money was accounted for to you by the men whom you had entrusted with it?—Yes, with one or two exceptions.

33,541. Will you tell us what those exceptions were?—I was very much astonished two days before the election, having heard what Heal had done at the previous election, that this man was forced on me one night by Jarman, who said that he had gone so far with him that, "bad as he is we must trust him now." That name having been furnished me I ot once ascertained, through my assistant, of Mr. Smith whether I was or was not to entrust him; my opinion being that we had better not do so under any circumstances, but throw him over. He said that I should. The consequence was, that on the last night, I think, Heal was introduced, and, as has been described, a sum of money was handed by me to him in a little lane near the river, and I believe he has correctly stated the amount.

33,542. That is 200*l.*?—Yes; that sum he did not expend.

33,543. (Mr. Coleridge.) 250*l.* he had, had not he?—I think he had.

33,544. And then 50*l.* more from Mr. Jarman afterwards?—Yes; and then, of course, the next morning, out of a reserve which I had, I was obliged to advance him, although the election appeared safe; he came to me and said he had not polled the men he had undertaken to.

33,545. You knew at this time that he had kept the money?—Within 20 minutes after the election I knew the men he had to poll had not polled, and as they never polled without money I knew they had not had it. Then the night before the election through my assistant who was lodging at a house in the Taunton Road where Mr. Bealy Smith's clerk lived——

33,546. Neal?—I believe that was the name; he was a short, white-faced, stout man.

33,547. A young fellow?—Yes. Hence it was that I had an excellent means of communicating through my assistants, and the articled clerk himself, with Mr. Bealy Smith without my seeing him, and I never did see him at all. On the day of the election it became perfectly inevitable to me that if we were to win, and I had no means of knowing then that the other side could not spend a sum equal to ourselves, we must poll at least 200 men corruptly, I therefore repeated that with 1,500*l.* it was impossible to poll 200 men with 10*l.* each man, that I must have more money or know whether I could make promises to that extent. I then received an intimation that if, the night before the election, a minute before the clock struck, I believe, 9, I would walk into a garden by Mr. Smith's house at the river side, and follow the pathway, I should come to a small summer-house, and on the seat I should find 500*l.*

33,548. Who was the intimation from; was it anonymous?—No; it came either in a note, or in some way or other which I cannot remember.

33,549. You trace it all to Mr. Bealy Smith, I suppose?—Yes, it must have been a letter; my communication to him was that we could not win without another 500*l.* I was not aware that there was 500*l.* in the town, or forthcoming, and I did go to the summer-house. I saw the shadows, the dim forms in the garden evidently of two or three persons who were watching me, but I did not stop. I took the money back to my lodgings and it was instantly divided into 10*l.* and distributed—the greater portion of it.

33,550. That would be 2,000*l.* altogether?—That would be 2,000*l.* altogether with the exception that I kept about 250*l.*, or thereabouts, which went next morning except 40*l.*, or thereabouts, to make up what Heal had had, so that somewhat less than 2,000*l.* was really spent on behalf of the Conservative candidate at that election, I believe, before half-past nine in the morning, because after that hour the election was an absolute certainty; nothing could have beaten us.

33,551. Had you reason to believe that was the whole money that was spent in bribery then?—I am positive. On the part of the Conservatives no one had any hand in it but myself. I believe nothing was spent that day that did not go through my hands.

33,552. Did that include the payment of your agents here, or not?—No.

33,553. When were they paid?—They were paid afterwards. I rendered a detailed account shortly after the election to Mr. Smith, and I sent it him down after he had sent me up a paper showing the result of the poll. I marked against every one of the names every name that had had 10*l.*, every name that was bribed, and with that I sent an account shortly afterwards exactly what the expenses had been, and giving the small balance in hand; and then I asked for my fee, and my assistants.

33,554. Which you got eventually?—I got 250*l.* eventually and the expenses.

33,555. What did it cost Mr. Westropp altogether including your fees and the expenses, and the agents here, and the bribery; what in the whole?—What agents do you mean?

33,556. Temblett and these other men?—And the publicans?

33,557. And the publicans and all?—I should think he did not get off for very much less than 3,000*l.*

33,558. The publicans you paid are not down afterwards?—Yes, I paid some myself; one fellow claimed 80*l.* or 90*l.*, and I paid him 25*l.*, much to his horror and disgust. I do not know his name, and I got a receipt in full; the thing was such a swindle that I could not stand it any longer; every one wanted to be paid, no matter what his social position might be.

33,559. What was the name of that man?—Pinner, I understand.

33,560. How did you get your accounts squared in the end, through the lady or Smith?—Mr. Smith afterwards; but I believe I am right in saying that this lady did bring me my fee, because I said to her "I

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. B. H. Tromp.

2 Oct. 1869.

" will trust you, you will find that every shilling " which has been entrusted to me has been honourably " spent, and if you find that it has not been expended, " and you can prove that I have kept a shilling, I will " give you my fee."

33,561. Did you see anything of her during the election here ?—No.

33,562. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see anything of Mr. J. R. Smith during the election ?—No, I saw him in the street during the election, and I never spoke to him; it was some time after that I saw Mr. Smith. I saw Mr. J. R. Smith only once.

33,563. You had no communication with him ?—I spoke to him at his house.

33,564. When was that ?—I think it was after the election.

33,565. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long was it after this election in 1865 that your accounts were finally settled up ?—It was not until it became certain that another election was inevitable, that those fellows were eventually squared with ; it was futile to come down until that was done.

33,566. They would not have been squared with unless it had been foreseen there would be another election ?—I hope not, and I think not, and I will take this opportunity of saying, that with the exception of that man Heal, and a man who acted at the third election of the name of Newman——

33,567. Newton, was not it ?—I say to the credit of these men, that I believe they honestly spent every shilling they received from me.

33,568. (Mr. Anstey.) Honestly ?—In bribery. I believe they honourably parted with the money.

33,569. (Mr. Coleridge.) Including Truman ?—I cannot make it out; I have just heard that he has been accused of keeping his money.

33,570. (Mr. Price.) You were cautioned against Truman, were not you ?—No, it was my suggestion that he was not, because I discovered that although he promised me faithfully that he would himself distribute that money with his own hands, I believe on the morning of the election he became very timid, and employed some one else, hence we had a new danger to encounter in the shape of a new man we had never heard of; and I said we cannot have this man again, and he was not employed. Then Mr. Smith wanted me to come down for Patton.

33,571. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you proceed I will ask you, when you went back to London did you see anybody there ?—I saw a great many people. Do you mean with reference to the election ?

33,572. Of course ?—No.

33,573. Not until you went down again about Patton's election ?—No; my communications were solely through Mr. Bealy Smith. I never had any communication with anybody except through Mr. Bealy Smith.

33,574. Did you never converse with the father personally, as he pretends to be incapable of coming before us ?—Never; indeed with the exception of at the dinner which Mr. Smith gave at the " Golden Cross " on the occasion of Mr. Bealy Smith having passed his examination with honours at the Law Institution, I had never spoken to Mr. Smith for eight or nine years certainly.

33,575. (Mr. Price.) It was Mr. Richard Smith who proposed that you should come down ?—No, it was his son Mr. Richard Bealy Smith.

33,576. You say that Truman had got nervous and had employed some other men ?—Yes, I was told that he did not distribute the money himself; I think he told me so. I gave him 10*l.* for his trouble.

33,577. Do you know the man he employed ?—I did not.

J. Truman.

JOHN TRUMAN recalled.

33,578. (Mr. Price.) Is Truman here ?—Yes.

33,579. Whom did you employ ?—Robert Newton.

33,580. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you employ anybody who is neither dead nor gone to America ?—Not that I am aware of.

(Mr. Price.) It is always put on dead men or an absent one.

Mr. B. H. Tromp.

Mr. B. H. TROMP recalled.

(The witness.) In effect Mr. Bealy Smith told me on no account would he allow his father to interfere in the election for him ; after he had passed his examination and had come down here to practise as a solicitor, his father went for eight or ten months on the continent and threw the whole work of the office on a youth of 23 or 24, and that, with the extraordinary fact that there were three elections in twelve months, completely upset him, and I am not at all surprised at it. When I last saw him in London I looked upon him as absolutely insane and unfit to be abroad alone.

33,581. (Mr. Anstey.) When was that ?—In the summer of 1868.

33,582. (Mr. Price.) Now you are going to Mr. Patton's first election ?—The same lady came to me again in London and said they wanted me to go down to Mr. Patton's election, and indeed young Mr. Smith had told me that, and they said they wanted me to go down for nothing. That I declined at once ; I did not want to go at all. However I consented to come down, and shortly before the election the same lady said the whole thing was to be done for 1,000*l.* These people were to vote 5*l.* a piece ; if they would have money at all, only 1,000*l.* would be spent. I did not ask where it came from. She left at my house 1,000*l.* ; that sum I brought into the town at the second election. At the second election I, under the advice of Mr. Bealy Smith—I cannot conceive why—was introduced to Robert Bussell for the first time at Harden's. This was some time before the election, a week or 10 days I should think. I said, " I shall be glad to lodge with you for a day or two ;" and he said, " All right." I said, " I shall be down a few days before the election," and I believe I stayed there the few days I was here during the election. Then on the day of the election I saw some allusion made to a sum of 200*l.* or 300*l.* which had been obtained. At 12 o'clock I looked upon the election as lost, but I took care that there should be some voters to be got at if necessary. About half-past one I heard there were about 20 or 30 voters at the " Bull and Butcher " ready if they got 10*l.* each. I gave instructions that not one of them should be allowed to come out, and I wrote a note—a thing which I am sorry I did, because it is against my principles in a matter of that sort to communicate in any shape or way with a solicitor in the town ; but, however, being very anxious to win, I sent a note to Mr. Bealy Smith to the effect that if he could get me 300*l.*, I could get 30 men and win the election.

33,583. It is with reference to that note which it is said Mr. Westropp stopped in transitu, as it were—this is Robert Bussell's story—that Mr. Westropp said, " Is this from the friend ?" Had you become acquainted with Mr. Westropp at that time ?—I had never seen him but once before in my life, and I have only spoken to him once, and I will tell you where I met him. At that dinner which Mr. Smith gave in London to celebrate the admission of his son to the profession, I met Mr. Westropp at dinner at the " Golden Cross."

33,584. That would be before 1865 ?—Before his first election and before the election I came down for him about ; whether the object was that he might see me I cannot imagine, but election matters were not discussed.

33,585. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Westropp know the fact of your having been employed ?—I do not know.

33,586. Do you believe the truth of the statement that he described you as the friend?—Until I saw Bussell's evidence I never heard of that incident.

33,587. You do not know anything which makes it probable that Mr. Westropp should so have described you?—No, I do not know. I should think it most likely that Mr. Smith did tell him who I was.

33,588. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first know Mr. Westropp?—At that dinner.

33,589. Was Mr. Westropp there?—Yes, he was at the dinner. It was a month or a few weeks after Mr. Bealy Smith got his prize.

33,590. (Mr. Anstey.) Unless the noise prevented me hearing what you said, I think I understood you to say you had no idea why you were invited to see Mr. Westropp at the dinner, unless it was that he might see you and recognize you?—I say I cannot say at all, but I had been intimate with the Smiths. They had frequently visited my house; and while in London six months grinding, before he passed his articles, Sunday after Sunday he dined at my house.

33,591. That is what you said, is not it?—Yes; he was there at this dinner, but at that time I did not pledge myself or promise young Mr. Smith to go to Bridgwater. Then this money came to me at Bussell's. I did not intend Bussell should take it.

33,592. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did the money come to you?—I forget at this moment. It was brought into the house, and I forget who gave it.

33,593. Was it in gold?—In gold. I at once placed it in packets of 10*l.*, which occupied some minutes of valuable time. I would not trust anybody. I gave it to my own assistant, Barrett, who had come to me, and said, "Now go and do this yourself;" and I said to Temblett and Harden, "Let them be taken "to the poll in batches of four and five. Take care "that not a man gets into the hands of the other "side, and we must win." The men were polled in half an hour, and the election was won in consequence.

33,594. (Mr. Coleridge.) After a very close run?—It was a very close run indeed. I do not like to lose, and I did not like to lose on that occasion. I thought they were behaving shamefully, having so shortly before that been well treated.

33,595. Were not you afraid of being petitioned against on that occasion?—One is always afraid of petitions.

33,596. Was there no indication of one, or any threat?—I think I heard afterwards there was a threat of one.

33,597. But it went no further?—No, it went no further.

33,598. Mr. Patton took office?—Mr. Patton took office; and then there was another election in six weeks, much to my horror. I did not get paid my fee for Mr. Patton. I had the greatest difficulty in getting the money even for the expenses for a long time. I looked upon him as the greatest screw, if the money came from him, I ever had to deal with in my life.

33,599. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did the money come from?—Mr. Smith. I said, "These men must be paid, and I will not go down without;" and the consequence was it was found, and I sent a man down, and everything was secured before Mr. Patton came.

33,600. How much did it cost, including your fees?—I did not get my fees; I only got 50*l.*

33,601. What was the whole amount that was paid?—I cannot tell what Mr. Smith paid, but I should think 2,000*l.*

33,602. That is what it is put at?—Yes, about 2,000*l.* Then the election came again, Mr. Patton took office, and it was shortly before that election, between the first election and the second, that Mr. Bealy Smith called upon me in London, and said, "I intend to bring a gentleman to-night to see you." I said, "I would rather you would not; who is it?" He said, "It is a gentleman from Bridg-"water; he does not know you, and I am certain "he would not recognize you." I said, "I cannot see the use of this." He says, "It is useful, because "I think we shall be able to employ him on this occa-"sion in getting money. This lady will not interfere "any more." So in the evening Mr. Smith came with Mr. Lilly, the auctioneer. Of course I knew him, because he was the brother-in-law of Mr. Alfred Copp, in whose office I was two years before I left Bridgwater.

33,603. (Mr. Price.) Did he recognize you?—I am sure I do not know. He showed no sign, and he is the best judge. I affected never to have seen him before. We sat a short time conversing on various matters, because I thought the object was that he might know me again; so it was determined I should go down. I positively say that but for the pressing and the earnest entreaty of Mr. Smith, over and over again, I would never have come down. I had seen enough of the whole thing, and had no idea there would be three elections in twelve months—one was bad enough; and under Mr. Bealy Smith's directions I went straight to Taunton, and stayed at the "London Hotel," I think, there on the market day, the day before the election; and, according to the directions given by Mr. Smith, about 12 o'clock I walked down to Mr. Lilly's house in Castle Street, and found the door open, and I walked into a room, and Mr. Lilly said, "Good morning;" and I said, "I want to see you about the property which is for "sale at Highbridge. I shall be glad to look at the "conditions of sale; it is a very nice place, I under-"stand, a very thriving public-house." He said, "I will go and get you the conditions;" and he walked away. I went into the room on the opposite side, and there on the sofa I saw a bag. I took the money out, and I found there was 2,000*l.*, and I put it in a bag and carried it away from the house, and did not see Mr. Lilly again. Luckily for me I had an assistant near the bridge, or I could not have carried it over the bridge.

33,604. Was it the same assistant?—Yes. I was not aware it was so heavy.

33,605. Was he the only one employed in these transactions?—There were three, but that was the man I had most confidence in, therefore it is not worth while to let the other two know.

33,606. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Lilly brought that money, I suppose?—He must have brought that money into the town, and that I assume was the object of Mr. Bealy Smith introducing Mr. Lilly to me, that he might recognize me.

33,607. (Mr. Coleridge.) You may as well now as at any other time give us the names of the other two men?—Robert Tumner, and the other man's name was Jones; but he was employed by Thomas Barrett, and I do not know where he is.

33,608. Do you know where the second is?—I can bring Tumner and Barrett if it is necessary.

33,609. Will you forward their addresses to the secretary?—Yes, certainly, I will undertake to do that. Then at that election I determined to try another plan. I determined to see if Mr. Jarman did not like to undertake the immense number of the Barclay Street division which he had managed before, and other fellows who had got a little nervous. There were so many threats of petitions, and one thing and another, that I determined to say, "You "take this, and I will pass the others through the "mill at public-houses."

33,610. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many were there to be bribed on that occasion?—200 as a sine quâ non. 200 should go at once, leaving it open to the independent Conservatives to poll. It was impossible to win without, and we should have won this, only there was too much money on the other side. I determined that I would say to Jarman, "Any man on your lists "whom you feel it incumbent on you to pay now, for "certain reasons you know best, pay them; if so, "select them, and I am quite prepared, if you like, to "pay the whole money through my assistants." He did select a certain number he had confidence in the night before the election. I had 2,000*l.* in my possession at some hotel facing the "Albion," and I distributed every shilling of it in the presence of each other. There were five or six men there then, and I wrote on a piece of paper the sum handed to each person to distribute that money for us, 1,950*l.*

33,611. That was Temblett you speak of?—Temblett, Harden, and Jarman.

33,612. Newton?—No, Newton on that occasion not a shilling; he got the money out of me the next day.

33,613. Nor Truman?—There were three assistants, Tumner, Barrett, and Jones, making altogether I think seven or eight, who undertook to manage the matter the following morning.

33,614. Truman was not among them?—Truman was not among them; oh no, I believe not. I feel certain there were only three or four besides my own men who had money that night.

33,615. Was Waddon there?—There were only four. There was Temblett; but the events of the three elections are so mixed up in my mind that I cannot be expected to be extremely accurate about names, but I believe there were only four in addition to my assistants. Then it was arranged; of course I need not say that I endeavoured to take care that every man who was paid should go to the poll; and I said that the greatest care must be taken, and as every man passed through the mill of the public-houses, that some one must wait to take him to the poll instantly, or if money is going on the other side he will go to a certainty.

33,616. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the "Bull and Butcher" one of those public-houses?—Yes. Jones was there; Barrett was at a public-house in the road leading to the station. I forget the name of it, the "Golden Lion," I hear, and Tumner was in a house in St. Mary Street. The result of this was, as you know, the men were paid in the majority of instances, but a good many of them were bribed again by the other side, and got more money; hence the election was lost. I could not compete against the 4,000*l.* which I am confident was spent on the other side. I, with my own eyes, saw at about 12 o'clock in the morning men bribed in the middle of the street.

33,617. On both sides?—No, not on mine; it was not necessary, because it was done at public-houses.

33,618. Seeing that you had no fear of a petition?—Seeing that, I had no fear that the other side would petition, because I felt it was lost, and could not be won with the money they had. I had one man staying at the "Globe," whom I employed to watch the other side, and from information I had from him I felt confident that if I could have stopped the money at six that morning I would not have spent another shilling. I was confident we should lose. Money is the only thing that is wanted here. That money was spent in that way. At three o'clock in the afternoon I had to write a note to Mr. Bealy Smith to tell him I could not leave the town unless I had 30*l.* or 40*l.* at least; and I really had not money to go away with. I met him at his office at half-past three or four, and he gave me 30*l.* to get away with, for every shilling was spent. I heard that some of Temblett's men did not want his money, at all events he brought me back some; and Newton came to me and declared that 30 men would poll if I could get the money for them, and in a weak moment, not knowing the election was so dead lost, I handed it to him; and I afterwards taxed him at his own house with having robbed us of at least 150*l.*, and I am satisfied of it.

33,619. (Mr. Price.) How soon after that did he abscond?—He was turned out of his house, I believe. Mr. Bealy Smith said he should not remain in the town if he could get him away. He sent men up to where my men were, and presented those men who said, "I am John Jones," and so on, and 10*l.* was handed. I assumed there were men at the bottom of the stairs waiting to take these men to the poll, and I suppose they divided the money between them. I afterwards accused him of it in his own place. I confronted him with it face to face.

33,620. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he say?—He turned as white as a sheet, and said it was not true. I gave him the names, and I actually got one or two to go and face him, and to say, "You have not paid me a shilling."

33,621. Had those men voted on the other side in consequence?—No; one had perhaps.

33,622. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you say that to him on the day of the election?—No; I was not aware of that until some time afterwards.

33,623. Did anyone employ him to supply beer to the bearer of notes?—No one, I should think, gave him such an order.

33,624. It was proved before the House of Commons that people took notes to Newton, and in return for each note he gave a pint of beer?—I never heard of that.

33,625. I mean 1865?—I knew nothing of Newton in 1865. I never heard of him. I did not employ the same machinery in 1865 at all.

33,626. (Mr. Price.) With the exception of Newton's case which you have told us of, are there no other cases of similar transactions?—I do not know; as I have said before I believe these men were perfectly true. Temblett, Harden, and those fairly distributed every shilling; in fact they gave me the names, and I made secret and private inquiries.

33,627. Newton was the man whom Truman selected to assist him on the former occasion?—Of course; and I hope Truman did not have any of the plunder at the last election for his own credit's sake, for I paid him for his trouble.

33,628. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you receive any other sum like that which you have mentioned, 30*l.* towards the end?—That money I got from Temblett, who said, "My men have gone to the other side; here is my money back again," and I gave that to Newton. Nobody else returned any. I think Waddon, though, did. I cannot remember. I am also satisfied that Waddon spent his money.

33,629. Did you see Mr. Patton at that election?—Once on the hustings.

33,630. Did you ever converse with Mr. Patton, either at this election, or his unsuccessful contest?—No, I never saw him but once in my life.

33,631. Have you any reason to believe that he was aware that bribery was going on?—I have only this reason—Mr. Bealy Smith said this of Mr. Patton, "He is so dreadfully timid, and altogether dislikes "bribery so much, that I believe the matter cannot "be mentioned to him, and the consequence is, my "communication is solely through some friend of his," whose name I had seen mentioned.

33,632. Mr. Pitman?—Yes, "who," he says, "will manage that;" and I believe it was utterly without Mr. Patton's knowledge—"he must not know anything about it."

33,633. Must not?—"Must not, and won't know anything about it."

33,634. That is, Mr. Patton must not know, and Mr. Patton will not know?—That is it; he was a very nervous man, and easily frightened, and I am not at all surprised at the melancholy result.

33,635. Have you any idea who provided that money?—Not the slightest.

33,636. A very respectable witness stated yesterday there was a belief at the time in Bridgwater that it was his late brother who had advanced it, who died a few weeks ago?—It is highly probable, I should think, looking at Mr. Patton's peculiar temperament.

33,637. Have you any belief that it came from any political body in London?—I do not believe it did.

33,638. Why not?—I do not believe the stories which are told about political bodies finding money for anybody who can afford to pay, and go into the House to get into office, as Mr. Patton did.

33,639. Mr. Spofforth told us that yesterday?—I have not read his evidence.

33,640. He said that when he took office he paid as a matter of course?—Yes.

33,641. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there anything more at that election?—No, I think I have told you everything. After it was over I rendered an account to Mr. Bealy Smith.

33,642. Before you come to the account I want to call your attention to a letter which I will put into your hand. That letter was written a few days after the election of 1866. To which of the two elections, or is it both, that that letter refers (handing the letter to the witness)?—Is this shortly after the last election?

33,643. It appears to be the 23rd July, you see?—I wrote this letter after an interview with Mr. Bealy Smith in London, and he said to me, "There are so many publicans who have to be bribed."

33,644. I will draw your attention to its being subsequent to both elections in 1866?—Yes.

33,645. I want to know whether it refers to the last, or both?—To the last. I think everything was cleared up. I am not sure that everything was cleared up at Patton's election, but it was promised.

33,646. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you say about bribing some publicans?—It turned out after the second election so many publicans were expected to be bribed, not for rooms occupied or drink supplied, but bribery in another shape under pretended bills delivered, that Mr. Smith said, "Looking at the "possibility of a petition in this case, it is perfectly "clear we must not admit anybody in the town is "liable for these publicans' bills." I therefore wrote to Mr. Temblett, and said, as it seems I was responsible for the publics I would feel obliged if he would send them to me, and the consequence was they were, and I settled them. The letter is:—

"Dear Temblett, July 23rd, 1866.

"As it seems I am solely responsible for the "publics at the last fight, I shall feel obliged by "your obtaining from the 'Bull and Butcher' the "little bill, which must be as MODERATE as possible. "Please let it be sent to me by return of post. As I "am writing, I enclose herewith the BOOK used by "the Man in the Moon at the 'Bull and Butcher,' "and shall be glad if you would look through the names "and put them right. Do not rub these out, but "write the correct names on a spare sheet of the "book, and do not fail to return same to me by next "post, or if you CAN'T DO this, keep it till I see you, "which will be this week I trust. Is there to be a "petition?

"Yours faithfully,

"I enclose my address. W. M."

33,647. ((Mr. Anstey.) That was written from London?—Yes, I have no doubt it was.

33,648. I think I understood from a former answer that the handwriting was disguised?—Yes.

33,649. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was no petition after that election of Mr. Vanderbyl's?—No.

33,650. Did you threaten one?—Yes, it was threatened, I believe, but I had nothing to do with it. The moment I left the town I did nothing whatever, simply what Mr. Smith asked me, to pay off the bill, or go here or there, or square up with some fellow likely to be unpleasantly refractory, or something of that sort, but I had nothing to do with the petition.

33,651. Who paid your fee and expenses on that occasion?—I never had but about 15*l.*; that is all that I got at that election. I rendered an account to Mr. Bealy Smith, and all he did was to give me things I produced vouchers for, and he said, "I cannot "give another shilling; that is the only money I "have, and that I give you." That was at the Great Western Hotel.

33,652. Then, in fact, the lady was the only person practically whom you had the money from?—Yes.

33,653. Can you give us the slightest idea about this lady?—I cannot. I should recognize her in a moment.

33,654. (Mr. Anstey.) Or the other lady?—I saw her at Weston-super-Mare; no, I could not tell you.

33,655. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it a young lady or an old one?—About 35, and looked like an unmarried lady. I do not know what I mean by saying that, but I saw her hand, and she wore no wedding ring.

33,656. (Mr. Anstey.) Did they appear to be ladies in the general sense of the term, or in a received sense?—She had the address, certainly, of a lady.

33,657. Of a person in society?—Certainly; she was not a common person it is quite clear.

33,658. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not any common person dressed up to represent a lady?—No; she was dressed always in mourning when I saw her, and she told me she would be at Weston with her sister.

33,659. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any idea whether she was related in any way to the candidates?—No, only I thought that she was; I thought she must be in some way or other a relation of Mr. Westropp, only I could not tell.

33,660. Had she any Irish accent?—Slightly, if at all.

33,661. Mr. Westropp is an Irishman?—Yes.

33,662. He speaks with an accent?—Certainly; this lady did not.

33,663. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did she lodge at Weston?—She was staying at an hotel. I do not know the name of it; a very nice one. I think it is a limited company hotel.

33,664. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it the one which has a private drive up to it, and trees in front?—Yes; it has a narrow garden looking on to the beach, with a private entrance.

33,665. I suppose nobody knows the name of the landlord of that hotel?—(A voice.) Rogers.

(The witness.) This lady on the Sunday morning said to me, "We should very much like to go in and see the fun of the nomination." I said, "You had much better not." She said, "Where will you advise us to go?" I said, "You will see nothing unless you go to the 'Clarence';" but whether they ever came or not I do not know. My impression is that they did.

33,666. Did these ladies appear to live together at the hotel?—Yes, they were staying together at the hotel as friends.

33,667. Occupying the same sitting-room?—Yes, occupying the same sitting-room. Then this lady I refer to said, "I shall be at Weston with my sister."

33,668. Did she also speak with an Irish accent?—I never heard her.

33,669. Did she appear by her features to be her sister?—I think she was older, but I did not see any resemblance, except that her features were fair and that she had light eyes.

33,670. If they were not sisters, then the word "sister" was used, which, as men of the world know, has a received use of ladies of a certain description; that is all?—I never could make out, I never could find out, because the same lady having interfered in Patton's election puzzled me very much.

33,671. (Mr. Coleridge.) But Mr. Westropp was godfather to Mr. Patton in his election?—Yes.

33,672. So that may account for it?—That may account for it, I think.

33,673. Do you suppose at the present moment that old Mr. Smith knows who you are? Was he cognizant at all this was going on?—I do not know. I have no doubt his son told him, but I do not know as a positive fact that he knew. I think there is very little doubt that his father knew I was down at the first election.

33,674. And knew who you were?—He must have known, I should think, because his son surely—I do not know—he said to me his father was in such a state of health that he fully determined these matters of the three elections should never be discussed before him, and I believe at that time he was utterly incapable of business.

33,675. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that he declined in 1865, before he had this attack?—I am not aware.

33,676. It is in the evidence of Mr. Westropp, given in 1866, that when he consulted the agents in 1865 he asked Mr. Richard Smith to act for him, and

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Mr. B. H. Tromp.

2 Oct. 1869.

he said, "No, I had rather my son acted; I decline to act any more"?—Yes.

33,677. He was not ill then?—No; but as I tell you, from the moment the son was capable of coming down to take that practice he threw the whole burthen on his son; he was utterly incapable of carrying on so much business at the same time.

33,678. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever heard from Mr. Bealy Smith since he has been away?—No; he called at my house while I was at Scarborough with my wife, and left a message that he was going next week to Australia, and he should be glad if I would write to him in Melbourne in Australia. I never have written, and I have never heard from him.

33,679. Do you recollect a circumstance of your going and introducing yourself to Mr. Spofforth in the street?—I have been told that this morning. I have no recollection of doing it.

33,680. Giving your real name?—I have no recollection of doing anything of the sort, and that is the extraordinary thing. I have known Mr. Spofforth 20 years, long before he was a partner in the present firm, for I knew his brother.

33,681. May not it be one of your assistants in want of employment taking your name?—I cannot imagine.

33,682. Because I wrote your full name down, and he said, "Yes, that is the name he gave"?—I cannot remember saying anything. I remember once seeing Mr. Spofforth. I might have said a word to him, "Well, Mr. Spofforth, it is getting rather hot at Bridgwater," and he merely did it in this way, "I know nothing about it." But I do not recollect a conversation, "I think I have the honour of addressing," because I knew him so long I could not say that.

33,683. He said that he knew you and he was afraid of election agents?—I do not think I could have said that, because I knew him so well; it would have been quite a farce.

33,684. (Mr. Anstey.) It has been said by one of the witnesses, a very intelligent witness, that he had some conversation with you in 1866, and you told him, "I shall see you when the petition comes on "before the election committee; I shall be in and out "of the House of Commons, and shall be glad to see "you about the election of 1865, or the coming elec- "tions in 1866—the anticipated elections," I forget which, and that you told him that, and that he accordingly did see you there, but you appeared to be busy then about something or other before that committee, or a neighbouring committee?—I believe that was so. I had a very severe contest in the House of Commons in the matter of the London and Buckinghamshire Railway, of which I had the sole conduct, and I told that man, "Should you see me in the House of Commons pray do not recognize me," because I had business in another corridor of the House at the same time, fighting the London and Bucks Bill for Johnstone, Farquhar, and Leech.

33,685. (Mr. Coleridge.) And had nothing to do with the committee?—I had nothing whatever to do with the election committee.

33,686. (Mr. Anstey.) You said you saw Mr. Joseph Richard Smith and spoke to him once about elections, but it was in 1869, the present year?—No.

33,687. I understood you to say that you had only seen Joseph Richard Smith once to speak to him?—That was in 1866, I think after the last election.

33,688. You mean after the last election in 1866?—Yes. I know nothing of the subsequent elections; I did not come.

33,689. Where did you see him?—I went to his house.

33,690. In what month?—In August; and I could never understand the object for which I was sent there.

33,691. Who sent you?—Bealy Smith. He said "I wish you would go and see my uncle Joe." I said, "What for?"

33,692. Mr. Bealy Smith is his nephew?—Yes. He said, "I want you to go and see my uncle Joe." I said, "What for?" He said, "He would very much like to see you." "Would he; what for?" I said; "does he know me?" "No, he does not." I said, "What am I to say?" He said, "You can easily in- "vent something; go to his house and just say some- "thing." I did not care much about it. I went to his house, and I said, "You are Mr. Smith; my name is "Matthews." He said, "Oh yes, ah!" I said, "What do you think of Waddon?" or something of that sort. He said, "He is a very clever fellow, perfectly honest." And I asked him something else, and the interview terminated. He showed me a medal, or a coin, or something, and showed me the house, and I said it was very delightful, and left.

33,693. Is it true that he tried to break off the conversation with you by saying, "It must be my nephew Bealy whom you want to see, and not me"?—He may have said that; I cannot say.

33,694. (Mr. Price.) Did he apparently wish to keep up the conversation with you?—Not about election matters.

33,695. (Mr. Anstey). When you said "Matthews," he said "Oh yes"?—I do not know whether the name was given of "Matthews."

33,696. But you did give some name?—Yes, probably the name which had been given to me by Mr. Bealy Smith; I cannot say. I said, "I am Matthews; I have been down here on these matters."

33,697. Did he appear to recognize you then?—He appeared to know who I was with regard to the election, under one name or another.

33,698. That is what I mean?—Just so. He evidently knew I was the stranger.

38,699. Did you tell him you had come from Mr. Bealy Smith to him?—No, I did not say that to him.

33,700. Did you say you had been sent to him?—No, I did not say that I had been sent to him by Mr. Bealy Smith; I said, "Mr. Smith, I have been sent to you; I understand you wish to see me." I thought the object was that he wished to see me, and after seeing him there was an end of it.

33,701. Did you ever see him again?—Never.

33,702. Or have any correspondence with him?—Never.

33,703. Have you anything more to tell us about that second election of 1866?—No, I do not remember anything else; if there is anything else I can think of I will tell you.

33,704. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not told us what the whole expenses of that election were?—The second?

33,705. Yes?—Mr. Patton's?

33,706. Yes. You said 2,000*l.* before the election, and you were to pay more afterwards?—No; I think I said 3,000*l.* covered the whole thing. We only spent 1,300*l.* in bribery on the second election, and after the election there were lots of claims to clear up; all sorts of things; people who had not been paid, or wanted to be paid.

33,707. That is Mr. Patton's second election?—I think the payments I made must have amounted to pretty nearly 3,000*l.*

33,708. You had paid 2,000*l.* before the election?—Yes; and I afterwards came down and paid publicans, and all sorts of people.

33,709. And you got all that latter part from Mr. Bealy Smith?—Yes, young Mr. Bealy Smith, every penny of it.

33,710. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard anything from him since he has been in Australia?—No.

33,711. Or of him from anyone?—No. I have only seen what has been in the newspapers about him.

33,712. Do you know whether he is coming back to England or not?—No, not at all. He looked to me utterly unfit to go abroad when I last saw him in London. He was at my house. He appeared to me to be absolutely insane.

33,713. Was he then suspicious of an election Commission being issued?—No, I do not think he was at all affected by that. My idea is, he was simply broken up by overwork and anxiety connected with these three elections and the work of his office. He is a young man of great natural ability, and it is a very lamentable thing that he should be in the state he is.

33,714. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were any overtures made to you on the occasion of the last election?—No. I distinctly told Mr. Bealy Smith, "I went down in the "first instance at your instigation, and I have been "down at two other elections;" and having had a very hard battle in life to attain my present position, I cannot afford to lose it.

33,715. That was after Mr. Patton's second election?—Yes; and I said, "As long as I live I will "never go to another town and have anything to do "with another election;" and I never have since. If I had dreamt that there would have been three elections one after the other nothing would have induced me to come down here.
